

The Victoria History of the Counties of England

EDITED BY WILLIAM PAGE, F.S.A.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

AND THE
ISLE OF WIGHT

VOLUME IV

VICTORIA

THE

OF

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE

THE VICTORIA HISTORY
OF THE COUNTIES
OF ENGLAND
HAMPSHIRE
AND THE ISLE OF WIGHT

LONDON
CONSTABLE AND COMPANY LIMITED

118367
18/9/11

This History is issued to Subscribers only by Constable & Company Limited and printed by W. H. Smith & Son London

INSCRIBED
TO THE MEMORY OF
HER LATE MAJESTY
QUEEN VICTORIA
WHO GRACIOUSLY GAVE THE TITLE TO AND ACCEPTED THE DEDICATION OF THIS HISTORY

The Needles

CONTENTS OF VOLUME FOUR

	PAGE
Dedication . . . . .	v
Contents . . . . .	ix
List of Illustrations . . . . .	xv
List of Maps . . . . .	xx
Editorial Note . . . . .	xxi
Topography . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents compiled under the superintendence of the General Editor; Architectural descriptions by J. W. BLOE, J. MURRAY KENDALL and S. F. BECKE LANE, under the superintendence of C. R. PEERS, M.A., F.S.A.; Heraldic drawings and blazon by the Rev. E. E. DORLING, M.A., F.S.A.; Charities from information supplied by J. W. OWSLEY, I.S.O., late Official Trustee of Charitable Funds
Crondall Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss A. M. McKILLIAM, M.A. (St. Andrews)
Introduction . . . . .	1
Aldershot . . . . .	2
Crondall . . . . .	5
Farnborough . . . . .	15
Long Sutton . . . . .	18
Yateley . . . . .	20
Bentley Liberty and Parish . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss M. PERRY, B.A. (R.U.I.) . . . . .
Holdshot Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. BROUGH, M.A. (Lond.)
Introduction . . . . .	31
Eversley . . . . .	32
Hartley Wespall . . . . .	42
Heckfield . . . . .	44
Silchester . . . . .	51
Stratfieldsaye . . . . .	57
Stratfield Turgis . . . . .	63
Odiham Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss O. M. MOGER, Miss F. KENNEDY and Miss K. M. UPCOTT
Introduction . . . . .	66
Bentworth . . . . .	68
Dogmersfield . . . . .	72
Elvetham . . . . .	74
Greywell or Grewell . . . . .	76
Hartley Wintney . . . . .	79
Lasham . . . . .	81
Liss . . . . .	84
Odiham . . . . .	87
Rotherwick . . . . .	99
Shalden . . . . .	101
Sherfield-upon-Loddon . . . . .	103
Weston Patrick . . . . .	108
Winchfield . . . . .	109

CONTENTS OF VOLUME FOUR

Topography (continued)

PAGE

Basingstoke Hundred	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. BROUGH, M.A. (Lond.)
Introduction		11
Basing or Old Basing		11
Basingstoke	(By Miss M. CURTIS, Classical Tripos)	12
Bramley		14
Cliddesden		14
Eastrop		14
Maplederwell		15
Nately Scures		15
Newnham		15
Sherborne St. John		15
Steventon		15
Tunworth		15
Up Nately		15
Winslade with Kempshott		15

Mainsborough Hundred . General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. KENNEDY

Introduction		15
Brown Candover		15
Chilton Candover		15
Woodmancott		15

Bountisborough Hundred . General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss A. M. MCKILLIAM, M.A. (St. Andrews)

Introduction		15
Godsfield		15
Itchen Abbas		15
Itchen Stoke with Abbotstone		15
Swarraton		15

Overton Hundred . General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. BROUGH, M.A. (Lond.)

Introduction		15
Ashe		15
Bradley		15
Deane		15
Laverstoke		15
Overton		15
Tadley		15
North Waltham		15

Chuteley Hundred . General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss M. HOLLINGS, Oxford Honours School of Modern History

Introduction		15
Church Oakley		15
Hannington		15
Monk Sherborne		15
Wootton St. Lawrence		15
Worting		15

CONTENTS OF VOLUME FOUR

	PAGE
Topography (continued)
Kingsclere Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. BROUGH, M.A. (Lond.)
Introduction . . . . .	245
Ewhurst . . . . .	247
Kingsclere . . . . .	249
Litchfield . . . . .	267
Wolverton . . . . .	270
Evingar Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss K. M. UPCOTT
Introduction . . . . .	273
Ashmansworth . . . . .	274
Baughurst . . . . .	275
Burghclere . . . . .	277
Freefolk . . . . .	282
Highclere. . . . .	285
Hurstbourne Priors . . . . .	287
Newtown . . . . .	(History of the Borough by CHARLES H. VELLACOTT, B.A.) 292
St. Mary Bourne . . . . .	295
Whitchurch . . . . .	299
East Woodhay . . . . .	305
Pastrow Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss F. BROUGH, M.A. (Lond.)
Introduction . . . . .	308
Combe . . . . .	310
Crux Easton . . . . .	311
Faccombe . . . . .	314
Hurstbourne Tarrant . . . . .	319
Linkenholt . . . . .	324
Tangley . . . . .	326
Vernhams Dean . . . . .	329
Woodcott . . . . .	331
Andover Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by FRANCIS L. BICKLEY
Introduction . . . . .	333
Abbotts Ann . . . . .	334
Amport . . . . .	337
Andover with Foxcott . . . . .	345
Appleshaw . . . . .	358
Upper Clatford . . . . .	359
Fyfield . . . . .	366
Grateley . . . . .	369
Kimpton . . . . .	372
Knight's Enham . . . . .	377
Monxton . . . . .	379
Penton Mewsey . . . . .	381
Quarley . . . . .	385
Thrupton . . . . .	387

CONTENTS OF VOLUME FOUR

	PAGE
Topography ( continued )
Andover Hundred ( continued )
Tidworth, South . . . . .	391
Weyhill with Penton Grafton . . . . .	394
Wherwell Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by FRANCIS L. BICKLEY
Introduction . . . . .	400
Bullington . . . . .	402
Goodworth Clatford . . . . .	403
Longparish . . . . .	406
Tufton or Tuckington . . . . .	409
Wherwell with Westover . . . . .	411
Barton Stacey Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss M. HOLLINGS, Oxford Honours School of Modern History
Introduction . . . . .	415
Barton Stacey . . . . .	417
Colemore . . . . .	423
Headbourne Worthy . . . . .	426
Kings Worthy . . . . .	430
Pamber . . . . .	433
Priors Dean . . . . .	436
King's Somborne Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss M. PERRY, B.A. (R.U.I.)
Introduction . . . . .	438
Ashley . . . . .	440
Farley Chamberlayne . . . . .	443
Leckford . . . . .	446
Longstock . . . . .	449
Romsey Extra and Infra . . . . .	452
King's Somborne . . . . .	469
Little Somborne . . . . .	480
Stockbridge . . . . .	483
Timsbury . . . . .	486
Thorngate Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss M. HOLLINGS, Miss O. M. MOGER and Miss M. PERRY
Introduction . . . . .	489
Bossington . . . . .	491
Broughton with Frenchmoor . . . . .	493
East Dean . . . . .	498
Lockerley . . . . .	500
Mottisfont . . . . .	503
Sherfield English . . . . .	510
Shipton Bellinger . . . . .	512
East Tytherley . . . . .	515
West Tytherley with Buckholt . . . . .	519
Nether Wallop . . . . .	525
Over Wallop . . . . .	530
East Wellow with Dunwood and Embley . . . . .	535

CONTENTS OF VOLUME FOUR

	PAGE
Topography ( continued )
Thorngate Hundred ( continued )
Melchet Park . . . . .	540
Plaitford . . . . .	542
Redbridge Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss O. M. MOGER
Introduction . . . . .	544
Eling . . . . .	546
Fordingbridge Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss O. M. MOGER and Miss H. M. POWELL
Introduction . . . . .	559
North Charford with South Charford . . . . .	560
Ellingham . . . . .	563
Fordingbridge with Godshill, Broomy Lodge, Linford, Picked Post and Shobley . . . . .	567
Hale . . . . .	577
Ibsley . . . . .	579
Rockbourne . . . . .	581
South Damerham . . . . .	586
Martin . . . . .	592
Whitsbury . . . . .	594
Breamore Liberty . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss O. M. MOGER
Introduction . . . . .	596
Breamore . . . . .	596
Ringwood Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by FRANCIS L. BICKLEY
Introduction . . . . .	603
Harbridge . . . . .	604
Ringwood . . . . .	606
New Forest Hundred . . . . .	General descriptions and manorial descents by Miss A. M. HENDY
Introduction . . . . .	615
Boldre . . . . .	616
Bramshaw . . . . .	623
Brockenhurst . . . . .	626
Linwood . . . . .	629
Lyndhurst . . . . .	630
Minstead . . . . .	(By Miss A. A. LOCKE, Oxford Honours School of Modern History) . . . . . 635
Lymington Borough . . . . .	By Miss H. L. E. GARBETT . . . . . 639
Beaulieu Liberty . . . . .	By FRANCIS L. BICKLEY . . . . . 650
	(Description and plan of Beaulieu Abbey by HAROLD BRAKSPER, F.S.A.)
Dibden Liberty . . . . .	By FRANCIS L. BICKLEY . . . . . 655

THE VICTORIA HISTORY
OF HAMPSHIRE

AND THE
ISLE OF WIGHT

EDITED BY WILLIAM PAGE, F.S.A.

VOLUME FOUR

115367
18/9/11

LONDON
CONSTABLE AND COMPANY LIMITED
1911

DA
670
H2H5
v. 4

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
The Needles. By WILLIAM HYDE . . . . .	frontispiece
Crandall Church from the West . . . . .	10
"    "    Plan . . . . .	11
"    "    The Nave looking East . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 12
"    "    Interior looking West } . . . . .	" " " 22
Yateley Church : Chancel and South Arcade } . . . . .	" " " 22
"    "    Plan . . . . .	24
Eversley : Bramshill House : South Front . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 36
"    "    "    South-east Front . . . . .	37
"    "    "    from the North . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 38
"    "    "    The Gateway } . . . . .	" " " 40
"    "    "    The Great Drawing-room } . . . . .	" " " 40
Hartley Wespall Church : West End of Nave . . . . .	" " " 42
Eversley Rectory and Church, with Charles Kingsley in foreground } . . . . .	" " " 44
Heckfield Place
"    Mattingley Chapel from the North-east } . . . . .	" " " 50
"    "    "    The Nave looking East } . . . . .	" " " 50
Silchester Church from the South . . . . .	52
"    "    Plan . . . . .	55
"    "    The Chancel Screen } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 56
Stratfieldsaye Church : Monument to Sir William Pitt and Edith, his wife } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 56
Bentworth Church : The Nave looking East } . . . . .	" " " 70
Dogmersfield Park
"    House (2 views) . . . . .	" " " 72
Elvetham Park : The Long Walk } . . . . .	" " " 78
Greywell Church : The Rood Screen } . . . . .	" " " 78
Hartley Wintney Common
"    "    The Village of Hartley Row } . . . . .	" " " 80
Odiham : The Priory from the South-east . . . . .	87
"    Old Stocks and Whipping-post } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 88
"    Vicarage } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 88
"    Chimney-piece in dining-room of George Hotel } . . . . .	" " " 90
"    Castle } . . . . .	" " " 90
"    The Priory from the South-west . . . . .	91
"    Church : Plan . . . . .	95
"    "    The Font } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 96
Rotherwick Church : The Nave looking West } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 96
Sherfield-upon-Loddon : Sherfield Manor . . . . .	" " " 104
Winchfield Church : Plan . . . . .	111
"    "    The Chancel Arch } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 112
"    Rectory, West Front } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 112
Basing House : General Plan . . . . .	118
"    "    Ground Plan as excavated . . . . .	facing 118

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
Basing House : Gateway . . . . .	120
„ „ Remains of the Citadel or Old House (2 views) . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 120
„ „ Siege, c. 1644 . . . . .	„ „ „ 122
„ St. Mary's Church : Plan . . . . .	124
„ „ „ from South-west . . . . .	125
„ Church : The Nave looking East } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 126
„ „ The South Chapel } . . . . .
Basingstoke : Holy Ghost Chapel . . . . .	„ „ „ 138
Bramley Manor House } . . . . .	„ „ „ 142
„ Church : The Nave looking East } . . . . .
Nately Scures : St. Swithun's Church : Plan . . . . .	154
„ „ Church : The North Door } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 154
Steventon Church Nave showing 17th-century Pew } . . . . .
Nately Scures : St. Swithun's Church from South-east . . . . .	155
Sherborne St. John : The Vyne : River Front . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 160
„ „ „ Entrance Front . . . . .	162
„ „ „ Ground Floor Plan . . . . .	facing 162
„ „ „ First Floor Plan . . . . .	„ 162
„ „ „ Garden Front . . . . .	164
„ „ „ Part of the Entrance Front } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 164
„ „ „ Staircase } . . . . .
„ „ „ Chapel . . . . .	„ „ „ 166
„ „ „ The Oak Gallery . . . . .	„ „ „ 168
„ „ „ Monument to Ralph Pexall and } . . . . .
„ „ „ Edith, his wife } . . . . .
Steventon : Old Manor House . . . . .	„ „ „ 172
„ St. Nicholas Church : Plan . . . . .	173
Up Nately : Andwell Priory : Plan . . . . .	177
Godsfield Chapel : Ground and First Floor Plans . . . . .	190
„ „ from the South-west . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 190
Swarraton Cross in the old Churchyard . . . . .	„ „ „ 194
„ Church, pulled down in 1849 . . . . .	„ „ „ 196
„ Rectory . . . . .	„ „ „ 196
Deane Church from the South-east } . . . . .	„ „ „ 210
Laverstoke : Old Parish Church, now Mortuary Chapel of the Portal family } . . . . .
„ Parish Church : Monument to Sir Richard Powlett } . . . . .	„ „ „ 214
Overton Church : Nave looking North-east } . . . . .
„ „ Plan . . . . .	216
„ „ from the South } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 218
„ Quidhampton Chapel } . . . . .
Church Oakley : Malshanger House . . . . .	„ „ „ 224
Hannington Church : Nave looking South-east } . . . . .	„ „ „ 230
Monk Sherborne Priory Church : Effigy of a Knight } . . . . .
„ „ All Saints' Church from the North-east . . . . .	233
„ „ „ The Porch } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 234
„ „ „ The Nave looking East } . . . . .
„ „ Priory Church : Plan . . . . .	235
„ „ „ from South-east . . . . .	236

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
Monk Sherborne Priory Church : The Tower . . . . .	237
"    "    "    "    Piscina                    }
"    "    "    "    Nave looking East       }	full-page plate, facing 238
Wootton St. Lawrence Church : North Arcade of Nave . . . . .	242
Kingsclere Church : Plan . . . . .	262
"    "    from the North-west . . . . .	263
Litchfield Church : Plan . . . . .	269
"    "    Nave looking East                    }
Wolverton Church : Nave looking East                    }	full-page plate, facing 272
Burghclere Church : The West Doorway                    }
Ashmansworth Church : Nave looking East                    }	" " " 276
Burghclere : All Saints' Church : Plan . . . . .	280
"    "    "    from the West . . . . .	281
Freefolk : The Old Church from the Rectory Garden . . . . .	284
Hurstbourne Priors : Hurstbourne House : The Great       }
Hall and Minstrels' Gallery   }	full-page plate, facing 284
"    "    Hurstbourne House . . . . .	287
"    "    Church : Chancel looking North-east        }
"    "    "    West Doorway                                }	full-page plate, facing 290
Newtown : The Swan Inn . . . . .	292
St. Mary Bourne Church : Plan . . . . .	297
"    "    "    from the South-east . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 298
Whitchurch Church : Saxon Tombstone . . . . .	304
Hurstbourne Tarrant Church : Plan . . . . .	322
"    "    "    Nave looking East                    }
Tangley Church : Early 17th-century Lead Font                    }	full-page plate, facing 322
Hurstbourne Tarrant Church from the North-east . . . . .	323
Vernham's Dean Church : The West Doorway . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 330
Amport : The Village . . . . .	337
"    Church from the South-east . . . . .	340
"    "    Plan . . . . .	343
"    "    Chancel Arch                                }
Upper Clatford Church : Nave looking East                    }	full-page plate, facing 344
"    "    "    Plan . . . . .	364
Grately Church : Plan . . . . .	370
Kimpton Church from the South-east . . . . .	372
"    "    Plan . . . . .	375
"    "    The Chancel . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 376
Quarley Church : Plan . . . . .	385
Thrupton Church : Altar Tomb . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 390
Goodworth Clatford Church : Plan . . . . .	404
"    "    "    Nave looking North-east                    }
"    "    "    Capital in North Arcade of Nave        }	full-page plate, facing 404
Barton Stacey Church from the South . . . . .	417
"    "    "    Plan . . . . .	421
"    "    "    Nave looking North-east                    }
Headbourne Worthy Church : Saxon Rood on West Wall of Nave   }	full-page plate, facing 422
"    "    "    from South-west . . . . .	426

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
Headbourne Worthy Church : Plan . . . . .	429
Ashley Church : Plan . . . . .	442
"    "    Nave looking East } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 442
Leckford Church : Nave looking East }
Farley Chamberlayne Church : Monument to Sir William St. John . . . . .	" " " 444
Leckford Village . . . . .	446
Romsey Abbey : Plan . . . . .	facing 460
"    "    North-east View in 1733 . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 460
"    "    South Aisle of Nave, with remains of the Cloister } . . . . .	" " " 462
"    "    Apsidal Chapel of South Transept }
"    "    North Arcade of Nave } . . . . .	" " " 464
"    "    East Side of North Transept }
"    "    Triforium and Clearstory of Choir } . . . . .	" " " 464
"    "    North Side of Choir }
"    "    Vaulting of North Aisle of Nave } . . . . .	" " " 466
"    "    West Wall of South Transept }
"    "    Detail of East Cloister Doorway } . . . . .	" " " 468
"    "    Rood on West Wall of South Transept }
King's Somborne Church : Interior looking West . . . . .	478
Little Somborne Church : Interior looking East . . . . .	482
Stockbridge from the North-west . . . . .	483
Broughton Church : Piscina in Chancel } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 496
"    "    West Doorway of Tower }
Mottisfont Priory from the South . . . . .	504
"    "    Plan . . . . .	facing 504
"    "    Vaulting Shafts of Chapter-house . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 504
"    "    from the North-west . . . . .	505
"    "    Soffit of Arch of Pulpitum } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 506
"    "    West Arch of South-east Chapel }
"    "    Wall Arcade in Nave of Church } . . . . .	" " " 506
"    "    Sub-vault of Western Range }
"    Church : Plan . . . . .	508
"    "    The Chancel Arch } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 508
Sherfield English Church : Early Seventeenth Century Communion Table }
East Tytherley Church : South Side . . . . .	517
"    "    "    Thirteenth Century Glass in Vestry Window } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 518
Sherfield English Church : Panel of Pulpit }
Nether Wallop Church : Nave looking East }
Over Wallop Church : Nave looking East }	" " " 530
"    "    "    The Font . . . . .	" " " 534
East Wellow Church : The East Window }
"    "    "    Nave looking East }	" " " 538
"    "    "    from the South-east . . . . .	539
Eling Church : Plan . . . . .	556
"    "    Nave looking North-east . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 556
Ellingham : Moyles Court . . . . .	565
"    Church : The Chancel Screen } . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 566
Ibsley Church : Monument to Sir John Constable, kt., and his wife }

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
Fordingbridge Church : Plan . . . . .	574
"    "    from the North
"    "    The Nave looking East }	full-page plate, facing 574
Rockbourne : Plan of Memorial Buildings . . . . .	581
"    Ancient Barn and Chapel . . . . .	582
"    Church : Plan . . . . .	584
"    "    from the South . . . . .	585
"    "    The Nave looking East }	full-page plate, facing 592
Martin Church : The Nave looking East
Breamore Church from the South . . . . .	" " " 598
"    "    Plan . . . . .	599
"    "    South Transept Arch }
"    "    Part of Chancel Arch }	full-page plate, facing 600
Boldre : Old Cottages }
"    Bridge . }	" " " 616
"    Church : Plan . . . . .	621
"    "    from the South-east
"    "    The Nave looking East }	full-page plate, facing 622
"    Pylewell in Early Eighteenth Century }
Brockenhurst : Queen's Bower Oak . . . . .	" " " 626
"    Church from the South-east }
Lyndhurst : General View from the North }	" " " 628
"    King's House
"    "    "    The Verderer's Hall }	" " " 630
"    Swan Green }
"    Emery Down }	" " " 632
Minstead : Rufus Stone
"    Castle Malwood }	" " " 636
Minstead Church from the North-west
"    "    The 'Three-decker' Pulpit }	" " " 638
Lymington : Ampress Farm . . . . .	640
"    High Street . . . . .	full-page plate, facing 640
"    Passford Farm . . . . .	644
"    Church : Interior . . . . .	648
"    Church
"    Town and Harbour }	full-page plate, facing 648
Beaulieu : The Palace House from the River }
"    The Village	" " " 650
"    Abbey . . . . .	coloured plan, facing 652
"    "    South Side of the Great Gatehouse }
"    "    East Side of the Great Gatehouse }	full-page plate, facing 652
"    "    Part of Cloister Lavatory and Frater Doorway }
"    "    Passage and Steps to Frater Pulpit	" " " 654
"    "    The Outer Gateway
"    "    Part of the North Side of the Cloisters }	" " " 654
Dibden Church : The Nave looking East . . . . .	" " " 658

LIST OF MAPS.

	PAGE
Index Map to the Hundred of Crondall . . . . .	1
"    "    "    Liberty of Bentley . . . . .	27
"    "    "    Hundred of Holdshot . . . . .	31
"    "    "    "    Odiham . . . . .	67
"    "    "    "    Basingstoke . . . . .	113
"    "    "    "    Mainsborough . . . . .	182
"    "    "    "    Bountisborough . . . . .	188
"    "    "    "    Overton . . . . .	197
"    "    "    "    Chuteley . . . . .	223
"    "    "    "    Kingsclere . . . . .	245
"    "    "    "    Evingar . . . . .	273
"    "    "    "    Pastrow . . . . .	308
"    "    "    "    Andover . . . . .	333
"    "    "    "    Wherwell . . . . .	400
"    "    "    "    Barton Stacey . . . . .	415
"    "    "    "    King's Somborne . . . . .	438
"    "    "    "    Thorngate . . . . .	489
"    "    "    "    Redbridge . . . . .	544
"    "    "    "    Fordingbridge . . . . .	559
"    "    "    Liberty of Breamore . . . . .	596
"    "    "    Hundred of Ringwood . . . . .	603
"    "    "    "    New Forest . . . . .	615
"    "    "    Liberty of Lymington . . . . .	639
"    "    "    "    Beaulieu . . . . .	650
"    "    "    "    Dibden . . . . .	655
Speed's Map of Hampshire . . . . .	at end of volume

EDITORIAL NOTE

THE Editor wishes to express his thanks to all those who have assisted in the work of compiling the histories of the parishes dealt with in this volume. He is particularly indebted to Mr. J. Horace Round, M.A., LL.D., for reading all the proofs and offering many valuable suggestions both for this volume and Volume III. Among those who have read the proofs containing the accounts of the districts with which they are well acquainted and thus helped to ensure accuracy as to local details, the Editor desires to express his gratitude to the Earl of Portsmouth, the Lord Bolton, the Lord Curzon of Kedleston, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., the Hon. Gerald Lascelles, Sir William W. Portal, Bart., Sir Eyre Coote, Rev. A. Leigh Barker, M.A., Rev. R. F. Bigg-Wither, M.A., Rev. W. J. Clapp, M.A., Rev. W. L. W. Eyre, Rev. A. T. Finch, M.A., Rev. C. E. Hoyle, M.A., Rev. W. Turner Long, Rev. U. Z. Rule, Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A., Rev. G. C. Stenning, M.A., Rev. H. C. Tompkins, M.A., Rev. M. N. Walde, Mr. J. H. Benyon, Mr. C. L. Chute, Mr. A. F. Clifford, Captain F. J. Dalgety, D.L., J.P., Mr. W. H. Deverell, M.A., D.L., J.P., Mr. Richard Durnford, Mr. A. East, Mr. R. B. Eggar, Mr. Thomas Eggar, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hautenville-Cope, Mr. A. B. Heath, Lieut. J. F. R. Hope, Mr. J. A. Kingdon, Mr. Montagu G. Knight, D.L., J.P., Mr. G. M. Miles-Bailey, J.P., Mr. W. S. Tomkins, Mr. H. B. Walters, M.A., F.S.A., and Mr. J. Willis-Fleming, D.L., J.P.

The number of those to whom the Editor and his staff are indebted for assistance by the loan of MSS. and supplying information is too large to give in detail, but especial thanks in this respect are due to the Duke of Wellington, K.G., G.C.V.O., the Duchess of Wellington, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Walter G. Stopford, R.N., the Hon. F. H. Baring, Major-Gen. Sir A. F. Warren, K.C.B., the Ven. Archdeacon Fearon, D.D., Rev. T. A. Hayes Belcher, M.A., Rev. W. G. Cazalet, M.A., Rev. R. J. Chandler, Rev. J. H. D. Creighton, Rev. H. E. Delmé-Radcliffe, M.A., Rev. W. F. T. Hamilton, M.A., Rev. A. B. Hargrave, M.A., Rev. C. de Havilland, M.A., Rev. W. H. Hayman, M.A., Rev. K. E. Kelsall, M.A., Rev. W. H. Moody, B.A., Rev. R. Price, Rev. A. C. Radcliffe, M.A., Rev. C. P. C. Seagrim, B.A., Rev. J. Carpenter Turner, M.A., Rev. J. F. Williams, M.A., Rev. J. N. B. Woodroffe, M.A., Mrs. Alder, Mr. G. E. Baker (Bursar of Magdalen College, Oxford), Mr. F. H. Bathurst, Mr. F. H. Birch, Mr. George Briscoe,

EDITORIAL NOTE

Mr. W. Fitzherbert Brockholes, Mr. Tankerville Chamberlayne, B.A., J.P., Mr. H. F. Compton, D.L., J.P., Capt. F. Cotton, Mr. John Coventry, J.P., Mr. G. H. Duckworth, Mr. H. J. Dutton, J.P., Mr. Montague Edwards, Mr. Douglas Everett, Mr. G. E. Briscoe Eyre, M.A., J.P., Mr. J. A. K. Falconer, Mr. H. C. Formby, B.A., J.P., Mr. H. L. Hansard, M.A., J.P., Mr. George Hennessy, Mr. Ellis Hicks-Beach, Mr. H. E. S. Holt, Mr. W. F. Hull, Mr. A. H. Hussey, Capt. G. D. Jeffreys, J.P., Mr. John Jeffreys, J.P., Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise, F.S.A., Mr. Herbert Johnson, Mr. J. Lindsay Johnston, M.A., D.L., J.P., Commodore A. L. Knapton, R.N., Mr. A. Murray, Mrs. S. C. Newcome, Mr. Keppel Pulteney, J.P., Mr. A. N. Radcliffe, Mr. Hugh E. Raynbird, Mr. A. E. Scott, J.P., Mr. F. Shingleton, Mrs. Suckling, Col. T. E. Vickers, C.B., V.D., and Mr. T. B. Woodham; also to the late Lord Swaythling, Lieut.-Col. Sir F. W. Carden, Capt. C. J. Maxwell Lefroy and Mr. T. F. Kirby, M.A., F.S.A.

The Editor is also indebted to the late Earl of Northbrook, Sir William W. Portal, Bart., the Rev. W. L. W. Eyre, Col. H. St. John-Mildmay, the Society of Antiquaries, the Royal Archaeological Institute and the Hampshire Field Club for illustrations.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE
AND THE
ISLE OF WIGHT

TOPOGRAPHY

THE HUNDRED OF CRONDALL

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

ALDERSHOT

CRONDALL, WITH THE TITHINGS OF EWSHOTT, DIPPENHALL, CRONDALL, SWANTHORPE, AND CROOKHAM

FARNBOROUGH

LONG SUTTON

YATELEY, WITH THE TITHINGS OF COVE AND HAWLEY<sup>1</sup>

Under Crondall Hundred, in Domesday Book, are entries relating to Crondall, Itchel (in Crondall), Cove (in Yateley), Badley (now Clare Park), Long Sutton, and Farnborough;<sup>2</sup> and as the whole of Aldershot and the greater part of Yateley were then included in Crondall, it appears that the extent of the hundred was practically the same in 1086 as in 1831. Minley in Yateley, however, was in Holdshot Hundred,<sup>3</sup> and continued to form part of it for many centuries.<sup>3a</sup>

The Bishop of Winchester in 1086 held the whole hundred, and it is stated to have always belonged to the Church.<sup>4</sup>

There were 50 hides in the time of Edward the Confessor, but from that period until 1086 the Church only paid geld for 40 hides.<sup>5</sup>

The descent of the hundred is identical with that of the manor of Crondall (q.v.).

Although the Bishop of Winchester's rights over Crondall had been defined in 1283-4,<sup>6</sup> the struggle between the bishop and the prior and convent as to the court to which the Hampshire tithings owed suit—to Blackheathfield in Farnham or to Crondall—only came to an end in 1398, when it was decreed that all the

<sup>1</sup> The extent of the hundred as given in the Population Returns of 1831.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465. See under histories of the various parishes.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 505a.

<sup>3a</sup> Exch. Dep. Hil. 14 & 15 Chas. I, 13. See also the Hundred of Holdshot.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 276; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 13-17.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

free tenants of Crondall, with all the tithing-men of the towns, villages, and hamlets of the entire manor and lordship of Crondall, together with four men of each tithing, were bound to pay two suits yearly at the bishop's court at Blackheathfield.<sup>7</sup>

This shows that the men of Crondall were subjected to the hardship of paying suit at two hundred courts, for they not only presented at the tourn of Farnham Blackheath, but also at the Crondall Hundred tourn.<sup>8</sup> Since 1831 the following parishes have been formed :—Cove, in 1838, from the parish of Yateley ; Crookham, in 1842, from Crondall parish ; Ewshott, in 1886, from the parishes of Crondall and Crookham ; Fleet, in 1863, from the parishes of Crondall, Elvetham, and Yateley ; Hawley, in 1838, from Yateley ; and Minley, in 1871, from Yateley.

ALDERSHOT

Alreschate (xiii cent.) ; Alreshute, Alreshete (xiv cent.) ; Aldershott, Haldershutt, Aldrisscott (xvi cent.) ; Aldershot (xvii cent.).

Aldershot is situated 35 miles from London, and has stations on the London and South Western and South Eastern and Chatham railways. The parish covers an area of 4,177 acres. In the south the ground is low, but rises slightly towards the north, reaching at Greenham's Hill a height of 413 ft. above the ordnance datum. The River Blackwater forms the southern and eastern boundaries of the parish.

Previous to 1855 Aldershot was one of the most pleasant and picturesque hamlets in Hampshire, consisting of the church, the two important houses called Aldershot Manor and Aldershot Place, two or three farm-houses, and the village green. Mr. Hoyle relates that in 1725 the Bishop of Winchester issued a paper of twelve questions to the clergy of the diocese preparatory to his visitation. One of these questions was : ' About what number of Souls, according to the best information that you can reasonably get, do you suppose to be in your Parish ? ' The answer of James Forde, minister of Aldershot, to this question was, ' Six score and fifteen. ' <sup>1</sup>

In 1854 the Government purchased three large tracts of land in Aldershot and the neighbourhood, and established a military camp on a very extensive scale, the camps proper being divided by the Basingstoke Canal into two portions, the North and South Camps, consisting of ranges of wooden huts in parallel lines.<sup>2</sup> In 1890 it was decided to replace the wooden huts by permanent brick structures, now known as the ' Wellington, ' ' Stanhope, ' and ' Marlborough ' lines, which together accommodate over 20,000 men.

Consequent on the establishment of these camps, the village of Aldershot has now become a considerable town, with a population in 1901 of 30,974.<sup>3a</sup>

Many modern conveniences have been added to the camp for the use of the officers and men, including an officers' club, opened in 1896, a library and reading-room, a theatre, and cricket, tennis, and polo grounds. The Church of England Soldiers' Institute in the North Camp, erected at a cost of £1,000, was opened in 1894.

The Military or Cambridge Hospital, erected at a cost of over £45,000, stands on an eminence called ' Gun Hill, ' near the South Camp, and overlooking the town, from which a gun is fired by electric current from Greenwich daily at 1 and 9.30 p.m. This hospital can accommodate 450 patients.

The Aldershot Cottage Hospital, in Church Lane, was opened in 1897, and has ten beds for patients.

The Ash Victoria Hall, erected to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of her late Majesty Queen Victoria, was opened in 1898.

The colossal bronze equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, which stood since 1846 on the top of the arch at Hyde Park Corner, was taken down in 1883 and erected on a pedestal of red Corshill stone in the South Camp, Aldershot ; the statue in its new position was unveiled 19 August 1885.

On the east side of the Long Valley, a large sandy waste used by the troops, stretching northward to the Basingstoke Canal, stands the Queen's Pavilion, which was erected for the use of Queen Victoria.

Aldershot Park, formerly called Aldershot Place, occupies the south of the parish. The house was built in the middle of the 19th century by Charles Barron the younger, who died on 25 September 1859. Some time afterwards the estate was sold to Mr. John Back, on whose death it was purchased by Mr. Charles D'Oridant, late proprietor of the Pavilion Hotel at Folkestone. From the latter it passed by purchase to the present owner, Miss Kennedy. A little farther north is Aldershot Manor, the residence of Mrs. Newcome, situated near the old parish church and churchyard of St. Michael. The Grange is the residence of Mr. William T. Robertson, J.P. Aldershot Lodge, which is at present unoccupied, was for some time the residence of Lieut.-Colonel Henry J. W. Jerome, R.E.

The town of Aldershot is now governed by an urban district council, under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894.

The area of Aldershot parish is chiefly covered by common and heath, but there are 321½ acres of arable land, 600½ acres of permanent grass, and 2 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>3</sup> The common fields of

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Sur. ii, 580.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>1</sup> Ex inform, the Rev. C. E. Hoyle, M.A., vicar of Aldershot.

<sup>2</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), Introd. p. xvi.

<sup>3a</sup> This return included the troops stationed in the South Camp. The civilians numbered only 16,726.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

Aldershot were inclosed under an award of 6 May 1856.<sup>31</sup>

A fish pond exists in Aldershot Park estate, but is not mentioned in any of the known records.

In a fine of 1720 there is mention of a wood of 50 acres.<sup>4</sup>

In the Crondall Customary of 1567 the following place-names occur under Aldershot:—A grove of wood called 'The Home Grove,' a wood called 'Owles Holes,' and a close lying near 'Le Clarcke's Lane Ende,' a grove of wood called 'Rough Grove,'<sup>5</sup> a close called 'Pillebridge,' a parcel of heath called 'Hopcoxe,' a field called 'Gallowe Hill,' and a wood called 'Cranmore.'

The manor of Crondall, which was MANORS originally held by the Prior and convent of St. Swithun, and on the dissolution of the priory was granted to the newly-constituted Dean and chapter of Winchester, included land in Aldershot, and it still comprises part of that parish.<sup>6</sup>

The first recorded mention of the manor of ALDERSHOT is in 1537, in which year Thomas Saunders and Henry White, clerk, dealt with it by recovery.<sup>7</sup> In 1599 Robert White died seised of Aldershot Manor,<sup>8</sup> which, it seems probable, had been left to him by his father Sir John White of Aldershot, alderman of London, who died in 1573.<sup>9</sup> Robert

It is uncertain to whom the manor passed on the death of James Tichborne, but in 1778 it was the seat of Godfrey Clarke,<sup>16</sup> and in 1787 was dealt with by fine between William Assheton and Francis Penyston,<sup>17</sup> the latter being again mentioned as the holder in 1816.<sup>18</sup>

It is again uncertain who was the next holder of Aldershot Manor, but the estate now bearing that name was purchased about 1847 from a Mr. Bridges by Captain George Newcome, who died in 1884, leaving the estate to his widow for life. On her death in 1888 the estate passed to Captain Newcome's nephew Major Henry George Newcome, who left it at his death in 1895 to his widow Mrs. Sibylla Caroline Newcome, the present holder.<sup>19</sup> The present house was built in 1670. Near it are traces of the foundations of an older building.<sup>20</sup> chancel 23 ft. 9 in. by 16 ft. 4 in.; nave, 46 ft. 6 in. by 21 ft. 1 in., with a north aisle 18 ft. 2 in. wide, and a south porch and west tower 12 ft. 1 in. by 11 ft. 8 in. The only old parts of the church are the chancel, which seems to be of the 15th century, and is built of chalk and ironstone, with a slight northern inclination from the axis of the nave, and the tower. The nave and aisle are entirely modern. The east window of the chancel has three cinquefoiled lights of 15th-century style, in modern stonework, and in the north and south walls of the chancel are pairs of windows of 15th-century date, the eastern pair having two ogee trefoiled lights under a square head with pierced spandrels, and the western pair two plain trefoiled lights. They have all been much restored.

The church of ST. MICHAEL CHURCHES AND ALL ANGELS consists of a

The chancel arch is modern, of 15th-century style, as is the north arcade of the nave, of four bays, with octagonal columns and moulded capitals. All the windows of the nave and aisle are also of 15th-century style.

The tower is in three stages, and appears to be entirely of 17th-century date, the two lower stages being of ironstone with red-brick quoins, and the top one of red brick, with an embattled parapet. There is a west doorway with plastered jambs and two-centred arch, and a modern two-light south window. The middle and top stage have two-light windows, with plain pointed heads.

All the internal fittings are modern, including the galleries at the west end of the nave and aisle. The font is octagonal with panelled bowl, and stands in the nave under the gallery.

On the north wall of the chancel is an alabaster monument to Dame Ellen Tichborne, 1606<sup>20a</sup>, elder co-heir of Robert White, late of Aldershot, and first wife of Sir Richard Tichborne, second baronet, with a small kneeling figure set in a frame, above which are two shields, now blank, on strapwork panels.

On the opposite wall is another alabaster monu-

WHITE. Six pieces azure and or with three roundels argent each having two waves vert upon it in the azure and three lions' heads railed gules in the or.

TICHBORNE. Vair a chief or.

left the manor to be divided between his two daughters, Ellen the wife of Richard Tichborne, and Mary the wife of Walter Tichborne, brother of Richard.<sup>10</sup> Ellen surrendered her moiety of the manor to her sister, who died seised of the whole in 1640, leaving as her heir her son Benjamin Tichborne.<sup>11</sup> Benjamin evidently died without issue before 1661, for by that year his brother Francis had succeeded to the manor.<sup>12</sup> Francis died in 1671, and his estates passed to his son White, who held them until his death, which occurred about 1701.<sup>13</sup> His heir was James Tichborne, who mortgaged Aldershot Manor to Samuel Johnson in 1712,<sup>14</sup> and to Sir Charles Vernon and George Vernon in 1720.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>31</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>4</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Geo. I.

<sup>5</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 330-59.

<sup>6</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 37, 98-102, 160, 330-59; L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>7</sup> Recov. R. East. 29 Hen. VIII, rot. 109. Possibly the Henry to whom his father, Robert White of Farnham, in 1517 left the reversion of all his lands in Aldershot (P.C.C. Wills, 10 Ayloff).

<sup>8</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclviii, 31.

<sup>9</sup> P.C.C. Wills, 40 Peter; Recov. R. Hil. 31 Eliz. rot. 71.

<sup>10</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclviii, 31; P.C.C. Wills, 35 Kidd.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 42 Eliz.; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dxcvi, 129.

<sup>12</sup> C.I. S.P. Dom. 1661-2, p. 88.

<sup>13</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 618.

<sup>14</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 11 Anne; Recov. R. Hil. 11 Anne, rot. 146.

<sup>15</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Geo. I.

<sup>16</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse's MS. Surv. of Hants (1778) penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 27 Geo. III.

<sup>18</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 57 Geo. III, rot. 20.

<sup>19</sup> Ex inform. Mrs. S. C. Newcome.

<sup>20</sup> William White, Hist. and Gazetteer of Hants (1859), 532.

<sup>20a</sup> The date of her death was 1612, vide Cove infra.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

ment, to Mary, co-heir of Robert White of Aldershot and wife of Sir Walter Tichborne, knight. She died in 1640, and is represented kneeling in a small arched recess between her seven sons and six daughters. Above are three shields, the first bearing Tichborne arms, impaling White quartering: Ermine a chevron sable cotised, with three martlets or on the chevron. The second shield has the quartered coat of White, and the third is Tichborne quartered with the two coats borne by White.

There are three bells in the tower, of which the treble bears the lion's face, coin, and foliate stamp of the 15th-century group of bells coming from the Wokingham foundry; the second is by E. Knight of Reading, 1624, with an elaborate foliate band near the top. The tenor is inscribed: 'This bell was made 1611,' and has the maker's mark of three bells on a shield between the initials w. y., for William Yare of Reading.

The plate consists of a chalice of 1887, a paten of 1888, a flagon of 1841, and a pewter flagon.

There are six books of registers. The first, the original paper book, contains baptisms 1571-1719, with a gap from 1574 to 1592; burials, 1581 to 1719, and marriages, 1590-1719. The second contains baptisms, 1720-94; burials, 1718-96; and marriages, 1714-54. The third contains marriages only, 1754-1808; the fourth, baptisms 1796-1812; the fifth, burials 1796-1812; and the sixth, marriages, 1808-12.

The church of HOLY TRINITY consists of a chancel, a fair-sized nave with clearstory, north and south aisles, and north and west porches. It is constructed of brick with stone detail and facing, and is designed in an adaptation of 13th-century style. It was built in 1882.

From an early date Aldershot ADVOWSONS was a chapelry of Crondall, and was served from that church. The earliest known record of the chapel of Aldershot occurs during the episcopacy of William of Wykeham<sup>21</sup> (1367-98), but it is probable that one existed there long before that date.

It appears from the registers of Aldershot Church, which date from 1571, that the chapelry continued to be served from Crondall until 1828, when a perpetual curate was appointed,<sup>22</sup> the advowson remaining with the patrons of Crondall Church (q.v.).

In 1864, and again in 1868, endowments for the erection of a parsonage were granted out of the Common Fund,<sup>23</sup> and in 1873 there is the first record of the institution of a vicar. The living is at the present day of the annual value of £270, and is in the gift of the master and brethren of St. Cross Hospital, Winchester.

The church of St. Augustine, which was built at North Town in 1907 to the designs of Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A., and the brick-built church of St. Aidan at the West End, which was dedicated in 1901, are mission churches served from the church of St. Michael.

Holy Trinity Church in Victoria Road was erected for a district formed in 1878 in the new part of the town. The living is a vicarage, in the gift of trustees. Holy Trinity iron mission church was erected in 1887.

The Roman Catholic Chapel of St. Joseph in Queen's Road is an iron building (1869) with 400 sittings. The English Presbyterian Church in Victoria Road was erected in 1862 at a cost of £5,000, and has 700 sittings. There is also a Wesleyan chapel in Grosvenor Road, erected in 1874; two Primitive Methodist chapels, one in Victoria Road and the other in Ash Road, a Baptist chapel in Upper Elms Road, Cargate, erected in 1883; and a Particular Baptist chapel in Victoria Road.

In the camps are All Saints' Church for the Wellington lines, St. George's Church for the Stanhope lines, the Marlborough Lines Church, and the Deepcut Barracks Church. In the South Camp is an iron church, seating 900, used by the Presbyterians; while in the North Camp a church of wood and iron, seating 1,000, is used both for Church of England services and those of other denominations, and has about 1,000 sittings. The Roman Catholic Church of St. Louis (1861) is in the North Camp, and that of St. Michael and St. Sebastian (1855) in the South Camp. The camps are also provided with a Wesleyan chapel, a Baptist chapel, and a Jewish synagogue.

The Franciscans have a convent and an orphanage for little boys in the parish.

Aldershot cemetery near Redan Hill was formed in 1860.

The Parish Clerk's Endowment CHARITIES formerly consisted of 9 acres of land with buildings thereon, known as Upper and Little Claversden, and 2 a. 2 r. 26 p., known as Clerk's Croft, in Church Lane, Aldershot.<sup>24</sup> The former was sold in 1900 for £5,000, and 2 a. 2 r. 26 p., part of the latter property, of the annual value of £20, was sold in 1903 for £1,800, a portion whereof was permanently invested in £666 13s. 4d. India 3 per cent. stock, with the Official Trustees, and the balance was by an order of the Charity Commissioners of 11 November 1904 authorized to be expended in defraying certain expenses incurred by the trustees in widening a road, making compensation to a tenant, and in defraying the cost of the erection of a parish hall on part of the charity property. The £5,000 above mentioned was invested in £5,263 3s. 2d. Middlesex County 3 per cent. stock in the name of the Official Trustees, who also held £158 os. 9d. consols, representing a sum awarded in 1855 in lieu of common land taken by the Crown.

The charity is regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 2 October 1900, whereby the annual income, amounting to about £180, is made applicable in the payment of £50 to £60 for the salary of the clerk, and the residue for the maintenance of the services of the church.

This parish is also possessed of 5 acres as a re-

<sup>21</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 133.

<sup>22</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. C. E. Hoyle, M.A., vicar of Aldershot; see also Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>23</sup> Index to Lond. Gaz. (1830-83) 21.

<sup>24</sup> In the Crondall Customary of 1567 there occurs the entry 'Memorandum. That there is a parcel of lande cauled Claversden, containing by estimation 12½ acres, and one croft cauled the Clarkes-croft, containing by estimation 2½ acres; which severall parcells have bene taken owt of all the severall yarde landes within the said tythinge; and by th'assent of the Lord of this Mannor and hundred, and of the ternautes within the same mannor and hundred, have bene allwayes past remembrance of man, lymitted and apoynted to the maintenaunce and fyndinge of a clarcke, within the parish churche of Aldershot for the tyme beinge; for which the said parishe clarcke doth pay yearelye unto the lorde of this mannor by eaven portions at the feasts aforesaid, fourpence"; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 358-9.

creation ground acquired under the inclosure award of 1856, which is in part maintained by the dividends on a sum of £428 19s. 1d. consols, in the name of the Paymaster-General, arising from the sale in 1869 of an acre of land. Under the same award 2 a. 38 p., known as 'The Green,' was also allotted.

In 1863 Miss Isabella Schroeder, by will, bequeathed £1,000, the interest to be applied for the benefit of the poor, with a preference to poor widows. The legacy was invested in £1,107 18s. 6d. consols, which is standing in the names of the Rev. Henry James West and two others.

In 1875 Thomas Smith, by will proved on 23 December, left a sum, now represented by £151 14s. 8d. India 3 per cent. stock, the income to be applied in aid of the sick poor.

In 1888 Mrs. Harriet Sophia Newcome, by a codicil to her will, proved 20 November, left £300, income for the poor. The legacy, less duty, was invested in £274 16s. 2d. consols, which, together with the stock belonging to the preceding charity, is held by the Official Trustees.

These charities are administered together. In 1905 the income, amounting to £39 12s., was applied as to £5 in providing flannel and necessities for needy and sick poor, and the balance in distribution of coal to about 340 poor.

The Cottage Hospital.—Richard Eve, by will proved 28 August 1900, left £2,000, less duty, in augmentation of the maintenance fund. The sum of £1,800, with £200 from other moneys, was invested on a mortgage for £2,000 on the security of leasehold premises known as 63 and 65, High Street, at 4 per cent. per annum.

CRONDALL

Crundal (ix cent.); Crundelas (x cent.); Corondale (xi cent.); Crondale (xii cent.); Crundale (xiv cent.); Crowdale (xvi cent.).

Crondall is a large village and parish situated 4 miles west-north-west from Farnham station on the Alton and Winchester branch of the London and South Western Railway.

Crondall parish is now divided into five tithings, viz. : Crondall, Swanthorpe, and portions of Dippenhall, Crookham (Church Crookham), and Ewshott.

Crookham and Fleet, formerly part of Crondall, were constituted ecclesiastical parishes in 1842 and 1863 respectively, and civil parishes in 1894. Ewshott is an ecclesiastical parish formed in 1886 from the parishes of Crondall and Crookham. From the north, the ground rises to a height of some 600 ft. above the ordnance datum in the south-east.

Crondall village lies in the centre of the modern parish of Crondall, at a height of about 300 ft. above the ordnance datum. Swanthorpe and part of Dippenhall occupy the southern part of the parish. East-bridge, now the residence of Mr. J. Lindsay Johnston, is about half a mile north of the village. Clare Park is situated about half a mile south-east of the church; the park covers about 200 acres. Itchel Manor, which is a short distance west of the village, is supposed to be a haunted house; unaccountable noises are said to be heard, but only when members of the family or their dependants are living there.<sup>1</sup>

In 1828 Charles and Anthony Lefroy of Itchel Manor found a rare and interesting collection of Saxon and Merovingian gold coins on Bourley Bottom. An ancient circular entrenchment exists at Barley Pound Farm in the extreme south of the parish, at a height of 490 ft. above the Ordnance datum. The foundations of a Roman villa, situated 200 yards north of the farm, were excavated in May 1817, disclosing a beautiful tessellated pavement, which has been since destroyed.<sup>2</sup>

The parish of Crondall comprises a great variety of soils—being sandy in Ewshott and Crookham, chalky in Swanthorpe, and having clay in some of the other tithings. The subsoil is sand, gravel, and chalk. The crops are corn and roots, and hops were formerly cultivated. The area of Crondall is 4,201 acres, there being 1,665 acres of arable land, 1,305½ acres of permanent grass, and 555½ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>3</sup>

Crookham, covering an area of 4,041 acres,<sup>4</sup> is situated 2½ miles from Fleet station, on the London and South Western Railway main line. The Basingstoke Canal forms part of the northern boundary of the parish, and separates it from Fleet. The parish is well wooded, especially in the east, where there are several old copse inclosures. Almshouses have been erected in Crookham, with a legacy bequeathed by Miss Isabelle Cottrell of Bath, for the benefit of the poor. There are several good estates in the north-west. Crookham House is the residence of the Hon. Richard Moreton, D.L., and Dinorben Court that of Mr. Frederick George Chinnock. Gally Hill is occupied by Mr. A. J. F. Nugent, and Redfields by Mr. J. Brandon. Court Moor is the residence of Mr. Edgar Figgess, and Basingbourne that of Mr. C. Lacy.

Ewshott lies north-east of Crondall village. A camp for the Royal Field Artillery was formed here in September 1900, with huts for 450 men and stabling for 270 horses, thus more than doubling the population, which in 1891 was only 441.

Fleet parish, covering an area of 1,531 acres,<sup>5</sup> lies north of Crondall, 36½ miles from London. The London and South Western Railway crosses Fleet Pond between Farnborough and Fleet stations. Fleet Common is now cut up with roads and building sites. The Fleet Club, in Middle Street, erected in 1905, contains billiard and reading rooms and a concert-room seating 250 persons. The North Hants Golf Club-house was formerly known as The Beeches, and part of the course was then a gallop for Lord Calthorpe's racing stud.

Woodcote is occupied by Captain John Strachan Bridges and The Views by Colonel T. Horniblow, while Fir Croft is the residence of Mr. Jeffery Edwards, and Broome that of Lady Elizabeth Cust.

<sup>1</sup> Charles D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 5.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 305.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> This area comprises 521 acres of arable land, 586 acres of permanent grass, and 119 acres of woods and plantations (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. [1905]).

<sup>5</sup> Including 44½ acres of arable land, and 111½ acres of permanent grass (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. [1905]).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Under Crondall the following place-names occur :—Blakerede,<sup>6</sup> a messuage called Cradill Boxe,<sup>7</sup> a meadow called Le Preymead.<sup>8</sup> Peperstiche Feald, Le Redstreet Meade, Cock's Bridge, Vale Parke, Le Forrep Lande, Shamblehatche, Wymbly Hill, Thornie Howse, Skalgrove, Le Ursfelde, Le Blacke Lake, Spice Meade, Ludshed Meade, and Bovenhurst.<sup>8a</sup>

The following place-names occur under Itchel Manor in the 18th century :—Closes called The Hyde, Little Potter's Fore, Earlins, Two Downs, Tanley, Green Park, Park Corner, Dean's Piddle, Old Hop Garden.<sup>9</sup>

The common lands of Ewshott and Crookham were inclosed in 1834, and those of Dippenhall fourteen years later.<sup>10</sup>

Towards the end of the 9th century MANORS King Alfred by will bequeathed CRONDALL to Ethelm, his brother Ethelbert's son.<sup>11</sup> In the following century Crondall was in the possession of Ælfsige, Bishop of Winchester, and was left by him to Ælfheah, an alderman, 'his beloved friend,' for life, with reversion to the Old Minster.<sup>12</sup> Ælfheah by will dated between 965 and 975 bequeathed it to the Old Minster,<sup>13</sup> and the monks were confirmed in the possession of the whole of Crondall (45 hides) by King Edgar in 973-4.<sup>14</sup> At the time of the Domesday Survey the Bishop of Winchester was holding Crondall for the support of the monks. It had been assessed at 50 hides in the time of Edward the Confessor, but it only paid geld for 40 hides.<sup>15</sup> Crondall was confirmed to the prior and convent in the general confirmation of their manors made by the pope in 1205,<sup>16</sup> and again in 1243,<sup>17</sup> and the Bishop of Winchester gave up all claim to it in 1284.<sup>18</sup> The manor remained in the possession of the prior and convent until 1539,<sup>19</sup> when, on the surrender of the priory, it passed into the hands of the king, who, two years later, granted it in free alms to the newly constituted Dean and chapter of Winchester.<sup>20</sup> This grant was confirmed by James I in 1604.<sup>21</sup>

At the time of the Commonwealth, when deans and chapters were abolished, and their lands seized by the Parliamentary Commissioners, the manor of Crondall was sold to Nicholas Love, one of the regicides, and eldest son of the Warden of Winchester College.<sup>22</sup> At the Restoration the dean and chapter were restored, and continued in possession until 1861,<sup>23</sup> when, by Order in Council, the manor was vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are the present owners.

The courts of the manor were held at Court Farm, which, being in a ruinous condition, was pulled down about 1800 and replaced by the present square brick house, late the residence of Mr. C. J. Maxwell Lefroy. The huge grange or tithe-barn, which was reputed to be the largest barn in Hampshire, was unhappily destroyed by fire in 1861.

From the Crondall Records it appears that after the establishment of the dean and chapter, the tenures and customs of the manor of Crondall had drifted into a state of uncertainty, and soon after the accession of Elizabeth it was found necessary to draw up a new customary of the manor. This document, called The Crondall Customary of 1567, took the form of an indenture made between the dean and chapter and the tenants of the manor. Every tenant surrendered his estate and had resein of it from the hands of the steward, accepting thereby a new title directly from the capitular body. Two copies exist of this indenture, one being in the possession of the Dean and chapter of Winchester, and the other in the possession of the parish of Aldershot.<sup>24</sup> This document gives a list of all the tenants in Crondall, with the amount, description, and value of the land held by each.<sup>25</sup>

Free chase in Crondall was granted to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun in 1290, free warren in 1300,<sup>26</sup> and in 1332 licence was granted to them to impark their woods here.<sup>27</sup> There is mention of a fishery in Crondall in 1316,<sup>28</sup> which may have been that of Fleet Ponds. The ponds are said to have been formed by a stream from Bourley Hill, which flowed to the low land called Le Flete. In 1505 the fishery of Fleet and the pasture called Le Flete were leased by the Prior and convent of St. Swithun to Sir William Giffard and John his son. Two ponds existed there at this date. Sir William and his son were to pay a rent of 23s. 4d. for the pasture, and for the fishery 'a hundred of the fishes to wit in English, pykes, tenches, perches, bremes and roches to be caught at the costs of the said William and John Giffard, and to the Priory of St. Swithun, Winchester, to be carried and delivered in a good and fresh state, yearly, in the time of Lent, or between the Feasts of Easter and Pentecost.' They were also to repair the bridge called 'Le Fletebrige' between the two ponds.<sup>29</sup> In 1536 the prior and convent granted a similar lease to George Paulet for sixty years, to commence from 29 September 1558, at the expiration of a thirty years' lease to Richard

<sup>6</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 25.

<sup>7</sup> Ct. of Reg. bde. 11, no. 18.

<sup>8</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 30.

<sup>8a</sup> Ibid. 178-258.

<sup>9</sup> Close, 13 Geo. III, pt. xvi, no. 9. The following names are still preserved in the Ordnance Map :—Tanley Row Copse, Park Corner Copse, Hop Garden Plantation.

<sup>10</sup> Blue Bk. Inclosure Awards, 151.

<sup>11</sup> Liber de Hyda (Rolls Ser.), 331.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 343.

<sup>13</sup> Thorpe, Diplomatorium Anglicum aevi Saxonici, 526.

<sup>14</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. iii, 631. The boundaries are given in full.

<sup>15</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>16</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 21.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 201.

<sup>18</sup> Cal. Chart. R. ii, 288.

<sup>19</sup> Add. Chart. 28668; Crondall Rec.

(Hants Rec. Soc.) passim; L. and P. Hen. VIII, ix, 438; Feud. Aids, ii, 314. Records exist dated 1307 and 1331 relating to lands in Crondall owned by the De Burgh family. At the former date Nicholas De Burgh granted land in Crondall to his brother William (Crondall Rec. [Hants Rec. Soc.], 25-6). At the latter date Margery de Burgh acknowledged that the Prior and convent of St. Swithun had granted her a corrody in consideration of her having granted certain lands and tenements in Crondall to William de Fyndone, clerk of the priory (ibid. 28). This William de Fyndone evidently died the same year, bequeathing his tenements in Crondall to the said prior and convent (Inq. a.q.d. file 216, no. 23; Cal. Pat. 1330-4, p. 233).

<sup>20</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>21</sup> Pat. 2 Jas. I, pt. xxiii, m. 39.

<sup>22</sup> Cal. S.P. Dom. 1660-1, p. 341.

<sup>23</sup> From information supplied by Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

<sup>24</sup> This was discovered about the middle of last century in an old chest in the belfry at Aldershot, which had not been opened for seventy or eighty years.

<sup>25</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 156-383.

<sup>26</sup> Cal. Chart. R. ii, 366; iii, 1. By an inquisition taken in 1286 it was ascertained that Crondall Chase had been the king's forest until the time of Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester, who purchased it from the king (Cal. Chart. R. ii, 366-7).

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 13.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid. 9 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 10.

<sup>29</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 449-53.

Giffard, the younger son of Sir William Giffard. In lieu of the obligation of sending fish to the priory he was to pay for the two ponds and the fishery 20s. yearly, and for the pasture called Le Flete 23s. 4d.<sup>30</sup> In the year 1567 a heavy storm and flood carried away the head of one of the ponds, and in order to save the expense of repair, the dean and chapter, who had succeeded to the possessions of the monastery in 1541,<sup>31</sup> gave the lessees permission to convert the site of one pond into meadow or pasture land. Notwithstanding, the old form of lease describing the property as two ponds was continued.<sup>32</sup> The pond, which covers an area of 130 acres, is now Crown property, having been purchased about the year 1854. It is the haunt of many common and some rare water fowl, and furnishes indifferent fishing, which is preserved by the War Office, permission to fish, however, being granted at a charge of £1 1s. a week.

The first recorded mention of the manor of ITCHEL (Ticelle, xi cent.; Ichehulle, Ichull xii cent.; Ichill, Dichull, Ichull, xiv cent.) occurs in the Domesday Survey, where it is stated that Itchel and Cove, which had been held as separate estates by Lewin and Ulward in the time of Edward the Confessor, were then in the possession of German, who was holding them of the Bishop of Winchester as of his manor of Crondall.<sup>33</sup>

From this time Itchel and Cove descended together as one manor for nearly five centuries. The next holder of the manor whose name has come down to us was Walkelin de Itchel, who was probably a son of German. He was dead before 1166, in which year his son Robert de Itchel was returned as holding two knights' fees of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>34</sup> The next recorded mention of Itchel is in 1230, when it was in the possession of William de Coleville.<sup>35</sup> He died in 1236, and was succeeded by his son William, who was stated to be holding two knights' fees in Itchel and Cove in 1243.<sup>36</sup> A few years later the property was acquired by Walter Giffard,<sup>37</sup> who was elected Bishop of Bath and Wells on 22 May 1264, and two years later was translated to the archiepiscopal

GIFFARD of Itchel.
Argent ten roundels gules.

see of York.<sup>38</sup> Giffard died in 1279, and was succeeded by his brother Godfrey Giffard, Bishop of Worcester.<sup>39</sup> These prelates seem to have made Itchel a place of occasional residence, as several of the transactions recorded in their registers are dated from Itchel.<sup>40</sup>

On the death of Godfrey in 1302 the manor passed to his nephew and heir John Giffard,<sup>41</sup> who died seised in 1319, leaving a son John.<sup>42</sup> This John Giffard joined the Earl of Hereford and other barons in their league against the Despensers, and his lands were consequently forfeited, being committed by the king to the custody of Robert Lewer.<sup>43</sup> Robert Lewer rebelled against the king in 1322, placed himself at the head of an armed force and entered the manor of Itchel and carried away the king's goods. He was thereupon taken prisoner and put to death,<sup>44</sup> and in 1324 Edward II granted the custody of the manor to John de Alton the bailiff of Odiham.<sup>45</sup> John Giffard seems, however, to have regained possession of his estates before his death, for he died seised of the manor of Itchel in 1327,<sup>46</sup> his heir being his infant son John. The custody of the manor was entrusted to Thomas de Bradestan, who in 1331 was ordered to repair the palings of the bishop's park of Farnham out of the issues of the manor of Itchel, the Bishop of Winchester having proved his right to this service from the tenant of the manor.<sup>47</sup> John Giffard granted a lease of the manor to Sir John de Wyngsfield in 1349,<sup>48</sup> but apparently died soon afterwards, although the exact date of his death is uncertain.

The estate then passed to his widow Eleanor, who died in 1360.<sup>49</sup> The custody of Elizabeth, the daughter and heir of John and Eleanor, was then granted to William de Edendon,<sup>50</sup> but she died without issue less than a year afterwards.<sup>51</sup>

The next heir to the estates was John Giffard, the son of William, a younger brother of John Giffard, Elizabeth's grandfather. In 1379 John obtained permission from the Bishop of Winchester to enlarge the park at Itchel, undertaking for himself and his heirs and assigns to pay to the bishop and his successors at their castle of Farnham yearly, on the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, a good bow with a suitable string, and six barbed arrows, well winged with peacock feathers, and in like manner between 1 December and 1 February in each year a fallow deer

<sup>30</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 474-5. Richard had obtained this lease from the prior and convent in 1528, after the death of his elder brother John (ibid. 453).

<sup>31</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>32</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 475.
<sup>33</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 407.

<sup>34</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 206; see also Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 34, for Henry de Blois' list of knights' fees held of the bishopric in the reign of Henry I.

<sup>35</sup> Close, 14 Henry III, m. 11.

<sup>36</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 407. In 1236 William son of William de Coleville paid Achard, the bishop's marshal, £10 for his relief, so as to be able to take possession of his inheritance (ibid. 407).

<sup>37</sup> In 1267 he obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Itchel (Chart. R. 51 Hen. III, m. 6). Even after he parted with the manor William de Coleville retained a carucate of land in Crondall which he granted for life to John Le Parker in 1268 (Feet of F. Hants, 52 Hen. III) with reversion to himself and his heirs. John Le Parker died leaving as his heirs his sisters Denise wife of Robert Pycarde and Aline wife of Robert Clare, and in 1285 Denise quitclaimed her share—1 messuage, 1 virgate of land, 3 acres of meadow and 15 acres of wood in Itchel—to her sister (Abbrev. Plac. 278). After the death of William de Coleville his daughters and co-heirs, Eleanor and Agnes, claimed the property, and in 1307 were successful in regaining possession (ibid. 260). This estate, to which was given the name of Colevillesland, was held of the lord of Itchel for 6d. rent. John son of John de Westcote died seised of it in 1336 (Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 46), and for some considerable period it followed the same descent as the manor of Badley (vide ibid. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 24; 10 Hen. V, no. 26<sup>a</sup>).

<sup>38</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. xxi, 296-7.

<sup>39</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. ii, 183. His brother Godfrey had apparently held the manor on lease from him, for in 1271-2 Henry III ordered the warden of the forest of Aliceholt to give Godfrey four live stags and eight live does in order to stock his park of Itchel (Close, 56 Hen. III, m. 10).

<sup>40</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 408.

<sup>41</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. xxi, 294; Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. I, no. 41.

<sup>42</sup> Inq. p.m. 13 Edw. II, no. 15.

<sup>43</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 265.

<sup>44</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 68.

<sup>45</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 207.

<sup>46</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III, no. 46.

<sup>47</sup> Close, 5 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 3.

<sup>48</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 27 d.

<sup>49</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 74.

<sup>50</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 258.

<sup>51</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 91.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

from the park.<sup>48a</sup> It is uncertain in what year this John died, but in 1418 Mary, probably his widow, who afterwards married John Southworth, held the manor.<sup>49</sup> In 1428 another John Giffard held Itchel,<sup>50</sup> and died on 10 June 1444, leaving a son and heir Robert.<sup>51</sup> Two years later Robert Giffard died without issue,<sup>52</sup> and land in Cove was held in dower by his widow Joan, who survived him, until 1478.<sup>53</sup> The manor of Itchel, however, passed to his brother John, who was returned as the owner in 1461.<sup>54</sup> This John Giffard was succeeded by a son William Giffard, who held the manor in 1509, in which year he and his son John received from the Prior and convent of St. Swithun a grant of woodland for the enlargement of Itchel Park.<sup>55</sup> William Giffard died in 1549, and was succeeded by his grandson John, the son of his son John, who had predeceased him.<sup>56</sup> John died seised of the manor in 1563, leaving a son George, then aged 10 years.<sup>57</sup> A third part of the manor passed to his widow—who married William Hodges of Weston Subedge—as dower.<sup>58</sup> In 1579, shortly after George Giffard came of age, Henry Wriothesley, second Earl of Southampton, desiring to add Itchel Manor to his neighbouring estate of Dogmersfield, purchased the estate.<sup>59</sup> At this period Cove became separated from Itchel Manor (see Cove, in Yateley parish). Henry Wriothesley died in Itchel Manor-house on 4 October 1581,<sup>60</sup> and was succeeded by his son Henry, third earl,<sup>61</sup> who died in 1624.<sup>61a</sup> In 1629 his son Thomas, fourth Earl of Southampton, sold Itchel Manor to Robert Mason, LL.D.,<sup>62</sup> of Lincoln's Inn, who was steward of the borough of Basingstoke, M.P. first for Christchurch and then for Winchester, vicar-general to the bishop and chancellor of the diocese, and the official of the archdeacons of Winchester and Surrey. He died in 1635 and was succeeded by members of the family until about 1670. It was then purchased by John Bathurst, in the possession of whose descendants it was in 1736.<sup>63</sup> The next owner is stated to have been Martha Dearing of Odiham, widow, who held the manor about the middle of the 18th century;<sup>64</sup> and by 1764 it had come into the possession of Nicholas Linwood,<sup>65</sup> of Spring Gardens, Charing Cross, who was one of the directors of the East India Company (1749-51). He died on 7 May WRIOTHESLEY, Earl of Southampton. Azure a cross or between four falcons close argent.

1773, and in the same year his widow sold the estate to Henry Maxwell of Ramsbury (co. Wilts).<sup>66</sup> Henry Maxwell died in 1818, and bequeathed Itchel Manor to his wife's nephew, the Rev. John Henry George Lefroy, from whom it descended to his grandson, Mr. Charles James Maxwell Lefroy,<sup>67</sup> who died in November 1908.

LEFROY of Itchel. Vert fretty argent and a chief argent with a cap between two wyverns gules therein.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there is mention of a mill in Itchel worth 3s.<sup>68</sup> In 1237 Reginald de Cunde quitclaimed land and a mill in Itchel and Ewshott to William de Coleville.<sup>68a</sup> This mill is described as in utter ruin and of no value in the inquisition taken on the death of John Giffard in 1327. In a record of the year 1653, when the manor was held by the family of Mason, two water-mills are mentioned,<sup>69</sup> and in 1773 there were three water grist-mills under one roof, called "Ichell or Ichell borne mills."<sup>70</sup>

The manor of BADLEY (Beddelie, xi cent.; Badele, Badeligh, xiv cent.; Barley alias Barley Pound xvii cent.), now known as the CLARE PARK ESTATE, was held of the Bishop of Winchester as 3 virgates by one William in 1086, his predecessor being Alvrice, who had held them of the bishop as a villein.<sup>71</sup> In the 13th century Badley was held by the family of Pilesdone, but was eventually sold by Emma de Pilesdone to John de Westcote, who in 1312<sup>72</sup> obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Badley, and two years later was confirmed in his possession of the manor by John, son of Ivo de Pilesdone and great-grandson of Emma.<sup>73</sup>

John de Westcote died in 1334,<sup>74</sup> his heir being his son John, an idiot, on whose death, about two years later, the Westcote estates were divided among his four sisters and co-heirs, Alice the wife of William de Colrethe, Sybil the wife of Simon Bonyng, Alice who had married Laurence de Pageham, and Margery the wife of John de Fulquardeby.<sup>75</sup> Badley was apparently divided between Alice the wife of Laurence de Pageham and Margery Fulquardeby. On the death of Laurence in 1361, one moiety passed to his grandson, John, son of his son John,<sup>76</sup> who also succeeded to the other on the death without issue of Margery Fulquardeby.<sup>77</sup> Philip de Pageham, the grandson of John,<sup>78</sup> died without issue in 1442, and the whole manor then passed in accordance with

<sup>48a</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 439-42.

<sup>49</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. V, no. 51.

<sup>50</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 359.

<sup>51</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Hen. VI, no. 37.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. 25 Hen. VI, no. 12.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. IV, no. 44.

<sup>54</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 39.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 453-6.

<sup>56</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. xv; App. pt. x, 173; Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 378, no. 4.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. file 382, no. 4.

<sup>58</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 461.

<sup>59</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 21 Eliz.; Recov. R. Trin. 22 Eliz. rot. 905.

<sup>60</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), Introd. p. xxvi.

<sup>61</sup> Pat. 1 Jas. I, pt. ii, m. 1; 5 Jas. I, pt. xv, m. 1.

<sup>61a</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 194.

<sup>62</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 5 Chas. I;

Recov. R. Mich. 4 Chas. II, rot. 34.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid. 10 Geo. II, rot. 511; see also

Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 468.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid.

<sup>65</sup> In that year he dealt with it by fine with James Hilwell, John Leech, John Berry, Samuel Lutman and Mary his wife, and Richard Drinkwater and Elizabeth his wife (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 5 Geo. III).

<sup>66</sup> Close, 13 Geo. III, pt. xvi, no. 9; Recov. R. East. 14 Geo. III, rot. 24.

<sup>67</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 468.

<sup>68</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>68a</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 21 Hen. III.

<sup>69</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 4 Chas. II, rot. 34.

<sup>70</sup> Close, 13 Geo. III, pt. xvi, no. 9.

<sup>71</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>72</sup> Chart. R. 6 Edw. II, m. 22.

<sup>73</sup> Close, 8 Edw. II, m. 10 d.

<sup>74</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, pp. 493, 524.

<sup>75</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 46; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. ii, 113.

<sup>76</sup> Inq. p.m. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 24;

Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 336.

<sup>77</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 21 Hen. VI, no. 35.

<sup>78</sup> John's son and heir was John (Inq. p.m. 13 Ric. II, no. 38), who died in 1399 leaving as his heir his brother William (ibid. 13 Hen. IV, no. 22); William died in 1422, his heir being his son Philip (ibid. 10 Hen. V, no. 26a); Agnes the widow of William died in 1432-3 (ibid. 12 Hen. VI, no. 26).

settlements of 1348 and 1354 to Christine wife of Richard Holt and granddaughter of Roger de Colrethe.<sup>79</sup> From this date Badley apparently followed the same descent as Pury in Bentley (q.v.) until the middle of the 17th century,<sup>80</sup> when William Walle was in possession of both manors.<sup>80a</sup> From this date nothing has been ascertained concerning the manor until 1753, in which year John Jennings purchased it from Edward Gibson.<sup>81</sup>

Early in the 19th century the estate now called Clare Park was acquired by Mr. Philip Raoul Lempriere of Rosel Manor, Jersey.<sup>82</sup> He sold it about 1827 to Major George Birch, from whom it descended to his son Lieut.-Colonel George F. Birch,<sup>83</sup> whose death took place on 18 August 1908.

The so-called manor of EASTBRIDGE (Estbridge, Ech Bridge, Ichylbridge, xvi cent.; Eachbridge, xvii cent.; East Cheap, Eastbridge, xviii cent.) is represented by the five messuages, 200 acres of land, 60 acres of meadow, 100 acres of pasture, and 30s. rent, with appurtenances in Itchel and Itchel Bridge, of which John Giffard, who belonged to a younger branch of the family of Giffard of Itchel, was seised in the reign of Henry VIII in right of his wife Parnel.<sup>84</sup> He died in 1527, and his son and heir William being 'founde idiote,' his property was taken into the hands of the king. William subsequently married Joan Parker, and died in 1560, leaving as his heirs his daughters Jane and Anne,<sup>85</sup> the former of whom married Anthony Yonge of Amber-sham, and the latter Anthony Rollse.<sup>86</sup>

In 1581 Anne released her right in the manor of Eastbridge to her sister,<sup>87</sup> and the estate continued in the possession of the Yonge family until 1604, when Anthony Yonge, probably the son of Anthony and Jane, sold it to Anthony Finche of Petworth (co. Sussex) and William Evering.<sup>88</sup>

By 1698 the manor had come into the possession of Constance, the wife of Samuel Anderson, who in that year, in conjunction with her husband, treated of it by fine and recovery with Charles Clayton and James Foster.<sup>89</sup> After this the descent of the manor is unknown until 1779, when it was in the possession of Sarah Boddicott (née Tyssen), who had married Richard Boddicott of Hackney.<sup>90</sup> On her death in 1800 Eastbridge passed to her grandson, Samuel Tyssen, son and heir of her only daughter Sarah, who had married her second cousin Samuel Tyssen.<sup>90a</sup> It was settled on the grandson Samuel on his coming of age in 1807.<sup>91</sup>

Samuel Tyssen sold the estate by auction to George Johnston in 1825. In the indenture of this date it is described as 'all that manor or reputed manor of Eastcheap otherwise Eastbridge with all those Freehold Farms and lands called Eastbridge, White Bridge and Green's Farms.'<sup>92</sup>

On the death of Mr. George Johnston the estate passed to his son, Mr. John Alexander Johnston, who died in 1871, and was succeeded by his son, Mr. John Lindsay Johnston, M.A., J.P., the present owner.<sup>93</sup>

SWANTHORPE (Swanedrop, xiii cent.; Swan-drop, xiv cent.; Swanrope, xvi cent.) and CROOKHAM (Crokham, xiii cent.; Crecham, Crookham, xiv cent.), from an early date formed part of the great manor of Crondall, and in 1316 were included in the possessions of the Prior and convent of St. Swithun.<sup>94</sup> Again, in 1541 they were granted with the other lands in Crondall belonging to St. Swithun's to the Dean and chapter of Winchester.<sup>95</sup>

In the 14th century DIPPENHALL (Dupenhale, Dupehale, Dippenhale, Depenhale, xiv cent.; Dipnel, xviii cent.) appears as a sub-manor dependent on the manor of Crondall.<sup>96</sup> It followed the same descent as the manor of Badley<sup>97</sup> (q.v.) until the death of John de Westcote in 1336, when it was assigned to his sister Margery, the wife of John de Fulquardeby.<sup>98</sup> In 1369 Thomas atte More granted to William Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, the 'manor of Dippenhall,' which he had by grant from Margery de Fulquardeby.<sup>99</sup> At the Dissolution, Dippenhall, with the other possessions of the Prior and convent of St. Swithun, was granted to the Dean and chapter of Winchester;<sup>100</sup> and from this time it is usually described in leases and other records as the farm of Dippenhall.<sup>101</sup>

In 1279 Robert de Burgh, or atte Berewe, held land in EWSHOTT (Wysseshete, xiii cent.; Iweshute, xiv cent.; Iweschot, xv cent.; Ushott, xvi cent.; Ewershott, xvii cent.; Ewshot, xviii cent.) of Godfrey Giffard, Bishop of Worcester.<sup>102</sup> In 1302 there were five free tenants—among them Nicholas atte Berewe—holding land in Ewshott of Itchel Manor,<sup>102a</sup> and in 1351,<sup>103</sup> 1418,<sup>104</sup> and 1553,<sup>105</sup> there are records proving that land in Ewshott was still held at these dates by the Berewes of the Giffards. In 1579 Ewshott was sold with Itchel to Henry Wriothesley, second Earl of Southampton.<sup>106</sup> From this date the estate is usually spoken of as the manor of Itchel and

<sup>79</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Hen. VI, no. 35. See also Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Edw. III.

<sup>80</sup> Add. Chart. 17434; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xix, 89; Close, 21 Eliz. pt. x; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 21 Eliz.; Div. Co. East 39 Eliz.; W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 12, no. 74; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), di, 46.

<sup>80a</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 1657, rot. 8.

<sup>81</sup> Notes of F. Hants, Hil. 26 Geo. II.

<sup>82</sup> Ex inform. the late Miss E. Lempriere of Pelham.

<sup>83</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Francis H. Birch.

<sup>84</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxx, 81.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid. cxxxv, 26.

<sup>86</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 201, no. 81.

<sup>87</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 23 Eliz.

<sup>88</sup> Close, 2 Jas. I, pt. xv; Add. MS. C.278, fol. 134.

<sup>89</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 10 Will. III; Recov. R. Mich. 10 Will. III, rot. 27.

<sup>90</sup> Berry, Herts. Gen. 96; Feet of F.

Hants, Hil. 20 Geo. III; Recov. R. 20 Geo. III, rot. 131.

<sup>90a</sup> Sarah Tyssen died in 1790; her husband survived her 10 years (Berry, Herts. Gen. 96).

<sup>91</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Mich. 47 Geo. III, m. 66.

<sup>92</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Lindsay Johnston, M.A., J.P.

<sup>93</sup> Ibid.

<sup>94</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314. In the 13th and 14th centuries the De Burgh family held land in Crookham of the prior and convent. In 1257 Henry De Burgh or Henry the hunter, the bailiff of the priory, obtained a grant of land at Burgh in Crookham formerly held by Edmund de Burgh (Crondall Rec. [Hants Rec. Soc.], 22-3). His heir was his daughter Margery de Burgh, who granted land in Crondall to the prior and convent (ibid. 28). She had several sons, one of whom, Henry de Burgh of Crookham, gave up to his brother Nicholas all the lands and tenements which he had by the gift of his mother in the hamlets of Crookham and Velmead (ibid. 32-3).

<sup>95</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>96</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>97</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, pp. 493, 524, 581.

<sup>98</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 46; Chan. Inq. p.m. Misc. file 127, no. 17.

<sup>99</sup> Close, 43 Edw. III, m. 7.

<sup>100</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>101</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 476-7.

<sup>102</sup> Close, 8 Edw. I, m. 11 d.

<sup>102a</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. I, no. 41.

<sup>103</sup> Ibid. 25 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 49.

<sup>104</sup> Ibid. 6 Hen. V, no. 51.

<sup>105</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Mich. 1 Mary, m. 17 d.; see also Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 23-8.

<sup>106</sup> Vide Pat. 1 Jas. I, pt. ii, m. 1.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Ewshott, and the history of Ewshott is identical with that of Itchel (q.v.).

The church of ALL SAINTS, CHURCHES Crondall, consists of a chancel 35 ft. 2 in. by 16 ft. 4 in.; north-east tower 15 ft. 3 in. square; nave 62 ft. 6 in. by 16 ft. 4 in.; north and south aisles 10 ft. 3 in. wide, with chapels at their east ends, and a north porch; all these measurements are internal.

It is one of the finest parish churches in the country, and, with one important exception, preserves its original plan. The oldest part of the building is the east end of the nave, begun probably about 1170, but forming part of the general design, and the whole church must have been finished about the end of the 12th century. It had a vaulted chancel of two bays, a central tower with shallow transepts, a nave of three bays with aisles equal in width to the transepts, and a north porch. The stone vault of the chancel and the weight of the central tower had thrust out the walls and given much trouble, and in 1657 it was decided to take lancets were put in the west wall of the nave in place of a 15th-century window of which the hood-mould remains; the chancel arch was rebuilt and restored; the east window, which was a large pointed one of wood, was replaced by one of stone, and the roofs were repaired. In 1871 the east window was again replaced by the present lancets and the floor of the sanctuary raised.

The two modern lancet windows in the east wall of the chancel have shafts in their jambs with carved capitals and moulded bases, and over them is a quatre-foiled circle in the gable. In the north wall of the east bay is a lancet, blocked by the later tower wall; it has inner jamb shafts with moulded bases, water-leaf foliage capitals, and square-edged moulded abaci; the rear-arch is pointed, and moulded with a keeled edge-roll between two filleted hollows. In the west bay is a similar north window set to the east of the centre line to clear the tower stair-turret; outside it is of two orders, the inner with a continuous chamfer, and the outer square with angle shafts having moulded bases and scalloped capitals with hollow-chamfered square abaci, carrying an arch with a three-quarter edge roll and small outer rebate. The two southern windows of the chancel are 14th-century insertions, each of three plain pointed lights with intersecting tracery; but their outer jambs are differently treated. They replace lancets like those on the north, and that in the west bay being set to the west of the centre, the east jamb and part of the head of the original lancet remain. This window is now blocked by an organ. The doorway leading to down the tower and build a new one, which now exists, at the north end of the chancel, thus at one operation relieving the pressure on the nave and transepts and buttressing the north side of the chancel. Full details of the progress of the work are preserved in the churchwardens' accounts, which are fortunately complete from 1543, showing that the new tower was built in 1659 at a cost of £428, the model for it being the tower of Battersea Church. The area of the old tower was thrown into the nave, its west wall being entirely removed, and its north and south arches, together with those of the east bays of the old nave, altered to make the arcades appear continuous. Further work in this direction was done in 1847, but sufficient evidence of the church's history has escaped the hand of the restorer, and is noted below. During this restoration, which was in many ways mischievous, new windows (wretched travesties of 12th-century style) were inserted in the aisle walls, the greater part of the wall over the south arcade was rebuilt, and nearly all the clearstory windows were renewed. Two the vestry in the base of the new tower looks older than the tower, having an oggee head of 14th-century style. It may be an insertion of that date formerly opening to a vestry on the site of the tower. A second north doorway, now blocked, is original, and led from the west bay of the chancel to the tower stair; it has a plain segmental head, and over it is a break in the masonry which suggests the former existence of a rood-loft doorway.

CRONDALL CHURCH FROM THE WEST

The chancel is vaulted in two bays with a quadripartite ribbed vault, the vault cells covered with modern plaster; it has plain square wall ribs which are continued to the ground, diagonals moulded with three rolls and having two lines of dog-tooth ornament, and transverse arches of two orders, the outer with a double line of zigzag on the west, but plain on the east, and the inner with two rolls and three hollows. All are pointed, but distorted by the spreading of the vault. The transverse arches spring from clustered responds with a half-round shaft between two smaller circular shafts, and the diagonals spring from similar small shafts in the angles of each bay. At half-height runs a roll string originally carried all round the chancel at the sill level. The bases are a late form of the romanesque base with a flattened lower member, and the capitals have square hollow-moulded abaci and foliage of three kinds, Corinthian, water-leaf and stiff leaf, the last with the small knobs of leafage at the top of long stalks, characteristic of late 12th and early 13th-century work. The capitals of the second transverse arch, otherwise the chancel arch, have nearly all been replaced by plain stones, as yet uncarved. This arch towards the nave has a third order with zigzag, and a label with dog-tooth ornament.

The external wall faces of the chancel are coated with cement, and at the south-east angle is a deep clasping buttress of ashlar, which may be original; the north-east buttress, also of ashlar, is of much later date. The middle buttress against the south wall is of no great age, and has brick foundations; two of its vertical faces are cemented and the third (the west), is ashlar-faced, while its two offsets are covered with tiles.

responds are half-round, and to each is attached a small round shaft which helps to support a deep round-headed arch against the east wall of the chapel, which gave additional abutment to the original tower; the bases of the responds and shafts are moulded with a hollow and two rounds following the form of the responds, on a square chamfered sub-base; the capitals are scalloped with moulded abaci.

The transepts were lighted by single round-headed windows, and the south transept preserves its south window, though at the east it has a modern one of two lights. The east window of the north transept, on the other hand, is original, set very much to the north to clear the tower staircase, which stands in the angle between the transept and the chancel. At the west of both transept chapels plain round-headed arches with scalloped capitals, which also formerly buttressed the tower, open to the aisles. The first columns of the nave, formerly the western piers of the tower, have been most ingeniously whittled down to range with those to the west of them. The west responds of the

PLAN OF CRONDALL CHURCH

The tower is built of red brick and is in four stages; the lowest has a round-headed west doorway with brick pilasters and pediment, and plain round-headed windows to the east and north; the second stage is entered from the original stair turret by a wooden gallery at its south-west corner, and is lighted by square-headed windows on the north and east with triangular relieving arches; the third stage holds the clock and is also approached by a wooden gallery, and the fourth (or bell-chamber) has pairs of round-headed windows on the north and east and single windows on the south and west; the parapet is plain and has pointed octagonal brick pinnacles at the corners. The tower sets back at each stage on the line of a string of ornamental brickwork and has clasping buttresses at the angles, which in the belfry stage become octagonal. The 12th-century stair turret has an outer doorway to the east at the ground level, its original doorway from the chancel being closed up.

The nave arcades are of four bays, one at the east opening to the transept chapels, and three to the aisle, and are similar in their details. The east north and south tower arches, and the east responds of the old nave arcades, have been cut back to a flat surface, and the responds of the west arch of the tower entirely removed, modern half-round piers of chalk with plain capitals being set up on the line of the wall face above to connect the north and south arches of the tower with the nave arcades. The arches themselves have been altered to suit the wide space caused by the removal of the responds, and are distorted in consequence. Above them the string at the base of the clearstory has been carried across the line of the west wall of the old tower, so that the clearstory seems unbroken from end to end of the nave, but the extra thickness of the tower walls shows at the junction with the nave walls, and the mouldings on the north arch of the tower still show the grooves worn in them by the bell ropes before 1657.

The second pair of nave piers, originally the east pair of the arcades, have against their east sides shallow rectangular blocks of masonry with small engaged shafts with bases and capitals at either side, obviously dating from the same time as the alteration in the piers of the old tower. The object is not now apparent, but they probably witness to some former strengthening of the arcade before 1657. The capitals of the piers of the rest of the arcade are carved with foliage, and are of later type than the scalloped capitals further to the east; but the bases resemble the others. The third pair of columns is circular, with a late form of scalloped capitals, and the west responds are half-round with similar scallops. The arches are all round and of two moulded orders, the inner with three-quarter edge rolls and the outer with a pointed bowtel between two deep hollows, but on the aisle side it is square. There are grooved and hollow-chamfered labels towards the nave.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The north window of the north transept chapel is modern, of two round-headed lights with a middle shaft; but at the corner of its east jamb is an old engaged shaft with capital and base like that attached to the east respond of the arcade; from these shafts springs a single chamfered round arch, forming a deep recess of the full width of the chapel. In the south jamb of the east recess is a small piscina of later date with a plain ogee-shaped head; its bowl is gone.

The south window of the south transept chapel also retains the shaft in its east jamb, supporting the arch of the east recess like that on the north side; west of the window is an old blocked doorway with a pointed segmental arch, of later date than the wall in which it is set.

Both aisles have modern side windows intended to match the general style of the church. The north doorway comes between the two windows in the north aisle; its jambs are of two square orders with detached angle shafts, of which that in the east jamb, with its base, is modern; the capitals are original and are scalloped, but the jambs have many stones of modern repair; the arch is a round one, its inner order with a three-quarter edge roll, while the outer has an edge roll, and zigzag ornament on its face; the hood-mould is enriched with tooth ornament. Rounded string-courses run along the aisle walls below the windows inside and out, the latter being much perished; the former rises over the segmental rear arch of the doorway as a label, where it has an additional hollow cut upon its face.

The porch to the doorway has evidently been rebuilt—probably at some time in the 17th century—but the stonework of its outer arch is of the same date as the north doorway; its jambs are now roughly set and are more or less of two chamfered orders, while the arch, once round, but now flattened, has two orders, the inner chamfered inside and with an edge roll outside, and the outer chamfered on both edges; the upper part of the porch is of brick and has a stepped gable. The west window of the aisle is a partly restored round-headed single light, rebated and chamfered outside and with the original inner jambs and rear arch.

The south doorway, midway in the aisle, is filled in and its outer rebated jambs coated with cement; its shafts are missing, but the scalloped capitals—partly buried in the filling-in—remain in place with their grooved and chamfered abaci, and the arch, which is round, is much decayed and coated with colour-wash; it was probably of the same detail as the north doorway, but has lost its zigzag ornament; the label is formed by the string-course which runs along the wall and leaps over the doorway, and is a plain round in section. The rear arch is segmental and the inner string-course passes over it in a similar manner to that opposite, with the additional hollow where it is arched. The west window of this aisle is a completely modernized round-headed single light. The west doorway of the nave is of the same age as the others, but the jambs are partly of modern repair; the angle shafts are much decayed and their bases almost entirely perished; the capitals are scalloped and the abaci nearly all modern, grooved and hollow-chamfered. The arch is round, its inner order has a three-quarter edge-roll, and the outer a pointed bowtel between two hollows; the hood-mould is grooved and hollow-chamfered, and at its crown is set a later corbel head. Over the doorway are two modern lancet windows, above which is the moulded label of the former 15th-century window.

The clearstory of the nave has four lancet windows on either side, of which only the south-eastern retains its original stonework; its jambs have lost their shafts outside, but the scalloped capitals remain; the arch is moulded with a three-quarter edge roll, and the windows have on the inside angle shafts with moulded bases, carved capitals, and moulded rear arches.

The walls throughout are completely coated with rough-cast on the outside. Two very deep buttresses support the west ends of the arcades; they have brick bases, rough-cast sides, and tiled offsets. The west angle of the north aisle has a peculiar quarter-round clasping buttress covered with cement, doubtless the remains of one of normal form. The east angle of the north transept has an old square clasping buttress, and another old buttress is set at the junction of the transept and aisle. On the south side there are more and heavier buttresses; the two to the transept are carried right up to the clearstory wall; that at the south-east corner has a kind of high plinth on its east face and has been also strengthened by an additional buttress on its west side; and three other modern buttresses have been built against the south wall.

The roof of the nave is a flat gable, with a wood panelled ceiling; the tie-beams are supported by curved braces which rest on modern stone corbels. Both aisles have flat lean-to roofs covered with lead. The porch has apparently old timbers to its flat roof.

The font is an ancient one of a plain flower-pot shape; there is little to give its approximate age; and the other furniture is all modern.

On the south side of the chancel is a recessed and canopied tomb which bears the following inscription: 'Hereunder lyeth the body of John Gyfford Esquier heyre aparant of Sir Wyllm Gyfford Knyght<sup>106a</sup> who had to wyfe Elizabethhe one of the dawghters of Sir George Throkmarion Knight and had by her issue fyve sonnys and viii dawghters and so changyd this mortall lyfe the fyrst day of May in the yere of our Lorde God 1563/ on whose soule Jesu have m'cy.' The base of the tomb has on its face three lozenge-shaped traceried and cusped panels inclosing defaced shields, and a moulded cornice and base, all in grey marble. The niche over has octagonal angle-shafts with moulded capitals and bases supporting a flat four-centred arch; the jambs and soffit of the recess have cinquefoiled panels. The back is the inscription in brass, above which Giffard's kneeling figure in armour facing the indeof that of his wife; behind him is the indent of their sons, and behind her their daughters; between them is a shield of Giffard, and over it a mantled helm and a crest of a hand holding a bunch of flowers, apparently single pinks; over the arch is a frieze of feathered quatrefoils alternating with blank shields; the cornice finishes with a cresting of Tudor flowers.

<sup>106a</sup> So in inscription, but he had in reality succeeded his grandfather Sir William Giffard in 1549.

CRONDALL CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST

The north altar tomb is that of Sir George Paulet of Crondall, younger brother of the first Marquess of Winchester. It has had most of its painted inscriptions obliterated, some of the obliterations being obviously intentional. It closely resembles in design and inscriptions the tomb of Sir Thomas White at South Warnborough, 1568. It is a recessed altar tomb with a canopy; on the base are three quatrefoil panels inclosing carelessly repainted shields; the recess has panelled jambs and a four-centred arch, and in it are three painted shields much defaced; the inscriptions are in panels below them. A shield of Paulet quartering Roos, Poynings, St. John, Delamere, Hussey, Hooke, Treby and Delamere impaling Hampden quartering Sidney Popham and St. Martin, commemorates Barbara Hampden, Sir George's second wife. On either side of the recess are octagonal shafts with moulded bases and capitals, surmounted by turrets; the top of the cornice is finished with leaf cresting. What remains of the inscription is:—

Panel 1. 'George and . . . Paulet [dye unto God and say] we hope to see the goodnes of God in the lande of lyfe . . . Thys have had issue one sone, and deceased the yere of our lord 1532, rend'ying unto God the work of his hand.'

Panel 2. 'Barbara and George [Paulet] . . . of thys Barbera he had issue ij sonnes and ij daughters, her lyfe God took to his greate goodness the care of our lord God 1552.'

Panel 3. 'And nowe in the care of our lord 1558 God toke to hys almyghty mercy the sayde Syr George [Paulet] . . . he had issue of this Elyzabeth ij sonnes and ij daughters.'

In the chancel floor is a fine brass of a priest in mass vestments, the ornament on the apparels being a fylfot often repeated; the inscription is gone, but is said to have existed at the beginning of the 18th century, describing him as Nicholas de Caerwent, rector of Crondall from 1361 to 1381. In the south transept is a brass plate with a skeleton lying in a shroud, and the inscription: 'John Eager,<sup>107</sup> des March the xx, 1641—

You earthly impes which here behold
This picture with your eyes,
Remember the end of mortall men
And where their glory lies.'—I. E.

On the south wall of this transept is a small panel with a painted inscription to Anne, daughter of the Rt. Hon. William . . . , 1553, much defaced, and a marble monument to Dulcibella Rivers, 1657, who outlived both her husbands, Nicholas Love, custos of Winchester College, and Sir John Rivers, bart.

In the tower are six bells, the first by Henry Knight, 1616; the second also by him, 1619; the third by Robert Wells, of Aldbourne, 1788; the fourth recast from one by Henry Knight, 1619; the fifth is dated 1650 and inscribed, 'Me resonare jubet pietas mors atque voluptas'; and the tenor is by Robert Wells 1788.

The plate consists of a cup of Elizabethan type, with indistinct marks, but probably dating from 1568,<sup>107a</sup> a paten altered as at Wield, a silver-gilt chalice and paten of 1881, a pewter flagon bought in 1632, two pewter plates, a gilt bread-box, and a brass almsdish.

There are seven books of registers: (i) Baptisms, 1569–1755; burials, 1570–1653; marriages, 1576–1657; (ii) burials, 1678–1755, and two marriage entries of 1695; (iii) marriages, 1695–1754; (iv) marriages, 1754–63; (v) baptisms and burials, 1756–1812; (vi) marriages, 1763–83; (vii) 1783–1812. It will be noted that there is a gap in the marriage entries from 1657–95. There are also five volumes of churchwardens' accounts from 1543, and overseers' and surveyors' of highways accounts.

The churchyard has a fine avenue of lime trees leading from the entrance gate to the south door, besides several other large trees.

CHRISTCHURCH, CROOKHAM, is an entirely modern structure dating from 1841, and consists of a chancel with a north vestry and a nave with north and south transepts. It is built of red and yellow brick and designed in an adaptation of 13th-century style. The vestry is an addition and of more recent date, and the chancel has also been partly rebuilt. Over the west wall is a bell-gable for one bell. It was built through the instrumentality of the Rev. C. Dyson, rector of Dogmersfield, the site being presented by Mr. Charles Edward Lefroy of Itchel.

The church of ST. MARY, EWSHOTT, the site for which was given by Mr. John Lindsay Johnston of Eastbridge, is a small building consisting of a chancel and a nave. It was built in 1873, is constructed of stone, and is designed in 13th-century style. There is a small bell-gable containing one bell.

The church of ALL SAINTS, FLEET, which was built in memory of Janet the wife of Mr. Charles Edward Lefroy, is a modern structure dating from 1861, and consists of a chancel, nave of eight bays with aisles, and a western narthex. It is built of red brick banded with blue brick, and has lancet windows of 13th-century design in brick. Over the narthex in the west gable is a large stone rose window. Over the east wall of the nave is a bell-gable containing two bells. There is a tomb with recumbent effigies to the founder, Mr. Charles Edward Lefroy, who died in 1861.

There is mention of a church at ADVOWSONS Crondall at the time of the Domesday Survey, when it was said to be worth 20s.<sup>107b</sup> The advowson followed the descent of the manor until 1284,<sup>107c</sup> when a separation took place between the possessions of the Bishop of Winchester and those of the Prior and convent of St. Swithun, the former granting certain manors to the prior and convent in exchange for the advowsons of certain churches, among which that of Crondall was included.<sup>108</sup> At an early period the bishops appointed a rector, who in turn appointed a vicar.<sup>109</sup>

<sup>107</sup> This is the 'John Eggar of Moun-gomeries' (a farm in Crondall near Swanthorpe) who founded Eggar's Grammar School at Alton in 1638 (V.C.H. Hants, ii, 367).

<sup>107a</sup> See Churchwardens' Accts.

<sup>107b</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>107c</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 21, 201.

<sup>108</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 110; Cal. Chart.

R. ii, 274.

<sup>109</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 9; 2032, fol. 50, 135; 2033, fol. 31; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 60.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

In 1318 licence was granted to John Sendale, Bishop of Winchester, to assign the advowson of Crondall to the provost and chaplain of the chapel of St. Elizabeth by Winchester, and at the same time permission was granted to the provost and chaplain to appropriate the church.<sup>110</sup> There is evidence that this was not carried into effect, for in 1321,<sup>111</sup> and again in 1327,<sup>112</sup> the king presented 'by reason of the late voidance of the bishopric of Winchester.'

In 1334 the Bishop of Winchester received a mandate to appropriate the advowson of Crondall Church to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun, since it had been given by the bishop's predecessors to secular clerks.<sup>113</sup> It is doubtful, again, however, if this mandate was obeyed, for in 1446 Henry Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, granted the rectory and advowson of the vicarage to the Hospital of St. Cross, to which he was a great benefactor,<sup>114</sup> in order to found his Charity of Noble Poverty. The tithes were farmed out to the highest bidder until the middle of the 19th century.<sup>115</sup>

Subsequently the Earl of Guilford, Master of St. Cross, leased the tithes and the right of presentation on three lives, receiving a lump sum down. In 1856 the great tithes of Crondall and Yateley were so let on the lives of Princess Mary of Cambridge, aged twenty-three, the Princess Royal of England, aged fifteen, and Lord de Vesci, aged twelve. Lord de Vesci, the last of the three, died in 1903, and the tithes have now reverted to St. Cross. At the present time the rectorial tithes are commuted at £963 per annum.<sup>116</sup>

Mr. Charles Edward Lefroy purchased the advowson about 1855, and it passed from him to his son the late Mr. Charles James Maxwell Lefroy. The living is a vicarage of the net yearly value of £260.<sup>117</sup>

The living of Crookham is a vicarage (net yearly value £220, with half an acre of glebe and residence) in the gift of the vicar of Crondall.

The living of Ewshott is a vicarage (net yearly value £155) in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

The living of Fleet is a vicarage (net yearly value £160) in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

There are Congregational and Bible Christian chapels at Crondall, a Primitive Methodist chapel at Crookham, a Wesleyan chapel at Ewshott, and Baptist, Wesleyan Methodist, Primitive Methodist, and Roman Catholic chapels at Fleet.

'Oliver's Educational Charity.'

CHARITIES The trust funds consist of £738 15s. 2d. consols, arising under the will of Elizabeth Oliver, servant of Henry Maxwell, of Ewshott House, dated 21 March 1802, and £500 consols, by a codicil to the will of the said Henry Maxwell, dated 28 January 1811. The charity is regulated by schemes of 31 July and 23 December 1885, as varied by an order of the Charity Commissioners of 19 March 1897, whereby one-third part of the stock, namely £412 18s. 5d. consols, is made applicable for the civil parish of Crondall, one-third for Crookham, and one-third for Fleet.

The Crondall School Charity, founded by deeds 1816 and 1836, is regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 7 June 1889.

In 1831 John Andrews by will, proved at London, gave the principal money to be received on his policy of insurance to trustees for investment, the income to be applied in the purchase of blankets and shoes for the poor. The legacy is represented by £557 5s. 6d. consols, producing yearly £13 18s. 6d., which, in pursuance of a scheme of 13 January 1880, as varied by a scheme of 20 January 1905, is applied on 30 November in each year, instead of on 25 June as prescribed in the will. The sums of stock are held by the official trustees.

The Congregational chapel.—The official trustees also hold a sum of £800 consols in trust for the support of the chapel, being the consideration paid by the War Office for the redemption of a yearly rent-charge of £20 on the Ewshott estate.

By an award, dated in 1849, 3 acres were allotted for repair of highways in the tithings of Crondall and Dippenhall, 4 acres for a recreation ground, and 2 acres for a poor's allotment in Dippenhall.

Crookham and Ewshott.—The Cottrell Alms-houses are regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 8 July 1898, as varied by a scheme of 27 June 1905. There are four alms-houses of one story occupied by four inmates, and two sets of rooms in the western part consisting of two stories occupied by two inmates, who pay a small rent. A sum of £344 2s. 8d. consols is also being accumulated with the official trustees as a 'Repairs and Improvement Account' until the sum of £400 consols has been obtained.

The Fuel Allotment Fund consists of £3,164 1s. 3d. consols, with the official trustees, arising from the sale in 1881 of land taken by the Ordnance Department under the provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. cap. 94. The dividends, amounting annually to £79 2s., are applicable in the purchase of fuel for distribution amongst the poor who do not occupy lands, &c., of more than the annual value of £6. In 1905 coal was distributed among 135 recipients.

<sup>110</sup> Pat. 12 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 20; Inq. a.q.d. file 137, no. 14.

<sup>111</sup> Cal. Pat. 1321-4, p. 41.

<sup>112</sup> Ibid. 1327-30, p. 169.

<sup>113</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, ii, 400.

<sup>114</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 450, no. 14.

<sup>115</sup> Chas. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 22.

<sup>116</sup> Ibid.

<sup>117</sup> Ex inform. the late Mr. C. J. Maxwell Lefroy.

FARNBOROUGH

Ferneberga (xi cent.); Farnburghe, Farenberg (xiii cent.); Farnborowe, Fremborough, Farnborough (xvi cent.).

Farnborough is distant 33 miles from London, and 2½ from Aldershot, and has two stations, one on the London and South Western Railway, and the other on the Reading and Reigate branch of the South Eastern Railway. The parish, which is a long narrow strip of land, covers an area of 2,330 acres, including 289½ acres of arable land, 515½ acres of permanent grass, and 53 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup>

The River Blackwater forms the eastern boundary of the parish, which is separated from Aldershot parish by the Basingstoke Canal, the North Camp being in the parish of Farnborough. The ground is low, rising at its highest point to only 286 ft. above the ordnance datum.

The town, chief estates, and residences lie to the north, the southern portion being occupied by the North Camp and Farnborough Common.

The nucleus of the old village is what is now called Farnborough Street, near the South Eastern Railway station. There are still two old houses to be seen, which are the last survival of the old village, and at the cross roads is an old knotted elm, under which the villagers still gather at nightfall.<sup>2</sup> The road between Farnborough and Farnham is said to have been a resort of the famous highwayman Dick Turpin.<sup>3</sup> The last of the great prize-fights, that between Heenan and Sayers, took place at Farnborough.

During the past forty years the population of Farnborough has increased from 700 to 10,000. This is due to the formation of the North Camp and also to a public company which bought land in 1863 and developed the district for residential purposes.<sup>4</sup> Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1904 the parish is governed by an Urban District Council of twelve members.

The Town Hall, in the Alexandra Road, is a brick structure with Bath stone dressings, and was erected in 1897 at a cost of £5,000. There are Pine Therapeutic Baths in connexion with the Queen's Hotel.

Farnborough Hill, formerly the property of Mr. Thomas Longman, was purchased by the ex-Empress Eugénie in 1881. The mansion was built in 1860, and stands on a hill in a well-wooded park of 300 acres with gardens. It contains many treasures and relics of Napoleon I; a wing was added in 1883. The Roman Catholic Memorial Church of St. Michael, built by the Empress in 1887, and officially styled 'St. Michael's Abbey,' is served by Benedictines (of the Solesmes congregation), with an abbot, prior, sub-prior, and fifteen clergy. On the right of the altar at the east end of the mausoleum beneath the church is the coffin of the Emperor Napoleon III, on the left that of the Prince Imperial, on which is a tablet recording the death of the Prince 'On the field of honour,' 1 June 1879. Close to the church is a priory, with a covered way to the mausoleum, occupied by Benedictine Fathers from Solesmes.

The Grange, the seat of Mr. Harold Edward Sherwin Holt, present lord of Farnborough Manor, stands in a park, surrounded by an estate of about 400 acres, and was inherited by his mother, the late Mrs. M. Holt, from her uncle, Mr. Sherwin.<sup>5</sup>

Farnborough Park is the residence of Mr. Charles R. Lupton; and Tredenham Lodge of Colonel Tredenham Fitzherbert Carlyon. Lynchford, an estate of 150 acres, is the property of Mr. Henry William Brake. Synchurst Farm, in the north of the parish near the Surrey border, is called the manor of Synchurst in 16th-century records. It probably had its origin in the lands in Synchurst which Henry de Farnborough, lord of the manor of Farnborough, granted to Osbert de Burstowe in 1259 to hold of him and his heirs for rent of 3s. and suit at the court of Farnborough twice a year.<sup>6a</sup> It was acquired by John Norton, lord of the manor of Farnborough, in the middle of the 16th century,<sup>6</sup> and was sold with that manor by the description of the 'messuage or farm called Sindhurst with appurtenances in Farnborough, and a parcel of moor called Sindhurst Moor in Frimley,' by his descendant Sir Richard Norton to John Godson and Edward Dickenson in 1619.<sup>6a</sup>

Hillside Convent is a high-class ladies' boarding school, conducted by the nuns of the order of the Sacred Heart, with a lady superior in charge.

The following place-names are mentioned in 17th-century records:—A messuage and garden called Farthingland, and fields called Hookmeade and Windemill.<sup>7</sup>

In the Domesday Survey the manor of MANOR FARNBOROUGH is assessed at 3 hides of land which Odin de Windesores held of the bishop as of the manor of Crondall. Alwin had held them of the bishop in parage and could not betake himself anywhere.

In the time of Edward the Confessor the land had been and was still worth 60s., although when Odin received it its value had fallen to 40s.<sup>8</sup> The next mention of Farnborough occurs in 1230, when Simon, parson of Crondall, acknowledged Stephen de Farnborough to be the true patron of the church.<sup>9</sup>

Stephen was succeeded by his son Henry, who in 1243 was stated to be holding one knight's fee in Farnborough of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>10</sup> Henry was still alive in 1284,<sup>11</sup> but by 1316 he had been succeeded in the possession of the estate by John de Farnborough,<sup>12</sup> who in 1335 paid 2s. to be released

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> André Turquet, Farnborough, 3.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 4. <sup>4</sup> Ibid. 5.

<sup>5</sup> Ex inform. Mr. H. E. S. Holt.

<sup>6a</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 43 Hen. III.

<sup>6</sup> He purchased one moiety from Agnes the wife of Richard Compton in 1549 (Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 3 Edw. VI).

It is uncertain of whom he purchased the other moiety, but 'all his lands and tenements, leases, moors, pastures, and meads called Synchurst in Farnborough and Ash' which he mentioned in his will (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cxxx, 184) probably comprised the whole estate.

<sup>6a</sup> Close, 17 Jas. I, pt. xvii, no. 12.

<sup>7</sup> Add. Chart. 17446-17448.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>9</sup> Maitland, Bracton's Note Bk. 453; Cur. Reg. R. Mich. 14-15 Hen. III, m. 11.

<sup>10</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 35.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> Feud. Aids, i, 314.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

from attendance at the bishop's court of Farnham for a year.<sup>13</sup> John was followed by Amice de Farnborough, who was holding the manor in 1346.<sup>14</sup>

By 1353 Farnborough had come into the hands of John de Sherborne,<sup>15</sup> a London vintner, who soon fell so deeply into debt that his possessions were valued in 1356 and the manor assigned to one of his creditors, William de Briclesworth, for a debt of £100.<sup>16</sup> In 1428 Joan atte More<sup>17</sup> was holding one fee in Farnborough, formerly belonging to Amice de Farnborough, and on her death after 1461<sup>18</sup> the estate passed to William Dawtrey, who was holding in 1487.<sup>19</sup> It seems probable that this William left four daughters and co-heirs, for at the beginning of the 16th century the manor is found divided into four parts, one-fourth being held by Ellis Thurwall and Joan his wife in 1502,<sup>20</sup> and another by Richard Reddysdale and Lucy his wife in 1505.<sup>21</sup>

ROTHERFIELD. Azure a fesse wavy between three crescents or.

NORTON. Vert a lion or.

In 1535 Richard Norton, who had married Elizabeth Rotherfield, daughter and heir of Sir William Rotherfield and Elizabeth Dawtrey,<sup>21a</sup> died seised of a fourth,<sup>22</sup> and his son John evidently purchased the other three-fourths, for he was seised of the whole manor at his death in 1561.<sup>23</sup> Sir Richard Norton, son of John, died in 1592,<sup>24</sup> leaving the manor of Farnborough to his son Richard, afterwards Sir Richard Norton. The latter died in 1611, leaving as his heir his son Richard,<sup>25</sup> who sold the manor in 1619 to John Godson of Odiham and Edward Dickenson of Odiham.<sup>26</sup> In 1630 John Godson held courts baron as lord of the manor of Farnborough.<sup>27</sup>

The manor and the house, then called Farnborough Place, seem to have come into the Annesley family, Earls of Anglesey, about the time of the Restoration, for in 1661 Arthur first Earl of Anglesey presented to the church.<sup>28</sup> In 1702 John Annesley, fourth Earl of

ANNESLEY, Earl of Anglesey. Paly argent and azure a bend gules.

Anglesey, dealt with the manor by recovery.<sup>29</sup> He died in 1710 and was succeeded by his brother Arthur, who died in 1737 also without issue, leaving his estates to Richard Annesley his kinsman, sixth Earl of Anglesey,<sup>30</sup> who held the manor in 1737, conveying it in that year by fine, possibly for a settlement, to Jack Hatton.<sup>31</sup> A few years later James Annesley, who was the son of Arthur the elder brother of Richard, laid claim to the succession. Having succeeded in establishing his legitimacy, he recovered the estates from his uncle in 1743,<sup>32</sup> and dealt with the manor of Farnborough by recovery in 1752.<sup>33</sup>

Farnborough Manor next came into the possession of Henry Wilmot, fourth son of Robert Wilmot. His son and successor Henry Wilmot was lord of the manor in 1778,<sup>34</sup> and was succeeded on his death in 1794 by his son Valentine Henry Wilmot, who conveyed the manor by fine to George Pindar in 1817,<sup>35</sup> and died in 1819, leaving an only daughter, Arabella Jane, afterwards the wife of the Rev. Frederick Sullivan of Kimpton.

It is uncertain who was the next holder, but from 1848 until his death in 1875 Mr. George Morant was lord of the manor of Farnborough.<sup>36</sup> In 1880 his trustees were lords of the manor,<sup>37</sup> and by 1885 it had been acquired by Mr. Richard Eve,<sup>38</sup> who died in 1900. The lordship of the manor was purchased from his executors about 1903 by Mrs. M. Holt, who died in 1905, leaving it to her son Mr. Harold Edward Sherwin Holt, the present owner.<sup>39</sup>

A mill worth 10*d.* existed at Farnborough at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>40</sup> A water-mill and a fishery are also mentioned in 1356, as worth nothing,<sup>41</sup> and fishings, windmills, and water-mills in Farnborough Manor are mentioned in the indenture of sale of 1619.<sup>42</sup>

The parish church, which is of CHURCHES unknown dedication, is situated in Farnborough Park, and consists of a chancel 21 ft. 5 in. by 16 ft. 10 in., a nave 70 ft. long and 23 ft. 11 in. at the east, reduced by about 8 in. west of the transepts, of which the north measures 10 ft. 11 in. by 13 ft. 7 in. and the south 16 ft. 9 in. by 13 ft. 9 in. There is a south aisle 9 ft. 4 in. wide, a west tower, and a north porch. The earliest parts of the church are the north and west walls of the nave, c. 1190–1200, and a south doorway of the same date is now in the wall of the new south aisle. The porch was added in the first half of the 15th century. Early in the 17th century a good deal of work appears to have been done, while the

HOLT of Farnborough. Argent a bend engrailed sable with three fleurs de lis argent thereon.

<sup>13</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 39.

<sup>14</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333.

<sup>15</sup> Close, 27 Edw. III, m. 18 d.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>17</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 359.

<sup>18</sup> Crandall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 39.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> De Banco R. Hil. 17 Hen. VII,

m. 353.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. East. 20 Hen. VII, m. 328.

<sup>21a</sup> Vide V.C.H. Hants, iii, 34.

<sup>22</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 988,

no. 6. See also Feet of F. Hants, Mich.

<sup>21</sup> Hen. VIII.

<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cxxxii, 184.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), cxxxiii, 118.

<sup>25</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 14, no. 105.

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 17 Jas. I;

Close, 17 Jas. I, pt. xvii, no. 12.

<sup>27</sup> Add. Chart. 17447–8.

<sup>28</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>29</sup> Recov. R. East. 1 Anne, rot. 57.

<sup>30</sup> Burke, Dormant and Extinct Peerage.

<sup>31</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 11 Geo. II;

Recov. R. 10 & 11 Geo. II, rot. 329.

<sup>32</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 76.

<sup>33</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 25 Geo. II, rot. 208.

<sup>34</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants (1778) penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>35</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 57 Geo. III.

<sup>36</sup> Hants Directories, 1848, 1855, 1859, 1867, 1875.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid. 1880.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. 1885.

<sup>39</sup> Ex inform. Mr. H. E. S. Holt.

<sup>40</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>41</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>42</sup> Close, 17 Jas. I, pt. xvii, no. 12.

tower probably belongs to the same time. The chancel, transepts, and south aisle are entirely modern. The old work is built with chalk quoins and ashlar, and chalk and ironstone rubble, the modern work being faced with Heath stone.

The east window of the chancel is formed by three trefoiled lancets, while to north and south are, on either side, a single trefoiled light and a window of two trefoiled lights. The chancel arch is of one moulded order, carried on pairs of corbel shafts.

In the south transept are an east window of two uncusped lights and a flat-pointed south-east doorway of early 17th-century date, and the three north windows of the nave are of the same detail as that in the transept, but only the middle window is old. The north door, c. 1190-1200, is between the western pair of windows, and has a semicircular head of two orders, the outer moulded with a filleted roll, and the inner chamfered, with label enriched with dog-tooth. The outer order has shafted jambs, the shafts and bases being modern; but the capitals are old, that to the east being a development of the scallop type, while the other is a good example of transitional foliage. The abaci are square with a quirk and hollow chamfer. On the south is a modern arcade of four bays, that to the east being the south transept arch, separated from the rest of the arcade by a short length of walling. At the west end of the nave is the rear arch of a blocked mediaeval window, through which the west gallery is now entered, and a plain doorway to the tower.

The south aisle is completely modern and lighted by three windows of three uncusped four-centred lights. Towards the west is reset, blocked up, the old south doorway of the nave. It is of the same date as the north doorway, but of plainer detail, having a single chamfered order with a label enriched with billets.

The tower is a wooden structure on a masonry foundation. It is covered in with boarding rebated to represent ashlar joints, and is painted 'stone colour,' and finished with a short slated spire and a wooden cross. The framework, of rough-hewn timbers, is probably of early 17th-century date, the covering being much more modern. It has a plain entrance from the west under a porch, and over it a poor wooden Gothic window.

The porch is of open timber construction and 15th-century date, and on the whole very well preserved. It is of two bays, with five traceried openings in each bay on the north and south, with cinquefoiled ogee heads. The entrance has a flat pointed head with an embattled cornice over, and the plates are also embattled, and there is a pretty cusped barge-board.

The octagonal font is modern and of 15th-century design with a panelled bowl and shafted octagonal stem.

The chancel screen is of early 17th-century date, with poor modern cresting. The lower part is solid, and the upper has heavy turned balusters rather widely spaced, and a square-headed moulded opening in the middle. The head beam is ornamented with a pattern of alternate oblong and oval medallions, and the west gallery is of the same date, with similar ornaments on rail and base, and tall square-section balusters. It is supported upon tapering octagonal columns rounded beneath, with moulded bases. Inserted in the front of the balusters is a row of hat pegs. The seating, pulpit, and other fittings are all modern. The nave roof is old, possibly of 17th-century date, and was intended to be ceiled with a plaster barrel ceiling. The other roofs are modern.

On the north wall of the nave, west of the door, are some remains of wall-painting of a date nearly coeval with the earliest part of the church. The upper parts of three female saints are to be seen with their names in large letters, Eugenia, Agnes, and Maria, the last holding the ointment box and being clearly St. Mary Magdalene. The nimbus of St. Eugenia is ornamented with suns and moons, and that of St. Agnes with a lobed pattern like the petal of a flower. To the west at a higher level is part of an original consecration cross, in a circle of red and yellow. The cross has plain rectangular arms, but a second with expanded arms has been painted over it. In the centre is a hole, and there may have been another below the cross.

The tower contains five bells: the treble, second, and tenor cast by Llewellyn and James of Bristol in 1887; the third by Knight, but dated 1633; and the fourth cast by William Eldridge in 1699.

The plate consists of a chalice and paten of 1880, which take the place of old plate then sold, a plated flagon given in 1848, and a plated cup and credence plate.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1584 to 1678, marriages from 1599 to 1681, and burials from 1599 to 1675. The second book contains baptisms from 1682 to 1727, marriages from 1683 to 1726, with notes of licences, and burials from 1681 to 1751, with notes of affidavits of burial in woollen. The third contains baptisms and marriages from 1727 to 1783 and 1754 respectively, and burials from 1751 to 1783. Marriages are continued in a printed book from 1754 to 1786, and baptisms and burials in two more from 1785 to 1810, and from 1810 to 1812.

The church of ST. MARK consists of a chancel, north and south transepts, and a small nave with north and south aisles. It was built in 1881, is constructed of red brick with stone dressings, and is designed in 13th-century style. There is a small bell-gable containing one bell.

The first mention of a church at ADVOWSONS Farnborough occurs in 1230, when a dispute arose concerning tithes and oblations between Simon, parson of Crondall, and Stephen de Farnborough, a dispute which was ended by an acknowledgement on Simon's part that Stephen was the true patron of the church, and a promise that he would claim nothing in future but a pension of 5s.<sup>45</sup> The advowson evidently followed the descent of the manor (q.v.)<sup>46</sup> until about 1822, when Henry Wilmot was the patron. From 1829 to 1843 Mr. G. H. Sumner was the patron, and from 1844 to 1861 Mr. Henry Clayton.<sup>45</sup> By 1862 the advowson seems to have been acquired by Dr. William Scot, who presented the living to his fifth son, the Rev. Robert F. Scot. Dr. William Scot died the following year, and the advowson was held by the Rev. Robert F. Scot until his death in 1878, when it came into the hands of his elder brother, Major-General Patrick George Scot.<sup>46</sup> The latter died in 1894, and in 1902 it was 57; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 137; 2034, fol. 43, 164; Close, 17 Jas. I, pt. xvii, no. 12; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>45</sup> Cur. Reg. R. Mich. 14 & 15 Hen. III, n. 11.

<sup>46</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. III (1st nos), no.

<sup>45</sup> Clergy Lists.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. See also Burke, Landed Gentry.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

sold by his representative to the Rev. William F. T. Hamilton, M.A., vicar of Cromer (co. Norf.), the present patron.

The patronage of St. Mark's Church, in the Alexandra Road, erected in 1881 as a chapel-of-ease to the parish church, is in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

There are Roman Catholic, Wesleyan Methodist, Primitive Methodist, and Baptist chapels in Farnborough.

The Children's Home in the Alexandra Road was removed to Farnborough from Milton near Gravesend in 1898, and is intended for the reception of 100 boys who have not been convicted of crime.

The charities in this parish are administered under a scheme of the CHARITIES Charity Commissioners of 2 July 1901, under the title of the Poor's Charity; (1) The Fuel Allotment, comprised in an award dated 1 April 1816; and (2) the charity of William Parkes, founded by will in or about 1730. The trust estate consists of (1) £412 4s. 5d. consols in the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, arising from the sale in 1856 of land formerly constituting endowment; (2) meadow land at Cove in Yateley, containing 4 a. 2 r. 22 p., and 1 a. of common, producing £8 10s. a year, and a sum of £47 12s. 9d. consols, with the official trustees, stated to have arisen from sale of timber.

By the scheme the income of about £20 a year is directed to be applied for the benefit of deserving and necessitous persons of not less than sixty years of age in the supply of clothes, medical aid in sickness, or in temporary relief in money.

LONG SUTTON

Sudtune (xi cent.), Launge Sutton (xii cent.), Sheep Sutton (xviii cent.).

Long Sutton is a small village and parish lying south-east of Crondall, 6 miles south from Winchfield Station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. The parish covers an area of 2,290 acres, including 1,540 acres of arable land, 469½ acres of permanent grass, and 264½ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> The part known as Long Sutton Manor extends to the north along the entire length of the parish, and it is presumed that the shape and extent of this division led to the distinctive appellation of Long Sutton.<sup>2</sup> The southern portion consists of Sutton Warblington to the west, and Well Manor to the east. The village lies north of Sutton Warblington, and is set along a narrow road running east and west, the principal building being Manor Farm, a fine farm-house of red brick, a little to the west of the church, with a large pond skirted by the road. East of the church is Parsonage Farm, another good red-brick gabled house of the 17th century, and opposite the church on the south side of the road is the modern school. In the churchyard are three fine yews, at the north, south-west, and south-east.

In Long Sutton the ground is higher than in the neighbouring parts of Crondall Hundred, rising around Well to over 520 ft. above the ordnance datum. Numerous old chalk pits exist throughout the parish, and a number of ancient copse inclosures are to be found. The soil is stiff clay and loam, the subsoil clay and chalk. The crops are corn in rotation and roots; hops are also cultivated.

Long Sutton House is the residence of Mr. John Arthur Keith Falconer, and Warblington Hall of Mrs. Falconer. Well Manor is occupied by Mr. John M. Bush.

In 1592 a dispute seems to have arisen with regard to the boundaries of Long Sutton Manor, held by the Dean and chapter of Winchester, and those of Odiham. In the document relating to this, mention occurs of a down called 'Prior's Downe,' containing about 70 acres, bounded by a ditch called 'White Diche,' thence to a certain Holme lately cut down, 'where the parishioners of Longsutton weare wonte to heare a gospel in there yearlye perambulation.'<sup>3</sup>

The following places in Long Sutton are mentioned in the Crondall Customary of 1567:—'Lymmer Feald,' 'Butter Croft,' 'Marwen's Meade,' a meadow called 'Materfast,' seven crofts called 'Nutcrofts,' a messuage called 'Mablyns,' a wood called 'Le Sole,' 2 virgates of land called 'Widowe's Garden,' and a meadow called 'Dymperk.'<sup>4</sup> The following places are mentioned in Sutton Warblington:—'Le Haylie Close,' 'Le Mylle wey,' and fields called 'Le Crowchfeald,' 'Ley Down,' 'Le Corne Downe,' and 'Stephen's Wood.'<sup>5</sup>

In 1249, when a division was made between the lands of William de Syneguy, lord of the manor of Sutton Warblington, and Hugh de Wengham, lord of Well, it was arranged that 'Whatsoever is towards the east from the wood of Henham to Great Knulle, and from Great Knulle to La Splette, and from La Splette to the assart of the parson of Crondall, and thus to La Heythorne, shall remain to Hugh and his heirs for ever. And whatsoever is by the same division towards the west shall remain to William and his heirs for ever.'<sup>6</sup> The wood of Henham is probably to be identified with Highnam Copse of the present day. In 979 King Ethelred granted 5 hides of land at Sutton to Ethelwold, Bishop of Winchester, for the use of the old minster, this grant being the first he made after his coronation. In this charter this land is stated to have been given to King Edgar, Ethelred's father, by Ethelbriht the steward, and to have been formerly subject to the lordship of Crondall.<sup>6a</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANORS LONG SUTTON was a sub-manor of Crondall, assessed at 7 hides, held by Turstin. Justin and Lefsi had held the estate previously of the bishop in parage. It was then worth £7.<sup>7</sup> Long Sutton continued to be held by the Prior

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), Intro. pp. xv-xvi.

<sup>3</sup> Exch. D-p. East. 35 Eliz. no. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 359-68.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 369-75. 'Le Haylie Close' survives as Hayley Copse.

<sup>6</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 33 Hen. III.

<sup>6a</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iii, no. 622.

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

and convent of St. Swithun until the Dissolution,<sup>8</sup> and was granted by the king in free alms to the Dean and chapter of Winchester in 1541.<sup>9</sup> This grant was confirmed by James I in 1604, and from that period the history of the manor of Long Sutton is identical with that of Crondall (q.v.).

The manor of SUTTON WARBLINGTON is represented by the land in Long Sutton which William de St. Martin inherited in 1224. William was succeeded by his son Hugh de St. Martin, who died without issue in 1243.<sup>10</sup> Thereupon his lands escheated to the king, who granted them in 1248 to William de Syneguy.<sup>11</sup> In 1284 William de Syneguy, probably a son of the last-named, was holding one fee in Long Sutton,<sup>12</sup> but by 1316<sup>13</sup> it had passed to Elizabeth widow of Geoffrey de Wengham, who was most probably his daughter and heir. In 1335 Thomas de Warblington was in possession of lands in Long Sutton formerly belonging to Joan de Wengham.<sup>14</sup> It was from him that the manor derived its name, although his tenure cannot have been long, for in the following year he granted all his lands and tenements in Long Sutton to Nicholas de Hanyton.<sup>15</sup> By 1346 Sutton Warblington was held by the Prior of St. Swithun, Winchester,<sup>15</sup> and its subsequent descent seems to have been identical with that of Long Sutton<sup>15a</sup> (q.v.), the Ecclesiastical Commissioners being the present lords of the manor. Mr. John A. K. Falconer, who purchased Long Sutton House and Warblington Hall in 1899, now owns about 950 acres of land in the parish, of which 397½ acres are enfranchised copyhold of the manor of Sutton Warblington.<sup>16</sup> It appears that very little land of the manor now remains unenfranchised. On the Warblington estate there still exists a very old house called 'The Court,' where it is believed the courts of the manor were held.<sup>17</sup>

The manor of WELL (La Welle, Welles, xiii cent.) is represented by the 2 hides of land in Long Sutton which Richer the Archdeacon of Winchester held of the manor of Long Sutton at the beginning of the 12th century. After his death the estate was seized by the monks of Waverley, but Henry II, c. 1163, ordered Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester, to do full justice to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun, who were then laying claim to the property. The manor<sup>17a</sup> was held in 1243 by Hugh de Wengham,<sup>18</sup> and had most probably been inherited by him from his father, Hugh de Wengham, who was dealing with land in the parish as early as 1228.<sup>19</sup> In 1249 a division was made and the boundaries set out between the lands of William de Syneguy, the owner of the neighbouring manor of Sutton Warblington, and those of Hugh de Wengham,<sup>20</sup> and in the following year Hugh guaranteed that his estates in Well and Steventon should on his death descend to his son Geoffrey, promising to provide for him, his wife

Egelina, and his children in the meantime.<sup>21</sup> Geoffrey's daughter and heir Alice married Richard de Byflete,<sup>22</sup> and thus brought the manor into the possession of a family who held it for nearly two centuries.

Alice Byflete evidently survived her husband, for she is mentioned as holding lands in Well in 1335.<sup>23</sup> She was succeeded by her son, Thomas Byflete, who held one knight's fee in Well formerly belonging to the Archdeacon of Winchester in 1346,<sup>24</sup> and who left a son Thomas to succeed him.<sup>25</sup> The latter, dying in 1408, was followed by his son Thomas,<sup>26</sup> who died without issue. His heir was his brother Robert, who died in the reign of Richard III, and was succeeded by his son Thomas.<sup>27</sup> Thomas died seised of the manor in 1500 and was succeeded by his brother and heir John Byflete.<sup>28</sup> It is uncertain at what date Well passed out of the Byflete family, but in 1669<sup>29</sup> it was held by George Vernon, who in that year conveyed it by fine to Thomas Vernon.<sup>30</sup> In 1787 it was dealt with by fine between William Wootton and William Kay, and George Newland and Jane his wife.<sup>31</sup>

Two years later the manor seems to have become divided, for in 1789 Richard Potenger is mentioned as holding a moiety.<sup>32</sup> From this date no reliable records have been found of the manor until about 1885, when it was acquired through purchase by Mr. Charles James Maxwell Lefroy, who sold it in 1904 to Mr. W. N. Butler of Crondall.<sup>33</sup>

The church of ALL SAINTS consists CHURCH of a chancel 22 ft. 9 in. by 20 ft. 5 in.; a nave of the same width and 48 ft. 5 in. long; a south chapel 27 ft. 5 in. by 13 ft. 5 in.; a south porch, and a wooden bell-turret set about midway over the nave. The nave and chancel, in one range without any structural division, the chancel arch being entirely modern, are of early 13th-century date, and the south chapel was added towards the end of the same century. The bell-turret is doubtless mediaeval, but difficult to date, and the south porch is modern. The chancel is coated with rough-cast outside over the quoins and window dressings, which are of hard chalk, and the nave is similarly covered with plaster; the roofs are red tiled and the turret boarded, with a short leaded spirelet. The interior of the church is very well proportioned and spacious, and would be made more effective if the mean flimsy chancel arch were removed and a screen substituted.

The chancel retains its original windows, tall narrow lancets widely splayed within, and externally chamfered and rebated for a wooden frame. There are two of these in the east wall, and above and between them a circular window of the same date. There is one lancet in the north wall, and another opposite to it in the south, and at the south-east is a piscina with a moulded ogee head of 14th-century date. The chancel arch is two-centred, and has plain moulded abaci at the spring; it is only 12 in.

<sup>8</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 201; Feud. Aids, ii, 333, 359; Inq. a.q.d. file 451, no. 19; Chart. R. 13 Edw. I, m. 27; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 75-83, 135-41.

<sup>9</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>10</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 35.

<sup>11</sup> Cal. Chart. R. i, 332.

<sup>12</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 36.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid.; see also Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>14</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 39.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. 31-2.

<sup>16</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333.

<sup>15a</sup> Ibid. 359; Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 365-75.

<sup>16</sup> Ex inform. Mr. J. A. K. Falconer of Long Sutton House.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid.

<sup>17a</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 12.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 35.

<sup>19</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 12 Hen. III.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. Trin. 33 Hen. III.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. Trin. 34 Hen. III.

<sup>22</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xi, 18.

<sup>23</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 39.

<sup>24</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333.

<sup>25</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xi, 18.

<sup>26</sup> Baigent and Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 253.

<sup>27</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xi, 18, 19.

<sup>28</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 17 Hen. VII, no. 22.

<sup>29</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 21 Chas. II, rot. 149.

<sup>30</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 21 Chas. II.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. Hants, Mich. 28 Geo. III.

<sup>32</sup> Recov. R. East. 29 Geo. III, rot. 274.

<sup>33</sup> Ex inform. the late Mr. C. J. Maxwell Lefroy.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

thick, and altogether out of keeping with the large and simple detail of the 13th-century work.

At the east end of the north wall of the nave is another of the original lancet lights, identical in every respect with those in the chancel, and west of it is a modern single trefoiled light of late 18th-century detail, and abreast of the bell-turret a window of c. 1340, of two trefoiled lights with a quatrefoil in flowing tracery over. The sill of this window appears to have been raised, making the proportions rather too short. West of this the head of a blocked doorway, perhaps of 15th-century date, shows through the external plaster, but there are no signs of an opening inside the nave. At the south-east of the nave is the arch opening to the south chapel, which was no doubt the Lady chapel; it is two-centred and of two stop-chamfered orders, the responds having half-round shafts with roll-moulded bases and moulded bell capitals of slightly varied section. The south door of the nave is perhaps of 14th-century date, with a two-centred head, continuously moulded with two hollow chamfers. The west window is modern, and is a copy of the 14th-century window on the north side, except that the internal reveal has a heavy continuous roll, a few of the stones of which seem to be old.

The chapel has an east window of three chamfered and rebated lancets grouped in a chamfered external reveal, with a common internal splay and two-centred rear arch. At the south-east is a piscina of late 13th-century date, with a trefoiled head moulded with a heavy filleted bowtel. Above this is a 14th-century niche elaborately moulded and with an ogee trefoiled head. It has an undercut and finialled label. In the south wall are two single trefoiled lights of original late 13th-century date. Like the east lancets these windows are chamfered and rebated externally, and are late examples of the use of a wooden glazing frame. The south porch is a plain wood-and-plaster structure, and of no archaeological interest.

The chancel roof is ceiled in plaster divided by moulded ribs, which seem to be modern, and the nave has a flat plaster ceiling. The chapel roof is of low pitch and plastered.

The bell-turret is made of heavy timber framing of plain character, very massive and doubtless ancient; it may be 15th-century work. Four large posts stand on the nave floor against the walls, and above is an elaborate system of trussing to the principals.

The font is circular with a plain bowl cut down and scraped, and a heavy circular stem. It is perhaps of 12th-century date. The fittings are modern.

There are three bells. The treble is inscribed, 'HAL MARI FUL OF GRAS'; the second, 'IBE LEVE IN GOD THE FATHER'; the third, 'OUR FATHAR WICH ART IN HEVEN.' All the inscriptions are in Gothic capitals and all three bells bear the initials of William Knight, a Reading founder of c. 1520.

The plate consists of a chalice of 1570, a paten and flagon of 1869, and a pewter plate and flagon.

Book i of the registers contains baptisms, marriages, and burials, 1561 to 1655; book ii the same, 1655 to 1721; book iii, burials, 1680 to 1753; book iv, baptisms, 1721 to 1812, burials 1733 to 1812, and marriages, 1733 to 1788; book v, marriages, 1754 to 1812.

A chapel probably existed at Long ADVOWSON Sutton at an early date and was served from Crondall Church. The exact date at which a perpetual curate was appointed by the hospital of St. Cross, Winchester, is uncertain, but in 1828 the hospital leased the advowson for the lives of Francis Arnold of Hambledon, James Harris of Winchester, and Jane Cole of Odiham, widow. In 1875 these persons, together with the Master and brethren of St. Cross, made application that the advowson should be transferred to the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>34</sup> This application was approved, and the Bishops of Winchester have held the advowson since that date. The living is a vicarage of the net yearly value of £219.

There is a small Nonconformist chapel in the village.

The yearly sum of £1 6s. 8d., CHARITIES formerly paid by the owners of certain houses in Alton for the poor of Long Sutton, has for long ceased to be paid for want of evidence to identify the premises liable thereto.<sup>35</sup>

In 1737 Stephen Terry, by deed dated 14 June (enrolled), charged a copyhold farm in Sutton Warblington with an annuity of £4 for the teaching of eight poor scholars to read, say their prayers and catechism, and for buying them Bibles and religious books.

The incumbent receives, under an order of the Charity Commissioners of 19 April 1887, one fourth part of a tithe rent-charge of £360—subject to variations—on lands in this parish.

YATELEY

Yateleye (xiii cent.); Yhateleghe (xiv cent.); Yeatley, Yately (xvi cent.).

Yateley is situated in the north-eastern part of Hampshire, 33 miles from London and 2½ miles north-west from Blackwater Station, on the Reading and Reigate branch of the South Eastern Railway. The parish covers an area of 3,222 acres. It is bounded on the north-east by the River Blackwater, on the south and south-east by Minley and Hawley, which, with Cove, were formerly included in the parish.

Yateley Common occupies the southern portion of the parish, and the village lies to the north. The manor-house is at the east end of the village near the church. It was formerly called Hall Place, and as early as 1287 Juliana de Aula was stated to be holding one hide of land containing 106 acres of land and 3 acres of purpresture before the church of Yateley.<sup>1</sup> At a later date the capital messuage called 'Le Haule Place' was in the possession of the Allen family—Richard Allen holding in 1567<sup>1a</sup> and Thomas Allen in 1620. Thomas Wyndham, the purchaser of Minley Manor, was living at Hall Place in 1740, and it is probable that he had acquired it by his marriage with Elizabeth daughter and heiress of John Helyar, who had married as his second wife Christian daughter

<sup>34</sup> Lond. Gaz. 26 Oct. 1875, p. 5073.

<sup>35</sup> Inquisition by Commissioners of Charitable uses taken at Odiham 27 Oct.

21 Chas. II.

<sup>1</sup> Chas. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 91.

<sup>1a</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 258.

and heiress of John Ryves. If this is the case, Sir Richard Ryves, who died in 1671 and lies buried in Yateley Church, was probably the owner of this property.<sup>2</sup> Yateley Hall, formerly called Colcatts, the residence of Miss De Winton-Corry, lies to the south of the village. From the Crondall Customary of 1567 it appears that Andrew Smythe, who had married Elizabeth the daughter of Robert Morflett, was then holding of the lord of the manor a messuage, garden, and orchard called Colcatts, containing 4 acres of land.<sup>2a</sup> In 1740 Colcatts was occupied by the Diggle family.<sup>3</sup> Frogmore Park, the seat of Mrs. Fitz Roy, is situated in a small, well-timbered park near Blackwater. Mount Eagle Farm, in the west of the parish, according to tradition, was once the residence of the Lord Monteagle to whom the letter was written by which the Gunpowder Plot was discovered.

Six ponds exist in the parish, one of them, called Wyndham's Pond, near Cricket Hill, probably taking its name from the Wyndham family, lords of Minley Manor in the latter half of the 18th century. The ground is low, rising a little over 300 ft. above the ordnance datum.

Some curious records exist with reference to the old Dog and Partridge Inn in Yateley village. This building was formerly the church-house belonging to the parish. At one time one half was a public-house and the other an almshouse, the latter portion belonging to the overseers. In 1734 it was agreed that the 'Dog and Partridge' was to have all the custom of the church. The two halves were amalgamated in 1748, the overseers claiming part of the rent as being the former owners of the almshouse.<sup>3a</sup>

In Yateley there are 707 acres of arable land, 874 acres of permanent grass, and 17½ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>4</sup> The soil is Bagshot Sand. The chief crops are rye, wheat, oats, and barley, with some hay and clover.

Cove, which with a portion of the south part of Hawley was formed into an ecclesiastical parish from Yateley in 1838, covers an area of 1,972 acres and lies to the south-east of Yateley, 1 mile from Farnborough Station, on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. Cove Brook flows from south to north through the centre of the parish.

The manor-house lies to the north, and near it is Broomhill Farm, which is mentioned as early as 1261.<sup>4a</sup> The ground is low, seldom rising more than 230 ft. above the ordnance datum. The soil is light; the subsoil sand. The chief crops are potatoes and roots. There are 262 acres of arable land, 450 acres of permanent grass, and 3 acres of woods and plantations in Cove.<sup>4b</sup> Inclosures were made in 1859 by authority of the General Inclosure Act.<sup>5</sup>

Hawley, which was formed into an ecclesiastical district from Yateley in 1838, is on the Surrey border, 2 miles from Farnborough Station, and comprises the village of Blackwater. Hawley Hill Woods and Hawley Common occupy a large portion of the parish, while Darly Green is a large village green lying between Blackwater and Yateley. The Parish Council Room on the green is of brick, erected in 1897 by public subscription to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of her late Majesty Queen Victoria, the site being given by Mr. Laurence Currie. Fern Hill, the property of Mr. John Charles Randell, is a mansion situated on an eminence in a wooded estate of about 120 acres. Brooke House is the residence of Lieut.-Colonel Courtenay William Bruce, J.P. Hawley House, a large mansion of stone, pleasantly situated in a well-wooded park of about 60 acres, is the residence of Major Charles E. Orman.

Blackwater is a large village on the old Western coaching road, at the point of junction of Hampshire, Surrey, and Berkshire, with a station on the Reading and Reigate branch of the South Eastern Railway. An annual fair of cattle and sheep is held on Blackwater Green in November. Hartfordbridge flats, a vast extent of heath country, on which black game once existed, reaches from Yateley to Blackwater. The Oaks is the residence of Mr. John Charles Randell. Hawley with Minley includes 88 acres of water, and 4,860 acres of land, of which 824 acres are arable, 1,075 permanent grass, and 746½ woods and plantations.<sup>6a</sup> The soil varies, the subsoil being clay. The chief crops are grain.

Minley, which was formed with part of South Hawley into an ecclesiastical district in 1874, lies south of Yateley parish. Minley Manor, which has been rebuilt, stands about 300 ft. above the ordnance datum, and is the seat of Mr. Laurence Currie, lord of the manor. Minley Grange is the seat of the Rt. Hon. Edmond Robert Wodehouse, P.C., M.A., and Fleet Farm House that of Captain the Hon. Charles White. White House is occupied by Major Ivan Richardson. There is a tradition that Minley Warren was the home of Colonel Blood, who attempted to steal the Crown jewels in the reign of Charles II. The soil of Minley is peaty and the subsoil sand, while the greater part is covered by wood and moorland.

Bramshott Golf Course is at Bramshott Bridge south of the railway, 1 mile from Fleet station.

Hawley Pond, covering about 50 acres, is situated here. Hornley Common separates Minley from Hawley, and is mentioned as one of the boundaries of Minley in a document of 1516.<sup>6</sup>

In the Crondall Customary of 1567 the following place-names in Yateley are mentioned: Closes called 'Le Pipson,' 'Yeates Feald,' 'Le Fursey Close,' 'Black Hedge,' 'Brixhill,' 'Fylthier More,' 'Crabracke,' and 'Sellecroft'; marshes called 'Swyngles,' 'William's More,' 'Pondethed More,' 'Swalshottes More,' and 'Manredes'; a meadow called 'Frogge Meade,' a grove called 'Leper's Grove,' bridges called 'Grene Mille Bridge,' and 'Titchenbridge,' a pool called 'Strowde Poole' and a fardel of land called 'Sealands.'<sup>7</sup>

The manor of CRONDALL has from MANORS the earliest period comprised a large portion of the parish of Yateley. Thus in 1299 a commission of oyer and terminer was issued to try the persons who cut down the trees and hedges

<sup>2</sup> Chas. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 90-2.

<sup>2a</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 265.

<sup>3</sup> Chas. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 92.

<sup>3a</sup> Ibid. 64.

<sup>4</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4a</sup> In that year Henry III granted to Imbert de Muntferraunt all the land of Broomhill and Cove which had fallen to him by the death of Aymer, Bishop-elect of Winchester (Cal. Chart. R. ii, 35). This land was held of William de Coleville lord of Itchel, and had been bought by Aymer from John Lisle (Inq. p.m. 45 Hen. III, no. 45).

<sup>4b</sup> Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> Blue Bk. Inclosure Awards, 150.

<sup>6a</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>6</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 474.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 258-330.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

of the Prior of St. Swithun at Yateley and burned them,<sup>8</sup> and in the following year the prior and convent obtained a grant of free warren in Yateley.<sup>9</sup> In 1541 Henry VIII granted all the possessions of the dissolved monastery of St. Swithun in Yateley to the Dean and chapter of Winchester,<sup>10</sup> and in the Crondall Customary of 1567 the tithings of Yateley and Hawley are described as parcels of the hundred and manor of Crondall.<sup>11</sup>

A water-mill in Yateley is mentioned in the Crondall Customary of 1567, and in Norden's 'Survey of Wind-sor Forest.' It existed until about 1887.<sup>12</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey COVE was held with Itchel by German of the bishop, as of his manor of Crondall, the two together consisting of 8 hides. Before this time Cove and Itchel, each with a hall of its own, had been held as separate estates by Ulward and Lewin respectively, but when German received the property it contained one hall only.<sup>13</sup> Cove followed the same descent as the manor of Itchel<sup>14</sup> (q.v.) until 1579, when it was sold by George Giffard to Thomas Brabon.<sup>15</sup>

Robert White of Aldershot, who had purchased Cove from Thomas Brabon in 1580,<sup>16</sup> died seised of it in 1599, when it passed to his elder daughter Ellen, wife of Richard Tichborne.<sup>17</sup>

Ellen died in 1612, leaving Cove Manor to her daughter Amphyllis, who subsequently married Lawrence Hyde, and died in 1632,<sup>18</sup> leaving an infant son Robert, and three daughters, Amphyllis, Anne, and Ellen, who became co-heirs. Amphyllis married Thomas Chaffin, and it is probable that Ellen married John Lowe, of Shaftesbury (co. Dors.), for in 1655 the manor was dealt with by Amphyllis Chaffin, widow, John Lowe and Ellen his wife, and others.<sup>19</sup> The manor was apparently afterwards settled on Lawrence Lowe, the son of John and Ellen.<sup>20</sup> In 1689 his widow Lucy joined with Thomas Chaffin, Edward Lowe, and others, in conveying it to Thomas Freke,<sup>21</sup> who died without issue in 1698, leaving his estates to Thomas Pile and Elizabeth wife of Thomas Freke of Han-nington (co. Wilts.) for life, with reversion to George Pitt of Stratfieldsaye, husband of Lucy, Lawrence Lowe's widow.<sup>22</sup> George Pitt died in 1734, leaving the manor in trust for his son George, then a minor, and in 1739 the trustees held a court baron there. In 1745 George Pitt held a court leet, court baron, and view of frankpledge, as lord of the manor of Cove, and died the same year, leaving the manor to his son George, who is mentioned as holding a court there in 1762.<sup>23</sup> He was created Lord Rivers of Stratfieldsaye 20 May 1776, in which year he held the court of the manor together with his son, and it was still held by him in 1785.<sup>24</sup> He evidently, however, parted with the estate almost immediately afterwards, as in the same year it was dealt with by fine between Oliver and James Farrer and Thomas Parry.<sup>25</sup> By 1814 Cove had come into the possession of Valentine Henry Wilmot of Farnborough,<sup>26</sup> by whose family it had probably been acquired by purchase. Valentine Henry died in 1819, leaving the manor to his widow Barbarina, with reversion to his only daughter and heir Arabella Jane. Barbarina afterwards married Thomas, Lord Dacre, who is mentioned as lord of the manor in 1823, and in 1845 he and his wife held a court there.<sup>27</sup> On the death of Lady Dacre the estate passed to her daughter Arabella Jane, whose husband, the Rev. Frederick Sullivan of Kimpton, is mentioned as lord of the manor in 1864.<sup>28</sup> He died in 1873, leaving the manor to his third but eldest surviving son, Captain Francis William Sullivan, afterwards Admiral Sir F. W. Sullivan, who succeeded his cousin as sixth baronet in 1899.<sup>29</sup> In 1896 the manor was purchased from Sir Francis by Mr. Henry J. E. Brake, on whose death in 1905 it passed to his son, Mr. Henry William Brake, the present owner.<sup>30</sup>

The last court of Cove Manor was held by Admiral Sir F. W. Sullivan in 1894.<sup>31</sup> It appears that some of the waste lands of the manor were peat moors, and tenants of the manor on admission took oath to prevent loss to the lord of the manor by unauthorized persons digging and carrying the same away. In 1768 an action was entered by one Watts, on behalf of himself and other tenants of the manor, against Mr. Bailey, lessee of the manor, to prevent the latter from digging peat. The case was to have been tried at Winchester Assizes, but was withdrawn by Watts owing to the discovery, on formal inquiry, that the defendant had the right to dig peat within the manor.<sup>32</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey MINLEY (Mindeslei, xi cent.; Mindley, xviii cent.), assessed at 2 hides and worth 20s., was in the possession of Alsi the son of Brix, Ælwi being the name of his predecessor.<sup>32a</sup> No reliable record, however, of the reputed manor of that name seems to exist earlier than the 18th century, when it was in the possession of the family of Tylney, who had inherited large estates in Hampshire.<sup>33</sup> In 1740 the Hon. John Tylney, commonly called Viscount Castlemaine, eldest surviving son and heir-apparent of Richard, Earl Tylney of Castlemaine in Ireland, by Dorothy, heir-at-law of her great-uncle Frederick Tylney of Rotherwick (co.

SULLIVAN, Baronet.
Vert a hart tripping or impaling party argent and sable a boar passant counterchanged and a chief or with a right hand cut off at the wrist and holding a sword erect with a serpent entwined about the blade between two lions argent facing each other.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 27 Edw. I, m. 8 d.

<sup>9</sup> Cal. Chart. R. iii, 1.

<sup>10</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>11</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 258,

311.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. See Early Chan. Proc. bdle.

145, no. 59, and Harl. MS. 3749.

<sup>13</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465.

<sup>14</sup> Crondall Rec. (Hants Rec. Soc.),

Introd. p. xxv; Feud. Aids, ii, 314, 333,

359; Inq. p.m. 7 Edw. I, no. 22; ibid.

18 Edw. IV, no. 44; Exch. Inq. p.m.

(Ser. 2), file 378, no. 4.

<sup>15</sup> Close, 21 Eliz. pt. xiii; Add. MS.

33278, fol. 132; Recov. R. Trin. 21 Eliz.

rot. 1100.

<sup>16</sup> Close, 22 Eliz. pt. iii; Feet of F.

Hants, East. 22 Eliz.; Add. MS. 33278, fol. 132.

<sup>17</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclviii, 31.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 14 Chas. I, pt. i, no. 199.

<sup>19</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Mich. 6 Chas. II,

m. 3. See also V.C.H. Hants, iii, 414.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 1 Will.

and Mary.

<sup>22</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 414.

<sup>23</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Henry W. Brake.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. See also G.E.C. Complete

Peerage, vi, 374-5.

<sup>25</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 25 Geo.

III.

<sup>26</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Henry W. Brake.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.

<sup>29</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>30</sup> Deeds penes Mr. H. W. Brake.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid. See also Feet of F. Hants,

Trin. 25 Geo. III.

<sup>32a</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 505a.

<sup>33</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, ii, 184.

CRONDALL CHURCH : INTERIOR LOOKING WEST

YATELEY CHURCH : CHANCEL AND SOUTH ARCADE

Hants), conveyed the manor or lordship of Minley to Thomas Wyndham of Yateley and his heirs for ever.<sup>34</sup>

On the death of Thomas Wyndham in 1763 the estates went to his only son Helyar Wadham Wyndham, who died without issue in 1789, Minley Manor then passing to his cousin Anne, the only daughter and heir of John Wyndham of Ashcombe (co. Wilts.), and wife of the Hon. James Everard Arundell.<sup>35</sup> From Anne the estate passed to her son James Everard, ninth Lord Arundell of Wardour,<sup>36</sup> who sold it in 1814 to William Robert Burgess of the Strand, London.<sup>37</sup>

WYNDHAM. Azure a chevron between three lions' heads razed or.

ARUNDELL. Sable six hironelles argent.

Mr. Stooks, late vicar of Yateley, the author of the History of Crondall and Yateley, gives some interesting details concerning the history of the Burgess family. It appears that John Burgess, the father of William Robert, was a respectable tradesman of Odiham, who fell in love with a local heiress, and she, failing to obtain her parents' consent, eloped with him at the age of sixteen.<sup>38</sup> The issue of the marriage was three sons, who all obtained some distinction, the third son becoming Bishop of Salisbury. The second son, William Robert Burgess, went into business, made a fortune, and bought Minley Manor, as already stated.<sup>39</sup>

In 1820 William Robert Burgess conveyed the manor of Minley to his brother-in-law, the Rev. Robert Clarke Caswall of Eglington (co. Northumb.).<sup>40</sup> The latter died on 4 September 1846, and his executors, nine years afterwards, sold the estate to the trustees of the settlement made on the marriage of Raikes Currie, son of Isaac Currie of Bush Hill (co. Midd.), with Miss Laura Sophia Wodehouse, eldest daughter of John, second Lord Wodehouse.<sup>41</sup> Raikes Currie died in 1881, leaving Minley to his second son, Bertram Wodehouse, father of the present owner, Mr. Laurence Currie, of the famous banking firm of Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., who inherited the estate in 1896.<sup>42</sup>

The present mansion-house was erected during the years 1858-60 by Raikes Currie, and was altered and enlarged during 1886-7 by Bertram Wodehouse Currie, who bought a good deal of additional land. Further additions were made to the house in 1898 by the present owner, Mr. Laurence Currie.<sup>43</sup>

CURRIE of Minley. Gules a saltire argent with its ends cut off and in the chief a rose argent.

Mention of free fishing and free warren in Minley occurs in 1740.<sup>44</sup>

The church of ST. PETER, CHURCHES YATELEY, has a chancel 31 ft. 5 in. by 18 ft. 3 in.; nave 55 ft. 10 in. by 18 ft. 3 in.; south vestry and organ chamber; south aisle, 14 ft. wide at its east end and 16 ft. at the west; north porch; west tower of timber, 19 ft. 6 in. long by 23 ft. wide, and south-west vestry. All these measurements are internal. The ashlar work of all dates is for the most part of chalk.

The north doorway and the west window of the nave are the sole remaining details of a church of the second half of the 12th century, but the north and west walls of the nave doubtless contain much of the original masonry. The nave was aisleless and of the same length and breadth as now, and had a chancel shorter and narrower than the existing one, which was built round it in the first half of the 13th century, the original chancel arch being removed and the new work made of equal width with the nave. A tower seems to have been begun at the south-east of the nave about this time, part of its east and south walls yet remaining, but was probably never finished, and in the second half of the 14th century a south aisle was built of the full length of the nave and of the width of the abandoned tower. The aisle is, however, very irregular, being wider at the west than at the east.

In the 15th century a wooden tower was built at the west end of the nave, and the north porch is probably work of the same period. On the north side of the chancel at its east end are a blocked doorway and a small blocked light, with its rear arch outward, marking the addition about the middle of the 14th century of a vestry in the usual position; its foundations have been discovered in the churchyard, but the building is entirely destroyed. A certain amount of modern repair has been carried out, and the two vestries at the east and west ends of the south aisle are recent additions.

In the east wall of the chancel are three partly-restored 13th-century lancet windows, the head of the middle light being modern. The small blocked window opening from the destroyed vestry in the north wall has chamfered and rebated jambs and a flattened ogee head, and jambs splayed towards the north, and the doorway west of it also has a flattened ogee head and jambs of a single chamfered order; its rear arch can be seen in the outer face of the wall. The two north windows of the chancel are plain 13th-century lancets, as also are the two in the eastern half of the south wall. West of the second is an original pointed doorway, now opening to a modern vestry; on its chalk masonry are a number of crosses and two sundials, one obviously out of place at the bottom of its east jamb on the inside. The arch next to it is modern, opening to the organ, but contains a few old stones which probably belonged to the lancet window which it displaced.

The nave has three north windows. The first, of late 14th-century date, is of two cinquefoiled ogee-headed lights with trefoils over, under a flat head; the lintel

<sup>34</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 & 14 Geo. II; Recov. R. Trin. 13 & 14 Geo. II, rot. 234.

<sup>35</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, i, 158. Deeds penes Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.

<sup>36</sup> It had been settled upon Thomas

Grove and others in trust for him in 1793 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Geo. III).

<sup>37</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.

<sup>38</sup> Ex inform. Miss Jane Caswall of Yateley; C. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 45.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid.

<sup>40</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. See also Burke, Landed Gentry.

<sup>42</sup> Deeds penes Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.

<sup>43</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Laurence Currie, M.A.

<sup>44</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 & 14 Geo. II.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

is formed by the wall-plate inside. The second has two cinquefoiled pointed lights with tracery in a three-centred head, and dates from c. 1500; and the third, west of the north door, has two lancet lights, and is probably of late 13th-century date. Part of it is in modern stonework.

The north doorway dates from the 12th century; the jambs are of two square orders without shafts, but the outer order has been mutilated in arch and jambs for the fitting of a door; the arch is round, its inner order plain, and its outer order, or what is left of it, enriched with billet and nail-head ornament.

The south arcade of the nave has four bays with octagonal pillars and semi-octagonal responds; the base moulds are two rounds, and the capitals are simply moulded and much scraped, while the arches are two-centred and of two chamfered orders.

At the west end of the nave an arch of two hollow chamfered orders of 15th-century date, with moulded capitals, opens to the tower; its crown cuts into the lower part of an original narrow round-headed 12th-century window.

The south-east vestry is in 13th-century style to match the chancel, and has a modern arch in its west windows to the south and west and has a west doorway to the churchyard.

The wood-framed west tower dates from the 15th century, its lowest stage being of the width of the nave, with upright timbers filled in with modern red brick in herring-bone pattern. The main structure is of smaller diameter, with heavy angle posts braced and framed together, all being of oak.

There is an old window of two round-headed lights on the north side of the ground stage, and a modern west doorway and four-light window over; an open circular staircase of wood rises in the north-west corner ending at the first floor, where the wide ground stage of the tower stops under a tiled roof, the main structure continuing as an oak-shingled turret, with rows of rectangular lights in the bell-chamber; it is covered with a tiled pyramidal roof, finishing with a vane and weathercock.

All the walls externally are coated with plaster. The roof of the chancel is a modern gabled one of deal; that of the nave is old, with trussed collars and plain tie-beams, and the aisle roof is like that of the nave.

The chancel screen is all modern except for the tracery in the heads of the bays on either side of the wall filled by the organ; this wall is 3 ft. 3 in. thick, and, as suggested, is probably part of a 13th-century tower.

PLAN OF YATELEY CHURCH

In the south aisle the south wall to the east of the first window is also 3 ft. 3 in. thick, more by 9 in. than the rest of the wall. It contains a small 13th-century piscina with a plain pointed head of square section and a sill with a moulded edge. The south-east window of the aisle is of three cinquefoiled ogee-headed lights with trefoils above, under a square head; the wall-plate of the roof forms its inner lintel. The mullions are modern, the rest late 14th-century work, of the same character as the north-east window of the nave. The next window is a 15th-century insertion with moulded jambs and mullions; it has two cinquefoiled lights and a square head with sunk spandrels, and a moulded label outside. The north doorway is probably of the date of the arcade, and has a small chamfered order and a two-centred arch. The lower halves of the jambs with the broach stops are of modern repair. The westernmost window is of two lights and like the north-east window of the nave. In the west wall is a modern doorway to the vestry; the wall above sets back 6 in. inside and is pierced by a window of two lancets in a pointed stone head, which looks like late 13th-century work reset. The vestry has middle opening; this is good early 15th-century work with eight trefoiled lights arranged in pairs, and quatrefoiled openings on each pair, with pierced and cusped spandrels. The font under the tower has an octagonal bowl, chamfered below, which is perhaps of 14th-century date, on a modern stem.

The porch dates from the 15th century and is of wood; its side-walls are plastered externally and pierced by small windows. It was formerly plastered internally, and the 12th-century doorway was hidden until opened out in 1901. The barge-board of the gable is cut into five large foils; below it is a small ancient figure of St. John the Evangelist, apparently of Flemish or north French work, holding a book in his left hand; his right hand is upheld in blessing.

The church is lighted entirely by candles, and has in the nave four pretty brass chandeliers of the ordinary Dutch pattern, bought in London. The altar candlesticks are also of brass of 17th-century Italian work, and the altar cross is an interesting piece of mediaeval work with embossed figures, probably also Italian. These were given in late years, but the church also has some old candlesticks which have been long in its possession.

In the chancel floor are a number of 5 in. mediaeval tiles, several with curious and unusual patterns—as a king kneeling before a small seated figure, a hound chasing a stag, a horseman, and a standing figure with outstretched arms and a circle on his breast; behind appears to be a rainbow.

At a recent restoration the remains of a wall-painting were discovered on the north wall; it represented a king wearing his crown and holding a sceptre with a dove in his right hand. It was covered up again.

Under the tower are four slabs with brasses. The earliest is inscribed: 'Pray for the soules of william lawerd and agnes his wyf the which william decessed the xvi day of august the yere of our lord god M<sup>c</sup>xvii on whose soules Jesu have mercy Amen.' Above it is a man with long hair, in a fur robe, his hands in prayer, and a lady with a long head-dress, her dress having a tight bodice and fur cuffs, and held by a long belt clasped by a rosette. Below them are nine sons and a daughter. Another is inscribed: 'Pray for the soules of Willm Rygg and Tomysyn hys wyf the whiche Willm decessed the xxix day of august ye yer of o' Lord M<sup>c</sup>xxxii on whose soule Jhu have mercy.' It also has the figures of a man and woman in similar dresses to the others, and with four sons and seven daughters below. The third has the inscription: 'Hic sepulta jacet Elizabetha quonda Roberti Morfletti, Armigeri filia que D'no migravit 10 cal Septimbris anno salutis humane MCCCCLXXVIII<sup>to</sup>.' Of the figure over only the upper half remains. It shows a lady with a curious tight long head-dress, ruff collar, and padded sleeves. Over her are two shields. The first is impaled, but the sinister half is defaced, the dexter is Ermine three bezants, which are the arms of Smythe of Yateley, and below it is the inscription: 'Edwardo Ormesby primo . . . peperit 4 et filias . . .' The other has its charges defaced and has the inscription: 'Andreae Smythe secundo M. peperit filios 3 et filias 3.' The fourth brass is of a bearded man in long fur gown and ruff collar, with his hands held in prayer. The inscription is gone. A fifth brass, mentioned in the Gentleman's Magazine for November 1794, is missing; it was of a man habited in a robe, and inscribed: 'Pray for the soule of Richard Gale which dyed the yer of o' lord M<sup>c</sup>xiii on whose soule Jhu have mercy.' In the chancel floor is a small brass plate inscribed: 'Orate p̄ aīa Johē uxoris Johis Hewlot et filie Robti Dyngeet cui' aīe ppiciet' ds.'

In the south aisle—whither it was removed from the chancel—is a mural monument to Sir Richard Ryves, kt., sheriff and alderman of London, died 1671. It has a large pillar of black and white marble surmounted by an urn, all in a round-headed niche, but the inscription is now lost. There are other 18th-century and later monuments in the church. In the churchyard is an old coffin-slab, probably of the 14th century, with a long floriated cross in relief cut upon it.

The tower contains a clock and eight bells: the treble and second are by Taylor, 1888; the third by Warner, 1878; the fourth is inscribed, 'William Yare made me 1613; the fifth has the usual lion's face, square flower, and groat of Roger Landon's Reading foundry, and is inscribed, 'Sancta Katerina ora pro nobis'; the sixth is cracked across the shoulder, and has the following inscription in rudely-formed Roman letters: 'LOVE THE LORD THE GOD AND OF EHS (sic) 1577,' and below it the initials T.E. for Thomas Eldridge (above a star) and F.R.; the seventh has for inscription 'Our hope is in the Lord' in black letter and old English capitals, each word being followed by a heart, and the initials of Richard Eldridge and the date 1617; the tenor is by Warner, 1864. There is also a small sanctus-bell with the initials of Robert Eldridge and date 1623.

The plate consists of a cup of 1568, a paten of 1710, a modern silver-gilt jewelled chalice and paten, of foreign work, given in 1886 in memory of Martin de Corry, a silver-mounted glass flagon, a bread box, and a pewter flagon. There is also a most beautiful standing covered cup of crystal and silver-gilt, English work of the end of the 16th century; its original wood and leather case is preserved in part. It is said to have been given in 1675 by Mrs. Sarah Cocks. It has been broken and the cover is not in its original condition, some very remarkable crystal spirelets, seeming to have formed part of it, being now separately preserved.

The registers begin in 1636. The first book is a copy on paper of baptisms, marriages, and burials from 1636 to 1709, and thence to 1729 they were copied in part from the old registers, and the rest collected from memoirs of families in the parish, the registers for that time being deficient. The original books seem to have been lost.

The second book is one recording burials in woollen from 1685 to 1784, and contains many affidavits and magistrates' seals. The third has marriages from 1754 to 1804, and the fourth continues them to 1812; the fifth has printed forms giving the baptisms and burials from 1785 to 1813. There are churchwardens' accounts from 1658 to 1698, and from 1698 to 1825; and these have been transcribed in a third volume which ends in 1884.

An overseers' book dates from 1751 to 1779. The church is also now in the possession of a copy of the Biblia Polyglotta of 1657, edited by Brian Walton; the text is printed in nine different languages—Hebrew, Greek, Latin Vulgate, Samaritan, Chaldaic, Ethiopian, Syrian, Arabic, and Persian, and contained in six volumes.

The churchyard is fairly large, and surrounds the building, but the greater part is to the south. It contains many trees, some of them of great height. In it is a modern churchyard cross erected to a son of the vicar, who went down in the battleship Victoria. The lych-gate is of unusual design, its gate opening on a pivoted middle post with a chain and counter-weight to hold it in position. On the woodwork are cut three dates, 1625, 1800, and 1884; little, if anything, of the first date is left.

The church of ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST, COVE, is a moderately sized building of cruciform shape, consisting of a chancel, nave, transepts, north porch, and a low embattled tower. It was built in 1844, is constructed of stone, and is designed mainly in 12th-century style.

The church of HOLY TRINITY, HAWLEY, is a new building of red brick and stone, with a vaulted chancel, a nave with aisles and chapels, a west tower with a shingled spire, and a baptistery at the north-west. It is very well furnished, and has a mosaic reredos, and a font with an oak cover, on which is a group carved in the round of Our Lord baptizing children.

The church of ST. ANDREW, MINLEY, is a small structure consisting of a chancel and nave in one range. It is quite modern, and is built of flint with stone detail and dressings. The fittings, also modern, are unusually handsome.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

A chapel existed in Yateley<sup>46</sup>
ADVOWSONS probably from an early date, and was served from Crondall parish.

The great tithes of Yateley were alienated with those of Crondall (q.v.) by Cardinal Beaufort in order to found his almshouse of Noble Poverty, in connexion with St. Cross Hospital. They were let by that hospital during several centuries to the Marquis of Winchester, who still held them at the beginning of the 19th century, and who farmed them out to the overseers of the parish. In 1818 the overseers paid £240 a year for the tithes. In 1823 they offered £160, which was refused, and from that time the marquises collected their own tithes. The commutation value of the tithes is £572; they have now fallen in to St. Cross.<sup>46</sup>

Under the terms of the lease to the Marquises of Winchester, it was covenanted that they should provide an honest and substantial minister for the parish of Yateley.<sup>47</sup> In 1875 the lay rector, with the concurrence of St. Cross Hospital, transferred the patronage of the living, which was then worth £70 a year, to the Bishop of Winchester, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners thereupon increased the stipend to £226.<sup>48</sup> The present net yearly value of the living, which is still in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester, is £294 with residence.

The living of Cove is a vicarage, of the net yearly value of £300, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

The living of Hawley is a vicarage, of the net yearly value of £339, in the gift of Mr. John Charles Randell, of The Oaks, Blackwater.

The living of Minley is a perpetual curacy of the net yearly value of £85, in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester, and was held until recently by the vicars of Yateley. It is now held by the vicar of Hawley, who resides at Blackwater.

There is a Primitive Methodist Chapel at Cove, erected in 1888. There is also a Baptist chapel at Cricket Hill, Yateley.

All Saints' Home for Girls was erected in 1881 by the late Mr. Charles Randell, and will hold forty children. The work is in charge of the sisters of St. John the Baptist, Clewer; there is a small chapel attached.

The Yateley, Cove, and Hawley
CHARITIES Charities.—By a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 5 February 1886, the charities comprised therein were consolidated under this title. The trust funds are held by the official trustees, comprising the charities of:—

Richard Bannister (so far as the same is applicable in the ancient parish), founded by deed of feoffment, 1417. The trust estate consists of 29 a. 2 r. let at £12 10s. and £1,370 8s. 2d. consols, one moiety of which is applicable in the parish of Sandhurst. This charity is administered under a further scheme of 5 February 1886;

Sir Richard Ryves, founded by will proved in the P.C.C. 20 August 1671; trust fund, £287 6s. 4d. consols, arising from the sale of 6 acres of copyhold land formerly belonging to the charity;

Peter South, founded by deed 1593; trust fund, £1,025 9s. 5d. consols;

Esther Poole, founded by will, proved in the P.C.C. 15 May 1835; trust fund, £11 0s. 7d. consols;

Mary Simmonds, founded by will, proved in the P.C.C. 5 December 1842; trust fund, £593 8s. 10d. consols.

By the scheme the dividends on £1,917 17s. 2d. consols belonging to the four charities last mentioned, amounting to £47 18s. 4d., are applicable for the general benefit of the poor by way of subscriptions to hospitals, provident clubs, &c., contributions to outfits for young persons entering trade, &c., supply of articles in kind, or temporary relief in money.

Mary Barker, founded by will, 1704; trust fund, £531 10s. 8d. consols, representing one-third of the proceeds of the sale in 1876 of land formerly belonging to the charity.

The dividends, amounting to £13 5s. 8d., are applicable in prizes and payments to encourage continuance at school.

The Church and Parish Estates, formerly consisting of the Dog and Partridge Inn, which was sold in 1898, and the proceeds (less expenses) invested in £2,631 10s. 6d. consols, producing yearly £65 15s. 4d., of which £24 is applicable in aid of the Poor's Rate of the parish, and the balance in the maintenance of the fabric of the church and of the services.

The 'Pest House,' formerly consisting of a house and land, which was sold in 1902 and the proceeds invested in £200 14s. 1d. India 3 per cent. stock, the dividends of which are also applicable in aid of the Poor's Rate.

Cove Church Endowment, consisting of 17 acres, occupied in part by the vicar of Cove, and the remainder let at £15 a year, and a sum of £9 18s. 6d. consols.

Cove Church Repair Fund; trust fund, £69 14s. 9d. consols, producing £1 14s. 8d. a year, applicable for the repair of the church of St. John, Cove. The two sums of stock arose from subscriptions in 1844, part of which was expended in the purchase of the land referred to in the previous paragraph.

Mrs. Ellen Katherine Meyrick, by will proved 4 January 1899, bequeathed £200 to the vicar and churchwardens, to be invested and the income distributed among the aged poor. The legacy, less duty, was invested in £180 15s. 10d. consols, with the official trustees.

Tithing of Cove.—The Coal Fund Charity consists of £1,112 5s. consols, transferred in 1898 to the official trustees, representing the investments of the proceeds of the sale of the fuel allotment, acquired under an award of 12 January 1860.

Tithing of Hawley.—The Parish Fund consists of a sum of £300 consols, supposed to represent payments in respect of encroachments. The stock was transferred to the official trustees in 1898.

Chapelry of Fern Hill.—Charles Randell, by will proved in 1881, bequeathed £5,000 for the minister of All Saints' Chapel. The legacy was lost by the bankruptcy of the solicitors for the testator's estate. The charity was reinstated by the testator's widow, by deed, 1887. The trust fund consists of 88,000 lire (representing 4,400 lire of Rentes) of the Public Debt of the Kingdom of Italy, producing about £140 a year.

<sup>45</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 70.

<sup>46</sup> Chas. D. Stooks, Hist. of Crondall and Yateley, 52.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid. 52-3.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid. 71; Index, Lond. Gaz. (1830-83), 1965.

THE LIBERTY OF BENTLEY

Bintungom (vii cent.); Beonaet, Beonetlet (x cent.); Benedlei (xi cent.); Benetlegh (xiii cent.); Benetlye (xiv cent.).

The parish of Bentley, covering an area of 2,299 acres, lies on the borders of Surrey, south of the parish of Crondall and north of Binsted, from which it is separated by the River Wey. It is served by Bentley railway station on the Alton branch of the London & South Western Railway. The ground slopes from the north of the parish, where it reaches its highest point (535 ft. above the ordnance datum), down towards the south and east. The village, which is described by Warner in the 18th century as 'a delightful, pleasant and neat village,' with well-planted gardens and hedges of white thorn, lies on the main road from Farnham to Alton, which is supposed to be an ancient Pilgrims' Way leading from Farnham through Bentley and Alton to Winchester. The forest of Alice Holt in the neighbouring parish of Binsted no doubt furnished cover for highwaymen and robbers, who fell upon merchant and pilgrim on their way to Winchester, to shrine or fair. The outlaw Sir Adam Gurdon is said to have frequented this road with his armed band, and to have devastated the surrounding country to the terror of peaceful travellers until his restoration to his estates by King Edward I.

North of the main road is Marsh House, the residence of Mr. Gilbert Harrap, and on the east is Northbrook, where Miss Schroder lived until her death in 1863. The property was then bought by Mr. Rowcliffe, and at his death by Mr. E. M. Sprot, who sold it to Mr. Wilmot-Sitwell in 1908. Bury Court was purchased by Mr. Lillywhite in 1907 from Miss White, whose brother bought the property from the executors of Mr. Robert Trimmer.

The parish, assessed with the small parish of Coldrey,<sup>1</sup> which covers an area of 194 acres, contains 1,138½ acres of arable land, 1,077½ acres of permanent grass, and 119½ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1a</sup> The soil is clay, gravel, and chalk marl, and the chief crops are corn and hops.

The common fields of Bentley were inclosed in 1859 under the General Inclosure Act.<sup>2</sup>

The following place-names occur in extant records of Bentley:—Estden, Ewclive Coleford,<sup>3</sup> Poukelond, Becklond, Cranlond, Le Spolt, La Merre,<sup>4</sup> Janckenes Welle, Le Lutine, La Byencroft, Mershcopemed<sup>5</sup> (xiv cent.), Cheakes (xvi cent.),<sup>6</sup> Guttonspool, Hame, Lopwood Grove (xvii cent.).<sup>7</sup> La Merre, called Merelond in the 15th century, is the modern Mareland, which was purchased from the Rev. Augustus Legge by the uncle of the present owner, Mr. A. E. Seawell. Janckenes Welle probably formed a part of the estate now known as Jenkin Place, the property of Mr. Thomas Eggar and Mr. R. B. Eggar, and Cheakes is the modern Cheeks Farm.

The manor and liberty of BENTLEY MANORS belonged from an early date to the Bishop of Winchester, being dependent on his liberty of Farnham (co. Surr.), to the hundred court of which the tithing-men of Bentley did suit as late at least as the end of the 16th century.<sup>8</sup> The date at which the bishop obtained possession is uncertain, but it was probably at the end of the 8th century. In 688 Cedwalla, King of the Saxons, granted 60 hides in Farnham of the land of Ceddas, Cisis, and Criswan, of which 10 were in Bentley, to found a monastery.<sup>9</sup> It is unknown to what monastery reference is made, and none is known to have existed at Farnham, so that the project may have been abandoned. Sixty hides in Farnham, apparently the above-mentioned, were granted in 803-5 by Alhmund, Bishop of Winchester, to Byrhtelm,<sup>10</sup> apparently only for a term of years or for life, as in 858 Swithun, Bishop of Winchester, granted the same to Ethelbald, King of the West Saxons, for life, with remainder to the bishop and church of St. Peter, Winchester.<sup>11</sup> In 909 Edward the Elder confirmed a grant by his predecessors of 60 hides of land at Farnham and 10 hides at Bentley to the bishop,<sup>12</sup> and this grant was further confirmed by King Edgar at the end of the 10th century.<sup>13</sup> The Bishop of Winchester was holding Bentley as 10 hides in 1086, and of him Osborne de Ou and William were

SEE OF WINCHESTER.
Gules St. Peter's keys crossed with St. Paul's sword.

<sup>1</sup> In Alton Hundred (V.C.H. Hants, ii, 503).

<sup>1a</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Inclosure Awards (Blue Bk.).

<sup>3</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 1141, no. 11.

<sup>4</sup> Add. Chart. 17401.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 17403.

<sup>6</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 86, no. 38.

<sup>7</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 33.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 580, 581.

<sup>9</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 106; V.C.H. Surr. ii, 590.

<sup>10</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 452.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. ii, 98.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 300.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. iii, 408.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

holding 1 hide 1 virgate worth 50s. and 1½ hides worth 20s. respectively.<sup>14</sup> From this date the manor of Bentley followed the same descent as the manor of Farnham until 1648,<sup>15</sup> when on the abolition of episcopacy it was sold to George Wither the poet and Elizabeth his wife.<sup>16</sup> At the Restoration the bishop regained possession of his confiscated land, and continued to hold the manor of Bentley until between 1880 and 1885,<sup>17</sup> when it passed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the present lords of the manor, as the representatives of the bishop.

The manor of Bentley contained a mill worth 10s. in 1086.<sup>18</sup>

The manor of PURY alias PERRYLAND (Pyri, Perye, xiv cent.; Purye, xv cent.; Pyrry, Perry Land alias Pury alias Prury Land, xvi cent.; Puray alias Peary, xviii cent.) was probably represented at the time of the Domesday Survey by 1½ hides worth 20s. held by William of the Bishop of Winchester, and 1 hide and 1 virgate worth 50s. held by Osborne de Ou.<sup>19</sup> The manor continued to be held of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>20</sup> Nothing further is known of this estate until 1312, when John de Westcote obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne land in Bentley.<sup>21</sup> He died seised of the manor of Pury 1334, leaving as his heir his son John, an idiot.<sup>22</sup> From this date the manor of Pury apparently followed the same descent as the manor of Badley in Crondall in the hundred of Crondall<sup>23</sup> (q.v.) until 1442,<sup>24</sup> when Philip de Pageham died seised of the manor, leaving as his heir his kinsman, Geoffrey Borrard of the Isle of Wight, son of Parnel daughter of Laurence Pageham.<sup>24</sup> Pury then passed, in accordance with a settlement of 1348,<sup>24a</sup> to Christine wife of Richard Holt and granddaughter of Roger de Colrethe.<sup>25</sup> Richard Holt was enfeoffed by his mother Christine in 1447,<sup>25a</sup> and died seised of the manor in 1458, leaving two daughters and co-heirs, Christine, afterwards wife of Edward Berkeley, and Elizabeth.<sup>26</sup> Edward Berkeley died seised of a moiety of the manor in 1506, Christine's heir being William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, son of her daughter Laura.<sup>27</sup> Elizabeth apparently died without issue or unmarried, and in 1532 William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, conveyed the whole manor to William Thorpe.<sup>28</sup> It next passed into the possession of Michael Lyster of Kinnersley, (co. Heref.), who married Elizabeth daughter and heir of Sir Richard Southwell of Horsham St. Faith

(co. Norf.).<sup>29</sup> In 1579 Michael and Elizabeth conveyed the manor to William Peake,<sup>30</sup> who continued to hold it until his death in 1597.<sup>31</sup> His kinsman and heir William Walle<sup>32</sup> died in 1639, leaving as his heir his son Joseph,<sup>33</sup> who held the manor until his death in 1644.<sup>34</sup> His son and heir William dealt with the manor by recovery in 1657,<sup>35</sup> but from this date down to the middle of the 18th century nothing is known about its descent. In 1757 Robert Eggar, senior, and Robert Eggar, junior, dealt with the manor of Pury by fine,<sup>36</sup> and in 1784 Robert Eggar and Sarah his wife and Robert Allen and Sarah his wife conveyed it to John Manwaring.<sup>37</sup> By the middle of the 19th century Perrylands was in the possession of Mr. F. R. Thresher, who left it by will to his nephew Mr. Thresher Giles.<sup>38</sup> Mr. Giles died in 1908, leaving Perrylands to the present owner, Mr. Gilbert Harrap.<sup>39</sup>

The church of OUR LADY stands CHURCH on high ground to the north of the village, approached by narrow lanes. An avenue of yews leads to the south door, and along the west side of the churchyard is an avenue of limes. The church has a chancel 25 ft. 6 in. by 16 ft., with north and south chapels of the same length and 15 ft. 2 in. wide, nave 38 ft. 5 in. by 20 ft. 9 in., with north and south aisles 13 ft. 7 in. wide, a west tower 13 ft. 5 in. by 12 ft. 4 in., and a wooden south porch, all the measurements being internal.

The oldest parts belong to the 12th century, and the plan until modern times was rather an unusual one. The aisleless nave and chancel were enlarged about 1180 by the addition of a north chapel, and a corresponding chapel was added on the south some sixty years later. The tower was apparently a late 12th-century addition, but the nave remained aisleless till 1835, when a south aisle was built. This was rebuilt in 1890, having become ruinous, and a north aisle of the same size added.

The tracery of the two west windows of the chapels was reset in the north aisle, and four 15th-century two-light windows from the north and south walls of the old nave were used up in making two windows in the new south aisle, one of three lights and one of two, the remains of 15th-century glass in them being put into the clearstory of the chancel.<sup>40</sup>

The top of the tower is of 18th-century brickwork, and the wooden south porch is modern.

<sup>14</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 463b. In the Surrey entry Osborne de Ou held the church of Farnham, which was worth £6, with 1 hide which he had in Hampshire (V.C.H. Surr. i, 300).

<sup>15</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274; Mins. Accts. bdle. 1141, no. 11; Acts of P.C. 1550-2, p. 359; Pat. 5 Edw. VI, pt. vi, m. 26; ibid. 4 & 5 Phil. and Mary, pt. vii, m. 19; Cal. S.P. Dom. 1603-10, p. 68; V.C.H. Surr. ii, 590.

<sup>16</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, m. 33.

<sup>17</sup> Kelly, Hants Dir.

<sup>18</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 463b.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Inq. p.m. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 24; 36 Hen. VI, no. 32; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xix, 89.

<sup>21</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1300-26, p. 200.

<sup>22</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, pp. 493, 524, 581. The custody of his lands was granted to John de Ravenesholme, the king's yeoman (Cal. Pat. 1330-4, p. 493).

<sup>23a</sup> It is possible however, that, on the death of John de Westcote the idiot, Pury passed immediately to his sister and co-heir Alice de Pageham and was not divided, like Badley (q.v.), between her and her sister Margery Fulquardeby.

<sup>24</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 133, 336; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Edw. III; Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 46; 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 31; 49 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 24; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 336; Inq. p.m. 13 Ric. II, no. 38; 13 Hen. IV, no. 22; 10 Hen. V, no. 26a; 12 Hen. VI, no. 26.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. 21 Hen. VI, no. 35; Cal. Pat. 1422-9, p. 41.

<sup>24a</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Edw. III.

<sup>25</sup> She was descended from Alice the wife of William de Colrethe, one of the sisters and co-heirs of John de Westcote the idiot.

<sup>25a</sup> Add. Chart. 17434.

<sup>26</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Hen. VI, no. 32. See Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xix, 89.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 24 Hen. VIII.

<sup>29</sup> Close, 19 Eliz. pt. xvi.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. 21 Eliz. pt. x.

<sup>31</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. 7 Jas. I, bdle. 12, no. 74. See Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccx, 72.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid. Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 39 Eliz.

<sup>33</sup> See Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), di, 46.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid.

<sup>35</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 1657, rot. 8.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. (K.S.B.), Hants, Trin. 30-31 Geo. II.

<sup>37</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 25 Geo. III.

<sup>38</sup> Local Information.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid.

<sup>40</sup> All this information is carefully set out on a board in the church; a very thoughtful and sensible proceeding, for which all visitors to the church ought to be most grateful.

BENTLEY LIBERTY

The east window of the chancel is of three trefoiled lights, with tracery of 15th-century character a good deal restored. It contains some good modern glass, two small figures in 15th-century white and gold glass, and representing the Annunciation.

The north arcade of the chancel is of two bays with circular column and semicircular responds, hollow-moulded bases, and square scalloped capitals, showing traces of colour decoration on that of the western respond. The arches are of two chamfered orders, the outer being segmental; they are 15th-century work, and evidently replaced the original arches when the clearstory was added.

The south arcade has circular moulded capitals and bases, with two-centred arches of two chamfered orders. In the western bay on each side is a low coped wall apparently of old stonework rebuilt. Over the arcades on each side are three clearstory windows of 15th-century date, each of two trefoiled lights under a square head; the fragments of 15th-century glass from the nave windows are set in them. At the south-east of the chancel is an arched opening through the wall; the jambs are square on the west side, but splayed eastwards on the other, making the opening wider towards the chapel. It appears to have served as a large squint commanding the altar in the chapel. To the east of this is a small recess without a drain, having a round head with a narrow border of zigzag ornament on the edge, apparently of no great age. The east window of the north chapel is a lancet. There is one north window, which is modern and has two trefoiled lights under a square head. To the east of this is a modern doorway with moulded jambs and two-centred head.

At the south-east is a 13th-century piscina recess with a modern basin. The two-centred arch has an edge-roll with a row of dog-tooth ornament on the soffit.

The east window of the south chapel is a lancet like that of the north chapel, and has been more or less restored. The window in the south wall has two trefoiled lights under a square head without a label, and is of 15th-century date. To the east of this is a 13th-century piscina which has a deeply-moulded trefoiled head. The bowl has been a moulded capital, and probably had a shaft beneath it; it is now broken off flush with the wall face.

To the west of the south window is a recess formed by blocking up a 13th-century doorway; the jambs and segmental head are chamfered, but it does not show on the outer face of the wall. The chancel arch is modern and has semicircular responds and an arch of two moulded orders. The western arches of both chapels are also modern, and are of two chamfered orders with square jambs.

The nave arcades are entirely new, of three bays with circular columns, splayed bases and moulded capitals, and moulded two-centred arches.

The two easternmost windows of the north aisle have tracery of late 14th-century date, of two trefoiled ogee-headed lights with a flowing quatrefoil over, and a moulded label, formerly in the west ends of the two chapels; the jambs and mullions are new. To the west of these is a third window, which is a modern copy of them.

The west windows of both aisles are modern, and have three cinquefoiled lights with tracery of 15th-century style.

The south-east window of the south aisle, already referred to, has three cinquefoiled lights with tracery and a square head and moulded label. The other south window is similar, but has only two lights.

Between these windows is the south doorway, which is modern and has moulded jambs and two-centred head. The tower arch is of two pointed orders, stop-chamfered, with square-edged hollow-chamfered abaci; it has a similar section to the jambs and is two-centred.

The west doorway of the tower is modern, but has old stones in the internal jambs.

The tower is of three stages, with large angle-buttresses, a modern two-light west window, and an old loop-light in the south face.

The belfry stage is of red brick with an embattled parapet, and in each face is a modern two-light window.

The chancel, chapels, and nave have old trussed rafter roofs, and the weathering of a steep pitched roof shows on the east wall of the tower. The altar rails are heavy 17th-century balusters, but all the wooden fittings are modern.

The square Purbeck marble bowl of the font is of late 12th-century date with shallow round-headed panels on each face. The stem and base, with four small flanking shafts, are modern.

On the south wall of the south chapel is a black marble slab to Margaret wife of George Windsor, who died 1631. Above the inscription are the kneeling figures of a man and a woman very well cut in outline on the marble. Above them is a shield of Windsor: Gules a saltire argent between twelve crosslets or, impaling Party gules and argent a saltire counter-changed. The inscription begins with the couplet:—

Hic Maria Deo, sanctis mulcedine Persis,
Hanna viro, miseris candida Phaebe jacet.

The tower contains six bells, the treble bearing the inscription, 'John Eyer gave twenty pound to meck mee a losty sound 1703.' This bell, with the second, fifth and tenor, is by Samuel Knight, and the third and fourth are by Richard Phelps, 1725.

The plate consists of a silver cup of 1790, two pewter plates now electro-plated and used as patens, and a silver flagon of 1789.

There are three books of registers:—(i) baptisms and burials, 1538 to 1716; marriages, 1538 to 1715; (ii) Duplicate register of burials, 1700 to 1729; (iii) baptisms, marriages and burials, 1716 to 1813.

Bentley was from time immemorial ADVOWSON a chapelry dependent on the church of Farnham (co. Surr.),<sup>41</sup> and was worth £10 in tithes to the rectory of Farnham in the 16th century.<sup>42</sup> A perpetual curate was first appointed at the beginning of the 19th century.<sup>43</sup>

The great and little tithes of Bentley and of the other dependent chapelries of Farnham, with right of nomination of a curate, were habitually leased out by the Archdeacon of Surrey for terms of three lives.<sup>44</sup> In 1840 Bishop Sumner introduced a Bill in the House of Lords to anticipate the falling-in of the leases and to restore the tithes to the several parishes, Farnham, Frensham, Seale, Elstead and Bentley, but the Bill was opposed and withdrawn.<sup>45</sup> As the leases gradually fell

<sup>41</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 92; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 32.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid.

<sup>43</sup> Inat. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>44</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 596.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. 597.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

in they were not renewed, and the tithes remained in the hands of the archdeacon.<sup>46</sup> After some controversy an arrangement was made in 1864 and confirmed by an Order in Council dated 29 November 1865, whereby Bentley took its own share of tithes undivided.<sup>47</sup> The rectory is in the gift of the Archdeacon of Surrey, and is now worth £628 yearly, with 30 acres of glebe and residence.

There is a Bible Christian chapel in Bentley.

In 1631 George Windsor gave for
CHARITIES the use of the poor about 6 acres. In 1905 a detached portion known as Swaynes was sold and the proceeds invested in £515 1s. 10d. consols, with the official trustees, who also hold £103 12s. 3d. like stock, arising from the sale of timber.

In 1841 Edmund Hambrough left a legacy for the poor, represented by £89 6s. 7d. consols. The income of these charities, amounting to about £24 a year, is applied together in doles to widows and aged people at Christmas and in grants of money.

The property known as the Church House was sold in 1890, and the net proceeds invested in £187 11s. 2d. consols, producing yearly £4 13s. 8d., which is applied towards the expenses of the church.

Isabella Schroder by will, proved at London 24 October 1863, bequeathed £5,641 15s. 9d. consols, the dividends, amounting to £141, to be applied for the benefit of the most deserving and necessitous inhabitants. The charity is regulated by a scheme of 15 August 1873, and in 1906 £120 was expended in the distribution of coal, £5 in clothing, and grants were made of money to the poor.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees.

<sup>46</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 597.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

THE HUNDRED OF HOLDSHOT

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

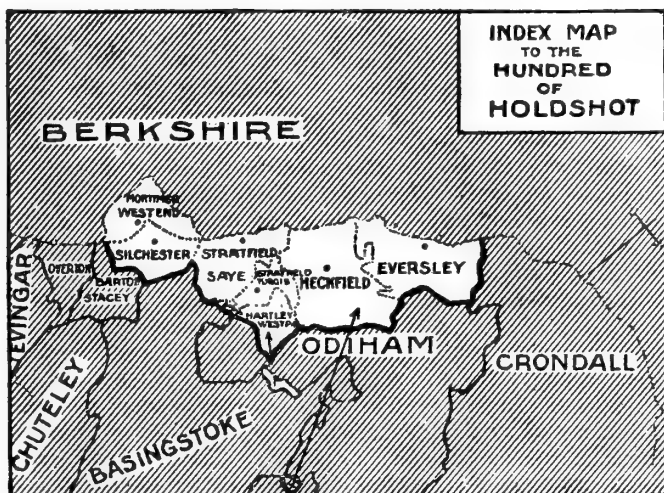

EVERSLEY
HARTLEY WESPALL
HECKFIELD
SILCHESTER

STRATFIELD MORTIMER (PART OF)
MORTIMER WEST END TITHING
STRATFIELDSAYE
STRATFIELD TURGIS

This list represents the extent of the hundred of Holdshot at the time of the Population Returns of 1831. Between 1831 and 1841 North Waltham and Woodmancott were added to the hundred,<sup>1</sup> and in 1894 the parishes of Mattingley and Mortimer West End were formed out of the parishes of Heckfield and Stratfield Mortimer respectively.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred comprised Hartley Wespall, Silchester, Stratfield-saye, and Stratfield Turgis, the tithing of Minley in the parish of Yateley, the tithing of Mattingley in the parish of Heckfield, and the greater part of the parish of Eversley.<sup>2</sup>

At this period the total assessment of the hundred was 30 hides, showing a decrease of 12 on the assessment of the hundred made before the Conquest. Great Bramshill in Eversley and the rest of Heckfield were in Bosmere Hundred,<sup>3</sup> while the Hampshire portion of Stratfield Mortimer was entered under Bountisborough Hundred.<sup>4</sup> By the 14th century the hundred had assumed its modern dimensions,<sup>5</sup> the only exception being that it still included the tithing of Minley.<sup>6</sup> In 1639 a witness in an Exchequer suit deposed that the tithing of Minley and the lands belonging to the farm of Minley lay within the hundred of Holdshot;<sup>7</sup> and another stated that 'he knew that for his time there had been a tithingman continued for the tithing of Minley as a distinct tithing from the tithings of Hawley and Yateley, that such tithingman was always elected at his majesty's court for the hundred of Holdshot and usually took up all waives and estrays and other royalties

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Pop. Ret. of 1831 and 1841.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472b, 483b, 490b, 492a, 495b, 496a, 503b, 505a.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 483b.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 491a.

<sup>5</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313, 331.

<sup>6</sup> Vide Exch. Lay Subs. R. Hants, bde. 175, no. 490.

<sup>7</sup> Exch. Dep. Hil. 14 & 15 Chas. I, 13.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

happening within the tithing of Minley as lying within his majesty's hundred of Holdshot, and that the tithingman of Minley was sometimes amerced at the said court for not appearing there.'<sup>8</sup> By 1831, however, Minley was reckoned as part of Yateley, and was therefore returned with the hundred of Crondall.<sup>9</sup>

Until 1228 the hundred of Holdshot was one of the five out-hundreds belonging to the royal manor of Basingstoke.<sup>10</sup> Its separation is indicated by the wording of the charter of Henry III, which in that year granted only the manor of Basingstoke with the in-hundred to the good men of the town of Basingstoke at a fee-farm rent.<sup>11</sup> Holdshot being a royal hundred came under the Parliamentary Survey of the Crown property in the time of the Commonwealth. From this survey it appears that the courts leet and lawday for the hundred were held under a certain oak called 'The Hundred Oak' in Heckfield at Michaelmas and Hocktide.<sup>12</sup>

EVERSLEY

Everslea, Evreslei (xi cent.); Everslegh (xiii cent.).

Eversley is a village and large scattered parish situated  $5\frac{1}{2}$  miles north from Winchester station on the London and South Western Railway. The boundary on the north is the River Blackwater, so named from the tinge given to it by the peat moors through which it passes. It rises near Farnham, and forms the boundary first between Hampshire and Surrey and then between Hampshire and Berkshire, until about 2 miles north of Bramshill it turns off to join the Loddon. The elevation of the parish ranges from about 150 ft. above the ordnance datum in the north by the river to over 300 ft. above the ordnance datum on the heaths and moorland in the south. Of the 5,559 acres which make up the total area of the parish 47 acres are land covered by water, 1,293½ acres arable land, 819½ acres permanent grass, and 543 acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> The rest is taken up by open commons and heaths. When Charles Kingsley became curate of Eversley in 1842 the parish was mostly common land, divided into three hamlets, each standing in its own little green surrounded by the moorland, with young forests of self-sown fir-trees cropping up in every direction. The population was very scattered, consisting, in the words of Mrs. Kingsley, of 'Heth croppers' from time immemorial and poachers by instinct and heritage.<sup>2</sup> In a letter written to his future wife from Eversley Rectory on 14 July 1842, Kingsley thus describes his first impressions of the parish in which he laboured for thirty-three years: 'The view is beautiful. The ground slopes upward from the windows to a sunk fence and road without banks or hedges, and then rises in the furze hill in the drawing, which hill is perfectly beautiful in light and shade and colour. Behind the acacia in the lawn you get the first glimpse of the fir-forests and moors, of which five-sixths of my parish consist. Those delicious self-sown firs!'<sup>3</sup> When Kingsley first came to Eversley the parish was in a very neglected state, and owing to the habit of the rector, who, for quite trifling reasons, would send the clerk to the church door at eleven to inform the few who attended that there would be no service, the ale-houses were full on Sunday and the church empty.<sup>4</sup> The farmers' sheep when pasture was scarce were turned into the neglected churchyard. Holy Communion was celebrated only three times a year, and the communicants were few.<sup>5</sup> The alms were collected in an old wooden saucer. A cracked kitchen basin inside the font held the water for Holy Baptism; and at the altar, covered by a moth-eaten cloth, stood one old broken chair.<sup>6</sup> Kingsley immediately set to work vigorously to remedy the state of neglect, and in a short time his efforts met with success. He remained as curate until 1844, living throughout that period at Eversley Cross, in a humble cottage in the corner of a sunny green. In that year, the living falling vacant, he was presented to the rectory by Sir John Cope in answer to a petition from the parishioners. Here he remained until his death in 1875, and lies buried in the churchyard of the church he loved so well.

The village of Eversley proper lies near the river in the very north of the parish. The church of St. Mary, the rectory, and Church Farm, are situated some distance to the south, on the borders of Eversley Upper Common. Warbrook House, south of the village, which was built by John James in 1724, is the property of Mr. Augustus Stapleton, and is at present occupied by Lady Glass. Sir John Nares, a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, who died in 1786, at one time resided here, and his elder brother, James Nares, the musician and a doctor of music, gave the name of Eversley to one of the psalm-tunes composed by him. A little to the west of Warbrook House, on the edge of Bramshill Common, are the modern residences of Moorcote, Gaddeshill, and

<sup>8</sup> Exch. Dep. Hil. 14 & 15 Chas. I, 13.

<sup>9</sup> Pop. Ret. of 1831.

<sup>10</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 220.

<sup>11</sup> Baigent and Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 236.

<sup>12</sup> Parl. Surv. Hants, no. 6.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Charles Kingsley, His Letters and Memories of His Life, 73.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 75.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 123.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 78.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid.

Wixenford. There is a small cluster of buildings at Eversley Cross in the east of the parish. The Chequers Inn has some well-carved 15th-century beams. Near Up Green is Fir Grove House, which was built about 1736 by Mr. Wadham Wyndham, who resided here until his death in 1779. The house was much improved and enlarged by Lady Cope, the widow of Sir Denzil Cope, bart., who lived here till her death in 1840; and by the Right Hon. Thomas Erskine, the friend and counsellor of Kingsley, who resided here from 1852 till his death in 1864. Bramshill House, the seat of Sir Anthony Cope, bart., J.P.—said to be the scene of the Mistletoe Bough tragedy<sup>7</sup>—is a large mansion in a well-wooded park of 1,000 acres, which covers the south-western portion of the parish of Eversley, and extends into the adjoining parish of Mattingley. Since its formation in 1347 the park has been at various times much enlarged and altered. The deer were done away with by Sir Denzil Cope, bart., between 1806 and 1812. Kingsley was a great admirer of the firs<sup>8</sup> in the parish, and thus describes them in his Winter Garden: 'A green wilderness of self-sown firs. There they stand in thousands, the sturdy Scots, colonizing the desert in spite of frost and gales and barrenness, and clustering together too as Scotsmen always do abroad, little and big, every one under his neighbour's lee, according to the good old proverb of their native-land, "Caw me and I'll caw thee." I respect them, those Scotch firs. I delight in their forms from James the First's gnarled giants up in Bramshill Park—the only place in England where a painter can learn what Scotch firs are—down to the little green pyramids which stand up out of the heaths, triumphant over tyranny and the strange woes of an untoward youth.'<sup>9</sup>

The soil is gravel and loam, and the subsoil gravel. The chief crops are wheat, oats, and barley. Eversley Commons were inclosed by authority of the General Inclosure Acts in 1868.

Among place-names occurring in extant records are the following: The Hammes, Gillicroft, Alisotescroft, Mullemede, Wadebroke, and Brendemore<sup>10</sup> (xiv cent.); Akyr and Glassedone<sup>11</sup> (xv cent.); Baker's Lane<sup>12</sup> (xvi cent.); Hall Lands, Coggs, Russells, Flaxlande Meade, Norlandes,<sup>13</sup> The Grove or Edlyns, Patricksford,<sup>14</sup> Lipscombe, Pennyplott, Nashlin Feild,<sup>15</sup> Steadcroft, and Baker's Hates<sup>15a</sup> (xvii cent.).

The manor of EVERSLEY for a considerable period was held as an alod for four manors by four freemen of King Edward the Confessor, but towards the close of his reign that king transferred the overlordship to the abbey of St. Peter, Westminster, granting to it sac and soc, toll and team, infangentheof, flemenescirmit, and other liberties within the manor, and expressly commanding the four freemen to be in all things obedient to the minster.<sup>16</sup> This charter was confirmed by William the Conqueror,<sup>17</sup> and at the time of the Domesday Survey Eversley, then assessed at four hides, was in the possession of the abbey.<sup>18</sup> In 1280 the Abbot of Westminster, as overlord of Eversley, was summoned to show by what warrant he claimed to have the return of the king's writs, gallows, tumbrial, and the assize of bread and ale in Eversley, and at the same time to give reasons why his tenants of Eversley did not make suit at the king's hundred court of Holdshot.<sup>19</sup> The result is not given on the roll, but of course the abbot's warranty lay in the charter of Edward the Confessor. The overlordship continued with Westminster Abbey as late at least as the end of the 15th century, the manor being held by the annual payment of a yearling sparrowhawk.<sup>20</sup> By the beginning of the 13th century the four freemen had been succeeded in the actual ownership of Eversley by William de Wauton, who in 1237 made an agreement with his tenant William Banastre about the mill-pond in Eversley.<sup>21</sup> In 1251 Gilbert de Eversley was holding a hide of land in Eversley of William de Wauton,<sup>22</sup> perhaps identical with the William de Wauton who, described as son and heir of Amisius de Wauton, sold the manor and advowson of Eversley for twenty-five marks to Alan de Hagheman or Haweman and Amice his wife in 1276.<sup>23</sup> Three years later Alan and Amice granted the reversion to John de Hagheman,<sup>24</sup> who as lord of the manor presented a rector during the episcopacy of Henry Woodlock (1305–16).<sup>25</sup> He died probably in the king's service abroad about 1320,<sup>26</sup> and was succeeded by his son Nicholas de Hagheman, the rector of Eversley,<sup>27</sup> who in 1336 granted the reversion of the manor and advowson to Thomas de Bradeston and Isabel his wife,<sup>28</sup> and fifteen years later gave up all his right in return for an annuity of twenty marks and an annual payment of five cart-loads of hay at the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula.<sup>29</sup> In 1336 Thomas de Bradeston obtained a charter from Edward III, granting him free warren in his demesne lands of Eversley, a market

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.
Gules the crossed keys or of St. Peter.

<sup>7</sup> The late Sir William Henry Cope, bart., wrote a pamphlet on the subject.

<sup>8</sup> These are of two sorts, 'Pinus montana' and 'Pinus sylvestris.' One supposition is that Lord Zouche, who had been ambassador in Scotland before the accession of James VI to the throne of England, introduced them. Many of the fir-trees exceed in measurement those given in the Trans. of the Highland Soc. (1865). The silver firs are supposed to have been planted by James I. Probably the seedlings were presented by him to Lord Zouche (ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope).

<sup>9</sup> Kingsley, My Winter Garden.

<sup>10</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 41.

<sup>11</sup> Close, 2 Hen. V, m. 11 d.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 34 Eliz. pt. xxvi, m. 1.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 45 Eliz. pt. iii.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 4 Chas. I, pt. iii, no. 14.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. 13 Chas. I, pt. vi, no. 4.

<sup>15a</sup> These two names occur in entries in the register for the years 1625 and 1626. The entry for 1625 states that Thomas Bodham died of the plague, and was buried in a close of his father's called Steadcroft 20 May 1625. That for 1626 states that Richard Philp, his wife, and son Thomas died of the plague and were buried down by Baker's Hates (ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope).

<sup>16</sup> Cott. MS. Faust. A iii, fol. 105, 105 d.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. fol. 56 d, 57.

<sup>18</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472b.

<sup>19</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 772.

<sup>20</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 61; 48 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 10; 35 Hen. VI, no. 20; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 59.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Hen. III.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Hen. III, no. 60.

<sup>23</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 191.

<sup>24</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 7 Edw. I.

<sup>25</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 72 d.

<sup>26</sup> In October 1320 John de Hagheman going beyond the seas had letters nominating Alan de Mount his attorney for one year (Pat. 14 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 15).

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 24.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 10 Edw. III.

<sup>29</sup> Close, 25 Edw. III, m. 19 d.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

every Monday, a yearly fair on the feast of St. Luke the Evangelist and the two days before and following, as also licence to inclose 300 acres of wood and pasture in Eversley, and to make a park thereof.<sup>30</sup> He died in 1359, leaving as his heir his grandson Thomas,<sup>31</sup> who at his death in 1374 left an infant daughter Elizabeth to succeed him.<sup>32</sup> Elizabeth brought the manor in marriage to her husband, Sir Walter de la Pole, lord of Sawston, Meldreth, and Trumpington (co. Camb.), who died seised in 1434.<sup>33</sup> Their only daughter Margaret, who had married Thomas Ingaldesthorp, had died in 1426,<sup>34</sup> and the manor consequently passed to their grandson Edmund Ingaldesthorp,<sup>35</sup> who was afterwards knighted, and died in 1456, his heir being his daughter Isabel, aged fifteen and more.<sup>36</sup> Isabel married (1) Sir John Nevill, who was created Marquess of Montagu in 1470, and was slain at the battle of Barnet a year later; and (2) Sir William Norris of Rycote (co. Oxon.),<sup>37</sup> and died seised of the manor of Eversley in 1476.<sup>38</sup> Her son and heir by her first husband—George—had been created Duke of Bedford by Edward IV in 1470,<sup>39</sup> but, having no means of sustaining his honours in consequence of the forfeiture of his paternal inheritance, was degraded from the peerage by Act of Parliament in 1477. He died without issue six years later,<sup>40</sup> and his estates were divided among his five sisters and co-heirs,<sup>41</sup> Eversley falling to Lucy, who married (1) Sir Thomas Fitz William of Aldwark (co. York),<sup>42</sup> and (2) Sir Anthony Browne.<sup>43</sup> By her first husband she left issue Sir William Fitz William, High Admiral of England, who was created Earl of Southampton in 1537,<sup>44</sup> and died at Newcastle on Tyne in 1542 while leading the van of the English army into Scotland. By his will dated 10 September 1542 the earl left most of his estates, including Eversley, to his half-brother Sir Anthony Browne,<sup>45</sup> who died in 1548, leaving a son and heir Sir Anthony Browne.<sup>46</sup> The latter was created Viscount Montagu on 2 September 1554,<sup>47</sup> and joined with his wife Magdalene in selling the manor, park, and advowson of Eversley to Deodatus Staverton in 1582.<sup>48</sup> Deodatus soon afterwards engaged in a dispute with his customary tenants of Eversley concerning the woods growing upon their tenements, the payment of fines, and other customs—a dispute which was ended in 1586 by an award of the Court of Chancery<sup>49</sup>—and died in 1590. By his will, dated 8 April 1590, he left the manor to his brother Thomas Staverton,<sup>50</sup> who before 1616 had been succeeded by another Deodatus Staverton.<sup>51</sup> The latter presented a rector in 1634,<sup>52</sup> and was followed by Richard Staverton, who dealt with the manor by recovery in 1647.<sup>53</sup> In 1669 Sir Andrew Henley, bart., of Bramshill, purchased the manor from William Lucy and Anne his wife, daughter of Deodatus Staverton, and heiress of her brother Francis,<sup>54</sup> and from this date Eversley has followed the same descent as Bramshill (q.v. infra).

STAVERTON. Argent a chevron between three water-bougets vert.

There were two mills worth 105*d.* in Eversley at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>55</sup> but only one is mentioned in the assignation of dower to Ella de Bradeston in 1374.<sup>56</sup> This was in ruins in 1435,<sup>57</sup> and after that there is no further mention of a mill in connexion with the manor.

A free fishery was appurtenant to the manor as early as 1282, in which year John de Hagheman, lord of the manor of Eversley, summoned Peter Husee and John his brother for taking fish worth £10 in his waters of Eversley.<sup>58</sup> The name of this fishery was Doddbrook, as appears from an inquisition taken in 1456, and its annual value was then 16*d.*<sup>59</sup>

As has been stated above, Edward III granted a market every Monday, and a yearly fair on the feast of St. Luke the Evangelist and the two days before and after, to Thomas de Bradeston in his manor of Eversley in 1336.<sup>60</sup> In 1795 fairs were held for cattle and toys in Eversley on 16 May and 18 October,<sup>61</sup> and they were not finally discontinued till about 1835. Indeed, some few beasts were sold as recently as 1850. Of the market no trace has existed within the memory of man.<sup>62</sup>

The bailiwick of the forest of Eversley was from time immemorial held by the ancestors of the Gilbert de Eversley<sup>63</sup> who died in 1251.<sup>64</sup> With the bailiwick of Pamber it was worth four marks yearly, and

<sup>30</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. III, m. 23.

<sup>31</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 61. His widow Agnes held one-third of the manor in dower, and died ten years later (ibid. 43 Edw. III, pt. i [1st nos.], no. 18).

<sup>32</sup> Ibid. 48 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 10. In the same year one-third of the manor was assigned to his widow Ella in dower (ibid. [2nd nos.], no. 41).

<sup>33</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Hen. VI, no. 33. Elizabeth predeceased her husband, but the exact date of her death is unknown. She was alive in 1414 (Close, 2 Hen. V, m. 11 d, 12 d).

<sup>34</sup> Blomefield, Hist. of Norf. vii, 126-7.

<sup>35</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Hen. VI, no. 33.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. 35 Hen. VI, no. 20.

<sup>37</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, v, 339.

<sup>38</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 59.

<sup>39</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 295.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid.

<sup>41</sup> Blomefield, Hist. of Norf. vii, 128.

<sup>42</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 192.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. v, 339. <sup>44</sup> Ibid. vii, 192.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxx, 16.

<sup>46</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 994, no. 2.

<sup>47</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, v, 339.

<sup>48</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 24 Eliz.

<sup>49</sup> Chan. Enr. Dec. R. 62, no. 10. It was decreed that the customary tenants and their heirs should have all the woods, underwoods, and trees on their lands, and that it was lawful for them to dig turf in the waste grounds, build hog-sties on the waste grounds, and dam up any water on the common. The fines were fixed at 1*d.* for licence to demise customary and copyhold lands, 2*s.* 6*d.* on any surrender, death, &c., and 1*s.* 8*d.* heriot (ibid.).

<sup>50</sup> P.C.C. Will, 34 Drury. Edith widow of Deodatus died nine years later (ibid. 58 Kidd, 30 Wallop).

<sup>51</sup> In 1616 the two messuages and lands in Eversley of which Thomas Cresswell had died seised in 1607 were stated to be held of Deodatus Staverton as of his manor of Eversley in socage (Chan. Misc. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], file 684, no. 11).

<sup>52</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>53</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 23 Chas. I, rot. 81.

<sup>54</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope. All their estate in Eversley was not included in the sale, for certain portions named in the deed are expressly excepted. The Staverton family continued to reside in the parish till the death of the last member in 1724. Deodatus Staverton, citizen and haberdasher of London, sold 'The Warren and the Warren House and the stock of coneyes there' to Sir John Cope in 1718 (ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope).

<sup>55</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472b.

<sup>56</sup> Inq. p.m. 48 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 41.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 12 Hen. VI, no. 33.

<sup>58</sup> De Banco R. 47, m. 128 d.

<sup>59</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Hen. VI, no. 20.

<sup>60</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. III, m. 23.

<sup>61</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 253.

<sup>62</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>63</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Hen. III, no. 52. Thus in 1167 it was in the possession of another Gilbert de Eversley (Pipe R. 13 Hen. II [Pipe R. Soc.], 192).

<sup>64</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Hen. III, no. 60.

was held by an annual payment of 18s. to the constable of Windsor Castle,<sup>65</sup> this rent proceeding from a dairy-farm in Eversley. Gilbert was succeeded by his son Walter de Eversley,<sup>66</sup> who granted the bailiwick of the forestership of Pamber and Eversley to John de St. John the elder in 1298.<sup>67</sup> John de St. John son and heir of the latter granted it for life to his son Hugh in 1324,<sup>68</sup> but soon afterwards the forest was disafforested, and the bailiwick ceased to exist. The dairy-farm from which the rent was paid<sup>69</sup> was probably in the possession of Nicholas de Hageman, lord of the manor of Eversley, in 1335, for in that year Nicholas with others rescued seventeen cows which had been seized by the king for £4 arrears of the rent.<sup>70</sup>

There are two manors in BRAMSHILL (Bromeselle, xi cent.; Bromeshull, xiii cent.; Bromysill, Bromley Hill, xvi cent.; Bramsell, Bramshall, xvii cent.), called respectively LITTLE BRAMSHILL and GREAT BRAMSHILL. The former, which in spite of its name is the more important of the two, consists of the park and the common land which joins it.<sup>71</sup> It was held of Edward the Confessor as two manors by Alwi and Elsi, and at the time of the Domesday Survey was held with the king's manor of Swallowfield (co. Berks.) by Gilbert de Breteville.<sup>72</sup> In 1167 it was in the possession of Henry de Bramshill,<sup>73</sup> probably either father or grandfather of the Henry de Bramshill who in 1242 was stated to be holding half a knight's fee in Bramshill of the heirs of William Turvill who held of the honour of Warwick.<sup>74</sup> The manor was held of the Earl of Warwick as late as 1361,<sup>75</sup> but in 1489 was stated to be held of the king in chief.<sup>76</sup> In 1306 John Foxley and Constance his wife, who was possibly the heiress of the Bramshills, were seised of property in Bramshill—probably the manor—in that year obtaining licence from Henry Woodlock, Bishop of Winchester, to have the divine office celebrated in their chapel of Bramshill during Easter week.<sup>77</sup> In 1317 John Foxley obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Bramshill and Hazeley, which were within the metes of the royal forests of Pamber and Eversley,<sup>78</sup> and died seised of a messuage and 180 acres of arable land with appurtenances in Bramshill in 1324, leaving a son and heir Thomas,<sup>79</sup> who, however, did not succeed to the estate until the death of his mother in 1333.<sup>80</sup> Thomas obtained licence to impark 2,500 acres of land and wood out of his several soil in Bramshill and Hazeley in 1347,<sup>81</sup> and died seised of the manor and park of Bramshill in 1360, being followed by his son Sir John Foxley.<sup>82</sup> Sir John died in November 1378, and was buried in the chapel of All Saints in the south aisle of Bray Church.<sup>83</sup> By his will dated at Bramshill on 5 November 1378 he bequeathed 3s. 4d. to the fabric of Eversley Church, 3s. 4d. to the fabric of Bramshill Chapel, and to its altar a priestly vestment with ornaments and a chasuble of white silk with other things pertaining thereto.<sup>84</sup> He left two daughters by Maud his first wife, namely Katherine wife of John Warbleton and Margery wife of Robert Bullock, but he also had three illegitimate sons—Thomas, Richard, and John—by Joan Martin, whom he subsequently married.<sup>85</sup> Thomas succeeded to the manor, but his right was not undisputed, for in 1412 William Warbleton, grandson of Katherine, brought an action against him for intruding in his manor of Bramshill,<sup>86</sup> and it was probably with the intention of substantiating his claim that Thomas obtained a quitclaim of the manor from Margery Hertington, daughter of Margery Bullock, in 1429.<sup>87</sup> Thomas died in 1436, and was buried near his ancestors in the chapel of All Saints, Bray.<sup>88</sup> On his death Bramshill seems to have passed to his only daughter Elizabeth wife of Sir Thomas Uvedale of Wickham, for in 1467 William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, in consequence of the inefficiency of the chapel of Bramshill, issued a sequestration of its fruits directed to the rural dean of Basingstoke and Sir Thomas Uvedale, probably as representative in right of his wife of the original donors.<sup>89</sup> It is probable that Thomas soon afterwards sold the manor, for he was not in possession in 1474,<sup>90</sup> and Thomas Rogers of Beenharn (co. Berks.) died seised in 1487, leaving as his heir his daughter Elizabeth wife of William Essex.<sup>91</sup> William and Elizabeth conveyed the manor in 1499 to Giles Lord Daubeney, chamberlain to Henry VII,<sup>92</sup> who died in 1508 and was succeeded by his son and heir Henry Lord Daubeney.<sup>93</sup> In 1517 Henry settled Bramshill upon himself and his wife on the occasion of his marriage,<sup>94</sup> but subsequently sold the manor to Henry VIII.<sup>95</sup> From Henry VIII it passed to

FOXLEY. Gules two bars argent.

<sup>65</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Hen. III, no. 52.

<sup>66</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 105.

<sup>67</sup> Pat. 25 Edw. I, pt. ii, m. 9; 26 Edw. I, m. 27.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 14; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 284.

<sup>69</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rec. Com.), ii, 717.

<sup>70</sup> Pat. 9 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 12 d.

<sup>71</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>72</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 495b. This does not agree with the identification of Mr. J. H. Round, who, following Moody, refers Gilbert de Breteville's holding to Great Bramshill and Hugh de Port's holding to Little Bramshill. But the fact that Little Bramshill comprises the Park points to the identification of Hugh de Port's estate with Great Bramshill, for Thomas de Foxley obtained licence to impark land in Bramshill (i.e. Little Bramshill) in 1347, at which date the Brayboefs were holding a fee in Bramshill (i.e. Great Bramshill) of Edmund de St. John, the descendant of Hugh de Port.

<sup>73</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 190.

<sup>74</sup> Inq. p.m. 26 Hen. III, no. 22. See also Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234a. Mr. Round points out that this overlordship of the Earls of Warwick has to be accounted for, and suggests that it may be due to their having acquired the adjacent Swallowfield in 1166 (Red Bk. of Exch. 326), for this manor had been held with Swallowfield in 1086.

<sup>75</sup> Inq. p.m. 24 Edw. III, no. 55.

<sup>76</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), v, 35.

<sup>77</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 59.

<sup>78</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. II, m. 12.

<sup>79</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. II, no. 38. See also Close, 19 Edw. II, m. 34.

<sup>80</sup> Charles Kerry, Hist. and Antiq. of the Hund. of Bray, 104.

<sup>81</sup> Pat. 21 Edw. III, pt. iv, m. 19.

<sup>82</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 55.

<sup>83</sup> Charles Kerry, op. cit. 104.

<sup>84</sup> Arch. Journ. xv, 268.

<sup>85</sup> Charles Kerry, op. cit. 104.

<sup>86</sup> De Banco R. Mich. 13 Hen. IV, m. 277.

<sup>87</sup> Close, 8 Hen. VI, m. 24 d.

<sup>88</sup> Charles Kerry, op. cit. 106.

<sup>89</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 34 d.

<sup>90</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. IV, no. 26.

<sup>91</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), v, 35.

<sup>92</sup> Close, 14 Hen. VII, no. 24. See also Feet of F. Hants Trin. 21 Hen. VII; De Banco R. East. 21 Hen. VII, m. 5.

<sup>93</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iii, 32.

<sup>94</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, ii (2), 3479. In 1514 he had obtained a quitclaim of the manor from Sir Leonard Grey and Elizabeth his wife, probably widow of William Essex (Feet of F. Hants, East. 6 Hen. VIII; Pat. 7 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 22).

<sup>95</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. iii, m. 27.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Edward VI, who in 1547 granted it with the park to William Paulet, Lord St. John,<sup>96</sup> who was created Marquess of Winchester on 12 October 1551 and died seised in 1572.<sup>97</sup> On the death of John second Marquess of Winchester four years later, Bramshill passed to his son William, third marquess, who in 1595 granted a ninety-nine years' lease of the lodge, park, and lands of Bramshill to William Paulet alias Lambert of Basingstoke, his eldest illegitimate son, who was afterwards knighted and lived at Edington (co. Wilts.).<sup>98</sup> William fourth Marquess of Winchester succeeded his father in 1598, and two years later sold the manor to Sir Stephen Thornhurst of Agnes Court or Aghne Court (co. Kent) and Mary his wife for £1,650.<sup>99</sup> Sir Stephen mortgaged the property for £1,000 in 1602,<sup>100</sup> and three years later sold it to Edward Lord Zouche of Harringworth,<sup>101</sup> a patron of learning and science and one of the best horticulturists of the time. Almost immediately after the purchase Lord Zouche built the present mansion<sup>102</sup> in place of the house built by Thomas Foxley between 1351 and 1360,<sup>103</sup> and proceeded to entertain lavishly at his new seat. James I stayed at Bramshill in 1620,<sup>104</sup> and the next year George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, went down to Bramshill to consecrate a chapel for Lord Zouche.<sup>105</sup> The archbishop employed his leisure time in hunting in the park, and while engaged in this pursuit accidentally wounded a keeper, Peter Hawkins by name, so seriously that he bled to death in less than an hour.<sup>106</sup> James I on first hearing of the accident said that none but a fool or a knave would think the worse of him for such an accident, the like of which had once nearly happened to himself,<sup>107</sup> but such an outcry was raised by the Puritan party that the king was forced to suspend the archbishop from all his episcopal and metropolitanical functions, and to order a commission to examine and report on the matter.<sup>108</sup> The commission, influenced by the arguments of the Bishop of Winchester, decided in the archbishop's favour,<sup>109</sup> and on 20 November 1621 the king pardoned him and restored him to his position,<sup>110</sup> but in spite of this the bishops elect were so unwilling to receive consecration from his bloodstained hands that Abbot was obliged to commission other bishops to consecrate for him.<sup>111</sup> It is said that from that day to PAULET, Marquess of Winchester. Sable three swords set pilewise with their hilts or.

ZOUCHE, Lord Harringworth. Gules besants and a quarter ermine.

the close of his life the archbishop observed a monthly fast on Tuesday, the day of his unhappy deer-shooting, and that he settled a pension of £20 a year on the widow of the keeper.<sup>112</sup>

Lord Zouche died without male issue in 1625,<sup>113</sup> and in accordance with his will Bramshill passed to his cousin Sir Edward Zouche, 'he being of my blood and the son of him I loved best in my life, except the Lord Gray of Wilton.'<sup>114</sup> From Sir Edward Zouche the manor passed to his son and heir James Zouche, who sold it for £12,000 to Randal MacDonnell, second Earl of Antrim, in 1637.<sup>115</sup> Some interesting references to this purchase occur in Archbishop Laud's correspondence with the celebrated Earl of Strafford. Writing on 28 August 1637 the archbishop says, 'Lord Antrim hath now purchased the house which my Lord Zouche built at Bramshill near Hartley Row with some little land to it, and a great pennyworth he had.' 'I think,' he continues, 'the reason of the purchase was the unhealthfulness of Newhall in Essex, which especially at this time of the year is very aguish.'<sup>116</sup> In another letter, dated 11 November 1637, the archbishop writes, 'The truth is Bramsell was purchased for the unwholesomeness of Newhall. . . . After the death of my Lord of Antrim the father, my lady duchess of Buckingham,<sup>117</sup> disliking the air at Newhall, as she had reason, spake with me about Bramsell . . . so I referred her to my young Zouche, the owner of it, so the thing went on.'<sup>118</sup> Apparently the earl and countess found the air of Bramshill no more to their taste than the Newhall air, for they did not retain their purchase more than three years, selling the whole of the Bramshill property in 1640 to Robert Henley.<sup>119</sup> From him it passed to his son Andrew, who was created a baronet on 20 June 1660 and died in 1675, being succeeded by his son and heir Sir Robert Henley.<sup>120</sup> Sir Robert, who is said to have mortgaged his estates for £20,000, died unmarried in 1689.<sup>121</sup> His brother and heir Sir Andrew Henley was equally extravagant, and fell so deeply into debt that he was forced to part with all his property, the Bramshill house and estates being sold by his representatives and creditors to Sir John Cope for £21,500 in HENLEY, Baronet. Azure a lion argent having a crown or within a border argent with eight roundels gules thereon.

COPE, Baronet. Argent a chevron azure between three roses gules having stalks and leaves vert with three fleurs-de-lis or upon the chevron.

<sup>96</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. iii, m. 27.

<sup>97</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125.

<sup>98</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville

Cope.

<sup>99</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 43 Eliz.; Close, 43 Eliz. pt. xi.

<sup>100</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xiv.

<sup>101</sup> Cope, Hist. of Bramshill, 11.

<sup>102</sup> Ibid.

<sup>103</sup> W. Lyon, Chron. of Finchampstead.

<sup>104</sup> Cal. S.P. Dom. 1619-23, p. 176.

<sup>105</sup> Ibid. 279. <sup>106</sup> Ibid. <sup>107</sup> Ibid.

<sup>108</sup> Ibid. 295.

<sup>110</sup> Ibid. 311.

<sup>112</sup> Cope, op. cit. 12.

<sup>113</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, viii, 225-6.

By his first wife he had two daughters: (1) Elizabeth, who married Sir William Tate and died in 1617; (2) Mary, who married first Charles Leighton, and secondly William Connard (ibid.). In 1625-6 Mary and William quitclaimed the manor to Hugh May and others (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 1 Chas. I).

<sup>109</sup> Ibid. 308.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid. 308.

<sup>114</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, viii, 225-6.

<sup>115</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 13 Chas. I; Close, 13 Chas. I, pt. vi, no. 4.

<sup>116</sup> Strafford Letters, ii, 100.

<sup>117</sup> She married the second Earl of Antrim in 1635.

<sup>118</sup> Strafford Letters, ii, 131-2.

<sup>119</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Chas. I.

<sup>120</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, iii, 69-70.

<sup>121</sup> Ibid.

EVERSLEY : BRAMSHILL HOUSE : SOUTH FRONT

1700.<sup>122</sup> Sir John succeeded to the baronetcy in 1721 and died in 1749, being followed by his son and heir Sir Monnoux Cope,<sup>123</sup> who died in 1763 and was succeeded by his son and heir Sir John Mordaunt Cope.<sup>124</sup> Sir John died unmarried in 1779, and the baronetcy and estates passed to his cousin Sir Richard Cope, who died without issue in 1806, and was followed by his nephew Sir Denzil Cope.<sup>125</sup> Sir Denzil died without issue in 1812, and his brother Sir John Cope, well known as a master of foxhounds and owner of celebrated horses, held the baronetcy and the Bramshill estates until his death without children in 1851, when they passed to his fifth cousin and heir Sir William Henry Cope.<sup>126</sup> Sir Anthony Cope, third but first surviving son of Sir William, is the present lord of the manor of Bramshill, having succeeded his father on his death in 1892.<sup>127</sup>

Bramshill House as it now stands is an interesting and somewhat unusual example of early 17th-century English domestic architecture. Traces remain, how-north-east front, and there is one mediaeval window looking into the court. The 17th-century rebuilding transformed the house into one of six wings, those to the north-east and south-west being on the lines of the old wings, and those to the north-west and south-east built within the old court; while two new wings, continuations of the old side wings, were projected from the south-west wing, forming with it three sides of a second court. In the 18th century these wings were almost completely destroyed, as already noted.

This process of development of the present house from an older one can only be set down as a suggestion which lacks definite proof. The plan, however, of a four-square building set round a court, and having rectangular towers forming its angles, is a very probable one for the recorded date, c. 1360, and the analogy of the late 14th-century north-country houses, Bolton Castle, Lumley Castle, Snape Castle, &c., is worth pointing out.

The main entrance-front faces south-west and has a central block flanked by two projecting wings, and ever, mainly in the plan, of a house some hundred years earlier in date, while the 17th-century plan was reduced by two wings and altered in a third at a date early in the 18th century. The house is thus of three main periods, about a hundred years apart, and there have been a few minor structural alterations in modern times, beside the necessary repairs.

BRAMSHILL HOUSE: SOUTH-EAST FRONT

The earliest house, recorded to have been built by Thomas Foxley, c. 1360, would appear to have been four-square with angle towers, set round a courtyard, the inner lines of which are perhaps represented by the external walls of the existing north-west and south-east wings. The only trace of the external walls of this earlier house is to be found in the tower-like wing at the south angle of the house, the lower part of which has walls considerably thicker than those in other parts of the building. An external entrance, earlier than the present house, also remains, apparently in situ, on the having a projecting bay, while on the ground floor is a loggia linking up this bay with two smaller ones set in the angles between the main block and the wings. The central bay is very elaborate in character. At the ground level it is led up to by a broad flight of steps, and in the middle is a semicircular archway, giving entrance to the loggia, with carved voussoirs and spandrels and a grotesque keystone. This is flanked on either hand by a pair of fantastic fluted and panelled baluster pilasters, surmounted by a complete entablature and standing upon pedestals. Superimposed upon this is a second and a third order equally fantastic and even more ornate. In all cases the pilasters are diminished downwards, are square in plan, and have varied capitals of extraordinary detail. The uppermost order is capped by an elaborate pierced ornament in the form of a circle containing two plumes or scrolls flanking a central plume bearing

<sup>122</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 11 Will III; Close, 12 Will. III, pt. ix, no. 5.

<sup>123</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, i, 37-8.
<sup>124</sup> Ibid.

<sup>125</sup> Ibid.

<sup>126</sup> Ibid.

<sup>127</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

a coronet. Over the archway on the first floor is a semicircular projecting oriel with a heavily-moulded corbel and a mullioned and transomed window of five lights and three stages. The mouldings of the pedestal and entablatures of the first and second orders are carried round this, and it is surmounted by an elaborate pierced parapet. The uppermost order has a third pilaster introduced into the centre, and in the two bays thus formed are two round-headed sunk panels with a modern or late plaster backing, and between the pairs of pilasters of each order are shell-headed niches.

The loggia is completed by a bay on each side of the central one, with balustraded arches of a similar character to the centre one but less elaborate. They are coped with intricate pierced parapets. The main wing and the square angle bays have mullioned and transomed windows of four lights. The ends of the two projecting wings date from the repairs and alterations of the 18th century, when the remains of the burned wing were cleared away and the other was pulled down. They have mullioned and transomed wooden casements and plaster architraves, and the rain-water heads are marked C.A. 1703. The earlier walls are finished with a pierced parapet, which is copied and carried round the later parts, while the chimneys have been restored in comparatively modern times to harmonize with the 17th-century ones. These, in the case of the central wing, are octagonal, with each flue separate, and moulded and ornamented with spurs in rubbed brick. The roofs, of moderate pitch, are tiled, and have lead hips.

The south-east front is considerably longer, and practically in its original 17th-century state. It consists of a long central wing with short flanking projecting ones. The latter, at the ground-floor level, contain small loggias with arcades of two bays of elaborately-ornamented arches having square rusticated columns, and spandrels filled with shallow ornament. Within are good contemporary garden seats, and built into the wall of the loggia, to the south-west, are four panels, discovered in some repairs as forming part of an original partition of the cellar. They are of early 16th-century date, and represent a lion, an elephant, a boar, and a camel. The long main or central wing is very simply treated; its length is broken by four projecting bay windows, each of four central and two flanking lights, and between the bays are pairs of two-light windows. All three wings are of two lofty stories, and the pierced parapet is carried round them, while the windows are all mullioned and transomed. Between the projecting wings, and with its front a little set back from them, is a brick terrace running the whole length of the central wing, with a short length of balustrading with circular moulded balusters, and a ramped handrail at each end, where are flights of steps to the ground, which at this point is considerably below the ground-floor level. The projecting wings have each a bay similar to those of the central wing. On all three wings are lead rain-water pipes marked with the initials E.Z. and the date 1612.

The north-east front, the original entrance front, is in the form of a single long wing, broken by three bays of a character similar to those in the front last described. Above the central one rises a curvilinear gable flanked by obelisks, and having in its apex a niche containing a statue in early 17th-century costume. At the ground level, in the front wall of the bay, is a four-centred archway, giving entrance to a porch formed by the bay. The pierced parapet is continued round this front.

The north-west front is set out with a central and two projecting wings. All, however, are gabled, the parapets are plain, and it is far less symmetrically planned, having always been the 'utility' side of the house, and contains the offices. It was also considerably altered in the 18th century, and has an inserted range of double-hung sash windows, the only ones in the house. It is of three stories with an attic, the second floor being about on a level with the first floor of the rest of the house. The 17th-century windows on this side are all mullioned and transomed in plastered brick, except the bay window of the projecting wing at the north-east, and one window in its flank wall, now blocked, which are of stone. The extra number of stories here is accounted for by the insertion in the 18th century of a floor, making the old kitchen into two stories.

The house is planned about a long, narrow central court. The south-west wing contains the hall with the chapel-room over, and its projecting wings, which are really small square structures on the angles of the building, contain, on the north-west, offices below, and bedrooms, &c., above, and on the south-east a few small apartments, and over them the chapel. The long south-east wing contains the staircase and reception-rooms on both floors, all planned en suite. The north-east wing contains various small apartments on the ground floor, while the whole of the first floor is occupied by a long gallery. The north-west wing contains offices and bedrooms on all floors.

The hall is entered from the loggia, and is a room of fair size; it is lit only from the end by one of the bays on the terrace, at which end is the dais. At the opposite end is a stone screen of three arched bays elaborately ornamented with columns, entablatures, &c., of Renaissance detail. The ornament includes a number of shields, painted in modern times with the heraldry of the various alliances of the Cope family. The mantel of the hall is a large one of two orders, and is ornamented with the arms of Spencer, Mohun, Chaworth, and Mordaunt.

From the dais a door opens into the staircase hall. The stair, of a handsome width, has twisted and moulded balusters and elaborate newels, and against the wall are planted flat profile imitations of them. It is of slightly later date than the house, and was brought from Eversley Manor House in the 19th century, replacing a poor Georgian stair. It opens by an external door on to the terrace, while a door opposite the door from the hall opens into the dining room, which is of exceedingly fine proportions. It has a large black and white marble mantelpiece of two classical orders and fairly simple design. On the walls is some fine 17th-century tapestry in tones of white and blue-grey, and generally attributed to English looms. En suite with this is a smaller drawing-room known as the Red drawing-room, with a plain 17th-century mantelpiece and panelling, and a billiard-room with an early Georgian mantelpiece. Opening from the last, and in the north-east wing, is a small room known as the garden room; this is panelled in oak, and has an angle fireplace, with a carved oak 17th-century mantelpiece brought from Moore Place Farm. Doors from this room also open into the loggia at the end of the terrace, and into a small plain apartment next to the entrance on the north-east front. The latter retains, within the porch formed by the bay, the doorway of an earlier house, a four-centred arch of two continuously-moulded orders of early 16th-century date. A paved passage from this originally opened directly into the court, but now opens into a passage formed by the building, early in the 19th century, of a partition wall in the court. At the end of the court is a mullioned and transomed window of five pointed lights with a pointed main head, which appears to be part of the earlier work. If this is in situ it is difficult to see to what part of the old building it belonged. The rest of the north-east wing is filled on this floor with small apartments of no particular interest. The north-west wing contains no rooms of any particular interest on either floor.

EVERSLEY : BRAMSHILL HOUSE FROM THE NORTH

From the staircase landing on the first floor a door opens to the great drawing-room, which is over the dining-room, and the same size in plan but more lofty. This has a handsome contemporary mantelpiece of a complete Ionic order superimposed upon a Doric order and carried out in red and white marble. The walls are hung with tapestries from cartoons by Rubens. The ceiling is a very elaborate one of modelled plaster in strapwork with heavy pendants, and there is a vine-pattern frieze also in plaster.

Opening from the great drawing-room is the library, which is over the Red drawing-room and billiard-room. It has an elaborate 17th-century Renaissance mantelpiece in black and white marble, the upper part forming a complete Ionic order, and an arabesque plaster ceiling with small moulded circular pendants. The walls are principally lined with bookshelves of a later date.

From the library a door opens into the long gallery, which occupies the whole of the first floor of the north-east wing. It is about 126 ft. 6 in. long and 20 ft. 6 in. wide, and is lined with painted and stained deal panelling of mid or late 17th-century date in moderate-sized panels with mitred angles. Above this is a plaster frieze of Renaissance design, while the ceiling is ornamented with strapwork arabesques with modelled leopard-faces as bosses. There is a rather plain marble mantelpiece, above which is an overmantel of wood in continuation of the panelling, with a moulded cornice, carved panels, &c.

Over the hall in the south-west wing is the chapel, a fair-sized room in which is the oriel and bay of the main entrance front. The ceiling is of early 17th-century date with moulded plaster ribs in geometrical patterns with foliage sprays and small four-leafed pendants as bosses. The walls are panelled to the ceiling with small bolection moulded panels of late 17th-century date.

The mantelpiece is an elaborate one of 17th-century date, of black and white marble. Opening from this room, to the north-west, is the Green bedroom, completely panelled in 17th-century panelling, but with a poor Georgian mantelpiece. The small block of building which forms a flanking wing to the south-west and south-east wings appears in plan as a small nearly detached tower. The first floor is occupied by the chapel, which is ceiled at the level of the roof with an elaborate plaster ceiling of early 17th-century date, on which are repeated as bosses a lion, a rose, a thistle, and a pomegranate. The chapel also contains some fine tapestry apparently of 14th-century date, and representing the vices and virtues. The ground floor is occupied by some small rooms, while the basement appears to be part of the earlier house. It has a stone vault with chamfered diagonals, &c., and no transverse ribs, and springs from square piers. The walls are also, in places, considerably thicker than the walls in the rest of the house, some 4 ft. 9 in., and appear to belong to the 16th century. The upper part, however, has been rebuilt.

The park is large, on high rolling ground and beautifully timbered. The immediate grounds consist of a beautiful lawn and a drive on the south-west front on the site of the destroyed wings, and a semi-formal rose and shrub garden opposite the north-east front. Opposite the old entrance in this garden is a brick and stone gateway contemporary with the house. It is of three bays, the central one forming the entrance and having a complete Doric order with panelled pilasters and a broken pediment of somewhat rudimentary design. The two flanking bays have lower arches with a pierced balustrade of the same design as that cresting the house. South of this garden and south of the house is a large 'troco' ground with a terrace and balustrade of circular moulded balusters on the south-west side. Some of the mallets and balls used in the game are preserved in the loggia on the terrace.

The manor of GREAT BRAMSHILL comprises the collection of cottages known as Bramshill Row and the farms and heath-land or common which lie along the Blackwater River.<sup>188</sup> It was held by two freemen as two manors of Edward the Confessor, and at the time of the Domesday Survey formed part of the large possessions of Hugh de Port.<sup>189</sup> The overlordship continued with the Ports and their descendants, the St. Johns, for several centuries, Bramshill being included among the knights' fees held by the St. Johns as late as 1349.<sup>190</sup> In 1167 Great Bramshill was held by Herbert de Sprai or Esprai,<sup>191</sup> who was succeeded by his son and heir Geoffrey de Sprai.<sup>192</sup> Geoffrey mortgaged it to William Fitz Andrew, who leased it to Roger Fitz Adam, but the latter was dispossessed by Henry de Brayboef. In 1206 Geoffrey sought to recover his property from Henry de Brayboef,<sup>193</sup> but apparently with no success, for the Brayboef family held knights' fees in Bramshill and other places of the St. Johns during the 14th century,<sup>194</sup> and retained their connexion with the parish as late at least as 1427, in which year land called 'Northlonde' in Bramshill, of which Sir William Sturmy died seised, was stated to be held of Elizabeth Hamelyn, daughter and heir of Hugh de Camois and Joan his wife, daughter and heir of Hugh de Brayboef,<sup>195</sup> as of her manor of Cranborne.<sup>196</sup> The history of this holding cannot be traced further unless it is identical with two messuages, 25 acres of land, 1½ acres of meadow, and 4 acres of wood in Bramshill, which were conveyed by Henry Colman and Agnes his wife

<sup>188</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>189</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>190</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67; 11 Edw. III, no. 49; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>191</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 190.

<sup>192</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 134 d.

<sup>193</sup> Rot. de Oblatis et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 241, 363.

<sup>194</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67; 11 Edw. III, no. 49; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17.

<sup>195</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 459.

<sup>196</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Hen. VI, no. 22.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

to Richard atte Moore in 1448.<sup>137</sup> This tenement, to which was afterwards given the name of the manor of BRAMSHILL or MOORE PLACE, was held by the Cresswell family at the beginning of the 17th century. From Edward Cresswell, the owner in 1616,<sup>138</sup> it passed to his grandson Thomas Cresswell, who dealt with it by fine in 1639.<sup>139</sup> Thomas was succeeded by his brother Robert, who sold the manor of Bramshill and the mansion-house there called Moore Place to Andrew Henley in 1649.<sup>140</sup> The further descent of Moore Place follows that of Little Bramshill (q.v.). Its site is marked by Moore Place Farm, a little to the north of Bramshill Park. The chimney-stacks and one or two of the fireplaces of this farm show it to be of the time of Henry VII.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were a mill worth 25*d.* in Little Bramshill,<sup>141</sup> and a quarter of a mill worth 10*d.* in Great Bramshill.<sup>142</sup>

The church of OUR LADY consists CHURCH of a chancel 18 ft. 5 in. by 12 ft. 6 in., north chapel 14 ft. by 13 ft. 6 in., nave 46 ft. 9 in. by 19 ft. 7 in., with a large north aisle 18 ft. 9 in. wide, and north-west tower 10 ft. square. There is also a vestry north of the tower and a south porch.

The chancel is the only ancient part of the church, but has no features by which its date may be accurately fixed; its axis is markedly to the south of that of the nave. All the rest of the church was rebuilt between 1724 and 1735, the tower being dated 1735. The date 1724 was formerly on the porch. In 1863 the chancel was restored, an open timber roof being substituted for a plastered ceiling, and the reredos erected. The east window dates from this time, as well as the painting on the chancel screen, the designs being made by Charles Kingsley. In 1878 the church was restored in memory of Kingsley, and a gallery taken down, the aisle being lengthened and widened to make up for the lost accommodation, and the nave roof raised. Except the chancel, which is plastered, the whole church is of red brick, and of very simple character. The east window of the chancel has three lights with tracery of 15th-century style.

In the north wall of the chancel is a low plastered arch over a tomb with the elaborate effigy of Dame Marianne Cope, 1862, an excellent piece of modern sculpture. On the south side of the chancel is a window, perhaps of 16th-century date, with three uncusped four-centred lights under a square head.

The chancel arch is an insignificant plastered one of very flat pitch, filled in by a classic screen with three arched openings and some strapwork cresting above the cornice.

The north chapel has nothing ancient except a small four-centred recess at the south-east, partly overlapped by its present east wall; there is no drain in it. The east window of the chapel is of three trefoil lights with tracery, but all other windows of the church, in nave and aisles, are plain round-headed openings of brick.

The north arcade of the nave is of five bays with square piers and semicircular arches, all plastered.

The tower is of three stages with an embattled parapet and angle pinnacles, which till some twenty years ago had vanes. There are two-light windows in each face of the top stage, a circular west light in the middle stage, and a two-light window with a wooden frame in the west face of the bottom stage. In 1878 the lower part of the tower was opened out as it now is and the baptistery made, the door from the tower on its western side being bricked up. The walls of the tower, nave, aisle, and south porch are of brick. The chancel walls are plastered. The roofs are of modern open timber-work covered with tiles.

Below the east window of the chancel is a modern reredos of Elizabethan design, much damaged by damp, and the altar table is also modern, with heavy baluster legs and carved rails. The pulpit, which lost its tester in 1878, and the reading desk are of 18th-century woodwork, and all the other fittings are quite modern, including the octagonal marble font standing under the tower. There is, however, a small 17th-century table with baluster legs in the vestry.

There are two wall monuments in the chancel, the first to Alexander Ross,<sup>143</sup> 1653, with a punning Latin inscription. It is of Renaissance design with small flanking pilasters, and in the pediment are the arms of Ross: Or a chevron checky sable and argent between three water-bougets sable.

The other monument was set up by Sir Andrew Henley, bart., to his wife, who died in 1666. The painted arms on the shield in the pediment are perished. At the west end of the nave are wall monuments to Judge Nares, 1756, his wife, Dame Mary Nares, 1782, and Catherine wife of William Wyndham, 1784, and under the tower one to Sir Richard Cope, 1806, and his wife, 1785, and to Sir William Cope, 1892. Under the chancel is the burial vault of the Cope family, made in 1703, and on its marble covering is an inscription dated 1704 recording its construction by Sir John Cope, who was nearly seventy at the time. On the chancel floor in front of the altar is a marble slab with a large brass cross curiously designed with interlaced strands, on a base of two squares formed by similar strands. Below is the inscription: 'Hic jacet Ricardus Pendilton quōdam s'vus p'potentis viri Egidii Dawbney Regi nro Henrico Septimo Camerarii Qui obiit Anno dñi millmo ccccº iiº xx die Septembris lfrā dnicali Bcuī atē ppicietur deus amē.'

There are two bells in the tower, of which the first is by Thomas Mears, 1841, and the second by Henry Knight, 1622.

The plate consists of a cup of 1705 inscribed 'Eversleigh ex dono E.W.', a paten of the same date, a flagon of 1730 inscribed 'Ex dono A. Cope, 1730,' and an almsdish of 1844.

The first book of the registers is in parchment, and contains baptisms and burials from 1559 to 1769, and marriages to 1754; the second has baptisms and

<sup>137</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 27 Hen. VI.

<sup>138</sup> In 1616 the two messuages with appurtenances in Bramshill of which Thomas Cresswell had died seised in 1607 were said to be held of Edward Cresswell as of his manor of Bramshill in socage (Chan. Misc. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], file 684, no. 11).

<sup>139</sup> In that year he joined with his wife Mabel, his brother Robert, and others in conveying it to Richard Holloway (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 15 Chas. I).

<sup>140</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xxv, no.

<sup>141</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 495*b*.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid. 483*b*.

<sup>143</sup> Born in Aberdeen, and successively master of the free school at Southampton, rector of All Saints, Southampton, and vicar of Carisbrooke. Being ejected by the Puritans, he came to live at Bramshill with Andrew Henley.

EVERSLEY : BRAMSHILL HOUSE : THE GATEWAY

EVERSLEY : BRAMSHILL HOUSE : THE GREAT DRAWING-ROOM

burials from 1770 to 1812, and the third marriages from 1754 to 1812.

A church was included in the ADVOWSON grant of Eversley to Westminster Abbey by Edward the Confessor.<sup>144</sup>

The advowson followed the descent of the manor until 1669,<sup>145</sup> when the next presentation was expressly exempted from the sale of the manor by William and Anne Lucy.<sup>146</sup> The living did not fall vacant till 1699, when Richard Staverton was appointed rector by Deodatus Staverton.<sup>147</sup> After this the advowson passed to Sir Andrew Henley, bart., and has since followed the descent of the manor, although the present patron, Sir Anthony Cope, bart., being a Roman Catholic, is debarred from presenting to the living. The right of presentation is at the present time exercised by the universities in turn.<sup>148</sup>

On 29 March 1306 Henry Woodlock, Bishop of Winchester, granted permission to Ellis the priest of Sir John de Drokensford to conduct divine service and administer the sacraments in the chapel of Bramshill during Easter week.<sup>149</sup> This permission was abused, for on 30 April the bishop wrote to the rural dean of Basingstoke saying that Nicholas de Haghe-man, the rector of Eversley, had complained that John Foxley had had mass celebrated in the chapel for fifteen days after Easter Sunday, and that the celebrant had received and detained the oblations, not paying them over to the mother church.<sup>150</sup> At the same time the bishop ordered the dean to suspend the service there, but in spite of this prohibition John Foxley and his wife persisted in having daily service there, and on 11 May 1306 their chaplain John was summoned to answer 'for that he contemptuously and profanely presumed to celebrate the divine offices in the chapel of Bramshill laid under interdict by the dean.'<sup>151</sup> The Foxleys appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1313, with the consent of John de Haghe-man, patron of the church of Eversley, it was agreed that the rector of Eversley and his successors should choose a suitable chaplain to take the service and celebrate the sacraments every day in the chapel of St. Peter of Bramshill, depending upon the mother-church of Eversley, and that John Foxley should provide for the chaplain at the rate of £2 6s. 8d. a year.<sup>152</sup> John thereupon granted a messuage and a weir in Staines in free alms to the rector of Eversley as an endowment,<sup>153</sup> and the next year the bishop released the interdict.<sup>154</sup> By the 15th century this chapel, which was situated about a mile from Bramshill House on the field still known as Chapel Close, had fallen into disuse and neglect, and on 19 June 1467 William Waynflete sequestered its endowment, no longer applied to its original purpose, to Sir Thomas Uvedale.<sup>155</sup>

A later rector of Eversley, Nicholas Walraund, allowed John Foxley and Constance to have the service celebrated in the chapel in their manor-house by their own chaplain when floods and inclement weather prevented their household from attending the mother church,<sup>156</sup> and this grant was confirmed by the vicar-general in 1322.<sup>157</sup> This chapel was destroyed when the old manor-house of the Foxleys was pulled down, and a new one was built by Lord Zouche at the beginning of the 17th century.<sup>158</sup> It was this building which was consecrated by George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1621.<sup>159</sup> It was pulled down in its turn during the alterations to the house in the time of Sir Denzil Cope, and the present chapel was arranged by the late Sir William Henry Cope and consecrated by Bishop Forbes of Brechin, N.B.

Nonconformity is represented in the parish by a Wesleyan chapel at Eversley Cross, and a Baptist chapel in the very north of the parish on the borders of Bramshill Common.

In 1612 Nicholas Parvis by CHARITIES deed left an annuity of 6s. 8d. charged upon a croft called Kittescroft, for aged and impotent poor. The charge is paid by Harriette Lady Cope, widow of the late Sir William Henry Cope, bart.

Sir Robert Henley, as stated in the table of benefactions, bequeathed £100 for apprenticing, now represented by £100 consols with the official trustees, the dividends of which are accumulated until required for apprenticeship premiums.

The Church House Charity, comprised in a deed of 10 April 1710, is now represented by £516 2s. 2d. consols with the official trustees, arising from sales of cottages and an allotment made in respect thereof. The yearly dividends, amounting to £12 18s., are applied in the repairs of the church.

The National School, founded by deed, 1853, is regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 28 August 1891.

In 1847 Sir John Cope, bart., by his will left £200 for investment, the income to be applied in apprenticing children of the tithing of Bramshill. Sir W. H. Cope, bart., by deed of 18 April 1852, in respect thereof, granted a rent-charge of £10 a year, issuing out of Moore Place Farm, unto the Rev. Charles Kingsley (the then rector) and the churchwardens.

The annual sum of £10 is paid by Sir Anthony Cope, bart., and applied in apprenticing when required. In 1906 there was a balance in hand of £107.

<sup>144</sup> Cott. MS. Faust. A. iii, fol. 105, 105 d.

<sup>145</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 72 d; 2032, fol. 53 d, 136; 2033, fol. 13 d, 14; 2034, fol. 13, 42, 77, 163 d; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 36, 76, 115, 152; Pat. 4 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 13; 5 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 29; 8 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 42; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>146</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>147</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>148</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>149</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 59.

<sup>150</sup> Ibid.

<sup>151</sup> Ibid.

<sup>152</sup> Add. Chart. 6713.

<sup>153</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 24; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 198.

<sup>154</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 59.

<sup>155</sup> Ibid. 2034, fol. 34 d. It was still standing in 1517, in which year the diocesan visitation books state that William Foster was the warden.

<sup>156</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 505.

<sup>157</sup> Ibid.

<sup>158</sup> Cal. S.P. Dom. 1619-23, p. 279.

<sup>159</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

HARTLEY WESPALL

Harlei, Herlei (xi cent.); Hertle, Hertligh Vaspal (xiii cent.); Hurtlegehe, Hertle Waspayl (xiv cent.).

Hartley Wespall is a parish and small village on the River Loddon situated 6 miles north-east from Basingstoke. The altitude of the parish ranges from about 180 ft. above the Ordnance datum by the River Loddon in the west to above 290 ft. above the Ordnance datum in the extreme east. The village is grouped round St. Mary's Church in the centre of the parish on ground about 250 ft. above the Ordnance datum, and is separated from the river by a large stretch of common land called Hartley Wood Common. Hartley House, in the extreme north of the parish, was formerly the rectory house, and is now the residence of Mr. Richard Durnford, C.B. It was considerably enlarged by his grandfather, the Rev. John Keate, D.D., who, on his resignation of the head-mastership of Eton in 1834, retired to Hartley Wespall, the living of which he had obtained in exchange for the rectory of Nether Stowey in 1824.<sup>1</sup> In 1840 Dr. Keate acquired the house and adjoining land as his freehold, and erected the present rectory house in the glebe-field called Sandpits.<sup>2</sup> He died at Hartley Wespall on 5 March 1852, and was succeeded by his only son, the Rev. John Charles Keate, who was also rector of Hartley Wespall till his death in 1894.

On 22 December 1879 a detached part of Stratfield Turgis was transferred to Hartley Wespall,<sup>3</sup> and by the Divided Parishes Act, 1882, part of the latter parish was added to the former. At the present time the area is 1,399 acres, of which 404 acres are arable land and 432½ acres permanent grass. The many detached copses in this parish together cover an area of 107½ acres.<sup>4</sup> The soil is various, while the subsoil is clay. The chief crops grown are wheat, oats, and beans.

Among place-names mentioned in early documents are the following:—Cockleslond<sup>5</sup> (xiii cent.); Morenses<sup>6</sup> (xv cent.); Clarkes Land,<sup>7</sup> Easton Lands<sup>8</sup> (xvi cent.); Dorcroftes, Church Doune, The Marsh, Marsh Grove, Broomehille, Wild Furlong, Oldbury, Great and Little Gorrell and Gorrell Grove<sup>9</sup> (xvii cent.).

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANOR there were two holdings in HARTLEY WESPALL—one of 1½ hides held by Aubrey the Chamberlain, who had succeeded Alvrice in its possession,<sup>10</sup> and the other of 1 hide held by Alvrice, who had purchased it from William Earl of Hereford for two marks of gold.<sup>11</sup> The history of the latter estate cannot be traced further with any certainty, but the former passed into the possession of the Waspall family, most probably with the manor of Smallbrook in Warminster (co. Wilts.),<sup>12</sup> which was also owned by Aubrey the Chamberlain in 1086.<sup>13</sup> An undated 12th-century charter whereby the Prior of Merton granted 44 acres of land and 1 acre of meadow in the parish of Hartley to Geoffrey Fitz Walter makes mention of the wood of Osbert Waspall,<sup>14</sup> and an entry on an assize roll of 1249 records that Geoffrey Waspall had failed to make suit at the hundred court of Holdshot,<sup>15</sup> but beyond this, with the documentary evidence at present available, there is nothing to connect the Waspalls with the manor from this date until the middle of the 14th century.<sup>16</sup> At the beginning of the 14th century John de Drokensford, Bishop of Bath and Wells, was holding the manor<sup>17</sup>—most probably on lease from the Waspalls. In 1318 a commission of oyer and terminer was granted to Sir John Foxley and others to try John Turgis and others accused by the bishop of breaking his close at Hartley, fishing his stews, and carrying away his fish and other goods.<sup>18</sup> Described as lord of Hartley, the bishop presented a rector during the episcopacy of John Stratford (1323–33),<sup>19</sup> but at his death in 1330 he was not seised of the manor,<sup>20</sup> which had most probably by this time reverted to the Waspalls. In 1346 John Waspall was stated to be holding half a fee in Hartley Wespall formerly belonging to John de Drokensford.<sup>21</sup> He died seised of the manor of Hartley Wespall in 1362, leaving a son and heir William,<sup>22</sup> on whose death (c. 1405)<sup>23</sup> it passed to his son and heir John, who dealt with it by fine in 1409.<sup>24</sup> As lord of Hartley Wespall John manumitted a bondman in 1413,<sup>25</sup> but before 1428 he had been succeeded by a second John, who in that year was returned as holding half a fee in Hartley Wespall lately belonging to John Waspall.<sup>26</sup> In 1445, in return for a payment of 100 marks, John granted the reversion of the manor, after the death of himself and his wife Joan, to Hugh Pakenham, son of his wife by her first husband, John Pakenham.<sup>27</sup> He died seised of the manor in 1448,<sup>28</sup> and lies buried in Hartley Wespall Church. On the death of his widow three years later,<sup>29</sup> Hartley Wespall passed, in accordance with the settlement, to Hugh, who as lord of the manor presented to the church during the episcopacy of William Waynflete (1447–86).<sup>30</sup> He had sold the manor before 1461, for in that year, as WASPALL. Argent two chevrons and a quarter gules.

<sup>1</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>2</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Richard Durnford.

<sup>3</sup> Loc. Govt. Bd. Order no. 10327.

<sup>4</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>5</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Edw. I.

<sup>6</sup> Close, 24 Hen. VI, m. 33.

<sup>7</sup> Ct. of Reg. bdle. 69, no. 23.

<sup>8</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 120, no. 13.

<sup>9</sup> Close, 1650, pt. i, no. 8.

<sup>10</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 503b.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 505a.

<sup>12</sup> See Smallbrook in Warminster

<sup>13</sup> Domesday Bk. (Rec. Com.), i, 74 d.

<sup>14</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 84 d.

<sup>15</sup> Assize R. 776, m. 25.

<sup>16</sup> Beyond the fact that in the Taxation of Pope Nicholas (1291) the church is given as the church of Hertligh Vaspal (Pope Nich. Tax. [Rec. Com.], 212).

<sup>17</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>18</sup> Pat. 12 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 14 d.

<sup>19</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 58.

<sup>20</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 41.

<sup>21</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 75.

<sup>23</sup> His will is dated 15 Oct. 1405, but it was not proved until 28 July 1407 (P.C.C. Will 10 Marche).

<sup>24</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 11 Hen.

IV.

<sup>25</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), D. 545.

<sup>26</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346; see also ibid.

362.

<sup>27</sup> Close, 24 Hen. VI, m. 33.

<sup>28</sup> Brass in Hartley Wespall Church.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid.

<sup>30</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 45.

HARTLEY WESPALL CHURCH • WEST END OF NAVE

HOLDSHOT HUNDRED HARTLEY WESPALL

'Hugh Pakenham esquire, late of the soke of Winchester alias late of Hartley Wespall,' he obtained a general pardon for all offences,<sup>81</sup> but the name of the purchaser is unknown. However, within the next twenty years it had passed into the possession of Sir Thomas St. Leger, who in 1481 obtained licence from the king to grant the manor and advowson of Hartley Wespall to the Dean and Canons of St. George's Chapel, Windsor.<sup>82</sup> At the same time the dean and canons obtained permission to grant a yearly rent of £23 1s. 8d. proceeding therefrom to two chaplains, who were to celebrate divine service daily in the chantry founded by Sir Thomas in the chapel.<sup>83</sup> From

DEAN AND CANONS OF ST. GEORGE'S, WINDSOR.
*Argent a cross
gules.*

this date the manor remained in the possession of the dean and canons and their lessees until 1649, in which year it was included in the general sale of the dean and chapter lands, being sold for £1,077 5s. to Robert Doyly of Lincoln's Inn and John Bristol of Hartley Wespall.<sup>84</sup> However, it was restored to the dean and canons at the Restoration, and remained in their possession until 1876,<sup>85</sup> when it was sold to Arthur Richard Wellesley, second Duke of Wellington.<sup>86a</sup> It now belongs to his nephew Arthur Charles Wellesley, fourth Duke of Wellington.

The water-mill called Hartley Mill probably marks the site of the mill which existed in 1086.<sup>86</sup> A water-mill and a fishery are mentioned in the sale of the manor in 1649,<sup>87</sup> and Lord Stawell, the farmer of the manor, dealt by recovery with a free fishery in Hartley Wespall<sup>88</sup> in 1707.

The property of the Prior and convent of Merton extended into the parish, as is apparent from the charter of Walter, Prior of Merton, granting 44 acres of land and 1 acre of meadow in Hartley to Geoffrey Fitz Walter,<sup>89</sup> and from a composition between the prior and Alexander, parson of the church of Hartley, dated Christmas 1193, whereby it was agreed that the prior and convent should continue to pay to the rector of Hartley such tithes as they had been accustomed to pay, viz. the third part of the full tithes from some of their lands and no tithes at all from the rest, but that the men whom they had in the parish should pay tithes in full from their lands. If at any future time, however, the prior and convent acquired additional property in the parish they were to pay the tithes in full, as were also the purchasers of any of the abbey's property.<sup>90</sup> The lands of the abbey in this parish naturally followed the same descent as the manor of Holdshot in the parish of Heckfield (q.v.)<sup>91</sup> by 18 ft. 8 in.; a nave 45 ft. 6 in. by 21 ft. 10 in.; a north porch and a north tower 8 ft. 10 in. by 7 ft. 9 in. Externally the building is entirely modern, except the west end of the nave, but its walls inclose the main timbers of the nave of a half-timber church of c. 1330, a very remarkable and interesting survival.

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN consists of a chancel 23 ft. 6 in.

The windows throughout are modern, with tracery of 14th and 15th-century design, dating from 1868-9. The chancel, which was rebuilt in memory of Dr. Keate, has at the north-west an arched opening to the tower, while on the south are a modern credence, aumbry, and tomb recess of 14th-century design. There is no chancel arch, but chancel and nave are separated by a fine modern screen with open traceried panels surmounted by a large cross, with medallions at the ends of the arms carved with the symbols of the four evangelists.

The nave is in three bays, with heavy story posts between each bay having filleted half-round shafts on the face, from the moulded capitals of which spring arched braces to the underside of cambered tie-beams. On the tie-beams are king-posts with struts, and the rafters are very heavy and have arched braces beneath. The tie-beam at the east of the nave is level and not cambered, and has formed the head of a wooden screen perhaps of much the same character as its modern successor. The struts and principals over it are cusped like those in the west wall of the nave. Both doors of the nave are original, but only on the north can the outer elevation be seen. It is a most interesting piece of detail, the doorway having a two-centred arch, with a label of the same section as that of the architrave of a rectangular frame in which it is set, and with which it mitres at the springing. The spandrels are filled in solid, the whole framing being extraordinarily massive.

The west wall is original, and is of half-timber construction filled in with plaster. It has angle and central posts with cusped diagonal struts and a cambered tie-beam, with king-post and cusped struts in the gable. The effect is curious, the figures formed by the lower struts being far too large in scale for the building, and the whole cannot be said to be a very successful piece of design. On the central post is planted a shallow wooden pilaster offset in imitation of a stone buttress.

The tower is quite modern and of two stages, the lower being of stone, while the upper is of wood, and is the upper part of a wooden belfry which stood outside the west end of the church, and was moved to its present position in 1868. It is tile hung and finishes with a wooden spire.

The pulpit contains a little 17th-century carving, but the seating, fittings, &c., are all modern. There is a record that the church was re-seated in 1759 from the proceeds of Paice's Charity. The font is modern, in 12th-century style, with an arcade of interlacing arches, placed in the church by Dr. Keate in 1852.

On the north of the nave is a fine grey and white marble monument to 'the Right Honourable Abigail Lady Dowager of Ralph Lord Stawell,' who died in 1692. She was daughter and heiress of William Pitt, and above are the arms of Pitt on a lozenge, while on

<sup>81</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 26.

<sup>82</sup> Ibid. 21 Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 17.

<sup>83</sup> Ibid.

<sup>84</sup> Close, 1650, pt. i, no. 8.

<sup>85</sup> Lord Stawell, as farmer of the manor, held a court baron here on 1 Nov. 1725 (Add. Chart. 19248). In 1778 Ralph Congreve was farmer of the manor, and was then living at the manor-house called Hartley Wespall Court (Sir Thomas Gatehouse MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling).

<sup>86a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. George F. North, agent of the Duke of Wellington.

<sup>86</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 503b.

<sup>87</sup> Close, 1650, pt. i, no. 8.

<sup>88</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 6 Anne, rot. 69.

<sup>89</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 84 d.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid. fol. 72 d.

<sup>91</sup> Thus towards the end of the 16th century Thomas More sued Nicholas Synt for 100 acres of land in the parish of Hartley Wespall called Easton Lands, parcel of the manor of Holdshot (Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bde. 120, no. 13).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

consoles beneath are the arms of Stawell: Gules a cross lozengy argent, and the same impaling Pitt.

In the chancel, under the modern recess in the north wall, is a raised tomb with a brass cross and marginal inscription to Dr. Keate.

In the chancel floor is a brass inscribed, 'Johannes Waspail quondam huius ecclesie patronus viam universe carnis vicesimo die mensis Novembris anno domini quadringentesimo quadregesimo octavo transiens, ac Johanna relictæ Johannis Pakenham vidua eius quæ obiit vicesimo die mensis maii mccccij hic tumulantur, quorum animabus propicietur Deus. Amen.'

The tower contains three bells. The treble and second bear a plain cross, a shield of the three leopards of England, and the mark of Robert Crowch a London founder of c. 1440; the third was cast by Mears and Stainbank in 1883.

The plate consists of a cup and cover paten of 1706 inscribed 'Hartley Waspail in the county of Southampton, 1690, ex dono John Chase,' a paten of 1836, and a modern flagon and almsdish.

There are five books of registers. The first contains baptisms, burials, and marriages 1558-1677; the second the same, 1678-1733, with gaps in baptisms 1678-85 and 1713-23. This book was found in an empty house in Pentonville in 1852. The third contains baptisms and burials 1733-83, with a gap in baptisms 1748-54, and marriages 1733-58. The fourth has marriages only 1755-1812, and the fifth, baptisms and burials 1784-1812. There are churchwardens' accounts from 1751 and a tithe account book from 1776.

The advowson of the church followed the descent of the manor, ADVOWSON being granted with it in 1481 to the Dean and Canons of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, who have retained it till the present day.<sup>42</sup>

In 1840 certain land belonging to the Dean and Canons of Windsor—a field called Great Colemans, purchased from the Duke of Wellington, and Broca Pightle, purchased from Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, afterwards Lord Eversley—were added to the glebe, which now consists of 25 a. 24 p.<sup>43</sup> The school premises were erected in 1848 upon the waste of the manor, and were until 1891 vested in the Rev. J. C. Keate. In that year they were conveyed to the Dean and Canons of Windsor as a national school for the parishes of Hartley Wespall and Stratfield Turgis. A body of managers was constituted by the deed, but this provision was modified by an Order of the Board of Education made under the Elementary Education Act of 1902.<sup>44</sup>

The Charity of William Paice CHARITIES (will 1641) and Lady Abigail Stawell is now endowed with £836 19s. 11d.

India 3 per cent. stock with the official trustees, representing the proceeds of the sale of a house and land in Sherfield-upon-Loddon, formerly belonging to the charity.

By an Order of the Charity Commissioners of 7 June 1895, made under the Local Government Act 1894, the sum of £495 stock, part thereof, was apportioned as the eleemosynary branch of the charity, and £341 19s. 11d. stock as the ecclesiastical branch. In 1907 the sum of £61 19s. 9d. stock was sold out for providing funds towards rebuilding the church wall, subject to replacement within ten years.

The yearly dividends on the £495 India 3 per cent. stock, amounting to £14 17s., are applied usually in the distribution of money to poor parishioners.

HECKFIELD

Effelle (xi cent.); Hecfeld, Hegfeld, Heifeld, Heggefild (xiii cent.); Highfield, Heghefeld, Hekfeld, Hechingfeld (xiv cent.).

Heckfield is a village and parish near the Berkshire border on the River Whitewater, 5 miles north-west from Winchfield station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. The Roman road from London to Bath, now generally called the Devil's Highway, forms the county boundary on the north, while the River Whitewater flows through the eastern extremity of the parish, and for some distance forms the eastern boundary. The elevation varies from about 160 ft. above the ordnance datum by the Whitewater in the east to about 270 ft. above the ordnance datum in the west. The parish is intersected by main roads from Basingstoke and Odiham to Reading, which meet at West Swallowfield just outside the county boundary. The village is situated on the main road from Odiham in the south of the parish. To the west of St. Michael's Church is Highfield Park, the dower-house of the Stratfieldsaye estate, at present occupied by Mr. Frederick Boyd Marson. It was for some years the residence of the Hon. Gen. Sir Galbraith Lowry Cole, G.C.B., M.P., a distinguished Peninsular officer, and a personal friend of the first Duke of Wellington. Heckfield Place, the seat of Lieut.-Colonel Horace Walpole, is a substantial and handsome brick building, well situated in a beautifully wooded park of about 200 acres on the banks of the Whitewater. Part of Stratfieldsaye Park, covering an area of 700 acres, occupies the north-western corner of the parish. Opposite the lodges on the border of Heckfield Heath is a monument erected to the great Duke of Wellington by his son the second duke and the tenants, labourers on the estate, and tradespeople as a token of affection and respect. The statue of the duke in the uniform of a field-marshal is over 8 ft. high and stands on a pedestal, on the granite base of which are suitable inscriptions. From the monument an avenue of Wellingtonias leads towards Stratfieldsaye House. Another seat in Heckfield is Park Corner, the property of the Duke of Wellington, which is situated in the northern extremity of the parish, on the Berkshire borders, and is the residence of Mr. John Martineau, J.P. The parish is very well wooded, woods and plantations covering an area of 862 acres in all.<sup>1</sup> The total area is 3,232 acres of land, of which 31 acres are land

<sup>42</sup> Egerton MSS. 2033, fol. 18 d; 2034, fol. 48, 99 d, 165 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 52, 187, 233; Pat.

<sup>21</sup> Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 17; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>43</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Richard Durnford.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

EVERSLEY RECTORY AND CHURCH WITH CHARLES KINGSLEY IN FOREGROUND

HECKFIELD PLACE

covered by water, 873½ acres are arable land, and 926 acres permanent grass.<sup>2</sup> There are large stretches of common land in the north. The soil is principally light. The sub-soil is sand and gravel. The chief crops are grain in succession. Heckfield Heath and Riseley Common were inclosed by authority of the General Inclosure Acts on 28 December 1860.<sup>3</sup>

Mattingley, which formed part of Heckfield, was constituted a separate parish in 1894. The village is clustered round a green, and is situated in the extreme south of the parish on the main road from Odiham to Reading, about 2½ miles north from Hook Station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. The church is in the village itself, but the vicarage is a mile north-west, close to the hamlet of Hound Green. Mattingley Lodge, to the east of Mattingley, is the property of Lieut.-Colonel Horace Walpole, and is at present let to Mr. Thomson. There is a small collection of houses at Hazeley, which is situated a mile north-east on the edge of Hazeley Heath, which covers a large area extending into the parish of Hartley Wintney. A small part of Bramshill Park is in this parish. Mattingley contains 2,622 acres of land,<sup>4</sup> and the River Whitewater, which bisects the parish, running from north to south, and several lakes, account for an additional 9 acres of land covered by water. The soil is principally light upon sand and gravel, with London clay as the subsoil, but in some parts the top soil is loamy and heavy. The chief crops are wheat and oats.

Among place-names occurring in early records are the following: Dainymore, Le Breche,<sup>5</sup> Hwarnepol<sup>6</sup> and La Garston Regis<sup>7</sup> (xiii cent.); Rychers<sup>8</sup> (xv cent.); Cane Meadow,<sup>9</sup> Harperstyle, Trolles Ende,<sup>10</sup> Vaulandes,<sup>11</sup> Le Reedes, Le Hethe Crofte, Potenalesland,<sup>12</sup> Rede Engge,<sup>13</sup> Clerkes, Harmwoods, Hell House Grove, Berryhill<sup>14</sup> and The Round Park<sup>15</sup> (xvi cent.); and Iles or Eeles, Iles Meade or Eeles Meade,<sup>16</sup> Ganderpark,<sup>17</sup> Gilders or Wergs,<sup>18</sup> Allwardis or Aylwardis,<sup>19</sup> and Crowkes<sup>20</sup> (xvii cent.).

The manor of HECKFIELD, which MANORS had been held by Stencenoc of Edward the Confessor as an alod, at the time of the Domesday Survey formed part of the possessions of Hugh de Port.<sup>21</sup> John de Port, the grandson of the Domesday holder, granted it before 1166 to Adam de St. Manefeo<sup>22</sup> (Sancto Manufedo), and from this time the manor was held of the Ports and their successors the St. Johns, occurring in lists of the St. John knights' fees as late as 1349.<sup>23</sup> Adam de St. Manefeo was succeeded by his brother and heir Robert de St. Manefeo, who in 1208 confirmed to the Prior and convent of Merton the charter of John de Port, granting to them 1 hide of land in the parish, afterwards known as the manor of Holdshot.<sup>24</sup> Another Adam de St. Manefeo was apparently holding the manor in 1276,<sup>25</sup> and in that year obtained exemption for life from being put on assizes, juries, or recognizances.<sup>26</sup> Henry de St. Manefeo, probably son and heir of Adam, presented to the church between 1282 and 1304,<sup>27</sup> and was succeeded before 1316 by John de St. Manefeo,<sup>28</sup> verderer for the forest of Pamber, who died circa 1320.<sup>29</sup> The latter was followed by Robert de St. Manefeo, who in 1328 obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne of Heckfield, as also licence to inclose 5 acres of meadow, 15 acres of pasture, 40 acres of wood, and 30 acres of moor in his manor for a park.<sup>30</sup> Robert presented a rector during the episcopacy of Adam Orlton (1333-45),<sup>31</sup> but about the same time Sir Thomas de St. Leger and Elizabeth his wife claimed the manor from him,<sup>32</sup> and he accordingly, alleging that he was about to set out on the service of the king to foreign parts, obtained letters acquitting him from pleas and suits.<sup>33</sup> It was discovered, however, that this was only a pretext to prorogue the suit of those who were suing for their rights, and in 1339 Edward III ordered the justices to proceed in the case and to cause justice to be done to the parties notwithstanding the letters of protection.<sup>34</sup> Sir Thomas de St. Leger and Elizabeth were successful in gaining possession of the manor, and let it at farm to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester,<sup>35</sup> but the St. Manefeos subsequently recovered it, John de St. Manefeo, son and heir of Thomas de St. Manefeo, quitclaiming all right in it to Robert Fulmere and others in 1381.<sup>36</sup> In 1395 the manor was settled on Edward Bokeland and Amice his wife<sup>37</sup> and the issue of Amice, with contingent remainder to Sir Philip la Vache and his issue, with contingent remainder to the right heirs of Amice.<sup>38</sup> Edward Bokeland was still holding Heckfield in 1404,<sup>39</sup> but the fact that in 1405 seisin of the manor was granted to Sir Philip la Vache<sup>40</sup> shows that he had died within the year, and that Amice had left no children.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Inclosure Awards Blue Bk.

<sup>4</sup> Including 830½ acres of arable land, 570½ acres of permanent grass, and 5 acres of woods and plantations (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. 1905).

<sup>5</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 10 John. Dainymoor probably corresponds to Danmoor, a house and grounds belonging to Lieut.-Colonel Horace Walpole, and at present occupied by Mr. Bucknall.

<sup>6</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 8 John.

<sup>7</sup> Chart. R. 5 John, m. 26.

<sup>8</sup> De Banco R. Mich. 13 Hen. VII, m. 359. It was so called from the Rycher family, who were already seated at Mattingley in the middle of the 14th century (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 14 Edw. III).

<sup>9</sup> Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvi, m. 13.

<sup>10</sup> P.C.C. Will, 4 Ayloffe.

<sup>11</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 147b.

<sup>12</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), D. 479.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. D. 457.

<sup>14</sup> Close, 36 Eliz. pt. viii, no. 11. Hell

House Grove owes its name to the Hellhouse family, who were seated at Heckfield as late as the reign of Charles II.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. 33 Eliz. pt. xx.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 5 Jas. I, pt. xiv.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 6 Jas. I, pt. xii, no. 47.

<sup>18</sup> Chan. Enr. Dec. R. 1349.

<sup>19</sup> Close, 4 Jas. I, pt. xxxiii; 5 Jas. I, pt. xi.

<sup>20</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 6 Chas. I, m. 23.

<sup>21</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>22</sup> It was the one knight's fee in Hampshire which Adam de St. Manefeo was holding of the new enfeoffment of John de Port in 1166 (Red Bk. of Exch. i, 209).

<sup>23</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230a; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>24</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 10 John.

<sup>25</sup> He was returned by the Testa de Nevill as holding one knight's fee in Heckfield of the old enfeoffment of Robert de St. John (Testa de Nevill [Rec. Com.], 230a). It was probably the same Adam who leased premises in the manor of Heckfield to Roger son of Amisius (Add. Chart. 684).

<sup>26</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. I, m. 14.

<sup>27</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 15.

<sup>28</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>29</sup> Pat. 14 Edw. II, m. 14.

<sup>30</sup> Chart. R. 2 Edw. III, m. 10; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 25.

<sup>31</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 138 d.

<sup>32</sup> Vide Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 18.

<sup>33</sup> Pat. 13 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 8 d.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid.

<sup>35</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 18.

<sup>36</sup> Close, 4 Ric. II, m. 13 d.

<sup>37</sup> This Amice was apparently the niece and heir of Sir John de Plessy and widow of Jacob del Beel of Lucca, merchant. Sir Philip la Vache married Elizabeth, who was perhaps widow of Sir John de Plessy (Pat. 8 Ric. II, m. 4).

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 18 Ric. II.

<sup>39</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. 5 & 6 Hen. IV, file 1719, no. 5.

<sup>40</sup> Close, 7 Hen. IV, m. 40.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Sir Philip la Vache, who in 1403 'in consideration of his old age and debility' had been exempted from being put on assizes, juries, &c., from being made mayor, sheriff, &c., and from going to any parts of the realm by reason of his various offices,<sup>41</sup> died about five years later,<sup>42</sup> and as he left no issue Heckfield apparently passed to the right heirs of Amice. Who these were is uncertain, but in 1451 the manor was in the possession of Elizabeth wife of Thomas Norton, who in that year dealt with it by fine in conjunction with her husband.<sup>43</sup> William Cresswell, 'first lord of the manor of that name,' died seised of Heckfield in 1475, and was succeeded by John Cresswell,<sup>44</sup> who died in 1518, leaving as his heir his son Thomas.<sup>45</sup> On the death of Thomas in 1533 the manor passed to Richard Cresswell, who died seven years later.<sup>46</sup> Thomas Cresswell son and heir of Richard settled Heckfield upon himself and his wife Jane in 1596, and died seised in 1607, leaving a son and heir Thomas,<sup>47</sup> who dealt with the manor by recovery in 1651.<sup>48</sup> It next passed by sale to the Sturt family, the purchaser probably being Anthony Sturt, who, according to Le Neve, was 'a meal man first, after a commissioner of excise, fined for Alderman of London, gott a great estate and had a grant of arms 19 October 1691.'<sup>49</sup> Sir Anthony Sturt son of Anthony, sheriff of Hampshire in 1694,<sup>50</sup> dealt with the manor by fine on the occasion of the marriage of his son and heir Humphrey with Diana daughter of Sir Nathaniel Napier, bart.,<sup>51</sup> in 1717.<sup>52</sup> On the death of Humphrey Sturt in 1740 the manor passed to his son Humphrey Sturt of Horton<sup>53</sup> (co. Dors.), who was the owner in 1745.<sup>54</sup> He had parted with it, however, before 1778, in which year Sir Thomas Gatehouse in his survey of Hampshire describes Heckfield Park as 'late the estate of Humphrey Sturt, esq., now in occupation of William Augustus Pitt, esq.'<sup>55</sup> This William Augustus Pitt was the younger brother of George Pitt, first Lord Rivers, the owner of Stratfieldsaye. He died without issue in 1809,<sup>56</sup> and his property then passed to his nephew George Pitt, second Lord

CRESSWELL. Argent three gmel bars sable.

STURT. Vert a fesse or between three running horses argent with three roses gules upon the fesse.

Rivers, who had succeeded his father, George Pitt, first Lord Rivers, in 1803. From this date Heckfield follows the same descent as Stratfieldsaye (q.v.).

A fair was held at Heckfield on Good Friday at the end of the 18th century,<sup>57</sup> but it has now fallen into disuse.

The first mention that has been found of the manor of GREENES is in a deed of 1589, whereby it was leased with Heckfield to Robert Hardinge.<sup>58</sup> It has since followed the same descent as that manor (q.v. supra).

The manor of HOLDSHOT (Holshute, xiv cent.; Holshet, xv cent.; Holleshote, xvi cent.), or PUTHAM, as it is now more usually called, owes its origin to the charter of John de Port granting to the Prior and convent of Merton (co. Surr.) in free alms one hide of his land in Heckfield, a wood, a meadow, common of pasture for their cattle with his demesne cattle, pasture and mast for their pigs in his wood without pannage, and sufficient wood for firing and repairs.<sup>59</sup> In 1208 Robert de St. Manefeo, lord of Heckfield, confirmed this charter,<sup>60</sup> and at the same time Walter the Prior of Merton quitclaimed to Robert all assarts and purpures made by him and his brother Adam in the parish in return for a charter whereby Robert gave up all right to fields called Dainymore and Le Breche and a mill-pond in Holdshot.<sup>61</sup> The prior and convent continued in possession of the manor of Holdshot, as their estate in the parish was subsequently called, until the Dissolution, when it fell into the hands of Henry VIII,<sup>62</sup> who in 1545 granted it to William Paulet, Lord St. John, created Marquess of Winchester on 12 October 1551.<sup>63</sup> The manor continued with successive Marquesses of Winchester and Dukes of Bolton until 1794,<sup>64</sup> when on the death of Harry Powlett, sixth Duke of Bolton, it passed to Jean Mary, only daughter of Charles Powlett, fifth Duke of Bolton, and wife of Thomas Orde, who was created Lord Bolton of Bolton Castle on 20 October 1797.<sup>65</sup> In 1817 William Powlett, Lord Bolton, son and heir of the last-named, sold the manor to Charles Shaw-Lefevre,<sup>66</sup> formerly Shaw, who had assumed the additional name of Lefevre on his marriage with Helena Lefevre, the only daughter and heiress of John Lefevre of Heckfield Place.<sup>67</sup> From him it passed to his son and heir Charles Shaw-Lefevre, who was Speaker of the House of Commons from 1839 to 1857, and on his retirement was raised to the peerage

MERTON PRIORY. Or fretty azure with eagles argent at the crossings of the fret.

<sup>41</sup> Pat. 4 Hen. IV, pt. ii, m. 11.

<sup>42</sup> Vide Pat. 9 Hen. IV, pt. ii, m. 21.

<sup>43</sup> Elizabeth and Thomas conveyed it to Thomas Kemp, Bishop of London, William Crowton, clerk, and Nicholas Kene, clerk (Feet of F. Hants, East. 29 Hen. VI).

<sup>44</sup> Memorial inscription in Heckfield Church.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.; P.C.C. Will, 4 Ayloff.

<sup>46</sup> Memorial inscription.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.; Chan. Misc. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 684, no. 11.

<sup>48</sup> Recov. R. East. 1651, rot. 125.

<sup>49</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. viii, 506.

<sup>50</sup> Burke, Colonial Gentry, ii, 445-6.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 4 Geo. I.

<sup>53</sup> Hutchins, Dors. iii, 125.

<sup>54</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 19 Geo. II, rot. 14.

<sup>55</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>56</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>57</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 253.

<sup>58</sup> Ex inform. Mrs. J. Hautenville Cope.

<sup>59</sup> Vide Feet of F. Hants, 10 John.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid.

<sup>62</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 62, 62 d, 75 d.; De Banco R. Mich. 13 Hen. VII; Mins. Accts. Surr. 36 & 37 Hen. VIII, no. 187, m. 9 d. Thomas de Kent, Prior of Merton, granted it to Sir James de Woodstock and Joan his wife for their lives at a rose rent. Sir James de Woodstock died seised in 1340 (Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 18; Close, 15 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 44). His widow subsequently married Thomas de Foxley, who died seised in 1361 (Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 55).

<sup>63</sup> Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvi, m. 3.

<sup>64</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I; 7 Jas. I; Chan. Inq. p.m. 5 Chas. I (Ser. 2), pt. i, no. 102; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112; Mich. 28 Geo. II, rot. 383.

<sup>65</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 372-5.

<sup>66</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 58 Geo. III.

<sup>67</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iii, 296.

as Viscount Eversley, with a life pension of £4,000 a year.<sup>66</sup> He died at Heckfield Place on 28 December 1888 in his ninety-fifth year, being at that time the Father of the House of Lords.<sup>69</sup> The manor of Holdshot then passed to his eldest daughter, the Hon. Emma Laura Shaw-Lefevre, who died on 2 April 1899, having four years previously sold it to the present owner, Lieut.-Colonel Horace Walpole.<sup>70</sup>

The mill worth 5s. and the fishery worth a hundred eels, which existed in the parish at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>71</sup> were apparently included in the grant of John de Port to the Prior and convent of Merton. They are not expressly mentioned in his charter, but in 1208 Robert de St. Manefeo renounced all claim to the mill-pond of the prior and convent in Holdshot.<sup>72</sup> Two water-mills of the annual value of 20s.—one of them apparently representing the mill in Holdshot and the other the mill in Mattingley (q.v. infra)—are included in an extent of the manor taken in 1341,<sup>73</sup> and at the dissolution of the abbey a water-mill and a fulling-mill with a meadow called Cane Meadow were among the appurtenances of the manor.<sup>74</sup> No fewer than four mills were included in the sale of Holdshot to Charles Shaw-Lefevre in 1817.<sup>75</sup> At the present day the mill in Holdshot is still standing, and is situated a little to the west of Holdshot Farm on the banks of the Whitewater.

In 1280 the Prior of Merton was summoned to show cause why his villeins of Heckfield did not make suit at the king's hundred court of Holdshot. He produced the charter of Richard I, granting to the canons of Merton quittance from attendance at shire and hundred courts, and the charter of confirmation by Henry III, and the case was accordingly dismissed.<sup>76</sup>

In the same year the Prior of Merton proved the right of the prior and convent to tumbil and the assize of bread and ale in Holdshot.<sup>77</sup>

MATTINGLEY (Matingeleghe, xi cent.; Mattingele, xiii cent.; Martyngle, xv cent.), which Alric had held of King Edward as an alod, belonged to Alsie the son of Brixi in 1086.<sup>78</sup> Ellis, the owner in 1167,<sup>79</sup> was apparently succeeded by Revelendus, lord of Mattingley, who by Rose his wife left three sons, James de Oakley, Bartholomew de Oakley, and Stephen de Mattingley, among whom his possessions were divided.<sup>80</sup> James de Oakley had a son called Hugh de Oakley who granted his property in Mattingley to the Prior and convent of Merton,<sup>81</sup> and probably died without issue. Bartholomew de Oakley gave his inheritance to his brother Stephen de Mattingley,<sup>82</sup> who in 1206 granted to Walter Prior of Merton and his successors in free alms 6 virgates, 30 acres of land, several meadows, 6s. 3d. rent, and a mill in Mattingley.<sup>83</sup> Stephen was succeeded by his son Peter de Mattingley, who sold all his property to Geoffrey de Arundel.<sup>84</sup> The latter sought to recover from the prior and convent the land granted to them by Hugh de Oakley,<sup>85</sup> but in 1236 acknowledged it to be the right of the prior and convent, who accordingly received him and his wife Emma into all the benefits and prayers henceforth to be made in the church of Merton.<sup>86</sup> The prior and convent subsequently acquired the rest of the land in Mattingley of which Revelendus had died seised. It became merged in Holdshot and still forms part of that manor.

SHAW-LEFEVRE, Viscount Eversley. Sable a chevron argent between two trefoils or and a bezant with a cross formy on the top.

The mill in Mattingley granted to the prior and convent by Stephen de Mattingley in 1206 became one of the appurtenances of the manor of Holdshot,<sup>87</sup> being probably represented by one of the two water-mills included in an extent of the manor of Holdshot taken in 1341.<sup>88</sup> This mill, which was situated on the banks of the Whitewater, near Mattingley Clappers Bridge, existed till a few years ago.

The fair which was held at Mattingley on 29 July at the close of the 18th century<sup>89</sup> has since fallen into disuse.

In 1205 Robert son of Henry granted one hide of land in PUTHAM (Petteham, xiii cent.) to the Prior and convent of Merton in free alms.<sup>90</sup> This land became merged in Holdshot, and has ever since continued to form part of that manor.

In 1203 King John granted the Prior and convent of Merton his wood in HAZELEY (Heishulla, xii cent.; Heishull, Heysole, xiii cent.; Haysull, xiv cent.), called La Garston Regis,<sup>91</sup> with all appurtenances, to assart or trench or cultivate or inclose or to do with it in accordance with their will, free and quit from wastes and assarts, &c., saving to him his right of hunting.<sup>92</sup> In 1280 the Prior of Merton was stated to be holding one hide of land in Hazeley, which formerly was of the ancient demesne of the Crown belonging to the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>93</sup> The manor of Holdshot still comprises the greater part of Hazeley Heath.

A portion of HAZELEY HEATH from an early date formed part of the possessions of the lords of Bramshill. Thus in 1317 John de Foxley obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Hazeley,<sup>94</sup> and at his death in 1324 he was seised of 58 acres and 3 roods of land measured by a perch of 20 ft. in a piece of heath in Hazeley, in the forest of Pamber and the bailiwick of Eversley.<sup>95</sup> In 1347 Thomas de Foxley obtained licence to impark 2,500 acres of land and wood out of his several soil in Bramshill and Hazeley,<sup>96</sup> and at the present day

<sup>66</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iii, 296.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid.

<sup>70</sup> Information given by Lieut.-Col. Horace Walpole.

<sup>71</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>72</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 10 John.

<sup>73</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 18.

<sup>74</sup> Mins. Accts. Surr. 36 & 37 Hen. VIII, no. 187, m. 9 d.

<sup>75</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 58 Geo. III.

<sup>76</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 769.

<sup>77</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 22 d.

<sup>78</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 505a.

<sup>79</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), xi, 189.

<sup>80</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 134 d.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid.

<sup>82</sup> Ibid. In spite of this grant Rose daughter of Bartholomew de Oakley gave King John 100s. in 1204 to have her reasonable share of the two knights' fees in Oakley and Mattingley formerly belonging to her father (Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. 218).

<sup>83</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 8 John.

<sup>84</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 134 d.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid.

<sup>86</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 21 Hen. III.

<sup>87</sup> Ibid. Trin. 8 John.

<sup>88</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 18.

<sup>89</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 27.

<sup>90</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 7 John.

<sup>91</sup> The name still survives in Garston Wood.

<sup>92</sup> Chart. R. 5 John, m. 26.

<sup>93</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 22 d.

<sup>94</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. II, m. 12.

<sup>95</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. II, no. 38; Close, 19 Edw. II, m. 34.

<sup>96</sup> Pat. 21 Edw. III, pt. iv, m. 19.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Bramshill Park extends into the parish of Mattingley, which includes Hazeley Heath tithing.

The church of ST. MICHAEL, CHURCHES HECKFIELD, has a chancel 29 ft.

by 14 ft. 10 in., north chapel of the same length and 15 ft. 9 in. wide, nave 59 ft. 6 in. by 23 ft. 6 in., north aisle 7 ft. 8 in. wide, north-west porch, and west tower 14 ft. 6 in. by 13 ft. 1 in.; all internal measurements.

Although the building is doubtless of some antiquity, it has been so completely modernized that very few of the old details are left to tell the history of the fabric. There seems to have been an aisleless nave and chancel here in the 13th century, or earlier. At the 'restoration' of 1876 (described in the churchwardens' account book, quoted below) a piscina was discovered in the north chapel, and pronounced by Mr. Butterfield, the architect of the rebuilding, to be of the 12th century; it was, for some reason, covered up again, so that his statement cannot be verified; the former doorways were placed about midway in the nave. The chancel appears to have been rebuilt towards the end of the 14th century. An early 14th-century window was found in the walling in 1876. The chancel had a new east window in the 15th century, but the first great enlargement of the building apparently did not take place before the beginning of the 16th century, when on the evidence of two monuments, dated 1514 and 1518, the chapel, aisle, and tower were added; the latter seems to have been largely rebuilt in brick in the 18th century, when much other work was done. The church appears to have fallen into a bad condition before the reconstruction of 1876 took place, in spite of a previous restoration in the earlier part of the century, when some poor work was put in, to be removed again later.

In 1876 the east wall of the chancel was mostly rebuilt, and the 15th-century window raised some two feet, and partly restored; the south wall was very little altered or touched, but the south-east corner, where the wall had cracked and settled, was built up again; the opening into the chapel from the chancel, hitherto only 6 ft. wide, was enlarged and a new arch inserted; a passage to the east of it through the wall into the vestry was built up, the space within the altar rails was raised and a step put for the table; the chancel arch, which at some previous time had been bricked up and narrowed to a width of only 10 ft., was opened to its present width and rebuilt; the roof of the chancel was in a very dilapidated state, and was replaced by an entirely new one. The chapel had new windows inserted, the doorway was altered, a solid wood screen at its west end removed, and a new archway put in, and the present vestry formed by a new screen; in the south-east corner was found the early piscina already mentioned. The south wall of the nave was pulled down to within three or four feet of the ground, and rebuilt with a slight curve to accommodate a bend in the roof; the south doorway, a little to the east of the middle of the nave, which used to be a principal entrance, was abolished, with its brick porch, and the three unsightly windows put in thirty-four years before were replaced by new ones; the four octagonal brick shafts and the heavy arches of the north arcade, the date of which could not be ascertained, but which were probably not older than the early part of the 18th century, were removed, and replaced by the present lighter stone pillars and arches. The north aisle wall was pulled down altogether in its whole length; it was 'very old,' of great thickness and strength, and composed of conglomerate or 'ferule' of the district, fixed with mortar almost as hard as Roman cement, so that it was a matter of difficulty to break it and take it down, and it fell in large masses when prised up from underneath; its foundations were not deep, its stability depending on its great thickness; in the wall near the west end was found the tracery of a window of probably early 14th-century work; it was too dilapidated to be re-used, and was copied in the new north windows; the wall was rebuilt chiefly of the old materials, much less thick, and a few feet to the south, so as to diminish the size of the church, the interior breadth of which was previously 47½ ft. (37½ ft.); the north entrance was moved from a little to the east of the middle of the aisle to its present position, and the porch built; two unsightly windows in the north wall, placed there about thirty-four years before, were replaced by new ones; and the roof of the aisle, formerly gabled, was replaced by a lean-to leaded one. The south doorway in the tower, which had been stopped up, was opened out and enlarged; and new oak treads were put to the steps of the stair, otherwise the tower was left unaltered. (Subsequently its windows and doorways were restored.) Other work done included the retiling of the floors, reseating, a new pulpit, and the removal of the monumental brasses to their present positions; two consecration crosses, a foot in diameter, which were found on either side of the east window, were again hidden; a small pane of very old yellow glass in a south window of the chancel was unfortunately broken, 'but one half of it still remains.' (This has apparently now gone.)

The east window of the chancel has three cinquefoiled lights under a traceried four-centred head; the tracery is the original 15th-century work, but the rest is of modern repair. In the south wall is an ancient trefoiled credence and piscina with a shelf at the springing line and grooves for another in the top foil; the drain is quatrefoiled, and set at the east end of the recess. The two south windows are alike in detail, but the eastern is a modern copy of the other, which dates from the end of the 14th century. Each has two ogee trefoiled lights with half quatrefoils over in a square head; between the windows is a blocked doorway of a hollow-chamfered order with a pointed head. A modern arch of 14th-century style opens from the western half of the chancel into the north chapel.

The chapel, the eastern half of which is used as an organ-chamber and vestry, has a high east window of three plain four-centred lights in brick. Both its north windows are modern; the first is a single trefoiled light, and has a modern drain on its sill, the second is of two trefoiled lights under a square head; between the windows is a modern pointed doorway. Over the arch to the aisle is a modern window of three lights.

The chancel arch is modern, having semi-octagonal responds with moulded capitals and bases, and a two-centred two-chamfered arch. The nave has five modern south windows, each of two lights and tracery under square heads. The north arcade is all modern, and has four bays with round pillars of 14th-century style, and pointed arches of a large single-chamfered order. The north-west doorway is modern, with a pointed head; the wall here is 4 ft. thick.

The aisle has three modern north windows, the first of three and the others of two trefoiled lights under square heads.

The porch is built in the north-west angle of the nave and aisle, and has a modern moulded outer doorway.

The tower arch is of brick plastered. In the west wall of the tower is a blocked doorway, partly of modern repair; it has two hollow-chamfered orders, with an arch under a square head. Over it is a 16th-century window of three plain four-centred lights, and a moulded square label with shield stops; much of it has been restored. The window to the chamber above is a plaster copy of the lower one. The bell-chamber is lighted by similar two-light windows with plain heads; they are mostly of late date. The stair-turret is at the south-east, and the parapet is embattled.

The walling, where visible, is built of the conglomerate usually called puddingstone, here very dark with iron and of very rough texture; but there is a good deal of red brick in the tower and elsewhere.

The roof of the chancel is gabled, and has a plaster-panelled ceiling with moulded wood ribs and bosses and moulded cornice; the nave is also gabled, and has a pointed plaster barrel vault with moulded wood ribs. The chapel is gabled and ceiled like the chancel; the aisle has a flat lean-to roof covered with lead; the others are tiled.

The Purbeck marble font is of the 15th century; it is octagonal in plan, and has traceried panelled sides to the bowl and stem. The other furniture includes a 17th-century altar table (now in the vestry), an ancient oak chest with pin hinges, a slit for coins in the middle of the lid, and a till at one end; on the lids are the marks of the three locks formerly used by the incumbent and wardens; part of the chest is of modern renewal, and in the tower is another later chest; the rest of the furniture is modern.

There are several old monuments in the church; the earliest is a brass set in the west wall of the chapel with the small figure of a lady, and the inscription:—Orate pro ātāb; Johā Hall et Elizabeth consortis sue 'qui quidm' Johē obiit xxv° die mensis Novembris A° dni M° V° xiiii ex cujus sumptib; hec capella construitur quor' ātābus ppicietur deus. On the step at the entrance to the chapel from the aisle is a second brass plate inscribed:—'Of yor charite pray for the soules of Thomas Wyfold, Em' & Annes his wyfes and all his chyldeyn, the whiche Thomas decessed the xxii day of May the yer of o' Lord m v° xxi on whose soullē Jhu have mercy.'

On the north wall of the nave is a brass inscription, removed from the chancel, where it was set to the north of the arch, to 'John Creswell and Isabel his wyfe, lord of this towne at the tyme of the byldyng of this stepyll and the newe yle and chapell in this cherche which John decessyd v day of Janever in A° dni m v° xviii on whos sowllē Jhu have mēy.' Over the inscription is his rebus—a cross and a well, with the initials J C—and the symbols of St. Luke and St. John.

Above this brass is a mural monument containing the kneeling effigy of a bearded man in armour facing those of his two wives; on the head of each of the three figures are curious flat tile-like headdresses, that of the man seeming to be entirely out of place, and put on at a later date to match the others. Behind the man are four sons, one an infant, and behind the ladies six daughters; below is the inscription to Thomas Cresswell 1607, son and heir of Richard Cresswell, died 1540, who was heir to Thomas Cresswell, died 1533, who was heir to John Cresswell, died 1518, who was heir to William, first lord of the manor of that name, who died 1475. His first wife was Alice daughter of Thomas Haydock, and the second, Jane daughter of Robert Baynard, by whom he had four sons and four daughters. The arms over the monument are Cresswell impaling: Argent a cross sable with a fleur-de-lis sable in the quarter for Haydock; and Cresswell impaling Baynard: Sable a fesse between two cheverons or quartering Or a double-headed eagle gules. In the back of the recess are painted the four sons' shields (reset upside down), with Cresswell quartering Baynard and six lozenges of the daughters, the first two with Cresswell quartering Haydock, and the other four quartering Baynard.

On the north wall of the chancel is another Renaissance monument, with a round-headed recess in which kneel the figures of a man and his wife with their two sons and three daughters, facing another man and wife with two daughters. The inscription reads: 'Prudence Humfry ye wife of William Humfry gent dedicated this monument to ye perpetuall meory of her most dear husband and father and mother and children June 3rd 1609. Henry Philips died 1591, Avis his wife died 1601, William Humfrey, gent., died 1608, Prudence his wife (space for date left blank).' The arms in the shields over are (1) Gules a crosslet argent, and thereon five roundels sable, for Humphrey, (2) Argent a lion sable chained or, for Philips, (3) Argent two cheverons sable and a chief gules. There are also two other defaced shields behind the figures.

On the other side of the chancel is a similar monument with the kneeling figure of a man in a black gown and the inscription to Henry Tomworthe of Ayleswardes in Mattingley, died 1608; it is followed by some verses; his arms are Argent a fesse dancetty between three cocks' heads razed sable with their combs and wattles gules.

In the north chapel are two brass inscriptions to Charles Huett, sub-treasurer to Queen Elizabeth in Ireland, 1627, and his son Charles, 1652.

There are five bells; the treble and the tenor are by Henry Knight, 1615; the second is inscribed: 'Love God 1641' and is also by Knight; the third is inscribed in Gothic capitals: + NOW : GOD : HELP : AND : HAVE : AL : ; and is by William Revel of London, c. 1350; and the fourth has 'Sancta Margareta, ora pro nobis,' and is from the Wokingham foundry, c. 1420.

The plate consists of a cup and cover paten of 1568, a pewter flagon inscribed on the handle R. M. 1637, and a pewter almsdish.

The registers—including that of Mattingley—begin in 1538; the first book is of paper, containing mixed entries of baptisms, marriages and burials thence to 1575; in November 1557 is the note, 'Sir Granger omytted the keypyng of thys book for iij whole yeres almost to the great hurte of many whō yt shall cu (concern ?) in questys'; it is followed by some blank sheets, beginning again in 1559; the second book is an unusually long and narrow one (about 23 in. by 5½ in.), in parchment, and contains baptisms, marriages, and burials from 1575 to 1605; the third is in paper, and has all three from 1605 to 1663, one in 1666, and several in 1676; there is a gap from 1627 to 1630, probably through the loss of two middle leaves; the fourth book, in parchment, continues all three from 1672 to 1714; the fifth takes them from 1729 to 1760; the sixth has marriages from 1754 to 1780; the seventh, marriages 1781 to 1812; the eighth, baptisms and burials 1761 to 1803; and the ninth, the same from 1803 to 1812.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The chapel at Mattingley (dedication unknown) is a small timber and brick building, consisting of a chancel 22 ft. by 14 ft. 6 in. with south vestry and organ chamber, nave 46 ft. 11 in. by 16 ft. 6 in., north and south aisles 6 ft. 3 in. wide, and a north porch. The chancel and nave date from c. 1500, and the aisles and vestry are modern additions. The walls are of vertical timbers filled in between with red brickwork set in herring-bone fashion, and plastered on the inside. The chancel is divided into two bays by moulded oak posts set against the walls inside; these support the roof trusses, which have braced and moulded tie-beams and an arched collar-truss over. The east window is an original one of five lights with four-centred uncusped heads; the north window in the second bay is also old, and has four similar lights. Below the windows runs a moulded wooden string, the wall beneath it being covered with 17th-century panelling in the east bay of the chancel. The vestry south of the chancel has a re-used south doorway with a four-centred arch in a square head.

The nave is divided from the aisles by arcades of five bays a side; these have moulded wood posts, of which the sides towards the nave are old and the remainder modern. The trusses are like those in the chancel, and between the posts are modern arched braces towards the aisles. The west window is a modern one of four lights. The aisles each have three four-light windows in their side walls, two-light west windows, and in the north aisle an east window also of two lights, all being modern copies of those in the chancel, and below them is fixed the old moulded string from below the sills of the original nave windows. The north doorway has a four-centred arch under a square head, and the north porch is also the original one, brought out when the aisle was added; it has four-light windows on either side and its double gates have pierced four-centred openings and moulded capping. The roofs are ceiled between the rafters and have moulded cornices, except that in the eastern bay of the chancel, which is panelled with moulded ribs, and that in the western bay of the nave, which is similarly treated, and has perhaps been the ceiling over the rood at the east end of the nave. There are carved bosses at the intersections of the panels, one with an Agnus Dei and another with an inscription, apparently "ihesus." Over the west end of the nave is an oak shingled bell-turret with a pyramidal roof; in it are two old bells; the smaller one has no inscription or mark, but its shape, and the square section of the sound-bow, mark it as early, perhaps of the 13th century, and the other is late 15th-century work, and bears a line of reversed black letter smalls 'TURQUIETO.'

In the north window of the chancel are a few fragments of old glass, some good quarries, part of a saint's head, and an inscription of four letters, which seems to be the title of the Cross.

The furniture is all modern; the font is of marble, and there is an octagonal font in the churchyard. At the west end is preserved the old altar-frontal dated 1667, which was in use down to 1887. It is of crimson velvet with silver embroidery, having INRI and the Hebrew name of God in a glory.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover, both of 1568.

For registers see Heckfield.

There was a church in Heckfield ADVOWSONS at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>97</sup>

The advowson continued with the Ports until 1202, when Adam de Port granted it to Robert de St. Manefeo,<sup>98</sup> and from that date it followed the descent of the manor until about the middle of the 14th century,<sup>99</sup> when Thomas de St. Manefeo granted it to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester.<sup>100</sup> William of Wykeham founded 'Seinte Marie College of Wynchestre,' afterwards called New College, Oxford, on 29 November 1379,<sup>101</sup> and a week later obtained licence to grant the advowson of Heckfield to the warden and scholars.<sup>102</sup> In January 1383 the official of the Archdeacon of Winchester reported in favour of the proposal to appropriate the church to the college as a further provision for the maintenance of its members,<sup>103</sup> and in June of the same year the appropriation was carried into effect.<sup>104</sup> At the present day the living is a vicarage of the net income of £270, with 5½ acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of the warden and fellows of the college.

At a very early date the Prior and convent of Merton had a chapel within their inclosure of Holdshot, where they had liberty to minister in divine things.<sup>105</sup> This chapel was only intended for the canons and their servants, and the other parishioners of Heckfield were not allowed to attend it on Sundays or other feast-days because it was incumbent upon them to attend the parish church of Heckfield. Moreover the servants of the canons were expected to hear service in the parish church on Christmas Day, on the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and on Easter Sunday.<sup>106</sup> By the end of the 14th century this chapel had been apparently replaced by a 'certain house in the vill of Mattingley, built instead of a chapel,'<sup>107</sup> and in 1387 William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, in answer to a petition

<sup>97</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>98</sup> Foet of F. Hants, East. 4 John.

<sup>99</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 15; 2032, fol. 138 d.; 2033, fol. 18.

<sup>100</sup> His gift was confirmed by his son and successor John de St. Manefeo in 1380 (Close, 4 Ric. II, m. 42 d.).

<sup>101</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 136.

<sup>102</sup> Pat. 2 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 2.

<sup>103</sup> His report ends by stating that the necessities and evident interests of the warden and scholars, who were seventy in number, demanded that the church should be appropriated to and united with their foundation for their support and maintenance, and that these things were so well known as to be beyond denial in the parish of Heckfield and in Oxford and the neighbourhood (Wykeham's Reg. [Hants Rec. Soc.], i, 138-42).

<sup>104</sup> Ibid. i, 142. The appropriation was confirmed in 1398 (Cal. of Papal Letters, v, 172).

<sup>105</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 75 d.

<sup>106</sup> Ibid.

<sup>107</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 394-5.

HECKFIELD : MATTINGLEY CHAPEL FROM THE NORTH-EAST

HECKFIELD : MATTINGLEY CHAPEL : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST of the Prior of Merton, gave licence to the vicar of Heckfield, or to a suitable chaplain chosen by him, to officiate in it until the Sunday after the ensuing Easter, at the same time forbidding parishioners of other churches to attend it.<sup>108</sup> In 1425 Pope Martin V granted licence to the inhabitants of Mattingley to have a cemetery at their chapel on their petition that the chapel had all parochial rights and insignia except burial, and that it was inconvenient for them to carry their dead to Heckfield, because Mattingley was distant 2 miles, and the waters between the two places were frequently in flood.<sup>109</sup> Mattingley continued to be a parochial chapelry dependent on the mother church of Heckfield until 13 January 1863, when it was formed into a district chapelry.<sup>110</sup> It was endowed with £1,000 capital out of the Common Fund on 11 December 1863,<sup>111</sup> and with a tithe rent-charge in Heckfield parish on 12 April 1864.<sup>112</sup> The living is at the present day a vicarage, net yearly value £136 with residence, in the gift of the warden and fellows of New College, Oxford.

At the beginning of the 13th century, by a convention between John parson of the church of Heckfield and Richard the Prior of Merton, it was agreed that the canons, who had been accustomed to pay 1 mark of silver annually in lieu of tithes, should pay henceforward to the church of Merton tithes from corn, beans, pears, apples, cherries, and hay, that they should be quit for ever from the payment of the mark and from tithes from assarts, and that their tenants should pay tithes in full.<sup>113</sup>

There is a private Roman Catholic chapel in Heckfield Place.

Robert Corham, by will dated 20 March 1593 (proved in the P.C.C. 1596), charged his property in Hartley Wintney, called the Blackhouse, with the yearly sum of 13s. 4d for the poor of this parish and Hartley Wintney. The rent-charge was redeemed in 1904 by the transfer to the official trustees of £26 13s. 4d. consols.

The sum of £13 6s. 8d. stock belonging to this parish has, by investment of surplus income, been augmented to £19 0s. 3d. consols, producing yearly 9s. 4d.

The table of benefactions in the church of Heckfield mentioned that John Woodcock gave to the poor of this parish 40s. a year charged upon a farm in Hazeley, called Barrant's, formerly belonging to Sir John Cope, bart.

In 1791 George, Lord Rivers, by will proved in the P.C.C., 1803, left £50 for the poor, which, augmented by subscriptions, is now represented by £100 consols with the official trustees.

It was stated on the table of benefactions in the chapel of Mattingley, that Mr. John Woodcock gave £4 per annum for ever, charged upon a farm in Hazeley called Barrant's, also that Mrs. Ann Blyeth gave 30s. per annum for ever, then payable out of certain lands called Wright's, which were duly distributed among the poor.

The Charity Commissioners, however, do not appear to have any recent information as to these gifts.

The Rev. John Taylor in his lifetime, about 1714, gave £50 to be employed in buying religious books for the poor of Heckfield and Mattingley.

The trust fund consists of £60 consols with the official trustees.

SILCHESTER

Silcestre (xi cent.); Ciltestere, Cilcestre (xiii cent.); Silcheestre (xiv cent.); Sylkchester (xviii cent.).

Silchester is a parish and village 3½ miles west from the Mortimer station on the Basingstoke and Reading branch of the Great Western Railway. On high ground reaching an elevation of over 300 ft. above the sea-level in the north of the parish is the site of the Romano-British city of Calleva.<sup>1</sup> The site consists chiefly of arable and pasture land inclosed by the remains of the Roman wall, and is nearly 2 miles in circumference. The walls in the south-east are the most perfect, being in some places nearly 12 ft. high. At the present time the only buildings within its boundaries are the Manor House—now used as a farm-house—and its appurtenances, and the parish church of St. Mary. Lord Jeffrey visited the site in 1833, and wrote thus to his friend Lord Cockburn: 'The whole stands upon a high lonely part of the country with only a rude low church and a single farm-house in the neighbourhood, but commanding a most lovely and almost boundless view over woody plains and blue skyey ridges on all sides of it. It is about the most striking thing I ever saw, and the effect of that grand stretch of shaded wall with all its antique roughness and overhanging wood, lighted by a low autumnal sun, and the sheep and cattle feeding in the green solitude at its feet makes a picture not soon to be forgotten.'<sup>2</sup> Lying as it did on the direct line of the great Roman road to Bath from London, Calleva was a commercial centre rather than a military town. The road now generally called The Devil's Highway can still be traced, as can also the other Roman roads connecting Calleva with Winchester, Salisbury, and the north. In the west of the parish is Silchester Common, comprising an area of about 174 acres. It was here that Queen Elizabeth, in her royal progress through England, was received by Francis Palmes, the sheriff of Hampshire, and other gentlemen of the county, on 5 September 1601. 'Her majesty sayd she was never so honorably received into any shire, for as Hampshire is a county pleasant of soile and full of delights for princes of this land who often made their progresses thither, so it is well inhabited by ancient gentlemen civilly educated and who live in great amity together.'<sup>3</sup>

The Primitive Methodist chapel and the schools are situated on the common, and on its eastern boundaries are the rectory, Silchester House, the residence

<sup>108</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 394-5.

<sup>109</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, vii, 394.

<sup>110</sup> London Gaz. 13 Jan. 1863, p. 211.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid. 11 Dec. 1863, p. 6482.

<sup>112</sup> Ibid. 12 Apr. 1864, p. 2027.

<sup>113</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 75 d.

<sup>1</sup> A full description is given of it in V.C.H. Hants, i, 350-72.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Cockburn's Works (1872), i, 446-7.

<sup>3</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 192-3.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

SILCHESTER CHURCH FROM THE SOUTH

of Mrs. Davis, and Silchester Hall—standing in its own grounds of about 102 acres—the seat of Mrs. Thorold. A stream called Silchester Brook intersects the eastern portion of the parish. The total area is 1,945 acres, of which 893½ acres are arable land, 438½ acres permanent grass, and 199½ acres woods and plantations.<sup>4</sup>

The soil is principally gravel, while the subsoil is chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, and oats.

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANOR there were two estates in SILCHESTER—one of 5 hides which Alestan had held of Edward the Confessor, and which was then in the possession of Ralph Bluet, who held of William de Ow,<sup>5</sup> and the other assessed at 3 hides and forming part of the possessions of Ralph de Mortimer, whose predecessor Cheping had held it of Earl Harold as an alod.<sup>6</sup> Ralph de Mortimer's holding passed probably to the Bluets, and from this time there was but one manor of Silchester, the property of the Bluet family. The overlordship had passed by the beginning of the 13th century from William de Ow to the Earl Marshal, who was returned by the Testa de Nevill as holding one knight's fee in Silchester of the old enfeoffment of the king in chief,<sup>7</sup> but whether he held it in right of his wife Isabel de Clare, sole daughter and heiress of Richard de Clare, Earl of Pembroke,<sup>8</sup> or in his own right as brother and heir of John Marshal, marshal of the King's Court and lord of the manor of MARSHAL, Earl of Pembroke. Party or and vert a lion gules.

Hampstead Marshall<sup>9</sup> (co. Berks.), is uncertain. It continued with successive Earls of Pembroke until 1245, when Anselm Marshal, Earl of Pembroke and Marshal of England, died without issue.<sup>10</sup> The knight's fee in Silchester was then apparently divided into moieties, half being assigned with the lordship of Hampstead Marshall, the castle of Strigul, and the honour of Carlow, to Maud, eldest sister of Anselm and widow of Hugh le Bigod, Earl of Norfolk;<sup>11</sup> and the other half, with the honour of Wexford and all rights of the earldom of Pembroke, to John de Monchensy, elder son of Warine de Monchensy by Joan, youngest sister of Anselm.<sup>12</sup> The former moiety passed to Roger le Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, son and heir of Hugh,<sup>13</sup> and on his death in 1270 descended to his nephew Roger le Bigod, Earl of Norfolk.<sup>14</sup> Roger died seised of half a knight's fee in Silchester in 1306,<sup>15</sup> when, according to his surrender of 1302,<sup>16</sup> it passed to the Crown with all his other possessions, and became merged therein.<sup>17</sup> It continued with the Crown until 16 December 1312, when Edward II created his brother Thomas of Brotherton Earl of Norfolk, and granted him all the lands held by the late earl.<sup>18</sup> The other moiety of the knight's fee in Silchester passed from John de Monchensy to his brother and heir, Sir William de Monchensy, and from the latter to his only daughter Denise, wife of Hugh de Vere.<sup>19</sup> Denise died without issue in 1313, and the whole of her possessions passed Bigod, Earl of Norfolk. Or a cross gules.

<sup>4</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).
<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 492a.
<sup>6</sup> Ibid. 490b.
<sup>7</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 233b.

<sup>8</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vi, 198.
<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 200.
<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 203.
<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 204.
<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 205.
<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 40.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.
<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. I, no. 46.
<sup>16</sup> Vide Pat. 32 Edw. I, m. 19.
<sup>17</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vi, 40.
<sup>18</sup> Ibid.
<sup>19</sup> Ibid. 205.

to her cousin Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, son and heir of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, by Joan, only daughter of Warine de Monchensy.<sup>30</sup> Thus in 1323 the overlords of Silchester were Thomas, Earl of Norfolk, and Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke.<sup>31</sup> In 1325 half a fee in Silchester was assigned to Elizabeth Comyn, afterwards wife of Richard Talbot, niece and co-heiress of Aymer de Valence, in the partition of knights' fees of that earl;<sup>32</sup> and in 1348 the manor of Silchester was said to be held of Richard Talbot and Elizabeth his wife by the service of one knight's fee.<sup>33</sup> After this date the overlords of the manor are variously returned. Thus, in 1415, 1438, 1449, 1481, 1521, 1536, 1576, 1597, 1611, and 1623, the manor was stated to be held of the lords of the manor of Hampstead Marshall,<sup>34</sup> but in 1490 and in 1501 the Marshal of England and Sir Walter Herbert respectively, as holders of the manor of Strigul, are given as the over-lords.<sup>35</sup>

VALENCE, Earl of Pembroke. Burelly argent and azure an orle of martlets gules.

Returning, however, to the actual holders of the manor, another Ralph succeeded the Ralph Bluet of the Domesday Book, and was holding in 1167;<sup>36</sup> and in 1204 Ralph Bluet, probably his son, gave a palfrey for licence to inclose a park in his manor of Silchester.<sup>37</sup> In 1228 Ralph granted half a virgate of land in Silchester to William de Waterschete,<sup>38</sup> and he was still holding the manor in 1233, in which year the king ordered the sheriff of Hampshire to give seisin to Eleanor, Countess of Pembroke, of the land of Ralph Bluet in Silchester which was of her fee.<sup>39</sup> John Bluet was the owner towards the end of the 13th century, accompanying his overlord, the Earl of Norfolk, on the king's service into Wales in 1287.<sup>40</sup> He married Eleanor, the widow of William de Brianzon, in 1311,<sup>41</sup> and the next year two-thirds of the manor were settled upon him and his wife in fee tail.<sup>42</sup> He was returned as holding the vill of Silchester in 1316,<sup>43</sup> but he had died before 17 January 1317, as is apparent from a patent roll of that date nominating William de Northo in his stead in a commission of oyer and terminer originally issued to William de Hardene and John Bluet.<sup>44</sup> His widow Eleanor went on pilgrimage beyond the seas in 1321,<sup>45</sup> but two years later was summoned to deliver up the bodies of her daughters Margaret and Eleanor—the co-heiresses of John Bluet—to William de Cusaunce, the king's clerk, to whom Thomas, Earl of Norfolk, and Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, as overlords, had sold their marriage.<sup>46</sup> Although she had petitioned the king for permission to keep her daughters with her by reason of their tender age,<sup>47</sup> she was forced to comply with this order, and in 1327 sought consolation in a third marriage, in that year obtaining licence to marry whom she would of the king's allegiance.<sup>48</sup> William de Cusaunce gave Margaret in marriage to Sir William de Cusaunce, probably his nephew, while he bestowed the hand of Eleanor upon Edmund Baynard.<sup>49</sup> Although Eleanor, the mother, had a life interest in the manor of Silchester, Sir William de Cusaunce, as lord of Silchester, granted a lease of premises in that vill to Nicholas le Heir of Silchester, his wife, and their sons, in 1342;<sup>50</sup> and in 1346 Peter de Cusaunce, son and heir of William,<sup>51</sup> and Edmund Baynard were stated to be holding one knight's fee in Silchester formerly belonging to John Bluet.<sup>52</sup> Eleanor, in conjunction with her third husband, Sir John de Peyton,<sup>53</sup> sought to recover tenements in Silchester from Sir Peter de Cusaunce and others in 1347,<sup>54</sup> but died the following year. By an inquisition taken in 1348 it was stated that she had been holding the manor of Silchester, including a park and a windmill, at her death, and that her heirs were her daughter Eleanor Baynard and her grandson Sir Peter de Cusaunce.<sup>55</sup> In 1349 the king assigned to Eleanor Baynard half the manor of Silchester, afterwards called THE NETHER COURT,<sup>56</sup> but Sir Peter de Cusaunce, being a minor, did not obtain livery of his moiety, afterwards called THE OVER COURT, until 1350, in which year he came of age.<sup>57</sup> Sir Peter was sheriff of Wiltshire in 1377, and presented to the church of Hilmarton (co. Wilts) in 1380,<sup>58</sup> but he probably died soon afterwards without issue, and his moiety of the manor consequently passed to his cousin Philip Baynard, son and heir of Edmund and Eleanor.<sup>59</sup> Philip Baynard, as lord of the manor of Silchester, presented to the church on 10 April 1394,<sup>60</sup> and eleven years later settled the moiety of the manor called the Over Court upon his son Robert and Joyce his wife in fee-tail.<sup>61</sup> Upon the death of Philip Baynard, in 1415, the other moiety, called the Nether Court, passed to Robert,<sup>62</sup> and was by him probably settled upon his son and heir by his first marriage, Philip. In 1428 Robert Baynard and Philip Baynard were stated to be holding one fee in Silchester, formerly belonging to Sir Peter de Cusaunce and Edmund Baynard,<sup>63</sup> but ten years later Philip gave up his right to the Nether

<sup>30</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, 206-7.

<sup>31</sup> Close, 17 Edw. II, m. 30.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. II, m. 11.

<sup>33</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 30.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid. 3 Hen. V, no. 27; 16 Hen. VI, no. 47; 27 Hen. VI, no. 19; 21 Edw. IV, no. 33; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxxvii, 131; lviii, 31; clxxv, 101; ccxlix, 84; cccxix, 1946; cccclii, 150.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. vi, 66; xv, 11.

<sup>36</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), xi, 190.

<sup>37</sup> Rot. de Oblatis et Finibus (Rec. Com.), 221.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 12 Hen. III.

<sup>39</sup> Close, 17 Hen. III, m. 4, 5.

<sup>40</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. I, m. 7.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. 5 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 6.

<sup>42</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Edw. II.

<sup>43</sup> Feud. Aids (Rec. Com.), ii, 313.

<sup>44</sup> Pat. 10 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 36 d.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. 14 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 24.

<sup>46</sup> Close, 17 Edw. II, m. 30.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 29.

<sup>49</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 30.

<sup>50</sup> Add. Chart. 1532.

<sup>51</sup> Sir William de Cusaunce had died in 1345, leaving as his heir his son Peter, aged fifteen (Inq. p.m. 19 Edw. III [1st nos.] no. 62).

<sup>52</sup> Feud. Aids (Rec. Com.), ii, 331.

<sup>53</sup> He was in all probability her third husband, although he does not seem to be called so specifically anywhere. The same John obtained licence to have a chapel in his manor of Lackham (co. Wilts.), which formerly belonged to the Bluets (Wilts. Mag. iv, 2), and it is probable that he was holding it in right of Eleanor.

<sup>54</sup> Close, 21 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 27 d.

<sup>55</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 30.

<sup>56</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 206; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 9, 21.

<sup>57</sup> Close, 24 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 23.

<sup>58</sup> Wilts. Mag. iv, 2.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid. 6.

<sup>60</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 190.

<sup>61</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Hen. IV; De Banco R. Trin. 6 Hen. IV, m. 357 d.

<sup>62</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Hen. V, no. 27.

<sup>63</sup> Feud. Aids (Rec. Com.), ii, 346.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Court to William Brocas and Robert Dyneley,<sup>54</sup> who in turn conveyed to Joyce widow of Robert Baynard in March 1439.<sup>55</sup> Robert Baynard, who had died in 1438,<sup>56</sup> was survived ten years by his widow, and on her death the whole manor passed to John Baynard, her son and heir by Robert.<sup>57</sup> John presented to the living twice during the episcopacy of William Waynflete<sup>58</sup> (1447–86), but had died without issue before 1470, in which year the manor was settled upon his widow, Agnes, for life, with remainder to his sister Thomasina, wife of Richard Martin of Edenbridge (co. Kent), and her issue, with contingent remainder to Robert Baynard, son and heir of his half-brother, Philip Baynard.<sup>59</sup> Agnes Baynard died in 1481,<sup>60</sup> and on the death of Thomasina Martin without issue eight years later,<sup>61</sup> the manor passed, in accordance with the settlement, to Robert Baynard, who died in 1501, leaving a son and heir Philip.<sup>62</sup> On his death in 1521 Philip was succeeded by his son and heir Robert,<sup>63</sup> who died in 1535, leaving a son and heir Edward, aged nineteen.<sup>64</sup> Edward died forty years later, and was followed by his son and heir Robert,<sup>65</sup> who in 1589 conveyed the manor to Thomas Gardiner, citizen and grocer of London.<sup>66</sup> From the latter it passed by purchase five years later to William Dunche of Little Wittenham<sup>67</sup> (co. Berks.), who died in 1597 at the age of eighty-nine, and lies buried at Little Wittenham. His son and heir Edmund<sup>68</sup> died seised of the manor of Silchester in 1623, his heir being his grandson Edmund, son and heir of his son Sir William,<sup>69</sup> who had died in 1611.<sup>70</sup> Edmund, an ardent republican, who suffered much loss in the Civil Wars by his adherence to the cause of his kinsman Oliver Cromwell,<sup>71</sup> parted with Silchester, the purchaser probably being Sir Thomas Draper, bart., of Sunninghill Park (co. Berks.), who presented to the rectory in 1667.<sup>72</sup> Sir Thomas died without male issue in 1703,<sup>73</sup> and the following year his widow Mary, and his two daughters and co-heirs, Mary widow of John Baber, DUNCHE. Azure a chevron between three castles or.

and Elizabeth wife of Henry Ashurst,<sup>74</sup> sold the manor to Murrough Boyle, Viscount Blessington,<sup>75</sup> son and heir of Dr. Michael Boyle, Archbishop of Armagh.<sup>76</sup> The manor passed in marriage with Anne, youngest daughter of Viscount Blessington, to William Stewart, Viscount Mountjoy, who died in 1727.<sup>77</sup> Their son and heir, William Stewart, Viscount Mountjoy, who was created Earl of Blessington in 1745, died without issue in 1769,<sup>78</sup> and the manor then passed to Charles Dunbar, son and heir of Captain David Dunbar, by Mary daughter of Sir John Dillon of Lissmullen (co. Meath), by Mary eldest daughter of Murrough Boyle, Viscount Blessington.<sup>79</sup> Charles Dunbar, who died without issue in 1778, by will made elaborate arrangements for keeping his estates, of the annual value of £10,000, in the family of 'the late primate Boyle,'<sup>80</sup> bequeathing his property in Wicklow and Kildare to Wills Hill, Earl of Hillsborough, great-grandson of Eleanor, second daughter of the archbishop,<sup>81</sup> and the rest of his estates in moieties to Thomas, Viscount de Vesci, great-grandson of Elizabeth eldest daughter of the archbishop,<sup>82</sup> and Edward Michael, Earl of Longford, great-grandson of Honora Frances, third daughter of the archbishop.<sup>83</sup> From Thomas, Viscount de Vesci, and Edward Michael, Earl of Longford, the moieties of the manor of Silchester descended respectively to their sons and successors, John, Viscount de Vesci,<sup>84</sup> and Thomas, Earl of Longford,<sup>85</sup> who dealt with them by recovery in 1805,<sup>86</sup> and by fine in 1817.<sup>87</sup> Eleven years later these joint-owners sold the manor to Arthur Wellesley, first Duke of Wellington,<sup>87a</sup> and it now belongs to his grandson the fourth duke.

The church of OUR LADY consists of a chancel and nave 62 ft. 10 in. long, of which 22 ft. is to the east of the screen, north aisle of two bays 30 ft. 5 in. by 7 ft. 10 in., south aisle 29 ft. 5 in. by 9 ft. 4 in., and north and south porches. All these measurements are internal.

The peculiar features of the plan are the absence of a chancel arch and the unusually short aisles and nave, the chancel being more than half the total length of the building. There may have been a 12th-century aisleless nave which regulated the length of the present one, and the chancel, which was

<sup>54</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 17 Hen. VI.

<sup>55</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 27 Hen. VI, no. 19.

<sup>56</sup> Inq. p.m. 16 Hen. VI, no. 47.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 27 Hen. VI, no. 19.

<sup>58</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 36 d, 59 d.

<sup>59</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 10 Edw. IV.

<sup>60</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. IV, no. 33.

<sup>61</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), vi, 66.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid. xv, 11.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid. xxxvii, 131.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid. lviii, 31.

<sup>65</sup> Ibid. clxxv, 101.

<sup>66</sup> Close, 29 Eliz. pt. vii; see also Close, 32 Eliz. pt. xvi; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 33 Eliz.; Recov. R. Trin. 33 Eliz. rot. 22; Close, 35 Eliz. pt. viii.

<sup>67</sup> Close, 36 Eliz. pt. xiv. In the same year Laurence and Thomas Baynard, uncles of Robert, quitclaimed their right to the manor to William Dunche (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Eliz.).

<sup>68</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxlix, 84.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid. cccii, 150.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid. cccxix, 194b.

<sup>71</sup> Mark Noble, Memoirs of Protectoral Family of Cromwell, ii, 161.

<sup>72</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>73</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, iii, 35.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid.

<sup>75</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 3 Anne. Six years later Mary Baber and her son and heir, John Draper Baber, quitclaimed their right to the manor to Murrough Boyle (ibid. 9 Anne).

<sup>76</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 362–3.

<sup>77</sup> Ibid.

<sup>78</sup> Ibid.

<sup>79</sup> Archdall, Lodge's Peerage, i, 148–9. He dealt with it by fine in 1772 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 12 Geo. III).

<sup>80</sup> P.C.C. will, 442 Hay.

<sup>81</sup> Eleanor married William Hill and had a son, the Right Hon. Michael Hill, who died in 1699. His son Trevor Hill was created Lord Hill and Viscount Hillsborough on 21 Aug. 1717, and died in 1742. Wills Hill, son and heir of the latter, was created Earl of Hillsborough on 28 Aug. 1772 (Archdall, Lodge's Peerage, ii, 328–33).

<sup>82</sup> Elizabeth married Denny Muschamp and had a daughter Mary, who became the wife of Sir Thomas Vescy, bart. The issue of this marriage was Sir John Vescy, bart., created Lord Knappton on 10 April 1750. On his death in 1761 he was succeeded by his son Thomas, created Viscount de Vesci of Abbeyleix (Queen's co.) on 19 June 1776 (Archdall, Lodge's Peerage, vi, 33–35).

<sup>83</sup> Honora Frances married Francis Cuffe and had a son, Michael Cuffe, who died in 1744, leaving as his heir his daughter Elizabeth, who became the wife of Thomas Pakenham. Thomas Pakenham was created Earl of Longford in 1756, and on his death in 1766 was succeeded by his son, Edward Michael, Earl of Longford (Archdall, Lodge's Peerage, i, 147–9; G.E.C. Complete Peerage, v, 136).

<sup>84</sup> C.E.C. Complete Peerage, iii, 99.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid. v, 136.

<sup>86</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 46 Geo. III, rot. 394–6.

<sup>87</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 57 Geo. III.

<sup>87a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. George F. North, agent of the Duke of Wellington.

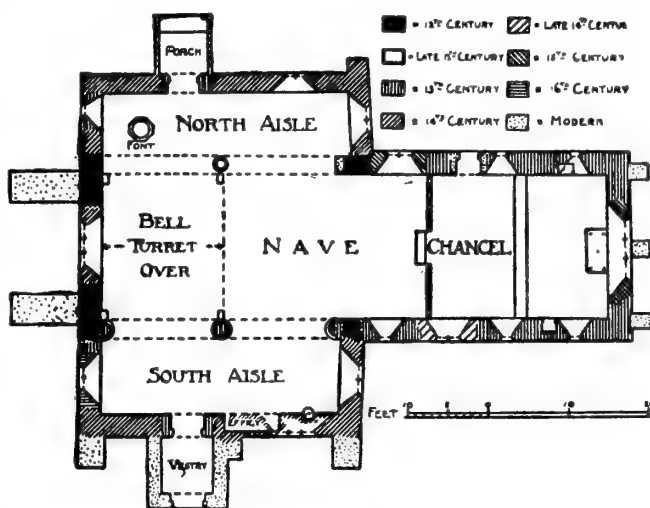

built about 1230, was probably an enlargement of an earlier one; the north aisle was added at the end of the 12th century, and the south aisle probably a little later than the chancel. In the 14th century the aisle windows (excepting that at the west of the north aisle) were replaced by larger openings, and a new west window to the nave inserted; another window was put into the south wall of the chancel later in the same century, and in the 15th the east window of the chancel and a north lancet were replaced by larger windows. The west window of the south aisle and some gable lights are modern insertions or repairs. The church has been very well treated in modern restorations.

The east window is a 15th-century one of three cinquefoiled lights under a traceried two-centred head, its jambs and arch are of two hollow-chamfered orders, and over it is a modern gable light; the east wall has been strengthened by three low brick buttresses. The first and second windows in the north wall of the chancel are 13th-century lancets; under the first is a plain square aumbry with rebated edges all round. A priest's doorway, now disused, pierces the wall just west of the second window; it is of a single chamfered order, and has a two-centred head with an oval-shaped rear-arch; the doorway is old, but the position in the wall points to its being later than the wall in which it is set. The third window, west of the chancel screen, is a 15th-century insertion of two cinquefoiled lights (the middle foil ogee-shaped) under square heads; the jambs are moulded with a filleted round between two hollows. In the south wall the first two windows are lancets like those opposite, with old masonry pattern diaper on heads and jambs, and there is also a similar locker between them, but no piscina. The third window is probably a late 14th-century insertion of two trefoiled pointed lights under square heads, and is set low in the wall close to the screen; the fourth window, west of the screen, is another 13th-century lancet.

The two bays of the north arcade of the nave have a circular column with a moulded base (a hollow between two rounds), and an irregular eight-sided capital carved with small scallops, each with a sunk face. The east respond is a square one of modern stonework, and there is none against the west wall, the arches at both ends being carried on chamfered abaci, which are supported by two rounded corbels; part of the eastern abacus and one of its corbels are modern. The pointed arches are two-centred, and of a single edge-chamfered order. The south arcade also has two bays, with a circular pillar and half-round responds; the bases, of which the eastern is modern, are of a single round; the capitals are irregularly octagonal with hollow-faced abacus and a roll above the bell. The arches are two-centred and chamfered—the chamfer being larger than that of the opposite arcade—and have a moulded label rounded above and hollowed below. The west window of the nave is a 14th-century one of three trefoiled ogee-headed lights under a two-centred head filled with net tracery, and having a moulded label; the outer of the two orders of the jambs is hollowed and splayed, the inner chamfered.

The north aisle has an east window of two ogee trefoiled lights with a quatrefoil above in a two-centred head with a label; it is partly of modern stonework outside. The only window in the north wall is one near the east end; it is of the unusual form of two trefoiled ogee lights, each set in pointed arches under a square head, and is probably of mid-14th-century date. The north doorway is of 13th-century workmanship; the jambs and arch are of a single chamfered order, and have moulded abaci; the label is enriched with dog-tooth ornament, but ends about 18 in. above the springing of the arch. The west wall of this aisle is pierced by a lancet window; it may be of 13th-century date, but differs from those in the chancel in having three small chamfers externally and two hollows inside; it is also set unusually close to the north wall.

The south aisle has a 14th-century east window of two trefoiled ogee-headed lights under a pointed arch inclosing a quatrefoil; it has no label on either side, but inside are two human-head corbels, as though there was one originally.

PLAN OF SILCHESTER CHURCH

In the south wall is a window of the same date and style, but of three lights; this also has two human-head label stops inside, but no label. Below the window is a small piscina with a single chamfered two-centred arch and round label; the upper half of its sill is half round in plan, the lower semi-octagonal; both halves are moulded with several small rolls. West of this is a good 14th-century tomb recess with a cinquefoiled ogee arch, the foils having roll points. In it lies the contemporary effigy of a lady in a wimple and veil, mantle and cote hardi; her feet rest on a dog, and at her head are two angels.

The south doorway is apparently a 13th-century one with a pointed head, the jambs and arch having a plain edge roll. The west window of the aisle is cemented outside, and is of two round-headed lights; over it is a modern gable light. The walls of the whole building have been covered with cement and 'pebble-dashing' outside, and the north porch is a modern one of wood. The south porch is also a modern one, but more substantially built of stone; it is lighted on either side by two-light windows, and has a pointed outer doorway. Set in its east wall is what appears to be a corner of a 12th-century font bowl with panelled sides and a scalloped capital, to which a modern shaft has been fitted. Over the outer entrance, inside the porch, is another old stone—a portion of a small panelled frieze with an embattled cornice; the panels are eight-foiled diamonds, and had small shields painted on them; the whole is part of a larger panel, and two of the shields have on them a bend fusilly.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The roof of the chancel and nave is gabled and all modern except for the plain tie-beams. The south aisle also has a modern gabled roof, but the stone corbels taking the timbers are of 14th-century date; they are carved as human heads and grotesque beasts. The north aisle is a 'lean-to' of modern date. Above the west bay of the nave, and supported by heavy posts from the floor, is a plain wood bell-turret with square openings to the bell chamber; it has a boarded pyramidal roof.

The font at the west end of the north aisle is of 15th-century workmanship; it is octagonal, and has a moulded base and bowl. The pulpit is hexagonal, made up with late 17th-century woodwork, but over it hangs an octagonal canopy which is inscribed: 'The gift of James Hore, gent, 1639.' It has a domed top surmounted by a dove, and a cornice with semicircular arches and pendent fleurs-de-lis, all enriched with carving; the soffit is panelled. The chancel screen belongs to the early years of the 16th century; it is divided on either side of the middle doorway into two bays by heavy moulded posts, each bay having four traceried openings; below is a heavy middle rail and solid lower panels. The tracery in the three southern openings is modern, but the rest is old and of very pretty design, the rose and pomegranate occurring in it. The whole is much patched and altered and has a line of cresting set upside down in the middle opening. Above the head beam is a beautiful band of open carving with kneeling angels holding scrolls, between two bands of cresting; between each pair of angels is a large leaf. The rest of the furniture is modern.

In the churchyard east of the chancel are laid two 14th-century gravestones, much overgrown with moss; one is carved in low relief with the heads and shoulders of two persons, and below them a long foliated cross. The other has a man's head set in a quatrefoil sinking with a cross below.

There are five bells; the treble is inscribed, 'The gift of John Parres, D.D., late Rector of Ilchester, J.S., B.F. (i.e. John Stares, bell-founder), 1744'; the second by W. Taylor, 1848; the third by John Stares, 1744; the fourth is also by John Stares; and the tenor is of the same make, but bears the date only—1744.

The plate consists of a cup and cover paten of 1572, a paten of 1757, given by Mrs. Rebecca Taylor, a flagon 1635, given in 1636 by James Hare and Anne his wife, and a pewter plate.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1653 to 1779, marriages 1653 to 1754, and burials 1653 to 1675; the second has burials from 1678 to 1779, and has a black-letter copy of the 'Burial in Woollen' Act; the third book has marriages from 1754 to 1812; the fourth has baptisms 1780 to 1812; and the fifth burials 1780 to 1812. There are also some churchwardens' accounts from 1698 to 1768.

The advowson of the church has throughout followed the descent of the manor,<sup>68</sup> the living at the present day being a rectory in the gift of the Duke of Wellington.

The parish is possessed of 4 acres CHARITIES arising from a gift in 1671 of Richard Hyde and others, now let at £10 10s. a year, the rents to be distributed among twelve of the poorest people on Good Friday and St. Matthias Day. The net income, together with the annual dividends on £121 os. 5d. consols with the official trustees, amounting to £3 os. 4d., is duly applied.

STRATFIELD MORTIMER

(MORTIMER WEST END)

Mortimer West End, once a tithing of the parish of Stratfield Mortimer (county Berks), was constituted an ecclesiastical parish in 1870, and a civil parish in 1894. It is situated 3 miles west from Mortimer station, on the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway. The parish of Silchester bounds it on the south, and the county of Berkshire forms its northern, eastern, and western boundaries. The village is grouped round the church of St. Saviour and the vicarage, immediately to the north of a ford across the West End Brook, which rises in Kiln Pond, and runs due east. The Roman road running north from Silchester can still be traced in its course through this parish. In the east of Mortimer West End are many detached copses, and the north and west are composed wholly of woods and plantations, which altogether cover an area of 948 acres. The total area of the parish is 2,191 acres, including 710½ acres of arable land, and 395 acres of permanent grass.<sup>1</sup> The soil is gravelly and clay, and the subsoil clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley, and turnips.

Mortimer West End has always MANOR formed part of the manor of Stratfield Mortimer (co. Berks), the descent of which is given under that county. Mr. James Herbert Benyon of Englefield House, Reading, as lord of the manor of Stratfield Mortimer, is the principal landowner in the parish.

The church of ST. SAVIOUR is a small CHURCH building, which was erected in 1856. It consists of a chancel and a nave with a south organ chamber, west vestries, and a south porch. The walls are of flint with stone dressings, and the roofs are tiled. Over the west gable is a stone bell-cot containing one bell.

<sup>68</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 9 d.; 2033, fol. 31 d.; 2034, fol. 36 d. 59 d. 88; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 190;

Pat. 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 12; pt. ii, m. 7; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

SILCHESTER CHURCH : THE CHANCEL SCREEN

STRATFIELDSAYE CHURCH : MONUMENT TO SIR WILLIAM PITT AND EDITH, HIS WIFE

The plate is modern.

The registers date from 1860.

Since the building of the church
ADVOWSON the advowson has belonged to the Benyon family. At the present day the living is a vicarage of the yearly value of £183 with residence, in the gift of Mr. James Herbert Benyon.

A Nonconformist chapel, known locally as the Mortimer Meeting-house, is situated in the extreme west of the parish near the Berkshire boundary

STRATFIELDSAYE

Stradfelle (xi cent.); Stretfeld Magna, Stratfeld Stuteville (xiii cent.); Strattefeud Say, Stratford Say (xiv cent.); Strathfieldsay (xvi cent.); Stratfield Sea (xviii cent.).

Stratfieldsaye is a village and parish on the Berkshire border of the county, 3½ miles south-east from Mortimer station on the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway. The River Loddon forms its eastern boundary, while the great Roman road from London to Bath, from which it derives its name, now generally called The Devil's Highway, forms the county boundary on the north. The elevation of the parish ranges from about 160 ft. above the ordnance datum in the extreme east by the Loddon to nearly 300 ft. above the ordnance datum in the west. Stratfieldsaye Park, which is about 1 mile broad by 1½ miles long, and contains altogether 1,500 acres, covers the eastern corner of the parish, and extends into the neighbouring parishes of Hartley Wespall, Stratfield Turgis, Heckfield, and Swallowfield (co. Berks.). It is much diversified, and has some fine old trees, oaks, elms, and hawthorns, scattered over its heights and hollows. Stratfieldsaye House is pleasantly situated, overlooking the Loddon, which is expanded into several sheets of ornamental waters. From Swallowfield it is approached by a very fine avenue of Cornish elms about a mile in length, and another well-known avenue of Wellingtonias leads out to Heckfield Heath. In the grounds north of the house are some cedars of Lebanon, and some tulip-trees, said to be the finest in England, while in a paddock near the south-eastern corner, under the shade of a Turkish oak, is the grave of the great duke's famous charger, Copenhagen, who died in 1825, and was buried with military honours. The rectory house and the church of St. Mary the Virgin are situated near the western extremity of the park. This church was built by the first Lord Rivers in 1784, and superseded one which stood to the north-west of the stables on what is now called the old churchyard. The village, with the New Inn, the schools, and a recreation ground, lies a short distance to the west of the junction of cross roads in about the centre of the parish. Farther to the west there are two small hamlets, West End Green and Fair Oak Green, the latter of which contains an iron church which was erected in 1881 as a chapel of ease at the sole expense of the then rector, the Rev. Horace George Monro, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge. Stratfieldsaye covers an area of 2,743 acres, of which 1,089¾ acres are arable land, 1,680 acres permanent grass, and 106½ acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> The soil is various, while the subsoil is chiefly clay. Chequer Green, Fair Oak Green, and West End Green were inclosed by authority of the General Inclosure Acts on 14 March 1866.<sup>2</sup>

Beech Hill was formed into an ecclesiastical parish on 31 January 1868, out of the Berkshire portion of Stratfieldsaye,<sup>3</sup> and was transferred from the diocese of Winchester to that of Oxford on 30 April 1869.<sup>4</sup> It is situated 1½ miles east from Mortimer railway station. A short distance to the east of the village, on the banks of the Loddon, is the Priory, now used as a gentleman's residence, and hard by, the Cannon Bridge over the Loddon marks the connexion of the abbey of St. Mary Vallemont with the place. Beech Hill House, a large and plain mansion of brick, is the seat of Lieut.-Colonel Henry Lannoy-Hunter, B.A., J.P. It was purchased by his ancestor Henry Lannoy-Hunter in 1740 from the Harrison family, who had long possessed it. The soil is clay, and the subsoil gravel. The chief crops are wheat, beans, and grass. The area is 945 acres of land and 4 acres of land covered by water.

The following place-names in the parish are found in extant records:—Meadows called 'Langhome,' 'Heywoodland,' 'Square Burghfield,' 'Rough Burghfield,' 'Goddard Hills,' 'The Wirgg,' and 'Yarrow Land,'<sup>5</sup> (xvi cent.); messuages called 'Nutbeames,'<sup>6</sup> 'Fower Landes,' and 'Elains' or 'Faire Crosse House,' and a green called 'Foure Land Greene' (xvii cent.).

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANORS there were probably three estates in the parish of STRATFIELDSAYE<sup>7</sup>—one assessed at 7½ hides, which Bundi had held of Edward the Confessor, and which then belonged to Hugh the son of Baldri;<sup>8</sup> another which Hugh was holding of Gilbert de Breteville, the holder of the king's manor of Swallowfield<sup>10</sup> (co. Berks.), and the third assessed at 2 hides, and in the possession of Alvrice, who had succeeded Godric and Siward, the holders in the reign of King Edward.<sup>11</sup> It is probable that the first two holdings merged and became the later manor of Stratfieldsaye, while the third estate possibly represents the later Heywood's Farm, the history of which is given below. In the 12th century the manor was owned by the Stoteville family, as is apparent from various charters in the possession of Eton College, and from that circumstance it was called the manor of STRATFIELD STOTEVILLE. William de Stoteville, the founder of the hermitage of St. Leonard, Stratfieldsaye, a possession of the abbey of St. Mary

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Inclosure Awards Blue Bk.

<sup>3</sup> Lond. Gaz. 31 Jan. 1868, p. 460.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 30 Apr. 1869, p. 2550.

<sup>5</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 51, no. 156.

<sup>6</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xxi, m. 13.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 10 Chas. I, pt. i, no. 5.

<sup>8</sup> It is impossible to speak with certainty, as Stratfield Mortimer, Stratfieldsaye, and Stratfield Turgis are entered alike in Domesday Book as 'Stradfelle.'

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants. i, 496a.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 495b.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 505a.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Vallemont, in Normandy, was the lord of the manor towards the close of the 12th century, and in answer to his petition Joscelyn, Bishop of Salisbury, and Hubert, Archbishop of Canterbury, between 1193 and 1205, confirmed the grant made by him to Godard and his successors at the Hermitage.<sup>12</sup> Alice wife of Ellis de Boeles is called the heiress of Stratfield in the charter whereby she confirmed to Godard the hermit and the brethren of that place the gifts made by her father William de Stoteville,<sup>13</sup> but whether she succeeded William directly or followed Robert de Stoteville, whose gifts to the abbey of St. Mary Vallemont were confirmed by his relict Leonia,<sup>14</sup> is uncertain. It seems probable, however, that her father gave Stratfield to her in free marriage, for the manor was subsequently held of the Stotevilles. Thus John de Stoteville is given as the overlord in the Testa de Nevill,<sup>15</sup> and Robert de Stoteville as overlord<sup>16</sup> had the custody of the lands and heir of the deceased lord of the manor at the beginning of the reign of Edward I.<sup>17</sup> Alice married as her second husband Robert de Say, and in conjunction with him granted land at Stratfield to the monks of Stratfield.<sup>18</sup> The land of Robert de Say at Stratfield is mentioned in a charter of 1227 disafforesting certain parts of Berkshire,<sup>19</sup> but the exact date of his death is uncertain. He was apparently succeeded by Sir William de Say, in whose life-time the name of the manor was changed from Stratfield Stoteville to Stratfieldsaye. Thus in 1260-1 William, as "William de Say of Stratfieldsaye," released the abbey of St. Mary Vallemont and the hermitage of St. Leonard from the obligation of paying suit at his court,<sup>20</sup> whereas some time previously he had granted a piece of land at Stratfield Stoteville to the church of St. Leonard, and the monks there.<sup>21</sup> William at his death left a widow Sybil and a son Robert,<sup>22</sup> who died at the beginning of the reign of Edward I, leaving a widow Emma and an infant son Thomas.<sup>23</sup> In 1278 Sybil de Say was successful in recovering the third part of the manor as her dower from Robert de Stoteville,<sup>24</sup> but Emma de Say refused to give up her son to his custody, and therefore went dowerless.<sup>25</sup> Thomas de Say presented a rector to the church of Stratfieldsaye during the episcopacy of John of Pontoise<sup>26</sup> (1282-1304), and in 1312 the manor was settled on him and his wife Isabel in fee tail, with contingent remainder to John Bluet the lord of Silchester and his heirs.<sup>27</sup> Thomas, as Sir Thomas de Say, presented to the church between 1323 and 1333,<sup>28</sup> and died leaving as his heir his daughter Sybil.<sup>29</sup> His widow Isabel subsequently married John Wace,<sup>30</sup> who as lord of the manor presented to the church during the episcopacy of Adam Orilton<sup>31</sup> (1333-45). Even after the death of Isabel John seems to have retained the manor. Thus he obtained licence from William Edendon, Bishop of Winchester (1346-66), to hear mass in the oratory of his house in the parish of Stratfieldsaye,<sup>32</sup> and in 1346 it was stated that John Wace and Margaret his wife were holding three-quarters of a knight's fee in Stratfieldsaye formerly belonging to Thomas de Say.<sup>33</sup> It was probably on this account that Edward III in 1347 commanded the fine of 1312 to be inspected,<sup>34</sup> and soon afterwards no doubt John Wace surrendered the manor to Sybil, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas de Say. The name of Sybil's husband is unknown,<sup>35</sup> but before 1370 the manor had passed into the Dabridgecourt family<sup>36</sup> by the marriage of her only daughter and heir Elizabeth with Sir Nicholas Dabridgecourt.<sup>37</sup> Sir Nicholas died on 20 May 1400,<sup>38</sup> and on the death of his widow four years later the manor passed to his son Sir John Dabridgecourt,<sup>39</sup> who died on 18 August 1418, leaving a son and heir John.<sup>40</sup> The latter, who had married Agnes daughter of William Bekingham in 1428,<sup>41</sup> immediately after attaining his majority,<sup>42</sup> died in 1431, leaving an infant son Thomas,<sup>43</sup> and the manor then passed, in accordance with the terms of the marriage settlement, to his widow,<sup>44</sup> who subsequently married William Brocas of Beaurepaire.<sup>45</sup> Agnes granted 9 messuages, 1 mill, 9 gardens, 100 acres of land, and 6 acres of meadow in Stratfieldsaye to her son Thomas Dabridgecourt in 1453,<sup>46</sup> probably on the occasion of his marriage with his wife Beatrice, but remained lady of the manor of Stratfieldsaye till her death in 1470. Her heir was her grandson Thomas, son of her son Thomas,<sup>47</sup> who had died in 1466.<sup>48</sup> On his DABRIDGECOURT. Ermine three bars gules cut off at the ends.

STOTEVILLE. Burelly argent and gules.

<sup>12</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. ix, App. i, 355.
<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 355-6. <sup>14</sup> Ibid.
<sup>15</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234, 238b, 257b.
<sup>16</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, file 17, no. 6.
<sup>17</sup> De Banco R. no. 21, m. 82 d.; no. 23, m. 2.
<sup>18</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. ix, App. i, 356.
<sup>19</sup> Chart. R. 11 Hen. III, pt. i, m. 5; Cart. Antiq. PP. 55.
<sup>20</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. ix, App. i, 356.
<sup>21</sup> Ibid.
<sup>22</sup> Vide De Banco R. no. 21, m. 82 d.; no. 23, m. 2.
<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, file 17, no. 6.
<sup>24</sup> De Banco R. no. 21, m. 82 d.; no. 23, m. 2.
<sup>25</sup> Ibid. no. 23, m. 2.
<sup>26</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 26 d.
<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Edw. II.
<sup>28</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 75 d.

<sup>29</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 10 Hen. VI, no. 29.
<sup>30</sup> Vide De Banco R. no. 351, m. 416 d.
<sup>31</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 146 d.
<sup>32</sup> Ibid. MS. 2033, fol. 64.
<sup>33</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331.
<sup>34</sup> De Banco R. no. 351, m. 416 d.
<sup>35</sup> He may possibly have been Thomas de St. Leger, who according to an inquisition taken in 1364 was at one time lord of the manor of Stratfieldsaye (Inq. p.m. 38 Edw. III [2nd nos.], no. 6). It is more probable, however, that Thomas was the first husband of Sybil's daughter Elizabeth. (See Heckfield).
<sup>36</sup> Nicholas Dabridgecourt as lord of the manor presented to the church in that year (Wykeham's Reg. [Hants Rec. Soc.], i, 29).
<sup>37</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 10 Hen. VI, no. 29.
<sup>38</sup> Topog. and Gen. i, 197-207.
<sup>39</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. IV, no. 16.

<sup>40</sup> Topog. and Gen. i, 197-207.
<sup>41</sup> The marriage settlement was drawn up in June 1428 (Pat. 6 Hen. VI, pt. ii, m. 19; Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 6 Hen. VI).
<sup>42</sup> He came of age on the morrow of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, 1428 (Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. VI, no. 76).
<sup>43</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Hen. VI, no. 29.
<sup>44</sup> In 1431 'Agnes, who was the wife of John Dabridgecourt, esq. of Northlye of Oxfordshire gentelman,' was stated to be holding the manor of Stratfieldsaye as of a free tenement by the service of half a knight's fee (Feud. Aids, ii, 362).
<sup>45</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 & 10 Edw. IV, no. 46.
<sup>46</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Hen. VI.
<sup>47</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 & 10 Edw. IV, no. 46.
<sup>48</sup> His will is dated 2 Nov. 1466. It was proved a fortnight later (P. C. C. Will 15 Godwyn).

death in 1495 he was succeeded by his son and namesake,<sup>49</sup> who made good his title to the manor in 1538,<sup>50</sup> and died seised two years later.<sup>51</sup> George Dabridgecourt, son and heir of Thomas, died on 26 February 1559,<sup>52</sup> having by will dated on the day of his death bequeathed £100 each to his daughters Dorothy and Susan, with the proviso however that 'if it fortune eyther of my said daughters to contracte theymselves in marriage without the consent of my wyf or my overseer, then I will she so misbehaving herself to be rewarded at their discretion.'<sup>53</sup> His son and heir Thomas, who was afterwards knighted, and was sheriff of Hampshire in 1583, died in 1614, and was followed by his son Henry.<sup>54</sup> The latter died fifteen years later, and was succeeded by his son and heir George,<sup>55</sup> who sold the manor for £4,800 to Edward Pitt, son and heir of Sir William Pitt, in 1629.<sup>56</sup> Edward Pitt died in 1643, leaving a son George,<sup>57</sup> concerning whom the major-general of Hampshire wrote as follows to the Council in 1656<sup>58</sup>: 'That his father died in 1643 leaving him a minor to the tuition of his kinsman Sir Ralph Hopton then in arms. That petitioner had frequently to repair to him for advice in the management of his estate. That, as soon as he had means to travel he went to France in 1644, and remained till the end of the first war. That he was never sequestered and was acquitted on examination by the Committee of Dorset of ever having acted against the state. That this notwithstanding, on Parliament's vote for voluntary discoveries, he having been under a delinquent guardian offered himself for composition to the Commissioners at Goldsmiths' Hall and paid the £1,200 fine. That in 1648 he voluntarily lent Parliament £700 on the Public Faith, and bought on the state's title to bishops', deans', and chapters' lands, and on the whole matter the Commissioners could find no cause of delinquency against him, but because he had compounded they conceived themselves bound by instructions not to discharge him, yet for his good affection and the character given him by several of repute they recommend him for grace. That George Pitt be discharged from any proceedings against him or his estate by the Majors-Generals and that letters be written accordingly.'<sup>59</sup> On his death in 1694 he was followed by his son George, who died in 1734, leaving as his heir his son and namesake.<sup>60</sup> The last-named, at his death in 1745, left as his heir his son, likewise named George, who was created Lord Rivers of Stratfieldsaye on 20 May 1776, and died on 7 May 1803, aged eighty-two.<sup>61</sup> From his son and heir George Pitt, second Lord Rivers, the manor was purchased by the nation in 1817,<sup>62</sup> and granted to Arthur Wellesley, first Duke of Wellington, 'to be held to him and his heirs of the king and his heirs and successors as of his castle of Windsor in free and common soccage by fealty and rendering to his majesty, his heirs and successors on the eighteenth day of June in every year at the Castle of Windsor one tri-coloured flag for all manners of rents, services, exactions and demands whatever.' The owner of Stratfieldsaye at the present time is Arthur Charles Wellesley, fourth Duke of Wellington, nephew of Arthur Richard Wellesley, the second duke, who succeeded his father the first duke in 1852 and died without issue in 1884.<sup>63</sup>

Stratfieldsaye House is a plain building of little architectural interest. In plan it consists of a main block facing north-west and south-east with wings at either end, which form, with a central portico, an E-shape on the north-west front, but are only of slight projection at the back; beyond them at either end are later additions. The house is of two stories with plain rectangular windows, and an attic with square dormer windows in the roof. Between the first-floor windows on the main front are shallow Ionic pilasters, and there are also four round-headed niches for figures, and a small pediment as a central feature. The ends of the wings have curved and pedimented gables.

It is not improbable that some parts of the building date from the 16th century and the time of the Dabridgecourts, but it has been so much altered and enlarged since then that it is difficult to trace the original work. The greater part of these enlargements were carried out by Lord Rivers who, in 1795, added the long gallery, the dining-room, the library, the present billiard-room, the duke's sitting-room, and two ground-floor bedrooms; he also raised the ceiling of the hall to its present height by the abolition of the rooms then above it. The first Duke of Wellington built the first-floor rooms and attics to the two wings, also the rooms for the first duchess over the dining-room. In the long gallery, which is on the south-east front, are a series of engravings cemented to the finely-plastered walls. This was done by Lord Rivers, but the third duke had them inclosed with gilt frames and the walls painted a dead gold.

Under the floor of the 'steward's room' in the north wing there is a paved chamber containing a large copper or boiling apparatus supposed to have

WELLESLEY, Duke of Wellington. Gules a cross between twenty roundels argent for WELLESLEY quartered with Or a lion gules for COLLEY; with a scutcheon in the chief of the Union badge of the United Kingdom.

PITT of Stratfieldsaye. Sable a fesse chequy argent and azure between three bezants.

<sup>49</sup> Topog. and Gen. i, 197-207. His widow Alice married Richard Elyot as her second husband (Early Chan. Proc. bdle. 199, no. 63).

<sup>50</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. East. 30 Hen.VIII, m. 13.

<sup>51</sup> Topog. and Gen. i, 197-207. His widow Elizabeth married as her second husband Richard Awdley, and in 1558 was holding 12 messuages and lands in Stratfieldsaye in dower (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cxix, 145).

<sup>52</sup> Ibid.

<sup>53</sup> P.C.C. Will 24 Chaynay.

<sup>54</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 51, no. 156.

<sup>55</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxviii, 94.

<sup>56</sup> Close, 5 Chas. I, pt. vii, no. 6; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 5 Chas. I. Vide also Recov. R. Trin. 9 Chas. I, rot. 60.

<sup>57</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 101.

<sup>58</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, iii, 2041-2.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid.

<sup>60</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 101.

<sup>61</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vi, 374-7.

<sup>62</sup> Under the provision of Acts 53 Geo. III, cap. 4, 54 Geo. III, cap. 161, and 55 Geo. III, cap. 186.

<sup>63</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, viii, 80-4. He succeeded his brother Henry Wellesley, the third duke, who was the first surviving son and heir of Major-General Lord Charles Wellesley, second son of the first duke, who died in 1858.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

been used by Lord Rivers as a laundry or a structure wherein food was prepared for his dogs, and a number of sheep bones and other debris found below the drawing-room points to there having been a pond there before the space was inclosed in the house.

In the entrance hall is a number of portrait busts of various generals and other contemporaries of the first duke, one being a striking bronze of Marshal Massena; an interesting historic relic is the duke's banner which formerly hung above his stall as Knight of the Garter in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

There are several portraits of the duke, but the finest is probably the half-length figure by Sir Thomas Lawrence, which hangs in the dining-room.

Several Silchester relics are preserved here, notably two of the earliest found pavements, and a bronze eagle. The tennis-court (built by the first duke) and the stables stand to the north-west of the house.

The elm avenue in the park already mentioned is said to be over 150 years old, planted by the first Lord Rivers; between the elms are horse chestnuts planted by the first Duke of Wellington. The avenue as it nears the house is succeeded by one of yew trees, which expands and surrounds the oval plot in front of the house. On the west side of the latter, and between it and the kitchen gardens, is the 'American garden,' laid out by the first duke's gardener with rhododendrons, azaleas, araucarias, etc., and with a basin and fountain in the centre.

There were two mills appurtenant to the manor at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>64</sup> In the inquisition taken after the death of Elizabeth Dabridgecourt in 1404 three mills are mentioned as belonging to the manor—two water-mills of the yearly value of £2 and one fulling-mill worth 6s. 8d. a year.<sup>65</sup> A mill is included in the settlement made by Agnes Brocas on her son Thomas Dabridgecourt in 1453,<sup>66</sup> and this probably represents the modern Stanford Mill, north of the park just within the Berkshire borders.<sup>67</sup> A free fishery in the Loddon was another appurtenance of the manor.<sup>68</sup>

The park of Stratfieldsaye dates back to 1261, in which year Henry III granted licence to William de Say to inclose his wood of Hangre, which was within the metes of the forest of Pamber, and to make it into a park there.<sup>69</sup>

Towards the end of the reign of Edward III the bond-tenants of Stratfieldsaye claimed their freedom in accordance with an indenture made by Thomas de Say when lord of the manor. An inquisition on the subject was held in 1364, and it was ascertained that after the death of Thomas de Say the indenture had come into the possession of Robert de St. Manefeo, lord of the manor of Heckfield, who had sold it to the bond-tenants for £55, but that Thomas de Say and Isabel his wife and all other lords of the manor had been seised of the bond-services of the tenants as much after the date of the indenture as before.<sup>70</sup>

HEYWOOD'S FARM, in the south of the parish, a little to the west of the River Loddon, perpetuates the name of the Heywood or Haywode family, by whom it was held for about three centuries. In the 12th century Osbert de Heywood granted an acre of land to St. Mary and St. Leonard-on-Loddon and the brethren serving God there.<sup>71</sup> In the 13th century a John de Heywood witnessed a grant of land in Stratfield made by William de Say,<sup>72</sup> while some time later John son of John de Heywood obtained an acre of land at Stratfield from William Neuman.<sup>73</sup> During the episcopacy of Adam Orilton (1333-45) licence to hold service in his oratory within the parish of Stratfieldsaye was granted to Nicholas de Heywood,<sup>74</sup> and in 1348 1 messuage, 2 carucates of land, 20 acres of meadow, 10 acres of wood, and 50s. rent in Stratfieldsaye were settled upon him in fee-tail with contingent remainder to Walter de Heywood,<sup>75</sup> who had obtained 1 toft, 50 acres of land, 6 acres of meadow, and 3 acres of wood in the same place from John de la Penne and Agatha his wife four years previously.<sup>76</sup> Walter eventually succeeded, and in 1403, with Thomasina his wife, sold all his lands and tenements by the description of 6 messuages, 6 tofts, 240 acres of land, 30 acres of meadow, 66 acres of pasture, the crop and pasture of 20 acres of meadow, 12 acres of wood, a fishery, and a weir in 'Dene-mede,' and rents of 26s. 8d., one pound of pepper, and one pound of cummin in Stratfieldsaye and Bramley, together with the right of bearing the Heywood arms, to John Fromond.<sup>77</sup> This holding appears to have passed soon afterwards by sale, for it is probably represented by the 3 messuages, toft, and lands in Stratfieldsaye, Heywood, Bramley, Heckfield, &c., of which Agnes widow of William Brocas died seised in 1470.<sup>78</sup> In the 16th century, as the 'manor of Heywood,' it appears in the possession of the lords of Wolverton. Edward Barrett died seised in 1586,<sup>79</sup> and from that date Heywood has followed the descent of Wolverton<sup>80</sup> (q.v.), its present owner being Arthur Charles Wellesley, fourth Duke of Wellington.

The reputed manor<sup>81</sup> of BEECH HILL or BEECH HILL WYKE was held of the manor of Stratfield Mortimer, and followed the same descent as the manor of Stratfieldsaye (q.v.) until 1606, when Sir Thomas Dabridgecourt and Margaret his wife granted it to their daughters Elizabeth and Susan.<sup>82</sup> The former married Sir Stephen Leysyure, while the latter became the wife of Charles Evans.<sup>83</sup> In 1634 Charles Evans and Susan granted a twenty-one years' lease of the manor to Sir Francis Knollys,<sup>84</sup> while two years later they gave up all their right to Edward Pitt,<sup>85</sup> the owner of Stratfieldsaye. From this date this manor has again followed the same descent as the

<sup>64</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 496a.

<sup>65</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. IV, no. 16.

<sup>66</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Hen. VI.

<sup>67</sup> The water corn-mill called Stanford Mill is mentioned several times in the 17th century as an appurtenance of the manor (W. and L. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], bdle. 51, no. 156; Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cccclxviii, 94; Close, 5 Chas. I, pt. vii, no. 6).

<sup>68</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 51, no. 156.

<sup>69</sup> Chan. Inq. a.q.d. file 2, no. 14.

<sup>70</sup> Inq. p.m. 38 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 6; Pat. 38 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 11.

<sup>71</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. ix, App. i, 356.

<sup>72</sup> Ibid. <sup>73</sup> Ibid.

<sup>74</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 146 d.

<sup>75</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Edw. III.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid, Trin. 18 Edw. III.

<sup>77</sup> Ibid. 4 Hen. IV; Add. Chart. 24697.

<sup>78</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 & 10 Edw. IV, no. 46.

<sup>79</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 21, no. 226.

<sup>80</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 13 Geo. III, m. 79; Close, 22 Geo. III, pt. xvii, no. 18; Recov. R. Hil. 21 Geo. III, rot. 38.

<sup>81</sup> It is first called a manor at the beginning of the reign of James I (W. and L. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], bdle. 51, no. 156).

<sup>82</sup> Feet of F. Berks. Hil. 4 Jas. I.

<sup>83</sup> Topog. and Gen. i, 197-207.

<sup>84</sup> Feet of F. Berks. Trin. 10 Chas. I.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid. Div. Co. Hil. 12 Chas. I.

manor of Stratfieldsaye (q.v. supra), the present owner being the fourth Duke of Wellington.

In 1294, when difficulties arose as PRIORY to the alien priories owing to the war MANOR with France, Edward I had the whole of their property and goods valued throughout England.<sup>86</sup> The Prior of Stratfieldsaye at that time held a messuage with dovecote within the precincts of the priory manor worth 6s. 8d. a year. He held also 100 acres of arable land worth 25s. a year, 7 acres of meadow worth 8s. 9d. a year, and 6 acres of underwood worth 1s. 6d.; total, £2 1s. 11d. There were seven free tenants holding 2 virgates at a rent of £1 15s. 9d. The prior also drew a pension of £3 11s. 8d. from the church of Stratfieldsaye, making the total annual value £7 9s. 4d.<sup>87</sup>

In 1342 another inquiry was held concerning the possessions of the priory, and it was ascertained that it held lands, rents, a mill, and a dovecote in Berkshire of the yearly value of £3 14s. 3d., and lands and rents in Hampshire worth £1 16s. 1d. a year.<sup>88</sup> It was also returned that it was burdened with the keep of two monks, and that it was incumbent on it to give one night's shelter and a meal to every one who sought the charity of the hermitage.<sup>89</sup> In 1378 a further extent of the priory was taken, and its gross annual value was given as £13 9s. 2½d., from which had to be subtracted every year £6 13s. 4d. for the support of one chaplain, 2s. rent to the lord of Stratfieldsaye, and 3s. rent to the lord of Burghfield.<sup>90</sup> The priory remained the property of successive kings of England until 1461, when Edward IV granted it with all its possessions in free alms to the 'Provost and the College of St. Mary's Eton by Windsor.'<sup>91</sup> The provost and fellows are still the owners of the priory, which retains no features in its existing portions later than 1648.

ETON COLLEGE. Sable three garden lilies argent and a chief party azure and gules with a fleur-de-lis or in the azure and a leopard or in the gules.

The church of OUR LADY is a brick CHURCH building in the shape of a Greek cross, and was built by George Pitt, afterwards Lord Rivers, in 1784. It was dedicated on 1 September 1758 by John Thomas, Bishop of Salisbury, by permission of Benjamin Hoadley, then Bishop of Winchester.<sup>91a</sup> It consists of a chancel, a nave, and north and south transepts, with a north organ chamber, and a west portico, and over the centre of the building is a low octagonal tower with a slated cupola. The exterior is very plain, with round-headed brick windows and a brick cornice; but the proportions are not unpleasing, and the three arches of the west portico have a good effect. Within, the altar is set in a recess with a semicircular head, lighted by a triple window now filled with glass in memory of the third Duke of Wellington; the nave and north transept are filled with galleries, and all fittings are modern. There is a good 18th-century alabaster font at the west end of the nave, but the chief interest of the building lies in the monuments. There are mural monuments with busts of the second and third Dukes of Wellington in the south transept, but the earliest memorials to former possessors of Stratfieldsaye are two plates of brass on the north side of the chancel. The first one bears an inscription in black letter which begins as follows: 'Epitaphm Georgii Dabrigecort armigeri (nup dom de Stratfeldsay) a filio suo et herede Thoma Dabrigecort paulo post morte cōditū obiit 27 die februarii anno dñi 1558,' &c.

The other piece of brass is small and has simply the words: 'per me Thomā dabrigecort.'

On the west jamb of the arch opening to the organ-chamber is an inscription to John Howsman, rector, 'who here continued a paynfull Preacher by the space of 41 yeares.' He died in 1626. The inscription is set in a carved stone frame with an arched panel over containing a kneeling figure.

On the south side of the south transept is a large monument to Sir William Pitt and his wife Edith, set up by their eldest son Edward Pitt. The husband died in 1636 and the wife in 1633. The effigies of alabaster are of very good workmanship, as is the whole tomb, and the sculptors, John and Matthew Christmas, have set on it their name and the date 1640. The two effigies recline on their left arms, that of Sir William at a higher level than his wife; he wears a long, furred gown, and holds a scroll in his right hand; she rests her elbow on a cushion and holds a small book. Below is a panelled front, the side panels of which are carved in alabaster as grated openings through which skulls and bones are seen. The inscription is on a black marble slab above the effigies, and over it is a broken pediment with entablature carried by two Corinthian columns. In the pediment are the arms of Pitt.

There are also two shields on the back of the tomb, the first being Pitt impaling Gules a fesse vairy or and azure between three goats' heads razed argent, for Catesbury, which latter coat appears in the second shield.

To the east of this is a large mural monument accompanied by fourteen shields of arms, of which the first nine refer to the matches of Edward Pitt and his children.

1. Pitt impaling Gules a goat's head razed argent having its horns or, quarterly with ermine, for Morton (Edward Pitt and Rachel Morton his wife).
2. Pitt impaling Argent six lioncels sable, for Rivers (George Pitt and Lady Jane Rivers his wife).
3. Pitt impaling Azure two bars argent with the difference of a martlet sable, for Venables (John Pitt and Katherine Venables his wife).
4. Pitt impaling Argent a cheveron between three griffons' heads razed gules, which are the arms of Tilney.
5. Pitt impaling Ermine a lion sable, for Jeffreys (Francis Pitt and Elizabeth Jeffreys his wife).
6. Pitt impaling Or three piles gules and a quarter ermine, for Bassett, impaling Pitt (Christopher Pitt and Dionisia Bassett his wife).
7. Argent three rams passant sable, for Sydenham or Sidnam, impaling Pitt (Charles Sydenham and Edith Pitt his wife).
8. Argent crusilly fitchy with a cheveron between three mill-rinds sable and a chief ermine, for <sup>86</sup> Article on the alien priory of Stratfieldsaye (V.C.H. Berks. i, 113).

<sup>87</sup> Ibid.

<sup>88</sup> Inq. p.m. 16 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 73.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid. 2 Ric. II, no. 91.

<sup>91</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 24.

<sup>91a</sup> Ex inform. Ev. lyn, Duchess of Wellington.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

- Kingsmill, impaling Pitt (John Kingsmill and Rachel Pitt his wife).
9. Sable three voided lozenges argent, for Whitaker, impaling Pitt (Francis Whitaker and Katherine Pitt his wife).
  10. Pitt impaling party fessewise in chief Argent, a cross between four lozenges gules, in base Barry argent and azure a label of five points gules bezanty.
  11. Sable three lions passant bendwise argent, between double cotises argent (with the badge of Ulster) impaling Pitt.
  12. Lozengy gules and argent, quartering Gules three martlets bendwise between double cotises argent, impaling Pitt.
  13. Azure three mullets or, impaling Pitt.
  14. Argent a chevron between three griffons' heads razed gules impaling Pitt.

The inscription reads :—' Here were inter'd in the year 1643 ye Bodies of Edw Pitt Esq. Sonn & heire of S<sup>r</sup> W<sup>m</sup> Pitt K<sup>t</sup> and Rachell his wife the eldest Daughter of S<sup>r</sup> George Morton of Milborne in the County of Dorsett Barr<sup>t</sup> by whom he had issue Tenn Sonns (viz.) W<sup>m</sup> and two Edwards who dyed unmarried. Nich<sup>s</sup> and Samuel not maryed when this was ingraven. John maryed to Katherine Daughter of Nich<sup>s</sup> Venables of Andover in the County of South'ton Esq. Thomas Maryed to Frances Daughter of Giles Cossey of Cosseys Compton in y<sup>e</sup> County Gloucester Esq. Francis Maryed to Eliz: Daughter of Jeffery Jefferyes of Alburcunick in ye County of Brecon Esq. Christopher ye youngest Maryed to Dionisia sister of S<sup>r</sup> W<sup>m</sup> Bassett of Carlton in ye County of Suffersett. He had allsoe four Daughters: Edith Maryed to Charles Sydenham Esq. Sonn and heire of S<sup>r</sup> Edw. Sydenham Knigt-Marshall. Rachell Maryed to John Kingesmill of Sandelford in the County of Berkes Esq<sup>r</sup>. Katherine Maryed to Francis Whitaker of St. Martins in the County of Midelsex Esq. Eliz. the youngest dyed in her Infancy. George the third Sonn by Birth became (in ye year 1643) the Eldest Sonn and heire of Edward & Inter-Maryed with the Right Honourable Jane Lady Chandos 2nd Daughter to John Earle Rivers and Relict of George Lord Chandos Baron of Sudeley by whom he had four sonns George William John and Edward and four daughters Mary Eliz: Jane & Ann all living at the Death of their Mother who departed this life the 6 of June 1676 to the greate Griefe of all that knew her,' &c. Her husband erected this monument in 1681, and was himself buried here in 1694.

On the lower part of the same monument is an inscription to George Pitt, esq., 1734, and Lucy (Pile) and Lora (Grey) his first and second wives.

To the west of Sir Wm. Pitt's monument is one to George Lord Rivers, 1803, with life-size figures in white marble in classic costume, and a ridiculously laudatory inscription.

On the south wall of the nave is a brass on which is inscribed an elegy on the death of Eustace Dabrigecourt, written by John Howsman, rector. He died at sixteen, and his father, Thomas, died in 1594, the date of the son's death not being given.

On the floor of the west portico are the indents of several brasses, one of which had the figures of a man and a woman with an inscription below and the figure of one child. A scroll from the man's mouth evidently bore an address to his patron saint, whose figure was above him, and close to its indent is a cross, from which it seems that the stone is an altar-slab re-used. There are, however, no signs of crosses at the other three corners of the slab. In one of them is the indent of a shield. To the right of the man is the indent of a vertical strip of brass. A second slab has the much-worn indents of two large figures under a canopy flanked by shields, and two other slabs preserve only the nails which fastened brasses to them.

The cupola contains five bells, the treble, second, and third being by Thomas Swain, 1756, the fourth by Thomas Mears, 1841, and the tenor by John Warner & Sons, 1864.

The plate consists of a cup and cover paten of 1650 with the names of the churchwardens for 1667; a silver gilt cup of 1712, given by George Pitt and Lora his wife in that year; a paten belonging to it; another plain silver gilt paten; two flagons, silver, of the same date and gift; and a silver plate inscribed M.D.

The registers begin in 1539, the first book containing baptisms from 1671, marriages to 1672, and burials to 1673. The second has baptisms and burials from 1673 to 1770, and marriages to 1754; the third continues the marriages from 1754 to 1799, the fourth baptisms and burials from 1771 to 1812, and the fifth marriages from 1799 to 1812. They have also all been indexed into the names of the various families.

A church existed in the parish at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>92</sup>

The advowson was granted to the abbey of St. Mary Vallemont by William de Stoteville. His gift was confirmed by Alice wife of Ellis de Boeles,<sup>93</sup> but subsequently the abbey seems to have given up its right to the advowson to the lords of the manor in return for an annual pension.<sup>94</sup> The advowson has from this time followed the same descent as the manor,<sup>95</sup> the living at the present time being a rectory, net yearly value £383, with 18 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Wellington.

The question of tithes was dealt with by the Court of Exchequer in the reign of George II.<sup>96</sup>

From Mrs. Forbes, who created the living of Beech Hill by buying the tithes from the rector of Stratfield-saye, the advowson passed to her only surviving child, Miss Forbes, who, dying in 1908, left it by will to her cousin, Lieut.-Colonel Henry Lannoy-Hunter, B.A., J.P.

In Beech Hill there is a chapel for Baptists, founded in 1796, with 140 sittings, and an endowment for a minister.

The charity of George Pitt and CHARITIES others for educational purposes and for poor in sums of 5s. each, formerly consisted of a farm in Odiham of 33 acres, purchased in 1739, with donations of Mrs. Lora Pitt and other members of the family. The farm was sold in 1880 to Sir Henry Mildmay, bart. The trust funds, which were augmented in 1892 by a gift of £100 by the

<sup>92</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 496a.

<sup>93</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. ix, App. i, 355b.

<sup>94</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 374;

Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 104; De Banco R. no. 415, m. 252; Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. II, no. 91.

<sup>95</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 26 d; 2032, fol. 75 d, 146 d; 2034, fol. 25, 60, 88 d, 172; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 29, 107, 160; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>96</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 15 Geo. II, no. 4.

HOLDSHOT HUNDRED STRATFIELD TURGIS

Rev. H. G. Monro, now consist of £1,163 14s. 2d. consols.

By an order of the Charity Commissioners of 13 October 1903, made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, three-fourths of the trust funds, namely, £872 15s. 8d. stock, producing yearly £21 16s. 4d., was determined to be the educational foundation, and one-fourth, namely, £290 18s. 6d. stock, to be the eleemosynary branch of the charity.

The poor also receive £10 a year from the trustees of the charity of James Christmas in Sherfield upon Loddon, founded by will 1735.

In 1791 George, Lord Rivers, by will proved in the P.C.C. 1803, bequeathed £60 for the poor, which, augmented by subscriptions, is now represented by £109 1s. 10d. consols.

'The Stratfieldsaye Charity,' founded by deed of 10 March 1879, consists of £114 4s. 11d. consols, the dividends being applicable for the benefit of poor persons resident in the parish.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees. The income of the eleemosynary charities, amounting to about £20 a year, is applied in money gifts varying from 5s. to £1 to each recipient.

STRATFIELD TURGIS

Stradfelle (xi cent.) ; Stratfeud Turgis (xiii cent.) ; Stratfeld Turgys (xiv cent.) ; Stretfeld Turgeys (xv cent.) ; Turges (xvi cent.).

Stratfield Turgis is a village and parish situated 4½ miles south from Mortimer station, on the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway. Its northern and western boundaries are formed by the River Loddon. The elevation varies from about 250 ft. above the Ordnance datum in the east to about 160 ft. in the west by the banks of the Loddon. Stratfieldsaye Park extends into the north of the parish. One of its lodges is situated on the main road from Basingstoke to Reading, which intersects the parish, and the inn, 'The Wellington Arms,' hard by, marks the association of the Iron Duke with Stratfield Turgis. The church of All Saints is situated near the river, some little distance west of the main road, and quite away from the small and scattered village. The churchyard contains a fine yew tree, but is otherwise rather bare. Adjacent to it, but on the other side of the stream, is the old manor-house called Turgis Court, access to the church being gained through the farmyard. The rectory, which was built by the patron in 1858, stands a short distance to the north-east on the borders of Stratfieldsaye Park. On 22 December 1879 a detached part of Stratfield Turgis, known as Boar Mead, was transferred to Hartley Wespall,<sup>1</sup> and by the Divided Parishes Act, 1882, part of the latter parish was added to the former. The parish now covers an area of 1,062 acres, of which 545½ acres are arable land and 307½ acres permanent grass.<sup>2</sup> Thorpe's Copse, Guyet's Copse, and Lower Pitham Copse, which surround Bylands in the west, are responsible, with portion of the park of Stratfieldsaye, for the 96½ acres of woods and plantations which are comprised in the parish.<sup>3</sup> The soil is strong loam and sand, while the subsoil is clay. The crops are a succession of grain.

Boar Mead, Broadford Mead, Goodyers Green, Parsonage Green, Silk Meadow, Spanish Green, Stiffs Green, and Turgis Green were inclosed in 1866 by the authority of the General Inclosure Acts.

The following place-names are found in early records:—Bormede<sup>4</sup> (xiii cent.) ; a messuage called Daniell,<sup>5</sup> the name of which was afterwards changed to Nedes or Martins, Blackmores landes, and Dederyche lande<sup>6</sup> (xvi cent.) ; Baylyes landes, Hindens landes, Kingeslandes, Wocrofte, and Stonyham<sup>7</sup> (xvii cent.).

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANORS the manor of STRATFIELD TURGIS, which had been held by Alvríc of Edward the Confessor, was held by the same Alvríc of Hugh de Port.<sup>8</sup> The name of the immediate successor of Alvríc is unknown, but the overlordship continued with the Ports and their descendants the St. Johns for a considerable period, Stratfield Turgis occurring in lists of the St. John knights' fees as late as 1349.<sup>9</sup> From an early date the Turgis family held the manor of the Ports and St. Johns as overlords, but very little can be learned concerning them, as no inquiries are extant concerning their property in the county. Henry Turgis was apparently holding the manor in 1270,<sup>10</sup> and he was succeeded by John Turgis, who presented to the church at the beginning of the 14th century.<sup>11</sup> John Turgis was one of those accused by John de Drokenesford, Bishop of Bath and Wells, in 1318 of breaking his close at Hartley Wespall and fishing his stews,<sup>12</sup> but whether he was the same as the John Turgis who met with his death at the hands of John Oakland in 1347<sup>13</sup> is uncertain. In 1349 another John Turgis was holding the fifth part of a knight's fee in Stratfield Turgis of the value of 40s. a year,<sup>14</sup> while a rector was presented by John Turgis during the episcopacy of William Edendon<sup>15</sup> (1346–66). By 1360 the manor had passed into the hands of William Fifhide, as is apparent from the inquisition taken after the death of Thomas Foxley, which stated that lands that he was holding at the

ST. JOHN. Argent a chief gules with two molets or therein.

TURGIS. Azure a chevron between three crosslets fitchy or.

<sup>1</sup> Loc. Govt. Bd. Order, no. 10327.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Edw. I.

<sup>5</sup> Chant. Cert. no. 11.

<sup>6</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bde. 137, no. 33.

<sup>7</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xxiii.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>9</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>10</sup> Cott. MS. Cleop. C. vii, fol. 177.

<sup>11</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 104 d.

<sup>12</sup> Pat. 12 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 14 d.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. pt. iv, m. 22.

<sup>14</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>15</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 32 d.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

time of his death in Stratfield Turgis were held of William Fithide in socage as of his manor of Stratfield Turgis.<sup>16</sup> Robert Herriard, as lord of the manor of Stratfield Turgis, presented to the church in 1390,<sup>17</sup> and the manor for some time continued in the Herriard family, passing ultimately to Thomas Herriard, by whom it was held in the middle of the 15th century.<sup>18</sup> The history of the manor for the next forty years is very obscure. In 1490 John Wayte and Richard Hooper, being summoned to show by what right they had disseised Nicholas Talbot, Thomas Manory, and John Oxsen of the manor, stated that it had been formerly held by Richard Lovell, and had on his death descended to his two daughters and co-heiresses, Agatha wife of John Wayte, and Joan wife of George Rotheram.<sup>19</sup> On the other hand Nicholas, Thomas, and John pleaded that it had formerly formed part of the possessions of James Cawode, and had by him been granted to them and their heirs for ever.<sup>20</sup> Their statement is supported by the fact that rectors had been presented by John Cawode, and by Nicholas Talbot and others during the episcopacy of William Waynflete<sup>21</sup> (1447–86), and by the feoffees of James Cawode, 'late deceased,' during the episcopacy of Peter Courtenay<sup>22</sup> (1486–92); but, nevertheless, the case was decided in favour of John Wayte and Richard Hooper. In 1505 John Wayte and Agatha his wife sold the manor and advowson of Stratfield Turgis to Francis Dyneley,<sup>23</sup> who as lord of the manor presented to the church twice between 1505 and 1528.<sup>24</sup> He was succeeded in the ownership of the estate by Sir William Uvedale and Edward Baynard, who sold the manor and advowson in 1539 to Sir William Paulet, Lord St. John,<sup>25</sup> created Marquess of Winchester in 1551. The manor continued in the possession of successive Marquesses of Winchester until the reign of James I,<sup>26</sup> when it was sold to Sir William Pitt. At the death of Sir William in 1636 the manor of Stratfield Turgis, the advowson of the church, and the farm called Turgis Court descended to his son Edward,<sup>27</sup> and have since followed the same descent as the manor of Stratfieldsaye (q.v.), the Duke of Wellington being at the present day lord of the manor of Stratfield Turgis and owner of the whole parish.

There is no trace of the mill which existed in the parish at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>28</sup>

In 1336 John atte Oakland of Stratfield Turgis surrendered to Thomas Foxley and Katherine his wife all his right in the lands in Stratfield Turgis which had descended to him on the death of his father Richard, and the reversion of those which his mother Eleanor was then holding in dower.<sup>29</sup> At his death in 1360 Thomas Foxley was seised of a messuage and virgate of land in Stratfield Turgis,<sup>30</sup> and from this date this holding, afterwards known as the manor of OAKLANDS, followed the same descent as the manor of Bramshill until 1499, when it was expressly excepted from the sale of Bramshill to Giles, Lord Daubeney, being retained by William Essex and Elizabeth his wife.<sup>31</sup> It continued in the possession of Elizabeth until 1514, in which year she joined with her second husband Sir Leonard Grey in conveying messuages, lands, and rent in Bramshill and Oakland to Henry, Lord Daubeney, son and successor of Giles.<sup>32</sup> In 1547 it was probably included in the grant of Bramshill to Sir William Paulet, Lord St. John, who was already the owner of Stratfield Turgis, and from this date followed the same descent as the latter manor.<sup>33</sup> At the present day the site is marked by Oaklands, in the extreme west of the parish, on the banks of the River Loddon.

The history of a holding called WERHAM or WAREHAM, with lands situated partly in the parish of Stratfield Turgis and partly in the parish of Hartley Wespall, can be traced until the beginning of the 17th century, but no evidence of it now remains. In the middle of the 13th century it was held by Sir Robert de Hauford, who left a son and heir Robert and Alice his widow. Alice subsequently married Ralph Danvers, and in 1288, as his widow, granted half of a messuage, a carucate of land, 10 acres of meadow, and 60 acres of wood in Hartley Wespall and Stratfield Turgis to Richard de Merton, clerk, to hold of her and her heirs for the rent of a rose.<sup>34</sup> A year later Robert de Hauford, in return for 20 marks, released to the same Richard all his right in the lands that belonged to Sir Robert his father and Alice his mother at Werham in the villis of Stratfield Turgis and Hartley Wespall.<sup>35</sup> In 1294 by fine between Richard de Merton and Alice Danvers it was agreed that if Richard died during the lifetime of Alice, one messuage, one carucate of land, 10 acres of meadow, and 60 acres of wood in Stratfield Turgis and Hartley Wespall, 10 acres of land called Cokleslond in Hartley Wespall, 6 acres of land called La Feldelond, and 6 acres of meadow called Bormede in Stratfield Turgis, should remain to Alice for life for a rose rent, but that after her death they should revert to the heirs of Richard Merton.<sup>36</sup> Richard obviously predeceased Alice, for in 1303 his brother and heir John atte Oakland sought, but with no success, to dispossess Alice.<sup>37</sup> The holding next passed to the Warblingtons, probably by sale, from John atte Oakland. John de Warblington was seised of one messuage, one carucate of land, 10 acres of meadow, and 60 acres of wood in Werham, 12 acres of land in Hartley Wespall, 6 acres of land in La Feldelond, and 6 acres of meadow in Stratfield Turgis at his death in 1332.<sup>38</sup> The premises passed to

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 55.

<sup>17</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 173.

<sup>18</sup> Early Chan. Proc. bdle. 13, no. 180.

<sup>19</sup> De Banco R. Mich. 6 Hen. VII, m. 306. Richard Lovell died in 1479, leaving as his heirs his daughters Agatha and Joan, aged respectively nine and seven. By the inquisition taken at his death it was returned that he was seised of the manors of 'Chyrchfeld' (co. Berks), Boveney and Eton (co. Bucks) (Inq. p.m. 19 Edw. IV. no. 15). No inquisition exists concerning his property in Hampshire, and therefore it is uncertain whether he was seised of the manor of Stratfield Turgis at his death.

<sup>20</sup> De Banco R. Mich. 6 Hen. VII, m. 306.

<sup>21</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 48 d.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. fol. 103 d.

<sup>23</sup> De Banco R. East. 20 Hen. VII, m. 21 d; Feet of F. Hants, East. 20 Hen. VII.

<sup>24</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 131 d, 154.

<sup>25</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Hen. VIII.

<sup>26</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125;

Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 4 Jas. I; Div. Co.

Hil. 7 Jas. I.

<sup>27</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dlj, 124.

<sup>28</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 483b.

<sup>29</sup> Close, 10 Edw. III, m. 3 d.

<sup>30</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 55.

<sup>31</sup> Close, 14 Hen. VII, no. 24; see also Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 21 Hen. VII; De Banco R. East. 21 Hen. VII, m. 5.

<sup>32</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 6 Hen. VIII.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid. Hil. 4 Jas. I; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dlj, 124.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 16 Edw. I.

<sup>35</sup> Close, 18 Edw. I, m. 17 d.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Edw. I.

<sup>37</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 296.

<sup>38</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 72.

HOLDSHOT HUNDRED STRATFIELD TURGIS

his widow Margaret and his son Thomas, in accordance with a previous settlement,<sup>39</sup> and it is probable that the former married as her second husband Oliver de Bohun, for in 1346 Oliver de Bohun and Margaret his wife were returned as holding one-sixth of a knight's fee in Werham, formerly belonging to Alice Danvers.<sup>40</sup> John de Warblington, nephew of Thomas,<sup>41</sup> obtained a grant of free warren in Stratfield Turgis in 1368,<sup>42</sup> and his widow Katherine was seised of a messuage and 40 acres of land in Stratfield Turgis at her death in 1404,<sup>43</sup> but it is doubtful whether this holding represents Werham. By the end of the 16th century it had passed into the hands of Thomas Dabridgecourt of Stratfieldsaye,<sup>44</sup> who sold Wareham Farm, with 23 acres of land in Stratfield Turgis, Heckfield, and Hartley Wespall, to Matthew Ley and William Child in 1600.<sup>45</sup> Eight years later it was sold by William Forster and Matthew Ley to Thomas Wigge and his heirs.<sup>46</sup> This is the last mention that has been found concerning this estate.

The church of ALL SAINTS consists of a chancel 24 ft. 3 in. by 15 ft.

6 in.; a nave 38 ft. 10 in. by 16 ft. 5 in., and a south porch. It has been so much altered and rebuilt as to make its early history a matter of uncertainty. The earliest fragments of detail are of 13th-century date, but in 1792 the church was burnt, or partly so, and the chancel rebuilt in brick, but on the old foundations, and at the same time the nave appears to have been largely reconstructed; it was again restored in 1901. The chancel shows a very marked inclination to the south, suggesting a rebuilding previous to that at the end of the 18th century.

The east window of the chancel is quite modern, and is of two cinquefoiled lights, with a small quatrefoil over. The north and south walls of the chancel are lit by four windows, two in each wall, filled with square wooden frames of two trefoiled lights. There is no chancel arch, its place being taken by a plastered beam. On the west side of this is a small modern rood of plaster inclosed in a wooden frame.

At the east end of the north wall of the nave is a window of 14th-century style of two cinquefoiled lights with an external label with ball-flowers for drips. It is placed very low in the wall, and has been reset and shortened in the process. Externally the cusping has been cut away. West of this is a reset and partly blocked 14th-century door with a distorted chamfered label. The head is filled with a glazed wooden frame. The third window is a curiously drawn single cinquefoiled light of uncertain date, and here again the cusps have been cut away externally. At the south-east is a small square recess, possibly once a piscina, and west of this a modern window of two trefoiled lights, the only one in the wall. The south door is of no great age, chamfered and with a three-centred head. In the roof on this side are two small dormers, one at the east to light the pulpit and one towards the west to light a now destroyed gallery. In the west wall is a modern door with a rounded chamfered head. Above this the whole wall appears to have been rebuilt in modern times, and three single trefoiled lights have been inserted. Externally the nave is cement-rendered, except the upper part of the west wall, and the walls are of flint rubble with ashlar quoins. The south porch is of brick, and quite plain. It dates from the rebuilding.

The roofs all date from 1792, are quite plain, and ceiled in plaster to the collar beams. Externally they are tiled, and at the west end of the nave roof is a very small tile-hung bell-cot.

The font, near the south door, is a plain octagonal block of stone. It is of pre-Reformation but otherwise quite uncertain date. The seating, fittings, etc., are all modern. Under the south-east dormer is a twisted wrought iron bar intended to hold up a sounding board, but this together with the pulpit has gone. There are no monuments of any interest.

The bell-cot contains one bell, by E. Knight, dated 1683.

The plate consists of a cup and cover paten of 1662, given by Edward Drope, D.D., 'Minister of Turges,' a secular silver-gilt plate of 1774, given by John Awbery, rector, a silver bread-box of 1902, and a plated flagon.

There are four books of registers. The first contains baptisms 1672-1801, burials 1674-1801, and marriages 1672-1753; the second contains burials 1731-75; the third marriages 1754-1809; and the fourth, baptisms and burials 1802-12. There are also churchwardens' accounts 1707-86.

The advowson of the church has ADVOWSON throughout followed the descent of the manor,<sup>47</sup> the living at the present day being a rectory in the gift of the Duke of Wellington.

In 1340 it was stated that the value of the church was only sufficient to support one chaplain.<sup>48</sup>

Among the property forfeited in the reign of Edward VI for superstitious uses was a rent of 1s. issuing out of lands and tenements in the parish called Danyelles, which had been left to maintain a light in the parish church of Stratfield Turgis.<sup>49</sup>

Samuel Loggon, author of The History of the Brotherhood or Guild of the Holy Ghost in the Chapel of the Holy Ghost near Basingstoke, and of a very popular schoolbook, M. Corderii Colloquia, which reached its twenty-first edition in 1830, at one time master of the free school of the Holy Ghost, Basingstoke, was rector of Stratfield Turgis from 1746 to 1748. He died at Basingstoke about 1778, and was buried by his own desire in a sawpit in the churchyard of Stratfield Turgis.<sup>50</sup>

In 1791, George Lord Rivers, by CHARITIES will proved in the P.C.C., 1803, bequeathed the sum of £30 for the poor, which, augmented by subscriptions, is now represented by £53 consols with the official trustees.

<sup>39</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III (1st nos), no. 72; Close, 6 Edw. III, m. 26.

<sup>40</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333.

<sup>41</sup> He was the son and heir of John de Warblington, elder brother of Thomas (Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 72).

<sup>42</sup> Chart. R. 42 Edw. III, m. 3.

<sup>43</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. 5 & 6 Hen. IV, file 1719, no. 5.

<sup>44</sup> He may have inherited it from his father George Dabridgecourt, who died seised of the reversion of an unnamed capital messuage, 60 acres of land, 50 acres of pasture, and 20 acres of meadow in Stratfield Turgis (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cxix, 145).

<sup>45</sup> Close, 42 Eliz. pt. xiv.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. 6 Jas. I, pt. xxix, no. 38.

<sup>47</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 104 d; 2033, fol. 32 d; 2034, fol. 48 d, 60, 103 d, 131 d, 154; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 173; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>48</sup> Inq. Non. (Rec. Com.), 124.

<sup>49</sup> Chant. Cert. no. 11.

<sup>50</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

THE HUNDRED OF ODIHAM

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

BENTWORTH
DOGMERSFIELD
ELVETHAM
GREYWELL

HARTLEY WINTNEY
LASHAM
LISS
ODIHAM

ROTHERWICK
SHALDEN
SHERFIELD-UPON-LODDON
WESTON PATRICK
AND WINCHFIELD<sup>1</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey the parishes contained in the modern hundred of Odiham were included in the two hundreds of Odiham and Hefedele (Edefele, Efedele). The former comprised Lasham and Shalden and half a hide which had been taken from Preston Candover,<sup>2</sup> and the latter included Odiham, Winchfield, Elvetham, Dogmersfield, and 'Berchelei.'<sup>3</sup> For the manors of Bentworth, Greywell, Hartley Wintney, Liss Turney, Rotherwick, Sherfield-upon-Loddon, and Weston Patrick, there are no entries in the Survey, but they were all probably included in the large manor of Odiham.<sup>4</sup> The manor of Liss Abbas was and remained until 1831 in Meonstoke Hundred.<sup>5</sup>

The hamlet of Southrope in the parish of Herriard was in the hundred of Odiham,<sup>6</sup> and so remained till 1831.<sup>7</sup> Before 1841, however, it was transferred to the hundred of Bermondspit, in which Herriard lies.<sup>8</sup> Bramshill, a tithing of Eversley, was also in the hundred of Odiham in the 13th century,<sup>9</sup> but it seems afterwards to have been transferred to Holdshot Hundred, in which Eversley lies. Between 1831 and 1841 it was again transferred to Odiham Hundred,<sup>10</sup> in which it still remains.

The hundred of Hefedele seems to have become merged in that of Odiham at an early date, and in 1316 Odiham Hundred was apparently of the same extent as in 1831.<sup>11</sup> Liss Turney in 1831 formed the so-called Out Hundred of Odiham,<sup>12</sup> and some arrangement of the same nature seems to have prevailed in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries, for the hundred of Liss is frequently mentioned, the term being in some cases used to indicate the manor.<sup>13</sup> It would therefore seem that, owing to the distance of Liss from Odiham, separate hundred courts were held in the tithing of Liss Turney.

<sup>1</sup> This list represents the extent of the hundred in 1831.

<sup>2</sup> This may have been in Rotherwick. In 1302-3 a suit arose as to whether land in Rotherwick was held of Odiham Manor or of Preston Candover. De Banco R. 148, m. 75.

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 450, 472, 502, 504, 452, 493. 'Berchelei' has not been identified, but it is suggested that it may have been at Bartley Heath in Odiham.

<sup>4</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. II, no. 55; Cal. of Inq. Edw. I, 250; Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 263; Cal. Close, 1272-9, p. 22; Cal. of Inq. Hen. VII, i, 30.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 473; Feud. Aids, ii, 307; Pop. Returns, 1831, ii, 568.

<sup>6</sup> Assize R. 775, m. 21; 780, m. 4 d.; 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>7</sup> Pop. Returns, 1831, p. 566, note f.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. 1841, p. 274.

<sup>9</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.; Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. II, no. 38.

<sup>10</sup> Pop. Returns, 1841, p. 278.

<sup>11</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>12</sup> Pop. Returns, 1831, ii, 568.

<sup>13</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Edw. II; Inq. p.m. 26 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 50; 5 Ric. II, no. 21; 5 Hen. VI, no. 22; Cal. of Inq. Hen. VII, i, 30.

ODIHAM HUNDRED

Between 1831 and 1841 various changes were made in the hundred of Odiham. Bentworth, Lasham, and Weston Patrick were transferred to Bermondspit Hundred; Liss Turney, including Liss Abbas, became part of Finchdean Hundred; and Shalden and Sherfield-upon-Loddon were transferred to the hundreds of Alton (Upper Half) and Basingstoke respectively.<sup>14</sup> Odiham Hundred itself was divided into three parts: the Middle Half, containing Dogmersfield, Greywell, part of Odiham, the tithing of North Warnborough, South Warnborough,<sup>15</sup> and Winchfield; the Lower Half, containing Elvetham, Bramshill in Eversley, Hartley Wintney, and Rotherwick; and Odiham Town, containing part of Odiham with the tithings of Hillside, Stapely, and Murrell.<sup>16</sup> The extent of the hundred is the same at the present day as in 1841.

Odiham was a royal hundred, but was granted at various times with the manor. John Fitz Hugh held it by grant of the king in 1217,<sup>17</sup> and in 1299 it was assigned as dower to Margaret, queen of Edward I.<sup>18</sup> It was granted in 1440 to John Basket for life, and to Margaret, consort of Henry VI,<sup>19</sup> in 1454, and in 1466 it formed part of the dower of Elizabeth, consort of Edward IV.<sup>20</sup> It was leased for fifty years to Chideock Paulet in 1558, and was granted in 1603 to John, Earl of Mar.<sup>21</sup> From that time its descent is the same as that of the manor of Odiham.

<sup>14</sup> Pop. Returns, 1841. Wildmoor, a part of the parish of Sherfield-upon-Loddon, had apparently always been in the hundred of Basingstoke. Baigent and Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 344; Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 222.

<sup>16</sup> Pop. Returns, 1841, p. 278.

<sup>18</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 452.

<sup>20</sup> Cal. Pat. 1461-7, p. 481.

<sup>15</sup> Formerly in Bermondspit Hundred.

<sup>17</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 319.

<sup>19</sup> Parl. R. (Rec. Com.), v, 2616.

<sup>21</sup> Pat. 1 Jas. I, pt. xiii

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

BENTWORTH

Bentewurda or Bintewurda (xii cent.) ; Bynteworth (xiv cent.).

Bentworth lies to the west of Alton, and has an acreage of 3,763 acres, of which about 280 acres are woodland, and the remainder divided equally between arable and grassland.<sup>1</sup>

The soil is clay and loam, the subsoil chalk ; the chief crops are wheat, oats, and turnips. The village is in the centre of the parish, and the large estate of Bentworth Hall stands on rising ground some way to the south. Bentworth Lodge, originally called Binstead Hill, is 1 mile east, on the boundary of the parish, and is the property of Captain Frederick Stephens, J.P., who purchased it from Mr. Coulthard in 1874.<sup>2</sup> The hamlet of Burkham is in the extreme north-west corner of the parish. Wivelrod, also a hamlet, in the south-east, is mentioned as early as 1259, in which year William le Clerk and Cecily his wife conveyed it to Ralph de la Sale on condition that Ralph and his heirs should give one quarter of wheat and one of barley at Michaelmas during the life of William and Cecily, besides an annual rent of 1*d.*<sup>3</sup>

In the 18th century Wivelrod was called a manor, and belonged to the owner of Bentworth Hall ;<sup>4</sup> a part of this property was sold with Bentworth in 1832.<sup>5</sup>

Gaston Grange, with a wood attached to it, also belongs to the Bentworth Hall estate, and is on the south-eastern boundary of the parish. There are several farms in the village, on the northern side of which is the church, with the rectory close by standing in its own grounds. A Congregational church was built in 1896, and the schools were erected in 1848.

Hall Place, now called Manor Farm, in the village of Bentworth, represents the old manor-house of Bentworth Hall, which in the 18th century was called "Bentworth Hall Place," the present hall having been built in the middle of the last century.<sup>6</sup>

The old house dates probably from the 14th century, but retains little of its original character ; the outer and inner doorways at the entrance have two-centred arches of two splayed orders, and in the lobby there is a trefoiled light. Above the entrance are the arms of Hunt : Argent a bend between two water bougets or with three leopards' heads gules on the bend.

There is a double-chamfered lancet window in the east wall of what was originally the chapel, now used as a dairy, and a blocked doorway with a segmental arch. In a passage there is a shield of fifteen quarterings.

Some place-names of interest are Le Bole, La Cou,<sup>7</sup>

Childer Hall,<sup>8</sup> Little Chichdells,<sup>9</sup> Heath Crofts and Gatwicke, where the widow of the poet George Wither lived.<sup>10</sup> Such names as Colliers Wood and Nancole Copse point to the early operations of the charcoal burners, the colliers of the Middle Ages.

The names of Windmill Field and Mill Piece indicate the site of one or more ancient mills.<sup>11</sup> The commons were inclosed in 1799.<sup>12</sup> George Wither was born at Bentworth in 1588, but at the beginning of the Civil War he sold his estate in the parish, which he had inherited from his father, in order to raise a troop of horse for Parliament.<sup>13</sup> In 'Abuses Stript and Whipt' he more than once alludes to the 'beechy shadows' of 'our Bentworth.'<sup>14</sup>

The manor of BENTWORTH is not MANORS mentioned in the Domesday Survey, and it was probably included in Odiham at this date. It was, however, recognized as a manor in the reign of Henry I, when it was given by the king to Geoffrey, Archbishop of Rouen, between 1111 and 1116.<sup>15</sup> Confirmations of this gift were made in the reigns of Henry II and Richard I, and an inspeximus of the original deed was made in 1286 by Edward I ;<sup>16</sup> there are also references to the debts which the Archbishop of Rouen owed the king concerning Bentworth.<sup>17</sup>

In the reign of King John, January 1207-8, Peter de Roches, Bishop of Winchester, was granted temporary possession of the manor of Bentworth,<sup>18</sup> and in 1222 Geoffrey de Cauz<sup>19</sup> was appointed a custodian of the same manor during the king's pleasure. The Archbishop of Rouen was still holding the manor in 1316,<sup>20</sup> but it was in the king's hands nine years later owing to a vacancy in the see of Rouen, and in that year Edward II appointed Peter de Galicien custodian of the manor.<sup>21</sup> In February 1336 licence was granted to Peter, Archbishop of Rouen, to enfeoff Richard Bentworth, Bishop of London, of the manor and advowson of the church for a yearly payment of 6*s.* 8*d.* ;<sup>22</sup> but he does not appear to have ever held the manor, as four months later a similar licence was granted for the enfeoffment of William de Melton, Archbishop of York, who entered into possession before the date of this licence, and obtained a pardon for having done so.<sup>23</sup> The archbishop died in 1340, leaving his possessions to his nephew William de

MELTON. Argent a cross patty azure voided.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Local information kindly supplied by Captain Stephens.

<sup>3</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 43 Hen. III, 19.

<sup>4</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Trin. 3 Anne, m. 26.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. penes Mr. William Fitzherbert-Brockholes.

<sup>6</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 3 Anne, rot. 109 ; Local information kindly supplied by the Rev. W. G. Cazalet, rector of Bentworth.

<sup>7</sup> Cal. Close, 1337-9, p. 629.

<sup>8</sup> Add Chart. 27944.

<sup>9</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants, Trin. 22 Geo. II. no. 1.

<sup>10</sup> Will of Elizabeth Wither (P.C.C. 11 Drax.)

<sup>11</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (1), 15.

<sup>12</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>13</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. ; Murray, Hants, 51.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.

<sup>15</sup> Round, Cal. of Doc. France, 2.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 2, 4, 6, 14.

<sup>17</sup> Mag. Rot. Pip. 31 Hen. I (Rec.

Com.), 40 ; Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 186 ; 14 Hen. II, 187 ; 15 Hen. II, 155.

<sup>18</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 100.

<sup>19</sup> Cal. Pat. 1216-25, p. 329.

<sup>20</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>21</sup> Cal. Pat. 1324-7, p. 94 ; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. i, 284.

<sup>22</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. ii, 94.

<sup>23</sup> Cal. Close, 1337-9, p. 504 ; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. ii, 96 ; Cal. Pat. 1334-8, p. 326.

Melton, son of his brother Henry,<sup>34</sup> who did homage to the king for his manor of Bentworth in that year.<sup>35</sup> In 1348 William obtained the king's permission to give his manor to William Edendon, Bishop of Winchester;<sup>36</sup> but it evidently returned to him, as it is mentioned among his possessions in an inquisition taken in 1362-3, and descended to his son Sir William de Melton.<sup>37</sup>

John de Melton inherited the manor on the death of his father Sir William in 1399,<sup>38</sup> and he was returned as owner of Bentworth in 1431;<sup>39</sup> he died in 1455, and was succeeded by his son John, who died in 1474 seised of the manor, his heir being his grandson John;<sup>40</sup> the latter did not actually succeed to the manor until the death of his grandfather's second wife Cecily in 1484.<sup>41</sup>

The last-named John died in 1510, and the same year his son John suffered a recovery by John Rudston and others, which recovery was had to the use of Guy Palmes.<sup>42</sup> The latter died in 1516, and Brian Palmes his son and heir held Bentworth of the king as of Winchester Castle until his death in 1528, when his son Francis was a minor.<sup>43</sup> Francis died seised of the manor in November 1580, and his son Sir Francis<sup>44</sup> was succeeded on his death in 1613 by his son Sir Guy,<sup>45</sup> who in 1616 conveyed the manor to Edward Nevill.<sup>46</sup>

The descent of the manor immediately after this conveyance is not clear, but in 1704 the manors of Bentworth and Bentworth Hall (q.v. infra) were held by Thomas Urry,<sup>47</sup> and from this date onwards the two manors had the same descent.<sup>48</sup>

There was a sub-manor in Bentworth held of the lord of the main manor which was called BENTWORTH HALL, or BENTWORTH HALL PLACE, or THE HALL, or simply BENTWORTH or BENTWORTH JUXTA ALTON,<sup>49</sup> and it seems probable that the land held by Maud de Aula in the early years of the reign of Henry III was this manor.<sup>50</sup> She inherited it from her husband John, who was possessed of a free tenement in Bentworth, and in 1223 conveyed her share of that tenement to Ralph de Aula.<sup>51</sup> In February 1281 William de Aula of Bentworth was possessed of what appears to be the same tenement, and he seems to have acquired more land in 'Halle' in 1297.<sup>52</sup> Between the years 1333 and 1345 licence was given to Maud de Bentworth to have service in the oratory of her manor,<sup>53</sup> and this may possibly have been Bentworth Hall. The first mention of the property as a manor is in 1372, when it is so described in the inquisition taken on the death of Elizabeth the wife of James Windsor who died in January 1371-2.<sup>54</sup> Her son Miles inherited the estate and died seised in 1386;<sup>55</sup> his heir was his son Brian, but the manor was assigned as dower to his widow Alice, who married a second time, and died in 1394-5.<sup>56</sup> Brian was holding Bentworth of John de Melton at the time of his death in 1399,<sup>57</sup> and his widow Alice continued in possession until her death seven years later.<sup>58</sup>

Miles, the son and heir of Brian and Alice, died while still under age in 1401,<sup>59</sup> and consequently on the death of Alice 'that manor in Bentworth called The Hall' passed to his younger brother Richard,<sup>60</sup> who died in 1428 leaving a son and heir Miles.<sup>61</sup>

The manor remained in possession of the Windsor family for another hundred and fifty years; Andrew the grandson of Miles was summoned to Parliament as Lord Windsor of Stanwell, and died in 1543, and the four generations who succeeded in turn to the barony all held Bentworth Hall.<sup>62</sup>

Robert Hunt acquired the manor from the fifth Lord Windsor in 1590,<sup>63</sup> and it passed from him to Sir James Wolveridge in 1610.<sup>64</sup> Sir James, who died in 1624, settled the manor on his nephew John,<sup>65</sup> and there is a record of a jointure in 1641 on the marriage of John Wolveridge with Frances Jephson of the manor of Bentworth.<sup>66</sup>

Thomas Urry and his third son William dealt with the two manors of Bentworth and Bentworth Hall in 1705, when William was declared heir of Thomas.<sup>67</sup> Thomas Urry, grandson of Thomas and probably son of William, bequeathed his property in Bentworth in equal shares to his sister Anne and his niece Elizabeth Heneage, who was the daughter and heiress of John Browne by his wife Elizabeth Browne, nee Urry.<sup>68</sup> This will was proved in 1777, and Anne died in 1780, when in accordance with the terms of her brother's will her share went to Elizabeth Heneage.<sup>69</sup> Elizabeth had two daughters, Mary and Elizabeth, who married respectively two brothers, William Fitzherbert-Brockholes of Claughton and Basil Fitzherbert of Swynnerton, the former having taken the name of Brockholes when he acquired the property of that family.<sup>70</sup> Elizabeth Fitzherbert died in 1799, having had seven children, three of whom died unmarried, and her mother died about two years

WINDSOR, Lord Windsor of Stanwell. Gules a saltire argent between twelve crosslets or.

<sup>34</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 43.

<sup>35</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. ii, 136.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. ii, 197; Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 34.

<sup>37</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 125.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. 22 Ric. II, no. 33.

<sup>39</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 362.

<sup>40</sup> Inq. p.m. 33 Hen. VI, no. 22; 14 Edw. IV, no. 27.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. 2 Ric. II, no. 18.

<sup>42</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dcccclxii, 10; dcccclxix, 2; Recov. R. Trin. 2 Hen. VIII, rot. 135; Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 4 Hen. VIII.

<sup>43</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), li, 17.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid. cl, 155.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. cccxxiii, 43.

<sup>46</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 14 Jas. I.

<sup>47</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Trin. 3 Anne, m. 26.

<sup>48</sup> See account of Bentworth Hall.

<sup>49</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 9 Hen. V, no. 45; 18 Ric. II, no. 51; Com. Pleas D. Enr. Trin. 3 Anne, m. 26.

<sup>50</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 7 Hen. III, 88.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. 9 Edw. I; 25 Edw. I.

<sup>53</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 96.

<sup>54</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 46 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 71.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 10 Ric. II, no. 46.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 13 Ric. II, no. 32; 18 Ric. II, no. 51.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 22 Ric. II, no. 108.

<sup>58</sup> Ibid. 8 Hen. IV, no. 57.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid. 9 Hen. V, no. 45.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid. 8 Hen. IV, no. 57.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid. 17 Hen. VI, no. 36.

<sup>62</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, viii, 185; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), i, 14; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 2 & 3 Eliz.; Hants, East. 27 Eliz.; Hil. 32 Eliz. For further account of the family see Bradenham (co. Bucks.).

<sup>63</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 32 Eliz.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid. Mich. 8 Jas. I.

<sup>65</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccccxxvii, 128.

<sup>66</sup> MS. penes Mr. William Fitzherbert-Brockholes.

<sup>67</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Trin. 3 Anne, m. 26.

<sup>68</sup> MS. penes Mr. William Fitzherbert-Brockholes.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

later; Mary Brockholes, surviving her husband, died in 1832, when the property was sold and the proceeds divided between the surviving children of Elizabeth and of Mary; the latter had a large family, but several children died young.<sup>61</sup> The property in Bentworth which was to be sold is described as 'all that or those the manor or manors lordship or lordships called or known by the name of Bentworth and Bentworth Hall otherwise Bentworth Hall Place or by what other name or names the same is or are called and known situate lying and being in the parish of Bentworth or elsewhere in the county of Southampton.'<sup>62</sup>

Hall Place Farm and the manors of Bentworth and Bentworth Hall were bought by Mr. Fisher for £6,000; 'sundry enclosures of Useful and Eligible Land situate at Wivelrod,' but not including the farm, were sold for £900.<sup>63</sup> Roger Staple Norman Fisher was returned as the owner and occupier in the Tithe Rent Charge Award of 1840,<sup>64</sup> but Charles Bush of Bentworth Hall was lord of the manor in 1848, and from him the lordship passed to J. Robert Ives, Sheriff of Hampshire in 1854, who died in 1865; his widow held the manor until her death in 1897, when their son, Colonel Gordon Maynard Gordon-Ives, acquired the lordship. He died in 1907, leaving a son Lieutenant Cecil Maynard Gordon-Ives as his heir.

BURKHAM (Brocham, xiv cent.; Barkham, xvi cent.; Berkham, Burcum, xviii cent.) is mentioned in the gift of Bentworth to the Archbishop of Rouen c. 1111-16, where it is described as a 'berewite' or outlying farm.<sup>65</sup> In the return of the feudal aids in 1316 a certain John Daleron held 'Brocham,' which was probably Burkham.<sup>66</sup> In the 16th century it followed the descent of Bentworth Hall, Robert Hunt acquiring the manor of Burkham with Bentworth by fine from Henry Lord Windsor in 1590.<sup>67</sup> In the same year Robert Magewick purchased it for £160,<sup>68</sup> and George Magewick is described as the owner of Burkham Farm in 1684.<sup>69</sup> In 1748 James Magewick Battin, presumably a descendant, held the manor,<sup>70</sup> and he is given as the owner in a 1778 Survey of Hampshire.<sup>71</sup> J. Battin Coulthard, a descendant in the female line, sold the property in 1881 to Mr. Arthur Frederick Jeffreys, whose son, Captain G. Darrell Jeffreys, is the present owner.<sup>72</sup>

The church of ST. MARY, situated CHURCH at the north-east of the village, stands in the centre of a churchyard which is inclosed by a wood paling and surrounded by tall trees. It consists of chancel 27 ft. by 17 ft. 4 in., with a small north vestry; nave, 48 ft. 7 in. by 17 ft., with north and south aisles and south porch; and west tower 9 ft. 6 in. square, these dimensions being internal.

The nave arcades date from the last quarter of the 12th century, and the chancel arch is of the same period. The chancel was built round an older chancel about 1260, and the lower part of the tower is of the same date or a little earlier. The aisles of the nave seem to have been rebuilt in the 14th century, and in modern times the fabric has been thoroughly repaired.

The church has been entirely refaced with dressed flints, the ashlar work renewed, and the whole church re-roofed. The present tower arch dates from 1890, and the wooden belfry placed upon the tower, and finished with a short octagonal spire covered with tiles, is of the same date.

The modern dressings and facings, and the new stonework of all the nave windows, give an entirely modern appearance to the building, the only interesting piece of external detail being the south doorway of the chancel.

The chancel retains all its original windows, more or less repaired, the east window being of three pointed lights inclosed externally by a single pointed segmental arch, and internally by a beautifully moulded rear-arch with dog-tooth ornament in the head, and having engaged filleted jamb-shafts, moulded capitals, and carved dripstones to the label. The bases of these shafts are hidden behind a modern reredos; the whole of this work is in a splendid state of preservation, and is a very beautiful example, dating from c. 1260. To the south of this window there is a large trefoiled piscina of the same date, doubtless moved from the south wall, the arch of which is delicately moulded with a filleted roll between two hollows, in both of which is a line of dog-tooth ornament, now much broken away; in the jambs are shafts with plainly-moulded capitals and bases, and the drain, which is circular on plan and projected from the wall-face, has been partly broken away. In the north wall are two narrow lancets with widely-splayed inner jambs and arch, having the vestry door between them, and there are two similar, but wider, lancets in the south wall. Between them is the south doorway, which is an admirable piece of work, its outer arch having a roll with three fillets between deeply-cut hollows, and filleted jamb-shafts with moulded capitals and bases, an extension of the abaci of the capitals forming the label stops, with tiny cone-shaped corbels below them. The chancel arch is pointed, of a single order, with a small edge-chamfer and square abaci; the arch is somewhat distorted, so as to be now almost four-centred.

The nave arcades are of four bays, with pointed arches of a single edge-chamfered order and hollow-chamfered labels on both sides. The springing line is only about 7 ft. 6 in. from the floor, and the arches are carried by sturdy circular pillars with square scalloped capitals and moulded bases on low square plinths.

There is no clearstory, but the north and south nave walls have been raised, and the north wall has been thrust very considerably out of the perpendicular, especially towards the west.

The nave windows are all of 14th-century style, with modern tracery, but old inner jambs; the blocked north doorway is round-headed, of a single hollow-chamfered order dying on to plain-chamfered jambs, and is also 14th-century work, while the south doorway is contemporary with it and of the same detail, but pointed and of two orders.

In the blocking of the north doorway are set three

<sup>61</sup> MS. penes Mr. William Fitzherbert-Brockholes.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> Information kindly supplied by Mr. Gordon-Ives.

<sup>65</sup> Round, Cal. of Doc. France, 2.

<sup>66</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>67</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 27 Eliz.; Recov. R. East. 32 Eliz. rot. 30; Add. Chart. 27933-43; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 32 Eliz.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid. Mich. 32 & 33 Eliz.

<sup>69</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants, Mich. 36 Chas. II, no. 12.

<sup>70</sup> Recov. R. East. 21 Geo. II, rot. 18.

<sup>71</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse MS. Survey of Hants, penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>72</sup> Local information kindly supplied by Capt. G. D. Jeffreys.

BENTWORTH CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST

DOGMERSFIELD PARK
(From an engraving by J. Landseer, 1808) small late 12th-century capitals and the ring of a banded shaft.

There are narrow lancets in the two lower stages of the west tower, only those in the north wall having their old external stonework.

The font at the west end of the nave dates from the 13th century, and has a large bowl about 2 ft. 6 in. square, with five trefoiled panels on each face; the stem is octagonal, with two trefoiled panels on each face, and is flanked by four little baluster shafts with moulded capitals and bases; there is an interesting pyramidal oak cover with a carved finial, and round the base an inscription, 'I am geven bi Martha Hunt anno 1605.' The altar table is 18th-century work, and another now standing in the tower is of about the same date, but all other wood fittings are modern.

A small mural monument at the south-east of the chancel is to Nicholas Holdip, 'pastor of the parish' 1606, and his wife Alicia (Gilbert). Above the tablet there is a small kneeling figure of the pastor.

In the north aisle wall is another mural tablet to 'Robert Hunt of Hall Place in this Parish,' 1671, with the arms, Azure a bend between two water bougets or with three leopards' heads gules on the bend. The crest is a talbot sitting chained to a halberd.

There are four bells; the treble and second by Joseph Carter, 1601, the third by Henry Knight, 1615, and the tenor by Joseph Carter, 1607.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten, and flagon of 1858.

There are three books of registers. The first contains entries for baptisms, marriages, and burials from 1604 to 1688, with one entry of 1559, and entries from 1695 to 1708; also burials 1709 to 1725, and a copy of the registers of baptisms, marriages, and burials transcribed from a paper copy, 1719 to 1802, and burials from 1802 to 1812; baptisms at other end of the book, 1754 to 1812; a few parchment pages bound together of burials, 1681 to 1765; and also a book of marriages, 1754 to 1812.

The church of Bentworth, together ADVOWSON with the churches of Odiham and Liss, was granted to the church of St. Mary of Salisbury by King Stephen.<sup>75</sup> It was probably lost, like Odiham (q.v.), to the cathedral, and in 1165-6 Henry II granted it to Rotrou, Archbishop of Rouen, who was holding the manor of Bentworth.<sup>74</sup> About a hundred years later there was a dispute about the church, when it was asserted that the Bishop of Salisbury held it by charter of Henry II, as pertaining to the prebendal church of Odiham.<sup>75</sup> However, the right of the Archbishop of Rouen to present was confirmed by Edward I in 1278-9.<sup>76</sup>

The successive lords of the manor retained the advowson for several centuries,<sup>77</sup> the last lord known to have held it being Sir Francis Palmes, who died in 1613.<sup>78</sup>

In 1637 the Crown presented, probably owing to a lapse, and forty years later the family of Acton held the living and the advowson.<sup>79</sup> Early in the 18th century John Henley presented, and in 1762 Joseph Acton, with others, was patron. Joseph Hinton presented in 1776, and Alban Acton in 1791; John Calland in 1801 and Lord Carteret in 1807.<sup>80</sup> In 1848 the living was in the gift of Sir S. Matthews, and the Rev. H. Matthews presented in 1859. He was succeeded by the present patron, the Rev. W. G. Cazalet, in 1887.

In 1749 there was a dispute about the tithes, when various witnesses deposed that 'times out of mind' it was the custom of the parson of the parish 'to gather five eggs or one penny every Good Friday which penny is called the Egg Penny,' and that he was also entitled to a 'Tythe Pig,' provided that the tithe consisted of more than seven.<sup>81</sup> Edward Acton was the rector who took part in the dispute, and his father, or grandfather, Edward, was rector in 1684-5, and also engaged in a dispute about tithes.<sup>82</sup> The present rector of Iwerne Minster, Blandford, is a lineal descendant, and is the seventh bearing the same name.<sup>83</sup>

Land and tenements in Bentworth of the annual value of 1s. 9½d., which were left to maintain a light, were among the lands forfeited for superstitious uses in the reign of Edward VI.<sup>84</sup>

In 1640 Sarah Greaves by her will CHARITIES charged certain lands near Alton with an annuity of £1 for the poor. The property charged is now occupied by the Paper Mills of Messrs Spicer, and the annuity is divided among ten poor widows.

In 1897 Anne Garrett by her will bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens £100, income to be distributed among the poor in coal and clothing. The legacy is represented by £94 11s. 3d. 2½ per cent. annuities with the official trustees, producing yearly £2 7s. 5d., which is duly applied.

<sup>75</sup> Sarum Chart. and Doc. (Rolls Ser.), 8.

<sup>76</sup> Round, Cal. of Doc. France, 6.

<sup>77</sup> Var. Coll. (Hist. MSS. Com.), i, 356.

<sup>78</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 197.

<sup>79</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 4; Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. II (2nd nos.), no. 34; 14

Edw. IV, no. 27; Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dccccxix, 2.

<sup>80</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxiii, 43.

<sup>81</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.); Exch. Dep. Hants, Mich. 36 Chas. II, no. 12.

<sup>82</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>83</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants, Trin. 22 Geo. II, no. 1.

<sup>84</sup> Ibid. Mich. 36 Chas. II, no. 12.

<sup>85</sup> Local information kindly supplied by the Rev. W. G. Cazalet.

<sup>86</sup> Aug. Off. Chant. Cert. 52, no. 13.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

DOGMERSFIELD

Ormeresfelt (xi cent.); Dokemeresfeld, Dochemeresfeld (xii cent.); Dogmersfeld (xiii cent.).

The parish of Dogmersfield is north-east of Odiham and contains 1,731 acres, of which approximately 300 acres are arable land, 900 acres permanent grass, and 500 acres woods and plantations; <sup>1</sup> the soil is partly stiff clay and partly loam, the subsoil clay and sand. The greater part of the parish consists of Dogmersfield Park, containing about 1,000 acres, which surrounds Dogmersfield House, the seat of Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, bart.

This house possibly stands on the site of the Palace which, judging from the many documents dated from here by the Bishops of Bath and Wells, existed in the parish in the 13th century, and possibly earlier.

In 1205 the king ordered wine to be sent to Dogmersfield, 'to be placed in the house of the Bishop of Bath,' <sup>2</sup> and it was here that Reginald Fitz Jocelin, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and John de Drokenesford, another bishop of the same see, died in 1191 and 1329 respectively. <sup>3</sup>

Henry VI apparently often stayed at Dogmersfield, and the meeting of Henry VII and Prince Arthur with Katherine of Aragon took place here; when the king met his future daughter-in-law, though unable to address each other in an intelligible language, 'there were the most goodly words uttered to each other, in the language of both parties, to as great joy and gladness as any persons conveniently might have.' <sup>4</sup>

Basingstoke Canal, which passes through this parish, is on the eastern side of the park.

In the north of the parish, close to the canal, is the hamlet of Chatter Alley with Chatter Alley Green, and further down the hill there is another hamlet called Pilcot, a reputed manor in the 17th century; Pilcot Mill is close by on the stream which runs along the eastern boundary. All Saints' Church stands on Tundry Hill between Pilcot and the park; it was built in 1843 by the rector, the Rev. Charles Dyson, and his sister, <sup>5</sup> to replace a church near Flood's Farm which was built at the beginning of the 19th century, when the old parish church, which stood in front of Dogmersfield House, was pulled down. This church, however, was considered to be in an inconvenient situation, and is now dismantled and overrun with foliage. <sup>6</sup>

A document of the 16th century records 'Westmyll Mead in Pylcote.' <sup>7</sup>

In King Edward the Confessor's time, MANORS Suein held the manor of DOGMERSFIELD 'as an alod' of the king, and his successor in possession was Hugh with the beard. <sup>8</sup> A church and a mill existed in 1086, and the latter was then worth 6*s.* 6*d.*, while the value of the entire manor was given as 100*s.*

The manor was apparently shortly afterwards acquired by Ralph Flambard, Bishop of Durham (1099–1133), from whom it passed to Henry I, who granted it to the church of Bath, Godfrey, Bishop of Bath and Wells (1123–36) and his successors. <sup>9</sup>

In the reign of Henry II there was a dispute about the manor of Dogmersfield between Reginald Fitz Jocelin, Bishop of Bath and Wells (1174–92), who claimed to hold in demesne, and Henry de Tilli, which ended in favour of the bishop, who was confirmed in possession by Henry II. <sup>10</sup> About the same time Geoffrey de Mandeville appears to have acquired a right in the manor, which his descendant of the same name gave up to William Button, Bishop of Bath and Wells, in 1260. <sup>11</sup>

Jocelin, Bishop of Bath and Wells (1206–44), obtained a confirmation of his right to the manor from King John in 1207, <sup>12</sup> and the successive Bishops of Bath and Wells retained possession until the reign of Henry VIII, <sup>13</sup> when the manor was sold to the king. <sup>14</sup> Henry appointed Sir John Wallop keeper of the manor and park in 1540–1, and the following year leased the demesne land to Oliver Wallop, brother of Sir John, for twenty-one years. <sup>15</sup> The manor was granted to Thomas, Lord Wriothesley, first Earl of Southampton, in 1547, by Edward VI, in order to fulfil his father's intentions, <sup>16</sup> and the second earl inherited and died seised in 1581, <sup>17</sup> leaving the manor to his eldest son Henry, who died in 1624, leaving a son Thomas aged sixteen. <sup>18</sup> In 1629 the earl conveyed the manor to Edward Dickenson and William Terry, <sup>19</sup> probably in trust for William Godson, who had apparently acquired the manor in or before the year 1646. <sup>20</sup>

William Godson was still holding in 1671, in which year he presented to the church, <sup>21</sup> but before long he had been succeeded by Edward Goodyer, who died in 1686. <sup>22</sup> Edward is described on his tombstone as lord of the manor,

SEE OF BATH AND WELLS. Azure a saltire quartered saltirewise or and argent.

GOODYER. Gules a fesse between two chevrons vair.

<sup>1</sup> Information from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), 75*b*.

<sup>3</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>4</sup> Leland, Collectanea (2nd ed. Hearne), v, 354.

<sup>5</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>6</sup> Local Notes by Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A.

<sup>7</sup> Ct. of Requests, bdle. 92, no. 2.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 502*b*.

<sup>9</sup> Stubbs, Reg. Sac. Angl. 228; Cal. Wells D. and C. MSS. (Hist. MSS. Com.), i, 15, 44*o*.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 54.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 44 Hen. III; Cur. Reg. R. 43 Hen. III, m. 17.

<sup>12</sup> Cal. Rot. Chart. (Rec. Com.), 171.

<sup>13</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213*b*; Feud. Aids, ii, 333, 345; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 24*b*.

<sup>14</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. ii, m. 6.

<sup>15</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, 714; xvii. 697; Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 161.

<sup>16</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. ii; Burke, Extinct Peerage.

<sup>17</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 24 Eliz. pt. i, no. 46.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 22 Jas. I, pt. i, no. 141.

<sup>19</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Chas. I.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. East. 22 Chas. I.

<sup>21</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>22</sup> Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A., Notes on the Parish of Dogmersfield.

DOGMERSFIELD HOUSE

DOGMERSFIELD HOUSE

and according to the same authority he left three children, James, John, and Martha; James and John died childless, and Martha became the eventual heiress; she married at Dogmersfield, in 1702-3, Ellis St. John, who was patron of the living in 1718.<sup>33</sup> Martha left a son and heir Paulet, who was created a baronet in 1772,<sup>34</sup> and the second baronet inherited in 1780.<sup>35</sup> Henry Paulet St. John, son of the latter, took the additional name of Mildmay under the testamentary injunctions upon marrying the heiress of the house of Mildmay, which had become extinct in the male line.<sup>36</sup> The manor is now the property of the sixth baronet, Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, J.P.

ST. JOHN. Argent a chief gules with two molets or therein.

Dogmersfield Park was made in the reign of Henry II, when licence was given to Reginald Fitz Jocelin, Bishop of Bath and Wells, to impark his wood,<sup>37</sup> and in 1228 leave was obtained by his successor Jocelin (1206-44) to increase it by 7 acres of pasture, deer leaps being granted to him in 1227 and 1229.<sup>38</sup>

The park was further enlarged by 3½ acres which were inclosed 'with a dike and a hedge' by Bishop Jocelin,<sup>39</sup> and in 1276 the stock of Bishop Robert (1275-93) was increased by a royal gift of '20 live does and brockets' taken from the royal park of Odiham.<sup>40</sup> There have been no deer in the park for many years.<sup>41</sup> In the 16th century the keeper of the park received a salary of £12 a year.<sup>42</sup> The park contains two pieces of water at the present day, Tundry Pond and Dogmersfield Lake; of these one may possibly represent the fishpond granted to Bishop Jocelin in 1205 before the inclosure of the park.<sup>43</sup>

In 1257 Henry III granted free warren in the demesne land of his manor of Dogmersfield to William, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and this charter was produced in 1280 as a proof of the right of the bishopric to this privilege.<sup>44</sup>

The mill mentioned under the Domesday Survey may very possibly have stood on the property later known as Pilcot, for a water-mill is known to have existed here in the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries.<sup>45</sup>

A fair was granted to Robert, Bishop of Bath and Wells, by Edward I in 1278, which was to last for six days, beginning on the vigil of Sts. Ciricus and Julitta (16 June) and on 'the day and on the morrow and for the three following days.'<sup>46</sup>

John atte Berewe, who died in 1351, possessed land in Dogmersfield, which was inherited by John son of Robert atte Berewe.<sup>47</sup> John Berewe, presumably the latter, died in 1418 seised of a water-mill and land in PILCOT, held of the Bishop of Bath and Wells as of the manor of Dogmersfield,<sup>48</sup> so that it seems probable that this property, which was called a manor in the 17th century, was also held by the first John.

George Berewe, who was probably a descendant of the same family, conveyed 'all that tenement and cottage with appurtenances in Pylcott . . . and 8 acres of arable land and pasture with other small tenements and a water-mill in Pylcott' to James Wolveridge in January 1567-8.<sup>49</sup> In 1591 there was a dispute about the right of Anthony Berewe to these lands, a witness asserting that George Berewe had given up his interest in the property to Anthony.

James Wolveridge obtained a quitclaim of the manor of Pilcot from George Berewe in 1611,<sup>50</sup> but he or his descendants appear to have parted with the property, as Edward Dickenson died in 1630 seised of the manor of Pilcot, the overlordship being vested in the lord of Dogmersfield Manor; Edward left a son James, aged eight, the heir of his property.<sup>51</sup>

The manor has apparently disappeared, but the name and probably the site is preserved in the hamlet of Pilcot in this parish.

The church of ALL SAINTS is a CHURCH modern one, with a chancel, nave, north and south transepts, west tower, and an open-timbered south porch. The material of the walling is squared rubble with stone dressings; the style generally is that of the first half of the 14th century. The transepts have stone screens dividing them from the nave. The furniture of the church is all modern, but several monuments antedate the building. On the south wall is a small rectangular brass engraved with the kneeling figure of a lady before a table on which is a book, and, by the book, an infant in long clothes. From the mouth of the lady issues a scroll with the words: 'Not by merytt but by mercy judge me O Lorde.' Behind her kneel her three daughters. The background is formed by a classic arcade of two bays; between them is a lozenge with the arms of Paulet with the difference of a molet in a crescent quartering Cowdray and Andrewes. The inscription below reads: 'Here lieth Anne the eldest daughter of John Poulett of Herryard Esquyer and wyfe to Nicholas Sutton who died in childbed the viiith of Maye 1590 being of the age of xxviiith yeres on whose soule God have mercy.' Below this is another inscription: 'The above brass was found in Dogmersfield

MILDMAY, Baronet. Argent three lions azure.

<sup>33</sup> Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A., Notes on the Parish of Dogmersfield; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>34</sup> G.E.C. Baronetage, v, 157.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. 158. There were no less than three injunctions from different quarters of the Mildmay family; ex inform. the Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A.

<sup>37</sup> Cal. Wells D. and C. MSS. (Hist. MSS. Com.), i, 15.

<sup>38</sup> Cal. Close, 1227-31, p. 23; Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 44. A deer leap (or saltatorium) was so constructed that the deer could readily leap into the park over a fence of moderate height, but were prevented from returning by a steep upward slope in the ditch inside the park fence (Cox, Royal Forests, 56).

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. 289. Roger, Bishop of Bath and Wells, was confirmed in his possession of this land in 1246.

<sup>40</sup> Cal. Close, 1272-9, p. 289.

<sup>41</sup> Local Notes, by Rev. C. H. St. John-Mildmay, M.A.

<sup>42</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), 149.

<sup>43</sup> Cal. Rot. Chart. (Rec. Com.), 171.

<sup>44</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 469; Cal. Wells D. and C. MSS. (Hist. MSS. Com.), i, 147.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 512b; Chan. Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. V, no. 51; Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 145, no. 58; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Jas. I.

<sup>46</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 206; 1226-57, p. 469.

<sup>47</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 25 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 49.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid. 6 Hen. V, no. 51.

<sup>49</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 145, no. 58.

<sup>50</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 92, no. 2; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Jas. I.

<sup>51</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccclxi, 127.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

House in 1904. It is supposed it was taken from the old church of this parish pulled down in 1806. It was placed here in January 1905.<sup>7</sup> There are other 18th-century and later monuments, chiefly to the members of the St. John-Mildmay family.

There are four bells, one being a very small one dated 1843; the treble of the larger three is by Thomas Mears 1843, the second by Warner 1836, and the third is one of the 15th-century Reading group with the inscription 'Sancta Nicolae' and the marks of a lion's face, cross, and goat.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1572 and 1569; a silver paten of 1677 given by William Godson and his wife Elizabeth in that year; a silver chalice of 1842 given by John Taylor Cole-ridge in 1842; a silver parcel-gilt paten of 1844 and a silver flagon of 1711 given in 1744 by Paulet St. John.

There are four books of registers. The first begins in 1695, and contains baptisms and burials to 1782 and marriages to 1745. The second has marriages only from 1755 to 1791. The third has baptisms and burials from 1783 to 1812, and the fourth marriages from 1792 to 1812. There is thus a gap in the marriage entries between 1745 and 1755.

A church existed in Dogmersfield ADVOWSON at the time of the Domesday Survey, and the advowson was granted by the Prior and convent of Bath to Reginald Fitz Joceline, Bishop of Bath and Wells, in 1180, together with an annual pension of 20s.<sup>42</sup>

The bishop constituted this sum a prebend of Wells in 1215, and in 1239 joined it to the prebend of Wedmore and the church of Mark, making a total annual value of £4.<sup>43</sup> The contribution was evidently too great a burden upon the rector of Dogmersfield, and in 1208 William Giffard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, ordained that it should cease.<sup>44</sup> In the valuation of the churches in the diocese of Winchester, however, made in William of Wykeham's time (1367-98), Dogmersfield is returned as contributing a pension of the original amount.<sup>45</sup>

After the sale to the king the advowson seems to have generally belonged to the lord of the manor of Dogmersfield; but in 1639, and again in 1641, Thomas Hussey, M.P. for Whitchurch, presented; and in 1679 Elizabeth Whelpdale, possibly a widow or daughter of Andrew Whelpdale, rector in 1671, presented to the living.<sup>46</sup> The lord of the manor is the present patron.

A licence was granted by William of Wykeham about the year 1370 to John Harewell, Bishop of Bath and Wells, to 'confer orders in his chapel at Dogmersfield.'<sup>47</sup>

The poor's land formerly consisted CHARITIES of land forming part of Dogmersfield Park. In 1863 the land was sold, and proceeds invested in £584 8s. consols with the official trustees, producing yearly £14 12s., which is applicable by the rector and churchwardens in the distribution of fuel, clothes, or other articles in kind, and in special cases in money payments for the benefit of the most deserving poor resident in the parish. In 1905 there were thirty-eight recipients of coal and clothing.

ELVETHAM

Helvetham, Ulvetham (xiii cent.).

The parish of Elvetham, which is bounded on the west by the River Hart, comprises 3,277 acres, of which approximately 1,757 acres are woods and plantations, 625 acres arable land, and 856 acres permanent grass.<sup>1</sup> The Basingstoke road, the old coaching road to the west of England, cuts through the wooded country in the north; Star Hill House, the residence of Mr. George Henry Staytont, and Woodside, the residence of Captain F. E. Caldwell, are on this road, which crosses the River Hart at the bridge that has given its name to the hamlet of Hartford Bridge. A small church was built here in 1876 on the road which leads past Arlot's Farm to Malt House Farm and the Home Farm, and skirts Elvetham Park on the east. About a mile from Hartford Bridge the rectory stands back from this road, and at the south-east corner of the park are the schools. The river runs through the park, which contains a lake fed by its waters; the church, which was restored and enlarged by the fourth Lord Calthorpe, stands in the park near Elvetham House, the seat of the present Lord Calthorpe. Yateley Heath Wood occupies the greater part of the northeastern part of the parish, and the woodland in the south is intersected by the London and South Western Railway.

The soil is various, the subsoil sand and gravel; the chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, roots, and clover. The commons were inclosed in 1815.<sup>2</sup>

Place-names found in various records are Maplers, Hunland, Stephyms, Le Freth, Inholmes, and Rykmansforde (1530), Marrow Meade, Laundry Meade, and 'an inn called the White Lyon in Hartford Bridge or Hartley Wintney' (1650).<sup>3</sup>

According to a charter contained in the MANOR registers of Chertsey Abbey, Frithenwald, subregulus of Surrey, granted land at ELVETHAM to that house in 675.<sup>4</sup> This charter, however, is probably not genuine, for the statement that Edric held Elvetham of Edward the Confessor is in direct contradiction to it,<sup>5</sup> and it is more likely that Elvetham was granted to the abbey by William the Conqueror, as a confirmatory charter of Henry I states.<sup>6</sup> In 1086 Hugh de Port was holding Elvetham, which was of the annual value of 30s., of the abbey; there was sufficient woodland to feed ten swine, and it was assessed at 1 hide.<sup>7</sup> The manor

<sup>42</sup> Cal. Wells D. and C. MS. (Hist. MSS. Com.), i, 54, 477.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 54, 60.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid. 105.

<sup>45</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.) i, 374.

<sup>46</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 163; Pat.

<sup>1</sup> Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 6; Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Chas. I; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.); Hants N. and Q. v, 123; Exch. Dep. 24 Chas. II, East. 10.

<sup>47</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 158.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>3</sup> Ct. R. bdle. 201, no. 16; Close, 1650, pt. x, no. 7.

<sup>4</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 64-5.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472b.

<sup>6</sup> Dugdale, Mon. i, 430.

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472b.

was confirmed to the abbey by Henry I,<sup>8</sup> and the abbot and convent retained the overlordship until the reign of Henry VIII, the manor being held of them by fealty and a rent of 30s.<sup>9</sup>

Before 1166 Elvetham had apparently passed from the Ports to Stephen de Bendeng, who in that year was returned as holding one quarter of a knight's fee of the Abbot of Chertsey; this same property was held by Adam de Bendeng in 1212, and there is very little doubt that the same estate is referred to in the Testa de Nevill, which states that Adam de Bendeng held 1 hide of land in Elvetham.<sup>10</sup> Adam, who died in 1229, had a son Walter, who died in 1232, leaving a son William, who was under age; he and his father's land were entrusted to the custody of Walter de Faukenberge, and when William died two years later the manor passed to his aunt, Maud wife of Geoffrey Sturmy.<sup>11</sup> Geoffrey Sturmy died in 1246, leaving a son Henry, who entered into possession of his mother's inheritance when he came of age in 1254,<sup>12</sup> and in 1280 was called upon to prove his right to the assize of bread and ale in Elvetham.<sup>13</sup> The manor remained in the family without a break, descending from father to son for a hundred years or more, the younger generation being invariably named after the elder.<sup>14</sup>

In 1359 Henry Sturmy was granted free warren besides permission to inclose some land in Elvetham in order to make a park which he might 'hold to himself and his heirs for ever.'<sup>15</sup> Henry Sturmy died

CHERTSEY ABBEY.
Party or and argent St. Paul's sword argent with its hilt or crossed with St. Peter's keys gules and azure.

granted in 1403 to inclose and impark land in Elvetham.<sup>17</sup>

Sir William Sturmy died in 1426-7, leaving as heirs a daughter Agnes and a grandson John Seymour, son of his daughter Maud.<sup>18</sup> John Seymour inherited Elvetham, and when he died in 1464 he bequeathed one-third of the manor to Isabel his wife. Isabel held in dower until her death in 1485, when her share passed to her husband's namesake, her grandson and heir.<sup>19</sup>

This John Seymour died in 1492, leaving a son John,<sup>20</sup> who entertained Henry VIII at Elvetham in the October of 1535,<sup>21</sup> and on his death in the following year was succeeded by his second but first surviving son Edward. Edward Seymour was created Earl of Hertford in 1537, and Duke of Somerset in 1547.<sup>22</sup> Henry VIII again visited Elvetham in August 1536 and Edward Seymour used the house as a summer residence for his children.<sup>23</sup> He was made Protector, but was deprived of that position in 1549, accused of high treason, and beheaded in the Tower of London in January 1551-2.<sup>24</sup> After his death he was attainted and his estates were forfeited, but they were subsequently restored to his son Edward, who was created Earl of Hertford in January 1558-9, and entertained Queen Elizabeth at Elvetham in most magnificent style in 1591.<sup>25</sup> His wife welcomed the royal visitor 'most humbly on her knees as she alighted from horseback at the hall door, and was by the queen most graciously embraced.'<sup>26</sup>

The earl died in 1621, and was succeeded by his grandson William, the lover of Arabella Stuart, created Marquis of Hertford in 1640,<sup>27</sup> and second Duke of Somerset in 1660. He sold the Elvetham estate in 1650 to Sir Robert Reynolds,<sup>28</sup> described in the indenture of sale as Solicitor-General of the Commonwealth of England. Sir Robert Reynolds's daughter and eventual sole heiress, Priscilla, married Reynolds Calthorpe after the death of her first husband, Sir Richard Knight,<sup>29</sup> and was holding the manor in conjunction with him in 1695, Sir Robert Reynolds having died in 1678.<sup>30</sup> She died in 1709, leaving an only son, Reynolds, who died in 1714, when the manor apparently passed to her husband (who died in 1720), and from him to his son by his second wife, Henry Calthorpe, afterwards knighted.<sup>31</sup> Sir Henry Calthorpe left his estate to his nephew Henry, son of Sir Henry Gough and Barbara daughter of Reynolds Calthorpe.<sup>32</sup> This nephew took his uncle's name when he inherited in 1788, and was created Lord Calthorpe in 1796.<sup>33</sup> His great-grandson, Sir Augustus Cholmondeley

STURMY. Argent three demi-lions gules.

SEYMOUR. Gules a pair of wings or.

in 1381,<sup>36</sup> and the manor passed to his nephew and rightful heir William, to whom a further licence was

<sup>8</sup> Dugdale, Mon. i, 431.

<sup>9</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 57; Add. Chart. 5487; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xviii, 15.

<sup>10</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 198; ii, 606; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 235b; Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 181.

<sup>11</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 222, 258; ii, 182.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. i, 451; ii, 182.

<sup>13</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 770.

<sup>14</sup> Henry son of Geoffrey died in 1295, and had a son Henry, who died in 1305; his son and heir Henry died in 1337-8, leaving three sons: Henry who married Margaret, Richard, and Geoffrey; the last-named son had a son William, who inherited his uncle Henry's property on his death in 1381 (Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. I, no.

51; 33 Edw. I, no. 65; 12 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 18; 5 Ric. II, no. 21; Feet of F. Hants. Mich. 19 Edw. III).

<sup>15</sup> Chart. R. 33 Edw. III, m. 3.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Ric. II, no. 21.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Pat. 1401-5, p. 220.

<sup>18</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Hen. VI, no. 22.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. 4 Edw. IV, no. 32; 2 Ric. III, no. 36; Add. Chart. 5489.

<sup>20</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), viii, 15.

<sup>21</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, ix, 619-20.

<sup>22</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 173. In 1541 Richard Robynson, William Harrys, and John Benet, having confessed to hunting by night in the Earl of Hertford's park of Elvetham, were sent to Winchester prison (L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, 7367), but they received the royal pardon the following year (ibid. xvii, 163).

<sup>23</sup> Lord Bath's MSS.

<sup>24</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 173.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. iv, 224; Warner, Hants, i, 213.

<sup>26</sup> Engl. Hist. Rev. xiii (1890), 307. This was his second wife, Frances Howard. His first wife, Catherine Gray, was no favourite of Elizabeth.

<sup>27</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iv, 225.

<sup>28</sup> Close, 1650, pt. x, no. 7.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid.; Berry, Hants Gen. 47.

<sup>30</sup> Recov. R. East. 7 Will. and Mary, rot. 237; Memo. relating to Elvetham Parish, 22.

<sup>31</sup> Memo. relating to the parish of Elvetham (1896), 23; G.E.C. Peerage, ii, 118.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Gough-Calthorpe, the sixth baron, died 22 July 1910. He was succeeded in the title by his brother Sir Somerset John Gough-Calthorpe.

Some land in Elvetham was originally part of the ancient demesne and was probably included in GOUGH. Gules a fesse argent between three boars' heads or with a lion passant azure on the fesse.

CALTHORPE. Checkered or and azure with a fesse ermine.

Odiham at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>84</sup> It seems to have been granted at a very early date to the Bernard family, and to have acquired the name of ELVETHAM BERNARD, which survived as late as the 17th century.<sup>85</sup> In 1280 this estate was already united to the Sturmy property.<sup>86</sup>

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN has a chancel and nave in one, north transept, south porch, and a west tower with a stone spire. It is said to have been 'restored' in 1840-1, but as no old stones have been left it is practically a wholly modern structure. It is of flint and stone, and is in the style of the 12th century. All its furniture and fittings are also modern, but there are a few monuments a little earlier in date than the church. The tower contains one large bell which is practically inaccessible.

The plate consists of a fine set of modern vessels, a silver-gilt chalice, two patens, and two flagons, all of 1873; also a silver-gilt spoon.

The registers begin in 1638, the first book containing baptisms, marriages, and burials up to 1699, a few baptisms from 1712 to 1714, a burial of 1714, and a Hartley Wintney marriage of 1714. On an end sheet is a form of declaration of marriage probably used during the Commonwealth; the second book begins in 1699, and has baptisms to 1803, marriages to 1753, and burials to 1812; the third has marriages from 1754 to 1812, and the fourth baptisms 1804 to 1812.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Elvetham has apparently always belonged to the successive lords of the manor,<sup>87</sup> the living at the present time being a rectory of the net value of £208.

The poor of this parish receive the CHARITIES rents and profits of a house at Cove in Yateley, known as 'The Anchor,' with 7 acres or thereabouts adjoining, derived under the will of Sir Robert Reynolds, and a deed of grant by Reynolds Calthorpe, dated in 1704. The trust property is let at £63 a year, and a sum of £9 7s. is received as the dividends on £374 11s. 8d. consols with the official trustees.

In 1746 Sir Henry Calthorpe, by a codicil to his will, bequeathed £200 for the poor, and in 1763 the Rev. James Phipps, a former rector, by his will left £100, the interest to be applied in the distribution of bread. The trust fund now consists of £383 5s. 3d. consols with the official trustees, producing yearly £9 11s. 4d.

The charities are administered together. In 1906 £68 15s. was expended in clothing, £8 5s. in coal, and £3 2s. 6d. in bread.

GREYWELL OR GREWELL

Graiwella (xii cent.); Graiwell (xiii cent.).

Greywell is a small parish of 876 acres, situated on the River Whitewater 2 miles south-west from Hook. Immediately south of Butter Wood, which takes up nearly the whole of the north of the parish, is Greywell Hill Park, with Greywell Hill House on rising ground, the seat of the Baroness Dorchester. The Basingstoke Canal runs under this park in a tunnel of nearly a mile long. The River Whitewater forms the eastern boundary of the parish and works a mill which probably occupies the site of a mill existing in 1600.<sup>1</sup>

Greywell contains approximately 390 acres of woodland, 213 acres of permanent grass, and 270 acres of arable land.<sup>2</sup> The chief crops are grain of different kinds. The soil is light loam and the subsoil chalk and clay.

The village, which is unusually picturesque, is situated in the east of the parish. It is built mainly on the west side of a branch road connecting Odiham with the Basingstoke and Alresford Road. The church lies a hundred yards or so south-east of the village near the Whitewater, and the churchyard contains some fine beech trees. At the corner of the footpath leading to the church is a good half-timber house, probably of 16th or even 15th-century date. It is of an L-shaped plan, the short projecting wing having an overhanging upper story and gable with plain curved angle brackets. Another group of pretty half-timbered houses stands at the north end of the village near the Fox and Goose Inn, and there are several good 18th-century brick houses and a gable with a fine specimen of tile-hanging. There is a Wesleyan chapel in the parish.

Some place names belonging to this parish mentioned in various records are:—Stratfield (1361),<sup>3</sup> Closes called Cakebreddi and Styles lying by Butter Wood, Malt-house Piddle, Hughe Millers Piddle, and Shepparde Piddle (1600),<sup>4</sup> Millmore, Hopeyard Pidle, Isle and 'a messuage and mill called Cutmill alias Grewell mill' (1608).<sup>5</sup> In an account of the lands included in Greywell Manor in 1602 'a hopp gardene' is included.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>84</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>85</sup> Close, 1650, pt. x, no. 7.

<sup>86</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>87</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i,

58; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 41, 98b, 148b; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xii.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Inq. p.m. 25 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 11.

<sup>4</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xii.

<sup>5</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 121b.

<sup>6</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xii.

ODIHAM HUNDRED GREYWELL or GREWELL

GREYWELL was probably included MANOR under Odiham in the Domesday Survey of 1086. In an inquisition taken on the death of Isabel Basset in 1260 it is stated that it was the ancient demesne of Henry II who gave it to Juliana de Aquila, said to be 'mother of Gilbert de Aquila.'<sup>7</sup> However, Mr. Round is of the opinion that this finding was wrong, since Gilbert de Laigle (Aquila) is known to have been son of Richer by Edeline, while Juliana (daughter of Geoffrey, Count of Perche) was the wife of another and earlier Gilbert (son of Richer) who held Witley (Surrey) as a young man in 1086, and mother by him of two sons, Richer and Gilbert, the elder of whom, Richer, paid one mark into the king's treasury for Greywell in 1167.<sup>8</sup> He it was who married Edeline and became father of Gilbert de Laigle (Aquila). This Gilbert de Aquila went to Normandy shortly before 1200,<sup>9</sup> and in 1204 King John granted the issues of the manor of Greywell to his favourite, Alan Basset, the founder of the family of Basset of Wycombe (co. Bucks).<sup>10</sup>

After the death of Alan Basset in 1233 Henry III granted these lands, described as 'late of Gilbert de Aquila,' to Gilbert Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, to hold during the king's pleasure.<sup>11</sup> The conditions of the earl's tenure of Greywell were that he should do suit at the hundred court of Odiham and should pay £4 rent and provide reapers for a day yearly in autumn at Odiham to reap the king's corn, while the king undertook to feed them. It was also the duty of the inhabitants of Greywell to guard the prisoners at Odiham every third night.<sup>12</sup>

The earl subsequently granted Greywell to his niece Isabel, daughter of William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, on her marriage with Gilbert Basset son of Alan.<sup>13</sup> Gilbert died about 1241 leaving a son who did not long survive him;<sup>14</sup> his widow held the manor in dower and married as her second husband Reginald de Mohun of Dunster<sup>15</sup> (co. Somers.). She died in 1260, and as she left no issue by Gilbert the manor escheated to the king. However William de Mohun, her son by her second husband,<sup>16</sup> obtained a grant of the manor and died seised of it about 1281 leaving a son Reginald aged six.<sup>17</sup>

MOHUN of Dunster.
Or a cross engrailed
sable.

Reginald died without heirs, possibly before he came of age, and the property was divided between his two sisters, the manor of Greywell being assigned to the elder Mary and her husband John Meriet in 1297.<sup>18</sup> On the death of John Meriet, about 1327 the manor reverted to John de Mohun of Dunster,<sup>19</sup> a great-grandson of Reginald de Mohun of Dunster by his first wife.<sup>20</sup> He died in 1330, and his grandson, John, a minor, was his heir.<sup>21</sup> During this minority William de Horwode, the king's yeoman, was granted the custody of the manor, but he was soon deprived of it, and the Bishop of Norwich put in his place.<sup>22</sup>

Sir John de Mohun died in 1376<sup>23</sup> and Greywell then passed in accordance with the marriage settlement of 1348 to his widow Joan, who died in 1404,<sup>24</sup> leaving as her heirs two daughters, Philippa, wife of Edward Plantagenet, Duke of York, and Elizabeth, widow of William Montagu, Earl of Salisbury, and a grandson, Sir Richard L'Estrange, son of Maud a deceased daughter, who had married Sir John L'Estrange.<sup>25</sup> Philippa was dealing with Greywell in 1431,<sup>26</sup> but Richard appears to have ultimately inherited the whole manor, which he granted in 1444 to Thomas Haydok in tail at HAYDOK of Greywell.

Argent a cross sable with a fleur de lis sable in the quarter.

a rent of £10 for 110 years, and at the end of that term a rent of £20.<sup>27</sup> This Thomas had a son John who presumably succeeded his father in possession.<sup>28</sup> He died in 1504 and was buried in Odiham Church. Another Thomas with his wife Christine was holding in 1508,<sup>29</sup> and James Haydok, who was descended from Alexander Haydok the second son of a 'Thomas Haydok of Greywell,' is also described as 'of Greywell.'<sup>30</sup> He left a son William and a widow Margaret, who apparently married, as her second husband, Michael Harris.<sup>31</sup>

Margaret was holding in dower in 1597,<sup>32</sup> but she had died before 1602, in which year William Haydok sold the manor to Edward Glascocke.<sup>33</sup> In 1605 Edward Glascocke died, leaving Greywell Manor to his son Joseph, who died the next year, bequeathing the manor to his brother Arthur.<sup>34</sup> Edward, Lord Zouche, purchased the manor in 1610 from Edward Cason (to whom it had been conveyed in the preceding year by Arthur Glascocke<sup>35</sup>) and by a deed

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 45 Hen. III, no. 27.

<sup>8</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 189.

<sup>9</sup> Vide Round, Cal. of Doc. France, 225-6.

<sup>10</sup> V.C.H. Surr. iii, under Witley.

<sup>11</sup> Close, 6 John, m. 6.

<sup>12</sup> Banks, Dormant and Extinct Bar. i, 231; Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 191. On the accession of Henry III another arrangement with regard to the manor seems to have been made, Peter de Bosco being appointed custodian; it is doubtful if he ever actually held. (Cal. Pat. 1216-25, p. 70.)

<sup>13</sup> Inq. p.m. 45 Hen. III, no. 27; 10 Edw. I, no. 19.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 252.

<sup>15</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 231, 349.

<sup>16</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. ix, 143.

<sup>17</sup> Inq. p.m. 45 Hen. III, no. 27.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 10 Edw. I, no. 19; Harl. Soc.

Publ. ix, 143; H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, Dunster and its Lords, 34. During the minority of the latter Robert son of John was appointed custodian. (Cal. Pat. 1281-92, p. 114.)

<sup>19</sup> Inq. p.m. 25 Edw. I, no. 43.

<sup>20</sup> His wife and his son had died before him, the latter leaving no heirs (Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 51).

<sup>21</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 51; Cal. Close, 1327-30, p. 131.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 35.

<sup>23</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, p. 415; 1334-8, p. 122.

<sup>24</sup> H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, Dunster and its Lords, 20.

<sup>25</sup> Cal. Pat. 1348-50, p. 58; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 22 Edw. III.

<sup>26</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Hen. IV, no. 33; Harl. Soc. Publ. ix, 143.

<sup>27</sup> Close, 22 Hen. VI, m. 10.

<sup>28</sup> Close, 22 Hen. VI, m. 9 d. Sir Richard L'Estrange died seised of the rent in 1449 (Inq. p.m. 22 Hen. VI, no. 29). His son Sir John L'Estrange died seised of the rent in 1479 leaving as his heir his daughter Joan (ibid. 19 Edw. VI, no. 39). This Joan as 'Joan Stanley, widow, Lady L'Estrange,' confirmed Thomas Haydok in possession of the manor in 1508. (De Banco R. Hil. 24 Hen. VII, m. 143; Mich. 24 Hen. VII, m. 13.)

<sup>29</sup> Close, 22 Hen. VI, m. 9 d.

<sup>30</sup> De Banco R. Hil. 24 Hen. VII, m. 143; 24 Hen. VII, m. 13.

<sup>31</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 216.

<sup>32</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 39 Eliz.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid. <sup>34</sup> Close, 44 Eliz. pt. xii.

<sup>35</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bde. 8, no. 123; 5 Jas. I, bde. 8, no. 119.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 6 Jas. I; Hil. 7 Jas. I.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

of 1625 conveyed it to his cousin Edward Zouche and another, to be held to his own use.<sup>36</sup> He died three months afterwards when the property descended to his daughter Mary, wife of William Connard, and Zouche Tate his grandson, the child of Elizabeth, another daughter (vide Hartley Wintney),<sup>37</sup> and Sir Edward Zouche acquired the manor from the latter in 1627.<sup>38</sup> He died in 1634,<sup>39</sup> and was succeeded by his son James, who died nine years later, leaving a son Edward.<sup>40</sup>

In 1663 James Zouche, brother of Edward who died without issue in 1658, was holding the manor;<sup>41</sup> he died in 1708 without issue, and Sophia Bayes his niece became heir-general to the family.<sup>42</sup>

The manor next appears in the possession of the Earls of Northampton, and in 1786 the widow of the first earl and the sisters and co-heirs of the second earl sold it to trustees for Guy Carleton, first Lord Dorchester.<sup>43</sup> Guy, Lord Dorchester, the third baron, died in 1875, when his cousin Dudley Wilmot succeeded him as fourth baron. He died without heirs in 1897, when the barony became extinct.<sup>44</sup> In 1899 Henrietta Anne Carleton, elder daughter and co-heiress of Guy, third Lord Dorchester, was created a baroness, and she is the present owner of Greywell Hill.<sup>45</sup>

A fishery was appurtenant to the manor, as appears from a document of 1536 which records how a servant of Thomas Haydok called Richard Edwards murdered a certain Edward Waterman while fishing in waters belonging to his master at Greywell.<sup>46</sup>

The church of ST. MARY consists CHURCH of a chancel 22 ft. by 14 ft. 4 in.; a nave 40 ft. 1 in. by 16 ft. 8 in., a west tower 7 ft. 9 in. by 6 ft. 9 in., and a north porch. The oldest part of the church is the nave, which is of the end of the 12th century, and except for the windows and the addition of a rood-stair has apparently remained unaltered. The church of which this formed part consisted also of a tower and a chancel, of which the former was largely rebuilt in the latter half of the 17th century, while the chancel has been completely rebuilt in modern times. The porch is a modern structure.

The windows of the chancel are all modern, and have tracery of 15th-century detail. That to the east is of three, the other two to north and south of two cinquefoiled lights. On the north is also a modern blocked door. The chancel arch is original, a narrow pointed opening of one square order. At the spring are grooved hollow-chamfered abaci. The jambs are almost completely restored, but such old stones as remain unscrapped, both in the jambs and in the head, show diagonal tooling.

On the north of the nave, to the east, is a small door to the rood-loft stair, which is in a semicircular turret built with shaped ashlar blocks irregularly diapered with squares of flint. The only other opening in this wall is the north door, the sole entrance, which is contemporary with the chancel arch. It has a semicircular head of one square and one chamfered order, and a much-restored label ornamented with dog-tooth. At the spring of the outer order are grooved and chamfered abaci, and the masonry shows diagonal tooling. At the east end of the south wall is inserted a 15th-century window of three cinquefoiled lights with sub-mullions and smaller lights over. The jambs, both external and internal, are moulded with wide hollows, &c. At the other end of the south wall is a much-restored twin lancet window of mid-13th-century date. The heads of its two lights are cut from a single stone, and the jambs are very much restored. Between these windows is the blocked north door of early 13th-century date with a round head and a continuous chamfer, all very much restored.

The tower is of three stages, the top one being a shingled timber structure and much restored. The lower stages are part early flint rubble, part 17th-century brick, and part later brick and flint rubble. The east wall appears to be largely a part of the original tower, and is quoined with ashlar blocks. The tower arch is original, and is similar to the chancel arch, but with plain chamfered abaci. There is a small round-headed west window of 17th-century date with a plaster architrave. In the 17th-century rebuilding the tower appears to have been covered with plaster. On the north the greater part remains, and bears traces of imitation quoining and part of a circular panel with a band of fleurs de lis worked in flat relief. There are also a couple of arches with grotesquely diminished columns and enormous capitals, all worked flat in the plaster, forming a frame for the initials R. H. and I. P.; and the date, 1663. The initials are those of the churchwardens at that time, when the east side of the tower was plastered. The porch is modern and of plain open-timber construction.

The font is of 15th-century date. It is octagonal with quatrefoil panels on the faces. The stem has been lost, and the bowl is placed on the moulded base, and stands under the tower arch.

There is an unusually complete rood-screen and loft of early 16th-century date. It stands on a modern stone base, and has been raised above its original level, there being now no headway between the roof and the upper part of the rood-stair. It has a wide central opening with carved spandrels, and four bays on either side, the lower panels of which were formerly solid but are now open; they have cinquefoiled heads with pairs of quatrefoils over. The upper panels have simple uncusped tracery, and over them is a cornice, in the upper surface of which the mortices for the front of the loft remain. The screen stands some 8 ft. from the east wall of the nave, and the space between is ceiled with a flat ceiling at the cornice level. The middle bay of the ceiling is separated from the side bays by moulded beams, and has a geometrical star pattern in moulded ribs; that of the south bay has a simpler pattern, and the north bay is divided only into four square panels. The nave

CARLETON, Lord Dorchester. Argent a bend sable with three voided lozenges argent thereon.

<sup>36</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, viii, 226; W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 278.

<sup>37</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 278.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 3 Chas. I.

<sup>39</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 278.

<sup>40</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dxxxviii, 136.

<sup>41</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 15 Chas. II, rot. 34; Manning and Bray, Hist. of Surr. i, 125.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid.

<sup>43</sup> Close, 27 Geo. III, pt. xiii, no. 7; Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 288.

<sup>44</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>45</sup> Ex inform. Mr. J. Hautenville Cope.

<sup>46</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xvi, 2.

ELVETHAM PARK : THE LONG WALK

GREYWELL CHURCH : THE ROOD SCREEN

roof above is ceiled and panelled, whilst elsewhere it is open, and on the east wall above the loft are the royal arms.

The chancel roof, the seating, pulpit, and fittings generally, are modern, and there are no monuments of any interest. The fine old Jacobean oak pulpit was sacrificed at the last restoration of 1865.

The tower contains three bells. The treble is inscribed 'HAL MARY FUL OF GRAS W.R.', in Gothic capitals; the second is inscribed 'FEAR GOD 1638' in roman capitals, and was probably cast in the Knight foundry; the third is inscribed 'HENRY KNIGHT 1632.' There is also a small 'ting tang' with no marks, but of late date.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1569; a silver-gilt spoon, and a pewter alms plate.

The early registers are all contained in one mixed book containing entries between 1604 and 1812.

ADVOWSON Greywell was originally a chapelry dependent on the church of Odiham (q.v.).<sup>47</sup> A chapel is known to have existed before 1385, as in that year Bishop Wykeham admonished the Chancellor of Salisbury, the patron of Odiham, for his neglect of the chapel, and called upon him to put it in a proper state of repair.<sup>48</sup> At the Reformation the vicar of Odiham kept a priest in the chapel of ease at Greywell, where there were more than eightscore 'housing' people who had ministrations in the said chapel.<sup>49</sup>

A vicarage was instituted in 1902, with the Bishop of Winchester as patron.<sup>50</sup>

Francis William Digweed, by will, CHARITIES proved 5 February 1866, bequeathed £200 stock, the dividends to be distributed annually at Christmas in bedding and clothing among aged poor of the parish.

The legacy, less duty, is represented by £179 18s. 11d. consols, with the official trustees, producing £4 10s. yearly.

HARTLEY WINTNEY

Herclega, Hurtlegh, Hertele, Hertleye Wynteneye (xiii cent.); Hurtleye Wintney or Wytteneye (xiv cent.); Herteley Witney (xvi cent.).

Hartley Wintney is a large parish with an area of 2,449 acres of land and 3 acres of land covered with water, situated 2 miles north from Winchfield. The country is rather low, averaging 200 ft. above the Ordnance datum; one bench mark, however, by St. Mary's Church, records 287.1 ft. Towards the west there are some copses, but the general aspect is that of open land. In the immediate vicinity of Hazeley Heath, which is partly within Hartley Wintney, gravel-pits are found. The village of Hartley Row lies on the main road from Bagshot to Basingstoke, and is entered by crossing Hartford Bridge and passing the golf links. After leaving the village this road leads on past Hartley Grange to Phoenix Green, and through Bear's Green to Odiham, whence it continues its course to Basingstoke. Branching off from the main road at the village is Church Lane, which passes the schools and the modern church of St. John on the west, and having proceeded due south for some distance beyond St. Mary's Church, winds to the far east of the parish, where Wintney Farm is situated on a spot once the site of the priory. West Green and Diple Green are in the west of the parish, and are pleasantly situated on the road to Mattingley.

The soil is a light loam, the subsoil sand. According to the Agricultural Statistics of 1905 there are 683½ acres of arable land, 747½ acres of permanent grass, and 69 acres of woods and plantations in the parish. The chief crops are corn and roots.

The following names occur in records of Hartley Wintney:—Abrahams, Godfreyes, and Beales<sup>1</sup> (xvi cent.); Great Tillingham's, Somer's, Batt's, Haiward's<sup>2</sup> (xvii cent.).

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANOR HARTLEY WINTNEY was probably included in the great royal manor of Odiham, and it is not mentioned by name until the 12th century, when a priory was founded here. Geoffrey Fitz Peter, whose name appears in an obituary of the priory as fundator ecclesiae nostrae,<sup>3</sup> had a sister Juliana, who married Stephen Bendeng of Winchfield, and to her he gave one-third of the vill of Hartley Wintney in free marriage,<sup>4</sup> so that for some time there were two distinct holdings in this parish—one of the nuns and the other of the Bendengs. Gradually by benefactions of or purchase from the latter family the priory of Hartley Wintney extended its holding,<sup>5</sup> until in 1258 the Bendengs finally quitclaimed to the nuns in the person of Alda, late the wife of Stephen Bendeng, grandson of Juliana sister of Geoffrey Fitz Peter.<sup>6</sup> The right of the priory to the manor was undisputed until the Dissolution, and the only records left are chiefly concerned with grants and licences to the nuns. Amongst others, permission was given to the prioress in 1228 to hold a fair each year for three days—i.e. on the eve, the day, and the morrow of the feast of St. Mary Magdalen.<sup>7</sup> Again, in 1340, the nuns were exempted from the subsidy of the ninth owing to their poverty;<sup>8</sup> and in 1388 they obtained leave from the king to receive land in the parish from Thomas Foster of Cholderton for lights in the priory church.<sup>9</sup>

In 1538 Henry VIII made a grant in tail male to Richard Hill, serjeant of the king's cellar, and Elizabeth his wife of 'the dissolved priory of Wintney, Hants; the church, steeple, and churchyard of the same; the manor of Hartley Wintney; and the rectory and advowson of Hartley Wintney, Hants; and all the lands in Hartley Wintney and in Winchester, Hants, belonging to the said manor and

<sup>47</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 137b.

<sup>48</sup> Wykeham's Reg. Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 367.

<sup>49</sup> Aug. Off. Chant Cert. 52, no. 3.

<sup>50</sup> Clergy List, 1903.

<sup>1</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. iv.

<sup>2</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 4 Jas. II, no. 40; Add. MS. 33278, fol. 150b; Close, 6 Jas. I, pt. xxxiii.

<sup>3</sup> Dugdale, Mon. v, 722.

<sup>4</sup> De Banco R. East. 11 Hen. III.

<sup>5</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 3 Hen. III; East.

<sup>12</sup> Hen. III; Trin. 32 Hen. III; Cal. Close, 1227-31, p. 34.

<sup>6</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 42 Hen. III.

<sup>7</sup> Cal. Close, 1227-31, p. 55.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. 1339-41, p. 570.

<sup>9</sup> Cal. Pat. 1385-9, p. 533.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

rectory—of the annual value of £26 14s. 9d. at a rent of 53s. 6d.<sup>10</sup> After the death of Richard Hill, who left a son Henry Hill and other children, his widow Elizabeth married Sir John Mason,<sup>11</sup> and the manor was settled on them by fine in 1560.<sup>12</sup> In 1571 Elizabeth Mason, once more a widow, exchanged the manor and advowson with Anthony Weekes alias Mason for his interest and term of years in Elvetham, the neighbouring manor.<sup>13</sup> By a deed of 1590 the latter granted Hartley Wintney Manor to his son John Mason,<sup>14</sup> who sold to Edward, eleventh Lord Zouche, some years later.<sup>15</sup> Lord Zouche died in 1625, leaving as his co-heirs a daughter Mary, wife of William Connard, and a grandson, Zouche Tate, son of his other daughter Elizabeth.<sup>16</sup> From these heirs his cousin Sir Edward Zouche acquired the manor in 1627, and dying in 1634 was succeeded by his son James.<sup>17</sup> The Zouches continued to hold till 1708,<sup>18</sup> when Sophia wife of John Bayes and granddaughter of James Zouche became heir-general of the family.<sup>19</sup> She and her husband dealt with the manor of Hartley Wintney by fine in 1718 and again in 1723.<sup>20</sup> On the death of the last representative of the Zouche family the manor was thrown into Chancery, out of which it was purchased about 1745 by Paulet St. John.<sup>21</sup> It now belongs to his descendant, Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, bart.

A fair is now held on 4 December, and is well attended.

Henry VIII in 1542 granted to Sir William Paulet, Lord St. John, certain messuages and lands called Woodpitts, Beles, Abrahams, Godfreyes, Gallways,<sup>22</sup> which Edward, Earl of Hertford, lord of Elvetham, had held of the Prioress and convent of Wintney, and which he had sold to the Crown as 'the manors of Wintney and Hartley-Wintney' in 1541.<sup>23</sup> These were now to be held of the king in chief by knight service.

Sir William Paulet sold them to William Wood in 1566,<sup>24</sup> and the latter granted them to John and Thomas Woods in 1578. From them Clement Daubney acquired the same in 1592, and he sold in 1602 to Robert Waller.<sup>25</sup> The latter dying in 1611 devised all his lands to his nephew John Waller, who, however, predeceased him, and was succeeded by his son Henry.<sup>26</sup>

The present parish church of ST. CHURCH JOHN THE EVANGELIST was built in 1870, and consists of an apsidal chancel, north and south transepts, with a north porch, nave, and north and south aisles with porches. There are also a vestry, an organ chamber, and a north-west bell-turret containing one modern bell.

ZOUCHE, Lord Zouche of Harringworth. Gules bezanty and a quarter ermine.

The walls are of brick with stone dressings, and the roofs are slated. All the internal fittings are modern.

The old parish church is now used as a mortuary chapel. It consists of a chancel 17 ft. 9 in. by 15 ft., nave 50 ft. 10 in. by 20 ft., with north and south transepts 17 ft. 5 in. by 12 ft., and a west tower 12 ft. square.

The chancel and nave have some 14th and 15th-century details, and the walls themselves are probably earlier; they are built of flint with a good deal of puddingstone and red brick. The transepts are 19th-century additions in red brick, and the tower of flint is still more recent. The east window of the chancel is modern with a poor imitation of 15th-century tracery without cusping, and the north window has two trefoiled lights under a square head, and seems to be in part old.

The easternmost of the two south windows is a 14th-century trefoiled lancet, and the other is a single light with chamfered jambs and four-centred uncusped head, set low in the wall. Below the sill of the first south window is a pillar piscina of late 12th-century date, with a plain foliate capital set under an arched recess. There are corbels at the north-east and south-east angles of the chancel, which carried a beam running across behind the altar. The chancel arch is plastered, and obviously modern, but the stopped south-west angle of its south jamb looks like 13th-century work, and the thickness of the wall is 3 ft. 6 in. South of the south jamb is a shallow trefoiled ogee-headed recess for the image over the former south nave altar.

The transepts each have two windows in their gable walls, one over the other, like the east window of the chancel, the upper ones being to light galleries. The arches opening to the transepts are of plastered brick and four-centred.

The easternmost window in the north wall of the nave is a single trefoiled ogee-headed light, the jambs of which only are old. The second window is a lancet with brick jambs and head.

The first south window of the nave is similar to the east chancel window, and to the west of it is a window of two trefoiled lights like those in the tower, and contemporary with them. The west angles of the nave have been rebuilt with clunch rubble. Between the two windows is the sill of a single light, rather high in the wall.

The west doorway of the nave is old and has chamfered jambs and a two-centred arch, perhaps late 13th-century work. The tower wall butts up against it, and is pierced with a plastered archway.

The west doorway of the tower has moulded jambs and a two-centred arch, with a few old stones re-used. The tower is of three stages, with an embattled parapet and angle pinnacles. The bottom stage has a lancet window in the north and south walls; in the middle stage is a two-light window in the north,

<sup>10</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiii (1), g. 1309 (13).

<sup>11</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 319; Exch. Spec. Com. 11 Jas. I, no. 4502.

<sup>12</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 2, no. 39.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. Obviously his interest was only that of a tenant or small landowner (vide Elvetham).

<sup>14</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 32 Eliz.

<sup>15</sup> Lord Zouche made good his title to the manor in 1613 (Exch. Spec. Com. 11 Jas. II, no. 4502) and obtained a final quitclaim from the family of Mason in 1618 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 16 Jas. I).

<sup>16</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 5 Chas. I, pt. 1, no. 28.

<sup>17</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 278.

<sup>18</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 16 & 17 Chas. II; Exch. Dep. Mich. 4 Jas. II, no. 40; Spec. Com. 3 Will. and Mary, no. 6844.

<sup>19</sup> Manning and Bray, Hist. of Surr. i, 125.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 4 Geo. I; Mich. 10 Geo. I.

<sup>21</sup> See Odiham.

<sup>22</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. iv.

<sup>23</sup> Vide Pat. 2 Edw. VI, pt. iv, m. 1.

<sup>24</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 36, no. 74.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

HARTLEY WINTNEY COMMON

HARTLEY WINTNEY : THE VILLAGE OF HARTLEY ROW

west, and south faces, and the top stage has a two-light window, with tracery in each face.

The roofs are tiled, and inside there are plastered ceilings, now very dilapidated.

The only old furniture besides the 18th-century altar rails is a table, now in the north transept. It has turned legs, and a movable top with an inlaid inscription in a rectangular border B I · 1636 · G H. There is an old oak chest in the west gallery of the nave. A broken modern font of 13th-century style stands under the chancel arch. Over the arch are the Lord's Prayer, Commandments, and Creed, and a moulded beam, which looks like early 16th-century work.

The tower contains three bells, the treble being dated 1721. The second is inscribed 'Henri Knight made this bell ano 1612.' The tenor has the words LOVE GOD 1642.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten, and flagon of 1629, 1828, and 1870 respectively; and a plated credence plate dated 1859.

There are three books of registers, the first, containing baptisms and burials from 1658 to 1812 and marriages from 1658 to 1754. All entries from 1658 to 1723 are copied from older books, which have been lost. The second book contains marriages from 1754 to 1796; and the third the same from 1792 to 1812.

The church was apparently included in the original endowment of the priory of Hartley Wintney. It was appropriated to the priory, and the prioress and nuns presented the vicars till the Dissolution.<sup>27</sup>

Richard Hill in 1538 acquired the rectory and advowson of the vicarage with the manor,<sup>28</sup> and since then the lords of the manor have continued to present to the vicarage.<sup>29</sup> The benefice, which is at present in the gift of Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, bart., is valued at £170 a year. There is a residence with 5½ acres of glebe attached.

The charity of Robert Ray, CHARITIES founded by deed dated 24 March 1674, was formerly endowed with a moiety of the New Inn public-house, with its appurtenances, and certain quit-rents. The trust property was sold in 1904 for £1,900, invested with the official trustees, and a sum of £936 os. 2d. War Stock, £16 13s. 4d. India 3 per cent. stock, was appropriated as the share of this parish, together with £11 os. 5d. consols, as a repair and improvement fund. The moiety of the Ray charity has since the War Stock ceased (5 April 1910) been invested in £1,152 17s. 8d. consols. About £26 a year is applied in the distribution of clothing. See under Odiham parish.

Charity of Robert Corham, founded by will, proved in the P.C.C. 1596, for the poor of this parish and Heckfield (Holdshot Hundred), consisted of an annuity of 20*s.* The one-third share for this parish was redeemed in 1904 by the transfer to the official trustees of £13 6s. 8d. consols. The annual dividend of 6*s. 8d.* is distributed among seven of the poorest people.

The Church of England school, founded by Augustus Hill Bradshaw, by deed of 18 September 1839, was formerly endowed with 5½ acres of land, which in 1897 was sold under sanction of the Charity Commissioners for yearly rents-charge amounting to £51 5s. The deed contains a proviso for cesser in certain circumstances in favour of the County Hospital at Winchester.

LASHAM

Esseham (xi cent.); Lessham (xii cent.); Lesseham, Lesham, Lasseham, Lassham, Lassam (xiv cent.).

Lasham is a small parish lying between that of Herriard on the north and Shalden on the east, while Bentworth forms its boundary line on the south and west. The village is grouped round St. Mary's Church in the centre of the parish on the main road from Alton to Basingstoke, at a height of 560 ft. above the ordnance datum, and is served by Bentworth and Lasham station on the Alton and Basingstoke branch of the London and South Western Railway. The parish has an area of 1,797 acres, and produces in crops chiefly wheat, oats, and turnips. The Agricultural Returns of 1905 give the arable land as 741 acres, permanent grass as 630 acres, and woods and plantations as 311 acres. The soil is clay, and the subsoil chalk. The following list of place-names occurs in a 13th-century document: — La Dune, La Rude, Bineheie, Burkesete, Wudehull, Hoke, Cokeshull, Hetesdun, Wicham, and Stappelweie.<sup>1</sup>

LASHAM, which Hacon had held of MANOR Edward the Confessor as an alod, formed part of the possessions of the Crown in 1086,<sup>2</sup> and was then assessed at 2½ hides. At the close of the 13th century Richard Fitz John was the overlord of Lasham.<sup>3</sup> At his death in 1297 the fee which John Dabernon was holding of him was assigned to his nephew Richard de Burgh, third Earl of Ulster, son of his sister Aveline,<sup>4</sup> while the fee which the Prior of Portsmouth was holding fell to the share of Robert de Clifford and Idonea de Leyburn, who were respectively son-in-law and daughter of his deceased sister Isabel.<sup>5</sup> The former fee continued to be held under the earldom of Ulster until Edward Plantagenet, tenth Earl of Ulster and fourth Duke of York, ascended the throne in 1461 as Edward IV, when all his honours were merged in the Crown.<sup>6</sup> It was subsequently held of the Crown as of the castle of Odiham.<sup>7</sup> In 1315 Idonea and her husband, John de Crumbwell, obtained licence to have their half-fee in Lasham settled upon them for the life of Idonea

DE BURGH, Earl of Ulster. Or a cross gules.

<sup>27</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031-4, passim; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 13.

<sup>28</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiii (1), g. 1309 (13).

<sup>29</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 8 John.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 452.

<sup>3</sup> Inq. p.m. 25 Edw. I, no. 50.

<sup>4</sup> Close, 27 Edw. I, m. 1.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, viii, 7, 215.

<sup>7</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 160; W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 21, no. 11.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

with successive remainders after her death to Hugh le Despenser the younger, Hugh le Despenser the elder, and Edward son of Hugh le Despenser the younger, and his heirs,<sup>8</sup> but seven years afterwards Edward II, on account of the forfeiture of Roger de Clifford, 'late a rebel,' granted all the knights' fees which he had held jointly with Idonea to Robert de Baldok, Archdeacon of Middlesex.<sup>9</sup> How long he kept the overlordship of this fee is uncertain, but in 1478 Sir Roger Lewknor, who died seised of the estate in Lasham formerly belonging to the Prior of Portsmouth, was stated to have held it of the queen as of her castle of Odiham.<sup>10</sup>

The first tenant who comes under notice is Roger de Clere. He was holding in 1175,<sup>11</sup> and on his marriage with Hawise de Gournay gave her Lasham in dower.<sup>12</sup> The manor would ordinarily have reverted to Ralph brother of Roger, on the death of Hawise, since there were no children of the marriage, but Hawise during life had granted it to Ingram Dabernon,<sup>13</sup> who had sub-eneffed his three brothers, Walter, William, and Richard, his son being witness to the grant.<sup>14</sup> Hence, when Hawise died there were conflicting claims to the manor<sup>15</sup> till a partition was made in 1207, one moiety being assigned to Walter Dabernon, brother of Ingram, and the other moiety, including the advowson, to Ralph de Clere.<sup>16</sup> Thenceforth the history of the two moieties, or, as they afterwards came to be called, 'manors,' runs side by side.

To turn first to the de Clere portion, which, as it included the advowson, may be reckoned the more important. Ralph de Clere was one of the barons who opposed King John, and forfeited his land in Lasham, which in 1215 was granted to Ellis de Falaise.<sup>17</sup> He was restored to favour, however, by Henry III, who in 1217 ordered Fulk de Breauté to give him full seisin of all the lands he possessed when he withdrew from allegiance to King John.<sup>18</sup> Ralph was succeeded by Sir Roger, who sold the estate to John de Gatesden before 1243.<sup>19</sup> This John de Gatesden had a daughter Margaret who married John de Camoys, and with her he gave in free marriage his moiety of the manor.<sup>20</sup> John de Camoys alienated the property to Robert Walerand, and Robert de Camoys, son and heir of John, confirmed him in possession in 1267.<sup>21</sup> In the following year Robert, Prior of God's House, Portsmouth, acquired the half-manor of Lasham and the advowson of the church from Robert Walerand in exchange for his lands in Great and Little Kington (co. Dorset).<sup>22</sup> After the death of Robert Walerand Ralph de Camoys claimed the estate from the prior on the ground that John de Camoys by his alienation had violated the statute de donis conditionalibus, and in spite of the fact that this statute was not passed till 1285, judgement was given in his favour, and Alan de Plunkenet, the heir of Robert Walerand, was obliged to compensate the prior by a gift of land in his manor of Broughton.<sup>23</sup> Ralph de Camoys obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Lasham in 1318,<sup>24</sup> and three years later the manor, as his property had by this time come to be called, was settled upon him and Elizabeth his wife in fee tail.<sup>25</sup> In 1336 John le Latymer died seised of a messuage, land, and rent in Lasham, held by the service of half a knight's fee.<sup>26</sup> His son and heir John died seised of the same property two years later, and was succeeded by his brother Robert,<sup>27</sup> who settled the manor of Lasham on William Fillol and Mary his wife and the heirs of Mary in 1338.<sup>28</sup> The estate had reverted to the Camoys family however before 1386, in which year Thomas de Camoys was in possession.<sup>29</sup> His grandson Hugh de Camoys died in 1427, leaving as his heirs his sisters Margaret and Eleanor.<sup>30</sup> To the latter, who married Sir Roger Lewknor, was assigned the manor of Lasham. Sir Roger Lewknor was seised of Lasham at his death in 1478, and was followed by his son Thomas Lewknor,<sup>31</sup> who in his turn was succeeded by another Sir Roger Lewknor. The latter in 1513 granted the manor to trustees for the use of Sir John Dawtrey, who died in 1519, leaving as his heir his son Francis.<sup>32</sup> In 1556 the estate was purchased from Francis by John Pincke,<sup>33</sup> whose son Henry<sup>34</sup> sold it to Richard Bartlett in 1601.<sup>35</sup> Andrew Blunden acquired it from him in 1607<sup>36</sup> and left it to his son Richard, who died seised in 1619.<sup>37</sup> William Blunden the son and heir of Richard dealt with the manor by recovery in 1623.<sup>38</sup>

The fortune of the other moiety, which was assigned to Walter Dabernon in 1207, was similar in its frequent changes of lords. In 1268 another Walter Dabernon settled the estate for life on Simon de Montcuyl.<sup>39</sup> He was succeeded by John Dabernon,<sup>40</sup> who in 1314 granted a messuage and land in Lasham to Walter de Abervall to hold for his life, promising in addition to provide him with two robes worth 40s. every year as long as he lived.<sup>41</sup> In 1346 William CAMOYS. Argent a chief gules with three roundels argent therein.

DABERNON. Azure a chevron or.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 9 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 1.

<sup>9</sup> Pat. 5 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 7.

<sup>10</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. IV, no. 37.

<sup>11</sup> Pipe R. 21 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 194.

<sup>12</sup> Hist. of the Gournay Family, i, 601.

<sup>13</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 66.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.

<sup>15</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 335-6; Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 51, 66.

<sup>16</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 8 John.

<sup>17</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 235b.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 310.

<sup>19</sup> Vide Cur. Reg. R. 126, m. 2; 127, m. 8 d.

<sup>20</sup> Vide Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 334.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 52 Hen. III; Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 163.

<sup>22</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 52 Hen.

III.

<sup>23</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 334.

<sup>24</sup> Chart. R. 12 Edw. II, m. 14.

<sup>25</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 14 Edw. II.

<sup>26</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. III (1st nos.), no.

15.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. 12 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 17.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 12 Edw.

III.

<sup>29</sup> Close, 9 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 13.

<sup>30</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Hen. VI, no. 26.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. IV, no. 37.

<sup>32</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxxiv, 12.

<sup>33</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 34 Phil. and Mary.

<sup>34</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 3), ii, 105.

<sup>35</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 43 Eliz.

<sup>36</sup> Close, 5 Jas. I, pt. xxiii.

<sup>37</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxciii, 167.

<sup>38</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 21 Jas. I, rot. 55.

<sup>39</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 52 Hen. III.

<sup>40</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>41</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 9 Edw. I.

Dabernon is recorded as holding the fee which belonged to John Dabernon.<sup>42</sup> How long the Dabernons continued to hold this property and how and when the next holders, the Hamptons, acquired it is unknown.

John Hampton was holding in 1428,<sup>43</sup> and his grandson Thomas on his death in 1483<sup>44</sup> bequeathed the manor to his granddaughter Katharine Whitehead for life, with remainder to his daughters Elizabeth wife of Richard Wallop, Joan the wife of John Waller, and Julia the wife of William Froste.<sup>45</sup> Both Elizabeth and Julia died without children, and thus the Hampton estates passed into the possession of the Waller family.<sup>46</sup> In 1551 Richard Waller, grandson and heir of John Waller, died seised of the manor.<sup>47</sup> His widow Margery, who subsequently married Thomas Southe, held the manor for the term of her life.<sup>48</sup> In 1576 William Waller son of Richard and Margery sold the manor to Sir William Kingswell,<sup>49</sup> who died seised in 1613<sup>50</sup>—but the latter had to carry on a lawsuit before securing undisturbed possession.<sup>51</sup> His son Edward probably purchased the other original moiety from William Blunden, and in 1630 sold the whole estate of Lasham and the advowson to Sir Edmund Plowden.<sup>52</sup> James Plowden, grandson of Sir Edmund, sold to Anthony Guidott in 1705,<sup>53</sup> and in 1772 William Woodroffe Guidott<sup>54</sup> was the owner.<sup>55</sup> It was subsequently acquired by the family of Jervoise,<sup>56</sup> and Mr. Francis Henry Tristram Jervoise of Herriard is the present lord of the manor.

The church of ST. MARY is a CHURCH small building built in 1866, in the 13th-century style and consisting of a chancel with a north-vestry and organ chamber, and a nave with a wooden tower over the west end, and a south porch also constructed of wood. The walls are of flint with stone dressings, pierced by plain lancet windows. The roofs are of open-timber construction covered with tiles, and the tower is shingled. It contains only one bell, which bears the name of its donor, and the date 1786.

Plowden. Azure a fesse dancetty or with its two points ending in fleurs de lis.

Jervoise of Herriard. Sable a chevron between three eagles close argent.

At the west end of the nave floor is a slab to Thomas Plowden, second son of Edmund Plowden, who died in 1698, with a shield of his arms.

The churchyard is small, surrounded by wooden palings, and is entered from the road by a modern lych-gate.

The plate consists of a silver chalice paten, and flagon of 1867; a plated chalice, two brass alms-dishes, a pewter flagon, and two pewter alms plates.

There are six books of registers, the first containing baptisms, marriages, and burials from 1560 to 1661, and the second book contains the same from 1663 to 1790, the third contains burials from 1678 to 1732, the fourth marriages from 1755 to 1824, the fifth baptisms from 1785 to 1812 and the sixth has burials from 1791 to 1812.

When the manor of Lasham was ADVOWSON divided in 1207, the advowson fell to the share of Ralph de Clere,<sup>57</sup> and followed the descent of his estate,<sup>58</sup> passing with it to Edmund Plowden.<sup>59</sup> The living is now a rectory of the present annual value of £250 with 80 acres of glebe, in the gift of the lord of the manor, Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise.

In 1565 Thomas Southe and Marjory his wife asserted that the advowson belonged to their moiety, but apparently had no grounds for this assertion.<sup>60</sup>

In 1865, the Rev. Francis Ellis CHARITIES Jervoise by his will, proved 11 August, left £100 for the deserving poor.

The Rev. James Pinnock, at a date not stated, also left £100 for the poor; and a further sum of £100 was left by a Mrs. Roe (as supposed) for the benefit of the cottagers.

The several legacies—less duty—were deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank for some years, and are now represented by three sums of £92 7s. 7d. India 3 per cent. stock, producing together an income of £8 6s. a year.

The Parliamentary Returns of 1786 mention that in 1706 Thomas Plowden and John Page granted by deed two annuities of £2 and 10s., for the poor. The Charity Commissioners' Report of 1824, however, states that as no allotment was made for the benefit of the poor on the inclosure, it was supposed that these two annuities were granted in lieu of their rights.

<sup>42</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. ii, 345.

<sup>44</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 448.

<sup>45</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 160.

<sup>46</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 448-9.

<sup>47</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xcvi, 98.

<sup>48</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 165, no. 10.

<sup>49</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 18 Eliz.; Recov. R. Mich. 18 Eliz. rot. 1083.

<sup>50</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 21, no. 11.

<sup>51</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 40, no. 11; bdle. 121, no. 58.

<sup>52</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 6 Chas. II, rot. 13; vide Slackstead in Farley Chamberlayne.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. East. 4 Anne, rot. 75.

<sup>54</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 373.

<sup>55</sup> Recov. R. East. 12 Geo. III, rot. 38.

<sup>56</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 367.

<sup>57</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 8 John.

<sup>58</sup> Cur. Reg. R. 1267, m. 2; 127, m. 8 d.; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 52 Hen. III; Hil. 14 Edw. II; East. 3 & 4 Phil. and Mary; Close, 5 Jas. I, pt. xxiii.

<sup>59</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 6 Chas. I, rot. 13.

<sup>60</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 165, no. 10.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

LISS

Lysse (xii cent.); Lys, Leys (xiii cent.); Lyss, Lyshe, Lisse (xiv cent.).

The parish of Liss lies on the borders of Sussex 4 miles north of Petersfield. It is intersected by the London and South Western Railway which has a station in the parish. The River Rother entering the parish at Greatham Bridge flows for some distance east, and then directs its course centrally through Liss, dividing it into East Liss on the one side and West Liss on the other. Further south it is met by Batt's Brook flowing from the west. By the Rother the average height above the ordnance datum is 200 ft., but both towards the east and west the ground rises, heights of 500 ft. and 463 ft. respectively being attained at Hill Brow in the east and at Wheatham Farm in the west. West Liss with the ancient church of St. Peter and the rectory lies on the main road from Farnham to Petersfield which runs through the west of the parish. The modern church of St. Mary and the Sunday school built on land given by Mr. W. Nicholson of Basing Park are situated in the centre of the parish to the west of Station Road which leaves the main road at Upper Green, and then runs south-east to the station, East Liss and Lower Green. Liss Place, situated about a quarter of a mile west of West Liss, is the residence of Mr. H. P. Papillon. Stodham House in the south of the parish, the seat of Mr. Hugh Money-Coutts, is a modern mansion built of stone with grounds of 65 acres bounded by the Rother. The Wylds in the north is the residence of Mr. Robert Henderson, and there are many other modern houses scattered through the parish, particularly at Hill Side and Hill Brow in the east on the Sussex border. Woolmer Forest extends into the north-east of the parish. The area of the parish is 3,595 acres of land and 24 acres of land covered by water, the soil being a good sandy loam with a subsoil of gravel and sand. The chief crop is wheat, and the farmers send large quantities of milk to the London market. According to the Agricultural Returns of 1905 the parish contains 784½ acres of arable land, 2,079 acres of permanent grass, and 385½ acres of woods and plantations. Some of the place-names occurring in records of Liss are: — La Lamputte<sup>1</sup> (xiii cent.); Rihullemersche, Cuttelane, Crockerisland<sup>2</sup> (xiv cent.); Newemyll Brygge, Whetehamyslond<sup>3</sup> (xv cent.); Kyppynges, Holmelond,

Pancraslane, Colmannysmore,<sup>4</sup> Barne Place,<sup>5</sup> Twyll Acre, Olde Hall,<sup>6</sup> Combers, Hyllond, Chesterland, Hodyslond, Cydyhalefyld, Verny Hill, Pupeholemeade, Shafterlond,<sup>7</sup> Harleys Close, The Well House,<sup>8</sup> Le Hurst, Middlewood and Wolches<sup>9</sup> (xvi cent.).

The manor of LISS, afterwards known MANORS as the manor of LISS ABBAS or LISS ABBESS, was reckoned in the hundred of Meonstoke at the time of the Domesday Survey, and probably formed part of the original endowment of the abbey of St. Mary, Winchester.<sup>10</sup> The abbess and nuns continued in possession of the manor until the Dissolution,<sup>11</sup> when it was taken into the hands of the king, being then of the annual value of £7 8s. 9d.<sup>12</sup> From this time it apparently remained Crown property until 1610,<sup>13</sup> when James I granted it to George and Thomas Whitmore, together with the manor of Liss Turney, which had belonged to the Earl of Hertford.<sup>14</sup> After this grant to the Whitmores, Liss Abbess and Liss Turney appear to have followed the same descent (q.v. infra).

The manor of LISS, afterwards known as LISS TURNER,<sup>15</sup> apparently formed part of the great royal manor of Odiham until the reign of Henry II, who granted it as twelve pounds worth of land to William de Bendeng.<sup>16</sup> On William's death he was succeeded by Adam de Bendeng,<sup>17</sup> who died seised in 1229.<sup>18</sup> His heir was his son Walter, who died three years later, leaving a son William under age, who was committed to the guardianship of Walter de Faukenberge;<sup>19</sup> William, however, died while still under age in 1234, and his lands then passed to his paternal aunt Maud, who had married Geoffrey Sturmy.<sup>20</sup> From this date the manor continued in the Sturmy family<sup>21</sup> until 1426–7,<sup>22</sup> when William Sturmy died, leaving as his heirs a daughter Agnes, married to John Holcombe, and a grandson John Seymour, son of a deceased daughter Maud.<sup>23</sup> The estate of Liss was thereupon divided into two portions. Agnes, who at this time had a son of a previous marriage, William Ryngebourne, still living, held with her husband John Holcombe the one moiety,<sup>24</sup> which reverted to Robert Ryngebourne, her grandson, on the death of John Holcombe in 1455.<sup>25</sup> William Ryngebourne, brother of Robert, was the next to hold,<sup>26</sup> and as he had no sons alive in 1511, his grandson Thomas Bruyn

<sup>1</sup> Ct. R. file 201, no. 29.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. no. 30.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. no. 32.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Hen. VIII.

<sup>6</sup> Exch. Mins. Accts. Suss. 28 & 29 Hen. VIII, no. 109, m. 17 d.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. Hants, 31 & 32 Hen. VIII, no. 139, m. 71, 72.

<sup>8</sup> Close, 28 Eliz. pt. vi.

<sup>9</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 35 Eliz. no. 2041.

<sup>10</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 473.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 10 Ric. I; Hil. 59 Hen. III; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 214; Feud. Aids, ii, 308; Inq. p.m. 9 Ric. II, no. 56.

<sup>12</sup> Exch. Mins. Accts. Hants, 31 & 32 Hen. VIII, no. 139, m. 71. Its annual value was £6 8s. in 1291 (Pope Nich. Tax. 214).

<sup>13</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 35 Eliz. no. 2041.

Henry VIII, in 1542, granted part of the possessions of St. Mary's Winchester, viz. the messuage called 'Whetham,' with its appurtenances to Nicholas Dering, who alienated it the same year to John Westbrook (L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvii, g. 71 (37); 362 (5)).

<sup>14</sup> Pat. 8 Jas. I, pt. xlv, no. 8.

<sup>15</sup> The affix Turney is evidently a corruption of Sturmy, the name of the former owners.

<sup>16</sup> Pipe R. 20 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 125; 21 Hen. II, 187.

<sup>17</sup> Testa de Newill (Rec. Com.) 235b.

<sup>18</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.) i, 181.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. 221.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. 258.

<sup>21</sup> See under Elvetham for particulars of this family.

<sup>22</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), B. 2251 2252;

Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. I, no. 51; 5 Ric. II, no. 21; Chart. R. 33 Edw. III, m. 3; Close, 33 Edw. III, m. 35 d. In 1317 Henry Sturmy granted his reversion of the manor after the death of Laurencia, widow of his grandfather Henry Sturmy, to Robert de Hungerford and Geva his wife for their lives, with reversion to himself and his heirs (Pat. 11 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 11. Vide also Pat. 14 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 25; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Edw. II). On the death of Robert de Hungerford, Geva having predeceased him by fifteen years, Liss reverted to Henry Sturmy, son of the grantor (Inq. p.m. 26 Edw. III [1st nos.], no. 50).

<sup>23</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Hen. VI, no. 22.

<sup>24</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 8 Hen. VI.

<sup>25</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Hen. VI, no. 2.

<sup>26</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), i, 74.

inherited from him.<sup>37</sup> The estate next appears in the possession of the Harley family, but in what way this family acquired it is unknown. John Harley dealt with it by fine in 1541,<sup>38</sup> and was succeeded by his son of the same name, who sold it as the manor of Liss or Liss Harley to Nicholas Dering in 1546.<sup>39</sup> The Dering family held for the next sixty-six years consecutively,<sup>40</sup> and probably acquired the second moiety of the manor of Liss Turney (q.v. infra) and the manor of Liss Abbess meantime, since the next record is a sale in 1612 by Henry Dering to his nephew Thomas Cole of the manor of Liss alias Liss Harley alias Liss Sturmy, with all its rights, members, and appurtenances in the parish of Liss.<sup>41</sup>

COLE of Liss. Argent a bull passant sable in a border sable bezanty.

The history of the second moiety during the same period is as follows:—It passed, as has been stated, to John Seymour, and from that date the descent in the male line of the Seymour family was probably unbroken till the time of Sir Edward Seymour, who became Duke of Somerset and Lord Protector. In 1541 Henry VIII granted him the monastery of Amesbury (co. Wilts.) and various other possessions in exchange for several of his Middlesex and Hampshire manors, among which was the manor of 'Listurmy.'<sup>42</sup> From this date this moiety continued in the possession of the Crown until 1610,<sup>43</sup> when James I granted it with Liss Abbess to George and Thomas Whitmore.<sup>44</sup>

So much for the moieties singly. Henceforth the manor is dealt with as a whole. In 1726 Charles Cole dealt with it by fine,<sup>45</sup> and by his will of 1752 he devised the manor of Liss with its rights, members, and appurtenances,<sup>46</sup> to Mary his wife for her life, with remainder to his cousin Herbert Aubrey for life, with remainder to the four daughters of Herbert Aubrey, Elizabeth, Judith, Arabella and Anne for their lives, with remainder in fee-tail to Harcourt Aubrey.<sup>47</sup> The manor was settled upon Richard Aubrey Cole, the only son and heir of Harcourt Aubrey, in 1783,<sup>48</sup> and continued in the possession of his family until 1807, when it was purchased by Thomas Fitzpatrick. Sir Charles William Taylor, who became the owner in 1809, held it until about 1866, when he sold it to Sir John Hawkshaw, whose trustees are now lords of the manor.<sup>49</sup>

Henry Sturmy obtained a grant of free warren in Liss in 1359.<sup>50</sup> A mill in Liss was the subject of a fine between Nicholas Braunche and Reginald de Pavely in 1304,<sup>51</sup> and between John Hill and John Irlond and Alice his wife in 1445.<sup>52</sup> A water-mill was included in the sale of the manor of Liss Harley to Nicholas Dering in 1546,<sup>53</sup> and its site is probably marked at the present day by the mill worked by the stream which flows into the Rother, a short distance north of the station.

The abbot and convent of Dureford (co. Sussex) had from an early date an estate in this parish. They acquired 20 acres of land, 2 acres of meadow, 80 acres of heath, and 12d. rent in Mapledurham and Liss Turney from Roger de Petersfield in 1339,<sup>54</sup> and in 1341 it was stated that they had 100 acres of arable land in Liss worth 25s. yearly.<sup>55</sup> At the Dissolution these lands were taken into the hands of the king,<sup>56</sup> who granted them in 1537 to Sir William Fitz William,<sup>57</sup> afterwards created Earl of Southampton. At the death of the earl without issue in 1542, the estate reverted to Henry VIII, and was granted by him in 1545 to George Rithe and others.<sup>58</sup> In 1586 Robert Rithe sold his mansion house in Liss, a messuage called the Well House, and lands in Liss, to Sir Richard Norton,<sup>59</sup> who the following year conveyed them to Richard Kingswell.<sup>60</sup> There is no further record of these lands.

The church of ST. PETER consists of a chancel 18 ft. 3 in. by 13 ft. 10 in. with a recess on the north side for the organ, a nave 34 ft. by 18 ft. 9 in. with a south aisle 12 ft. 4 in. wide, and a west tower 10 ft. square; all the measurements being internal.

The west tower dates from the first half of the 13th century, and was no doubt set centrally with the nave then existing. An aisle was added on the south side of the nave late in the same century, and in the 15th century the nave was widened by pulling down its north wall and rebuilding it some feet further to the north. In 1639 the south porch was built, and the south aisle was probably widened at the same time. The east and south walls of the chancel have been rebuilt, and the greater part of the north wall, in modern times, and the south wall of the aisle was rebuilt in 1869. Only the lower part of the south porch is of 17th-century work, the rest being of considerably later date.

The east window of the chancel is modern, and has three lancet lights, the centre one being higher than the others. There is only one north chancel window, and that is a small plain pointed light, perhaps of 13th-century date, but much restored. The wall in which it is set is thicker than the east and south walls of the chancel, and is probably old, in which case it must date from the 15th century, when the church was widened northwards, and the window must have been reset in it. The organ recess is entirely modern, and takes up the greater part of the north side of the chancel.

The two windows in the south wall of the chancel

<sup>37</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxvii, 67.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East, 33 Hen. VIII.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. Mich. 38 Hen. VIII. A rent of £10 3s. 4d. was reserved to John Harley and his heirs. This rent Sir Robert Harley gave up to John Cole, the then owner of the manor, in 1626-7 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 2 Chas. I.).

<sup>40</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 997, no. 2; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Eliz.

<sup>41</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 10 Jas I, m. 10.

<sup>42</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 779 (7); Pat. 2 Edw. VI, pt. iv, m. 1.

<sup>43</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 35 Eliz. no. 2041.

<sup>44</sup> Pat. 8 Jas. I, pt. xlv, no. 8.

<sup>45</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 12 Geo. I.

<sup>46</sup> These are thus described in a deed of 1783:—'The capital messuage called Place House wherein Charles Cole formerly dwelt, farms called Place House Farm and Berry Grove Farm, land called Coleman's Moor, a farm called Stodham Farm, and a messuage called Canaan.'

<sup>47</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. East. 23 Geo. III, m. 60.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid.

<sup>49</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. O. S. Walford,

M.A., rector of Liss, and Mr. Edwin Albery, solicitor, of Midhurst.

<sup>50</sup> Chart. R. 33 Edw. II, m. 3.

<sup>51</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East, 32 Edw. I.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. Hants, Trin. 23 Hen. VI.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. Mich. 38 Hen. VIII.

<sup>54</sup> Cal. Pat. 1338-40, p. 200.

<sup>55</sup> Inq. Non. (Rec. Com.), 108.

<sup>56</sup> Exch. Min. Accts. Suss. 28-9 Hen.

VIII, no. 109, m. 17 d.

<sup>57</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xii (2), g. 1008 (19).

<sup>58</sup> Pat. 37 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 36.

<sup>59</sup> Close, 28 Eliz. pt. vi.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid. 29 Eliz. pt. vi.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

are modern single-pointed lights in 13th-century style.

The chancel arch must date from the 15th-century widening of the church, and has square jambs, the southern one having been cut back just below the springing, in corbel fashion; the arch is two-centred, and has two chamfered orders which die into the jambs.

The eastern window in the north wall of the nave has three lights under a two-centred head, and is 15th-century work, a good deal altered. The middle light is trefoiled, but in the two side lights the cusping is destroyed.

The second window, also of 15th-century date, is better preserved, and has three cinquefoiled lights and a traceried head, and between the two windows is a 15th-century blocked doorway which has moulded jambs and a two-centred head with a label.

The arcade between the nave and the aisle is of three bays with octagonal columns which have splayed bases and moulded capitals of late 13th-century date, and arches of two chamfered orders.

The east window of the aisle has three lights with moulded jambs and mullions, with four-centred uncusped heads under a square lintel; the west window is similar to this, but has square-headed lights and a transom, which is a modern restoration. Both are of 17th-century date, while the two south windows are single trefoiled lights, and date from 1869. Between them is a late 13th-century south doorway, which has filleted engaged shafts and wave-moulded jambs with a two-centred arch. The shafts have moulded capitals and modern bases, the arch-mouldings dying out on a vertical face above the capitals.

The tower opens to the nave by a small doorway having chamfered jambs and drop arch, and has in its north wall a small, square-headed 13th-century light, and above it a small pointed light of the same date. In the west wall is a modern doorway with a wooden frame, the head of which cuts into another small 13th-century lancet window.

The tower walls are mostly built of a dark-brown ironstone, and the modern top stage is of timber with a low shingled octagonal spire, and makes a very pretty finish to the tower.

The chancel walls and the west wall of the aisle are faced with the same ironstone as the tower, while the east wall of the aisle is faced with chalk. The north wall of the nave is of plastered flint-work, and all the modern walling is of local stone. The roofs are tiled and their timbers for the most part modern, but midway in the centre of the nave is an old tie-beam, which projects right through the wall above the arcade. The internal fittings are modern except the octagonal font, which is of 15th-century date, with quatrefoils in each face of the bowl, and an octagonal stem and moulded base.

At one time there were galleries at the west ends of the nave and aisle, but they have been removed.

In the churchyard are a number of mediaeval coffin slabs, most of them having double hollow-moulded edges, and all of them have crosses with foliate ends to the arms, and stepped bases. The churchyard is inclosed with oak palings, and is entered on the east and south sides. Besides a very large yew tree on the north side, there are many small fir, cypress, and yew trees.

The tower contains six bells, the treble of which was added in commemoration of the 1897 Jubilee, and was cast by Mears & Stainbank; the others are by Lester & Pack, 1753.

The plate consists of a silver chalice of 1876; a paten of 1875, another of 1828 the gift of the Bishop of Carlisle, another of 1761 given with a flagon of the same date by Mary Cole widow of Charles Cole of Liss in 1762; a chalice, paten and flagon of 1892, and two glass cruets.

The first book of the registers contains all entries between 1599 and 1737; the second contains baptisms from 1737 to 1786; the third burials from 1681 to 1785; the fourth marriages from 1754 to 1812; and the fifth baptisms and burials from 1785 to 1813.

Liss also possesses another church, or chapel of ease, of ST. MARY, which was built in 1892 from the designs of Sir A. Blomfield. It consists of a chancel with a north transept for the organ and a vestry, and a nave with north and south aisles and a north porch. The west end of the nave is temporary, and its extension is intended at some future date.

The building is in plain 13th-century style, built of local stone with dressed quoins, &c., and lined inside with brick. The arcades have circular brick columns, and the roofs are tiled.

The bells are hung over the west gable.

Liss Church was probably one of ADVOUSON the two churches held by two priests of the manor of Odiham at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>51</sup> It was granted by King Stephen, with the churches of Bentworth and Odiham, to the use of the master of the Choristers' School of Salisbury and the chancellor of the cathedral, whose duty it was to superintend the schools of the chapter.<sup>52</sup> At a subsequent date Liss was attached to the church of Odiham, and although so far distant was served from there until 1867,<sup>53</sup> when the benefice was declared a rectory in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>54</sup> The living is now of the net yearly value of £230, with 6½ acres of glebe and residence.

There is an iron mission hall at Hill Brow. The Wesleyans have a chapel at East Liss, and the Plymouth Brethren a meeting-house at West Liss.

The Board Schools were erected in 1872, and enlarged in 1878 and again in 1888.

<sup>51</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 450.

<sup>52</sup> Sarum Chart. and Doc. (Rolls Ser.), 8.

<sup>53</sup> Moody, Sketches of Hants, 335.

<sup>54</sup> Lond. Gaz. 19 Nov. 1867, p. 6149.

ODIHAM

Odiham (xi cent.); Hodiam, Odyham (xiii cent.); Odyam (xv cent.); Odiam (xvi cent.).

Odiham is a large parish containing 7,354 acres of land and 50 acres of land covered with water. The nearest railway station is at Hook, on the London and South Western Railway. The picturesque old town of Odiham is grouped on either side of a wide road called High Street, running east and west. At its eastern end the road branches into two, one of which is the high road to Bagshot and Staines and the other to Farnham. At the western end of the town the High Street divides into three; one branch leads through North Warnborough, across Bartley Heath, and through Hook to Reading. Another branch leads west to Greywell, and the third is the high road to Alton. The vicarage, said to be Elizabethan, stands to the north of the road. It has a gabled, overhanging front, but has been much modernized.

The Priory—so mis-called—formerly the rectory, stands at the west end of the town, on the north side of the road at the corner, but is completely hidden from it by trees. It is now occupied by Mr. P. L. Sclater, F.R.S. The main house is of the time of Queen Anne, of red brick and stone. The older portion, dating from the middle of the 15th century, is a wing built of stone, running north and south, and apparently consisting formerly of a single large hall about 82 ft. long by 13 ft. wide, with an old fireplace a little to the south of the middle of its length on the east side. It had two floors, both lighted by a range of windows with cinquefoiled pointed lights under square heads, and an old doorway with a four-centred arch at its north end. The wood doors belonging to it have been removed and rehung at the front entrance of the more modern building. The building fell into decay, and the north end of it is still ruinous; the rest was put into order some forty years ago by the late Lord

Basing, who converted it into a study, bedrooms, outhouses, &c., and built a connecting building between its south end and the main house.

The George Hotel was licensed in 1540, and much of the original building still stands, although it was re-fronted some time in the 18th century. There are old beams in the ceiling of the ground floor, which was probably one long room. The chimney-piece at one end of the dining-room is of 17th-century workmanship. It is richly carved with square panels above the shelf and round-headed panels below. On the first floor are timbers of an ancient roof-truss showing in the present drawing-room. A wood doorway with a four-centred arch under a square head now opens into cellars.

The grammar school, founded by Robert May in 1694, is south of the High Street on a branch road. The almshouses, founded by Sir Edward More in 1623, are near the church, outside which still stand the old stocks and whipping-post.

The Basingstoke Canal passes to the north of the town and is carried by an aqueduct over the River Whitewater, near Odiham Castle. To the north of the town at Colt Hill there is a wharf which was at one time largely used for the conveyance of chalk, obtained mainly from the large pit to the south of the town, to all parts of the surrounding country, but the wharf is now disused. The River Whitewater forms part of the western boundary of the parish, dividing it from Greywell, but near the ruins of Odiham Castle it takes a sharp turn eastward, and after supplying power to two mills at North Warnborough flows northward past Poland Mill, Crooked Billet and Borough Court, forming the western boundary between Newnham and Odiham. At Hook, which is partly in the parish of Odiham, there is a foundry.

The parish is hilly and well wooded, and contains

THE PRIORY, ODIHAM, FROM THE SOUTH-EAST

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

several large commons; Odiham Common to the north-east, Bartley Heath, where there is a golf course, to the north-west, and Horsedown Common to the south-east. Parts of the parks of Dogmersfield and Winchfield Lodge are in Odiham, and there is a small park surrounding Hatchwoods, the residence of Lady Petre. The town of Odiham stands on a chalky hill at about 300 ft. above the ordnance datum, and the land falls in the north to about 200 ft. and rises to the south of the town to some 400 ft. above the ordnance datum, the highest parts of Horsedown Common being at a height of 500 ft. The inclosure award for the tithings of Hillside, North Warnborough, Rye, Stapely and Odiham is dated 12 February 1791.<sup>1</sup> In 1905 the distribution of arable, grass and woodland, was given as 3,772 acres of arable, 1,948 acres of permanent grass, and 109 of woods and plantations.<sup>2</sup> The soil is of a mixed character; the subsoil is of clay and chalk, producing crops of cereals and hops. Hay is much grown in the district.

Place-names which occur in connexion with Odiham are Chalmesde, Pilersehacche<sup>3</sup> (xiii cent.), Tortehulle, Rude, Scuteshangre, Garstanmed, Doningle, Bykelynche, le Oldmede<sup>4</sup> (xiv cent.), Townsend, Powling Meade, Aynellsland<sup>5</sup> (xvii cent.).

Among the notable men who have been connected with Odiham may be mentioned William Lily the grammarian, who was born at Odiham about 1468. He was appointed first head master of St. Paul's School in 1512.<sup>6</sup> Henry Chicheley, Archbishop of Canterbury, 1414-43, became Chancellor of Salisbury and rector of Odiham in 1404.<sup>7</sup> Thomas Burgess, Bishop of Salisbury, was born at Odiham in 1756 and educated for five years at Odiham Grammar School. He was appointed Bishop of St. David's in 1803, and was transferred to the see of Salisbury in 1825.

Before the Conquest ODIHAM was CASTLE held by Harold, and in 1086 it was a royal manor. It would appear possible from the Domesday entry that there was at that time a royal residence there. The manor had more than doubled in value, and there was a large and evidently prosperous community of tenants, such as might be found at a manor in which was a royal residence.<sup>8</sup> It would seem that Henry I had a residence here which he visited in 1116,<sup>9a</sup> and upon which repairs were made in 1130.<sup>9</sup> The castle, however, of which the ruins now remain, was built by King John on a new site, namely on 20 acres of meadow land which he took from Robert the Parker of Odiham.<sup>10</sup> The exact date of this transaction is not known, but ditches were being made and buildings erected at Odiham, presumably for the castle, in 1207<sup>11</sup> under the direction of John Fitz Hugh, and in 1213-14 repairs were made on the castle which must then have been built.<sup>12</sup> King John was frequently at Odiham, evidently at the newly-built castle. He passed through Odiham on 28 July 1204 on his way from Glastonbury to Windsor, and visited it in June 1207, December 1207-8, February, June and October 1209, February and May 1210, May 1212, March and April 1213, and in May 1215. He was there also on 4 and 9 June 1215, and was summoned thence by the barons to Windsor previous to granting Magna Carta.<sup>13</sup> He passed again through Odiham on 26 June, on his return from Windsor to Winchester. His last visit to the town was from 14 to 18 April 1216.<sup>14</sup> John Fitz Hugh was warden of the castle while it was being built, but in April 1216 Bartholomew Pechie, then warden, was ordered to deliver the custody of the castle to Engelard de Cigoigny,<sup>15</sup> a military commander of some note, afterwards Sheriff of Surrey. During the wardenship of Engelard de Cigoigny, Louis, the Dauphin of France, with the English barons, besieged Odiham Castle in July 1216. The garrison at the time consisted only of three knights and ten serjeants, who, after the French had attacked them with siege engines for three days, sallied forth and engaged an equal number of the enemy, and returned to the castle unhurt. After fifteen days of the siege they surrendered the castle to Louis, retaining their arms and horses and without loss, to the great admiration of the French.<sup>16</sup>

KING JOHN. Gules three leopards or.

In 1223 the wardenship of the castle was granted to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury.<sup>17</sup> In the following year the archbishop surrendered it to William Rughedon<sup>18</sup> who on the same day delivered it to Hubert de Burgh, the justiciar,<sup>19</sup> but on account of certain informalities these last two appointments were cancelled,<sup>20</sup> and in February of the same year the custody of the castle was given to Osbert Giffard.<sup>21</sup> In 1225 very considerable repairs were carried out on the castle, the tower was re-roofed and the timber-work repaired. The palisades around the tower were at the same time renewed.<sup>22</sup>

On 7 July 1232 the wardenship of the castle was granted to Hubert de Burgh, the justiciar, for life,<sup>23</sup> but upon his disgrace before the end of the month he was ordered to deliver over his custody to Stephen de Segrave.<sup>24</sup> The wardenship was again granted in 1234 to Engelard de Cigoigny during pleasure,<sup>25</sup> but two years later he received a command to deliver the castle to Reginald Whitchurch.<sup>26</sup>

Up to this date it had been retained by the Crown in the hands of a warden, but in November 1236 it was granted with the manor to Eleanor, Countess of Pembroke, the king's sister, during pleasure, for her residence.<sup>27</sup> She married, as her second husband, Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, in 1238-9, and the castle was held by them until

<sup>1</sup> Inclosure Awards Blue Bk. 154.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric.

<sup>3</sup> Rentals and Surv. R. 589.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. R. 590; Mins. Accts. 979, nos. 8 & 12.

<sup>5</sup> S.P. Dom. Chas. I, clxxxii, 16.

<sup>6</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. <sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants. i, 450.

<sup>9a</sup> Anglo-Sax. Chron. (Rolls Ser.) ii, 213.

<sup>9</sup> Pipe R. 31 Hen. I (Rec. Com.), 36.

<sup>10</sup> Cal. Chart R. 1226-57, p. 209.

<sup>11</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 89, 94. <sup>12</sup> Ibid. 142.

<sup>13</sup> Hardy, Pat. R. in the Tower (Rec. Com.), Itinerary of King John.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.

<sup>15</sup> Pat. 17 John, m. 2.

<sup>16</sup> Matt. Paris, Chron. Maj. (Rolls Ser.), ii, 655. The castle was then said to be a fortress of the Bishop of Winchester.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Pat. 1216-25, p. 418.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 420.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. 421.

<sup>22</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), ii, 60, 64, 66, 144.

<sup>23</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 163.

<sup>24</sup> Cal. Pat. 1225-32, p. 496.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. 1232-47, p. 81.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. p. 142.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. p. 166.

ODIHAM : OLD STOCKS AND WHIPPING POST

ODIHAM VICARAGE

1258, when, under the Provisions of Oxford, all wardens of royal castles having to resign their office, Simon surrendered Odiham, which he had just repaired, to the king.<sup>38</sup> The constable under Simon de Montfort was Henry de Fonuner, and when he delivered up the castle he took away with him all the rolls and writs, so that when the bailiff was required to produce records as to a suit between two tenants in 1267-8 he was unable to do so.<sup>39</sup> The Countess Eleanor is said to have been visited at Odiham in 1265 by the Princes Edward and Henry.<sup>30</sup>

John de London became warden of the castle in 1274-5,<sup>31</sup> and in 1275 it was assigned to Queen Eleanor wife of Edward I.<sup>32</sup> In 1278 the keeper of the park was commanded to allow the constable to have ten oaks from the park for the repair of the houses of the castle.<sup>33</sup> Further repairs were carried out in 1279-80 under the supervision of Ralph de Sandwich, the seneschal,<sup>34</sup> and in 1282 the custody was granted to Nicholas le Gras.<sup>35</sup>

Hugh le Despenser the younger became warden of the castle in 1293-4,<sup>36</sup> and the castle and town of Odiham were granted in 1299 to Margaret, the of Lancaster in 1321-2 Robert was commanded to strengthen the garrison at Odiham, for its security in the king's service.<sup>46</sup> Lewer, however, joined the Lancastrian party, whereupon his office was given to John de St. John of Basing, who was instructed, if necessary, to seize the castle by force.<sup>46</sup> He apparently obtained possession, for Lewer attacked and attempted to carry it by storm.<sup>47</sup> During the attack considerable damage must have been done to the fabric, as heavy repairs had to be undertaken in 1324-5.<sup>48</sup>

The castle was granted by Parliament in 1327 to Queen Isabella in recognition of her services in sup-

ISABELLA of France.
Azure powdered with fleurs de lis or.

PHILIPPA of Hainault.
Or a lion sable for FLAN-DERS, quartered with Or a lion gules for HOLLAND.

ELEANOR of Castile.
Gules a castle or for CASTILE quartered with Argent a lion purpure for LEON.

MARGARET of France.
Azure powdered with fleurs de lis or.

second queen of Edward I.<sup>37</sup> A Parliament was held at Odiham in 1303, when a statute was passed allowing foreign merchants to trade in England.<sup>38</sup> In December 1307 the keeper of Odiham Castle received orders to fortify it, in view of the king's intended journey to France for his marriage with Isabella, which took place in January 1308, for the greater security of the realm during his absence.<sup>39</sup>

Robert Lewer was made warden in 1311,<sup>40</sup> and was ordered to provision the castle,<sup>41</sup> apparently on behalf of Edward II and Gaveston's party against the barons, and in the same year the keeper of the park was ordered to provide timber for repairs to the castle.<sup>42</sup> Hugh le Despenser was again made warden in 1317,<sup>43</sup> but was ordered to deliver up his office in 1321 to Robert Lewer.<sup>44</sup> During the rebellion of the Duke pressing the Despensers' rebellion,<sup>49</sup> but on her fall in 1330 her large estates were seized, and Odiham was not restored, but was granted in 1331 to Queen Philippa for life.<sup>50</sup> In 1335 further repairs were carried out.<sup>51</sup>

David Bruce, King of Scots, was incarcerated at Odiham for some time, and was released in 1357 on the payment of a ransom of 100,000 marks.<sup>52</sup>

In 1369-70 the castle and vill of Odiham were granted to Walter Walsh for life for a yearly payment of £55. Walter was to be responsible for the payment of a carpenter, a parker, and a tiler, and for the roofing of houses in the castle with the exception of the great tower or keep. The cost of repairing the walls was to be borne by the king.<sup>53</sup>

Bernard Brocas obtained a grant of the castle for life in 1377,<sup>54</sup> and it was given in dower to Queen Anne, consort of Richard II, in 1382.<sup>55</sup> It was again fortified in 1386<sup>56</sup> against the forces of the Duke of Gloucester. In 1399 it was granted to John Leventhorpe, the king's servant, for life,<sup>57</sup> and in 1454 it was assigned as part of the dower of Margaret, consort of Henry VI.<sup>58</sup>

Constables were appointed until the end of the 15th century,<sup>59</sup> but the castle probably fell into disrepair about this time, or early in the 16th century, for it is not mentioned in a lease of the manor to

<sup>38</sup> Matt. Paris, Chron. Maj. (Rolls Ser.), v, 697.

<sup>39</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 175.

<sup>40</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 302.

<sup>41</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 183.

<sup>42</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 192.

<sup>43</sup> Cal. Close, 1272-9, p. 470.

<sup>44</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 35.

<sup>45</sup> Cal. Pat. 1281-92, p. 25.

<sup>46</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 82.

<sup>47</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 452.

<sup>48</sup> Chron. of Reigns of Edw. I and Edw. II (Rolls Ser.), i, 130.

<sup>49</sup> Cal. Close, 1307-13, pp. 30, 50.

<sup>50</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 183.

<sup>51</sup> Cal. Close, 1307-13, pp. 375, 378.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. p. 378.

<sup>53</sup> Cal. Pat. 1317-21, p. 46.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. 595.

<sup>55</sup> Cal. Close, 1318-23, p. 411.

<sup>56</sup> Cal. Pat. 1321-4, p. 206.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 206, 221, 254.

<sup>58</sup> Cal. Close, 1323-7, p. 289; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 288.

<sup>49</sup> Cal. Pat. 1327-30, p. 69.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid. 1330-4, p. 161.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid. 1334-8, pp. 206, 208.

<sup>52</sup> Chron. Angl. 1328-88 (Rolls Ser.), 37.

<sup>53</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 305.

<sup>54</sup> Cal. Pat. 1377-81, p. 118.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 1381-5, p. 126.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 1385-9, pp. 209, 260.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 1399-1401, p. 266.

<sup>58</sup> Parl. R. (Rec. Com.), v, 261b.

<sup>59</sup> Cal. Pat. 1476-85, p. 412; Early Chan. Proc. 232, no. 23.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Chideock Paulet in 1545, and no notice of it appears in a survey of the manor in 1630,<sup>60</sup> though its grounds are then mentioned. The ruins of the castle in Bignell Field, North Warnborough, are referred to in a deed of 1699.<sup>61</sup>

The gaol in Odiham Castle is mentioned in 1321

ANNE of Bohemia.
Argent an eagle sable.

MARGARET of France.
Azure three fleurs de lis or.

and again in 1324.<sup>62</sup> The men of Greywell owed the service of guarding the prisoners at Odiham every third night.<sup>63</sup>

The ruins, which belong to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart., lie to the north-west of Odiham town, in the hamlet of North Warnborough, on the banks of the Basingstoke Canal. Originally the castle probably consisted only of a great tower surrounded by a ditch. In many of the documents of the 13th century it is called the tower (turris) of Odiham,<sup>64</sup> but in later records there are references to the houses in the castle, which may have been erected at the time it was the residence of Eleanor, Countess of Pembroke, or later.<sup>65</sup> In the accounts of the repairs made during the 14th century mention is made of gates on the south, east, and west sides, a bridge with palisades on the west side, and a room over the gateway. In 1373 stone was brought from Bentley Quarry for making an oven (foraciūm) in the castle.<sup>66</sup>

The tower, or keep, the ruins of which remain, is octagonal in plan, about 36 ft. in diameter inside, with walls of flint about 10 ft. thick. The faces of the walls, both inside and outside, have been picked away, and only traces of the angle buttresses remain. There are remains of a doorway on the east side, and a large opening on the west, which probably marks the position of a doorway on that side. Holes on the inside of the walls show the position of two upper floors, and there are round arched windows in each stage which are considerably larger in the middle stage than in either of the others. There is also a large fireplace in the upper stage on the south side.

A plan of the castle, with a short account of it, was exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries by Sir Everard Home, bart., in 1840.<sup>67</sup>

Odiham Park probably existed at a considerably earlier date than the castle, possibly in connexion with an earlier royal residence, for Hugh the Parker is mentioned in 1130-1,<sup>68</sup> and the land and mills of Robert the Parker were taken by King John for the site of the castle.<sup>69</sup> The earliest mention of the park occurs in 1216 when it was saved to the king with the castle when the manor was granted to Engelard de Cigoigny.<sup>70</sup> Judging by the number of grants of deer from the park to various persons it would seem that it was well stocked.<sup>71</sup> Timber was brought from the royal property of Odiham to build Eton College.<sup>71a</sup> A large stud of horses was maintained in the park during the 14th century. The practice of rearing horses at Odiham was apparently established by Engelard de Cigoigny during his tenancy of the manor, for in 1223-4 the constable of Odiham was ordered to allow him to take away his mares from the park.<sup>72</sup> Eleanor, Countess of Pembroke, to whom the manor was granted in 1236, kept there large hunting stables and a great number of horses.<sup>73</sup> The establishment of a royal stud there apparently took place in 1312, when the Sheriff of Southampton was ordered to find maintenance for twenty colts and seven grooms, sent to Odiham, and to provide a bushel of oats and two bushels of bran daily for every four colts and to pay 2d. each daily to the grooms.<sup>74</sup> In 1319 further orders were issued as to the maintenance of the stud at Odiham,<sup>75</sup> and in 1324 the barns of Odiham were repaired, and mills and a house for the king's colts and their keepers were newly built.<sup>76</sup> Master William Marshal was in 1331-2 appointed keeper of the stud farm, and ordered to sell some of the horses there.<sup>77</sup> In 1339 the constable of Odiham was ordered to repair the granges, stables, and pinfold at Odiham,<sup>78</sup> and in the following year a new pinfold was built there for the king's foals.<sup>79</sup> Ten of the best mares from this stud and those at Windsor and Guildford were sold in 1360-1 and the profits given to William of Wykeham for repairs at Windsor.<sup>80</sup> No mention of the stud is found after this date.

The park apparently remained in the hands of the king till 1299 when it was assigned with the manor to Margaret wife of Edward I.<sup>81</sup> It formed part of the dower of Queen Isabella in 1327,<sup>82</sup> and was granted in 1369-70 to Walter Walsh.<sup>83</sup> The park was not granted with the manor to the Earl of Mar, but was included in the grant to Edward, Lord Zouche, in 1617-18.<sup>84</sup> In 1630 it was described as being well stocked with deer, and the fish ponds and river supplied large quantities of fish.<sup>85</sup> The latest mention of the park discovered is in 1669.<sup>86</sup>

The manor of ODIHAM was ancient MANOR demesne held before the Conquest by Earl Harold. At the Conquest it passed

<sup>60</sup> S. P. Dom. Chas. I, clxxxi, 16.

<sup>61</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. East. 11 Will. III, m. 4.

<sup>62</sup> Cal. Pat. 1317-21, p. 603; 1321-4, p. 403.

<sup>63</sup> Cal. of Inq. p.m. Edw. I, 250.

<sup>64</sup> Matt. Paris, Chron. Maj. (Rolls Ser.), ii, 655; Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), ii, 60, 64, 66, 144.

<sup>65</sup> Cal. Close, 1279-88, p. 27; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.) i, 288; Cal. Close, 1323-7, p. 289.

<sup>66</sup> Exch. Q. R. Accts. bdle. 478, no. 26, 28; bdle. 479, no. 2.

<sup>67</sup> Arch. xxix, 390.

<sup>68</sup> Pipe R. 31 Hen. I (Rec. Com.), 36.

<sup>69</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 209.

<sup>70</sup> Rot. Lit. Pat. (Rec. Com.), i, 185.

<sup>71</sup> Cal. Close, 1272-9, pp. 263, 289, 365; 1296-1302, p. 141.

<sup>71a</sup> Tighe and Davis, Annals of Windsor, i, 338.

<sup>72</sup> Close, 8 Hen. III, pt. i, m. 12.

<sup>73</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 302.

<sup>74</sup> Cal. Close, 1307-13, p. 404.

<sup>75</sup> Ibid. 1318-23, p. 60.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid. 1323-7, p. 94.

<sup>77</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 53.

<sup>78</sup> Cal. Close, 1339-41, p. 138.

<sup>79</sup> Ibid. 438.

<sup>80</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 257.

<sup>81</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 452.

<sup>82</sup> Ibid. 1327-30, p. 69.

<sup>83</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 305.

<sup>84</sup> Pat. 15 Jas. I, pt. xii.

<sup>85</sup> S. P. Dom. Chas. I, clxxxi, 16.

<sup>86</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1668-69, pp. 487, 561.

ODIHAM : CHIMNEY-PIECE IN DINING-ROOM OF GEORGE HOTEL

ODIHAM CASTLE to King William,<sup>87</sup> and it remained in the hands of successive kings of England, in the same way as the castle, usually but not always under the same warden as the castle. The manor followed the same descent as the castle until 1408, when it was granted separately to Queen Joan, the second wife of

JOAN of Navarre.
Gules a cross, a saltire and a double orle of chains or.

ELIZABETH WYDVILE.
Argent a fesse and a quarter gules.

Henry IV.<sup>88</sup> She died in 1437 and John Basket obtained a grant of the manor for life in 1440, he bearing all the charges for repairs and paying the wages of the constable of Odiham Castle, and a rent of £22 6s. 3d. to the king.<sup>89</sup> In 1454 the manor was granted to Margaret, consort of Henry VI, in exchange for other manors which had been granted to her as dower,<sup>90</sup> but it was resumed by Edward IV in 1464,<sup>91</sup> and granted to his consort Elizabeth in 1466.<sup>92</sup> The manor was leased in 1541 for fifty years at a rent of £46 8s. 9d. to John Jenyns,<sup>93</sup> but this lease was vacated on a personal surrender in 1545 in order that a similar lease might be made to Chideock Paulet.<sup>94</sup> The lease to Chideock was renewed in 1558 for fifty years,<sup>95</sup> and the manor was granted in 1603 to John, Earl of Mar.<sup>96</sup> The Earl sold the manor shortly afterwards to Edward, Lord Zouche,<sup>97</sup> to whom it was confirmed by letters patent in 1617–18.<sup>98</sup> Lord Zouche dying without male issue in 1625 left the manor to his cousin Sir Edward Zouche, Marshal of the Household.<sup>99</sup> Sir Edward was succeeded in 1634 by his son James Zouche, on whose death in 1643 the manor passed to his son Edward.<sup>100</sup> He died in 1658 and was succeeded by his brother James,<sup>101</sup> on whose death without issue in 1708 the manor passed to his niece Sophia wife of John Bayes, the daughter of James's sister Sophia (vide Elvetham and Greywell).<sup>102</sup> On the death of the last representative of the Zouche family the manor was thrown into Chancery, out of which it was purchased in 1742 by Paulet St. John.<sup>103</sup> It now belongs to his descendant Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, bart.

A palace is said to have existed at Odiham, and it is possible that a house for the accommodation of the royal household may have been built after the castle had fallen into ruins. Nothing now remains of the ancient palace except a few old stones with carved heads in a farm-house called Palace Gate Farm in the west end of the town. The house probably stands on the site of the entrance to the mansion which is described in 1630 as 'a fair gate house of brick, cornered and windowed with stone.'<sup>104</sup> Meetings of the Privy Council were held at Odiham in 1576 and 1591.<sup>105</sup> The site of the manor, by which is probably meant the remains of the royal mansion, is mentioned in deeds of 1718 and 1723–4.<sup>106</sup>

In memoranda relating to the manor of Odiham in the 16th century it is noted that Robert Wakefield, late bailiff of the manor, pulled down a dwelling house called the king's —, <sup>107</sup> which stood upon the site of the manor of Odiham 'where the courts were wont always to be kept till now of late,' and afterwards granted the site of the manor to one John Creswell whose heirs were still enjoying it without paying anything to the Queen's Grace.<sup>108</sup>

THE PRIORY, ODIHAM, FROM THE SOUTH-WEST

<sup>87</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 450.

<sup>88</sup> Cal. Pat. 1405–8, p. 438.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid. 1436–41, p. 443.

<sup>90</sup> Parl. R. (Rec. Com.), v, 261b.

<sup>91</sup> Ibid. v, 517b.

<sup>92</sup> Cal. Pat. 1461–7, p. 481.

<sup>93</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 503 (51).

<sup>94</sup> Ibid. xx (1), g. 465 (61).

<sup>95</sup> Pat. 5 & 6 Phil. and Mary, pt. iii.

<sup>96</sup> Pat. 1 Jas. I, pt. xiii. The manor at that time was said to have formed part of the jointure of Queen Katherine (Add. MS. 33278, fol. 169).

<sup>97</sup> Cal. S.P. Dom. 1611–18, p. 471.

<sup>98</sup> Pat. 15 Jas. I, pt. xii.

<sup>99</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, under Zouche.

<sup>100</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dxxxviii, 136.

<sup>101</sup> Manning and Bray, Hist. of Surr. i, 125. <sup>102</sup> Ibid.

<sup>103</sup> Information by Messrs. Warrens.

<sup>104</sup> S.P. Dom. Chas. I, clxxxi, 16.

<sup>105</sup> Acts of P.C. 1575–7, p. 207; 1591, p. 457.

<sup>106</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 4 Geo. I; Mich. 10 Geo. I.

<sup>107</sup> The name is quite illegible.

<sup>108</sup> Rentals and Surv. R. 591.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Odiham was an important place at the TOWN time of the Domesday Survey, but it was probably not until King John began his castle there that there was any attempt to raise its status to anything beyond that of a royal manor. In 1204 however the manor of Odiham was granted by the king to the men of Odiham at a fee-farm of £50.<sup>109</sup> This grant may perhaps be looked upon as conferring upon the town the characteristics of a borough, such as would be expected in a town lying under the influence of a royal castle. But the men of Odiham do not seem to have appreciated this opportunity of raising the position of their vill and allowed their fee-farm rent to fall into arrears, whereupon the king in 1207 ordered John Fitz Hugh to resume the manor into the king's hand.<sup>110</sup> Though the men of Odiham were summoned to return members to Parliament they never seem to have done so,<sup>111</sup> and the burghal rights of the town, if any ever existed, evidently lapsed through want of user. Odiham is called a 'borough' in the Testa de Nevill,<sup>112</sup> but this seems to be the only case where the term has been applied to it.

The market rights of Odiham apparently belonged to the owner of the manor for the time being. In the reign of Henry VI two fairs were held, on the 'Day of Our Lady' and on 'Margret Day,'<sup>113</sup> and in 1431 there is mention of a fair held at the feast of the Annunciation.<sup>114</sup> In 1720 the market was held on Saturday,<sup>115</sup> and in 1778 and 1792 on Friday,<sup>116</sup> but before 1849 the day was changed to Tuesday,<sup>117</sup> and so remains to the present day. The fairs in 1849 were held on the Saturday preceding Mid Lent Sunday and on 31 July,<sup>118</sup> and they are held at the same dates at the present day. Owing to the hilly character of the roads near the town the market has always been chiefly confined to the produce of the neighbourhood. The fair is for horses and cattle.

Petty Sessions for the division are held in the Court House on alternate Tuesdays, and constables are annually elected at a court leet of the manor held at Easter.<sup>119</sup>

The manor of STAPELY (Stapeleg, Stappell, Stapel, xiii cent.; Stapeleigh, Stapley, xvi cent.) was held in chief of the king by the serjeanty of serving forty days in the army with horse and arms.<sup>120</sup> In 1200 land in Stapely was granted to Adam de Stapely,<sup>121</sup> and in 1219-20 John de Stapely released to John son of Adam de Stapely a hide of land in Stapely.<sup>122</sup> This John son of Adam also known as John Caty or Stacy was absent in 1233 on the Welsh Marches, evidently rendering the service due for this manor.<sup>123</sup> He gave the manor to William de Synaguy, and the gift was confirmed by the king in 1251.<sup>124</sup> William died about 1271-2 and was succeeded by a son Edmund<sup>125</sup> who sold the manor in 1300 to John de Beauchamp of Fifield.<sup>126</sup> Five years later John granted the manor to Robert de la Burgh and Margery his wife.<sup>127</sup> The manor descended in the family of de la Burgh, atte Berwe or Barrowe, till 1566 when George Barrowe sold it to Anthony Bustard,<sup>128</sup> of whom it was purchased in 1575 by Thomas Goddard.<sup>129</sup> Goddard sold it in 1582 to Richard and Edward Wroth,<sup>131</sup> and it was purchased in 1609 by James Wolveridge of Edward Wroth and Sir George Calvert.<sup>132</sup> James died in 1625 when he was succeeded by his nephew James,<sup>133</sup> who sold the manor in 1647 to Nicholas Love.<sup>134</sup> The manor was sold in 1671 by Robert Welstead and his wife Katherine to Stephen Terry,<sup>135</sup> but this conveyance would appear to have been made for some settlement, for in 1678 the manor still belonged to Robert Welstead and was then conveyed to trustees for the benefit of his creditors.<sup>136</sup> It passed before 1714 to Gilbert Serle of Weston Corbett,<sup>137</sup> and descended in the same way as Weston Corbett to Sir William Oglander, who held it in 1830.<sup>138</sup> After this time no further mention of the manor has been found.

Stapely Down Farm in the south of the parish, which now belongs to the Rev. Francis Cope, vicar of Greywell, probably marks approximately the site of the manor.

The three estates called the manors of BULLOCKS,<sup>139</sup> BOWERS, and NEWLANDS formed part of the Barrowes' property at Odiham. Robert Barrowe died in 1553 holding the manor of Bullocks,<sup>140</sup> which he had settled upon his wife Margaret as her jointure.<sup>141</sup> There was a capital messuage at Newlands which was sold by George Barrowe to James Wolveridge,<sup>142</sup> the father of the purchaser of Stapely. The estate called Bowers passed with Stapely to the Wolveridges and was sold by James Wolveridge in 1647 to Nicholas Love.<sup>143</sup> Newlands Farm near Stapely may mark the approximate site of the estate called Newlands. The name Bullocks is retained at Bullocks Farm, in Hillside. The three estates now belong to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart.

The manor of POLLING (Pulling, xv cent.; Polands or Poleing, xviii cent.) was ancient demesne of the Crown and was held of the king in chief.<sup>144</sup> It is first mentioned in 1305 when Henry Sturmy died seised of it, but it seems to have formed part of the estate held at Odiham in 1174-5 by his ancestor William

<sup>109</sup> Cal. Chart. R. King Jn. (Rec. Com.), 130; Cart. Antiq. Z (29).

<sup>110</sup> Close, 9 John, m. 18.

<sup>111</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 299. Lewis, Topog. Dict. iii, 470-1; Ret. of Memb. of Parl. i, 26.

<sup>112</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 237.

<sup>113</sup> Rentals and Surv. portf. 14, no. 69.

<sup>114</sup> Mins. Accts. 979, no. 27.

<sup>115</sup> Magna Britannia, ii, 867.

<sup>116</sup> MS. Surv. of Hants, 1778, Sir T. Gatehouse; Rep. on Market Rights and Tolls, i, 167.

<sup>117</sup> Lewis, Topog. Dict. iii, 470-1.

<sup>118</sup> Ibid.

<sup>119</sup> Ibid.

<sup>120</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232.

<sup>121</sup> Chart. R. 2 John, m. 15, no. 4.

<sup>122</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 4 Hen. III.

<sup>123</sup> Cal. Close, 1231-4, p. 343; Assize

R. 775, m. 21; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232.

<sup>124</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 351.

<sup>125</sup> Assize R. 780, m. 4 d.

<sup>126</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 521.

<sup>127</sup> Ibid. 1301-7, p. 315.

<sup>128</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 17 Edw. II, no. 29; 25 Edw. III, no. 49; 6 Hen. V, no. 51; (Ser. 2) civ, 78 and 107.

<sup>129</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 8 Eliz.

<sup>130</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Trin. 17 Eliz.

m. 31.

<sup>131</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 24 & 25

Eliz.

<sup>132</sup> Ibid. Hants, Trin. and Mich. 7 Jas. I.

<sup>133</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 128.

<sup>134</sup> Close, 23 Chas. I, pt. ix, no. 29.

<sup>135</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Mich. 31 Chas.

II, m. 5.

<sup>136</sup> Ibid. Mich. 30 Chas. II, m. 11.

<sup>137</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 12 Anne.

<sup>138</sup> Ibid. Hants, East. 11 Geo. IV.

<sup>139</sup> Land at Odiham was held by members of the family of Bulloc in the 13th and 14th centuries (Rentals and Surv. R. 589-90; Add. Chart. 26663).

<sup>140</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), civ, 78 and 107.

<sup>141</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 26, no. 74.

<sup>142</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 36 & 37 Eliz. no. 7.

<sup>143</sup> Close, 23 Chas. I, pt. ix, no. 29.

<sup>144</sup> Inq. p.m. 33 Edw. I, no. 65. In 1491-2 the manor was said to be held of the Prioress of Wintney for service unknown. (Cal. of Inq. Hen. VII, i, 328.)

de Bendeng.<sup>145</sup> It passed from the Sturmys to the Seymours in the same way as Liss Turney, and passed to the Crown in 1541 by exchange with Edward, Earl of Hertford, afterwards Duke of Somerset.<sup>146</sup> Four years later it was granted by Henry VIII to Robert Creswell of Odiham,<sup>147</sup> of whom it was purchased in 1579 by Peter Osborne and Nicholas Young.<sup>148</sup> Nicholas died seised of it in 1595,<sup>149</sup> and his son Robert sold it in 1596-7 to John Fielder, from whom it passed in 1638 to his son John.<sup>150</sup> John Fielder sold it in 1639-40 to Anthony Pickering.<sup>151</sup> The manor is next mentioned in 1755, when it belonged to Sir John Tylney, Earl Tylney of Castlemaine.<sup>152</sup> He died without issue in 1784,<sup>153</sup> and the manor passed to Catherine Tylney Long, granddaughter of the earl's sister Emma.<sup>154</sup> A conveyance by her in 1811 to Robert Bicknell<sup>155</sup> was probably made for a settlement on her marriage with William Pole Tylney Long Wellesley, afterwards Earl of Mornington, which took place in March of the following year.

The name of the manor is preserved at Poland Farm and Poland Mill about a mile to the north of the town. The estate now belongs to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart.

The manor of MURRELL (Morhala, xii cent.; Morhalle, Morhal, xiii cent.; Murrall, Morrall, xvi cent.) was ancient demesne of the Crown.<sup>156</sup> In 1170 Arthur de Morhala was fined a mark at Hampshire Great Pleas, which had not been paid in 1175.<sup>157</sup> In 1202-3 Gunilda, wife of Arthur, granted to Gunilda de Broc a croft of land in Murrell called Northcroft for her life,<sup>158</sup> and in 1218-19 Stephen de Morhale and his wife Emma, and Edith sister of Emma, released to William Bulloc all their claim in a virgate of land at Murrell.<sup>159</sup> Peter son of Arthur acquired land in Murrell in 1227-8 from John de Everleigh.<sup>160</sup> The manor of Murrell had been acquired before the middle of the 13th century by Adam de Bendeng,<sup>161</sup> and it apparently from this time followed the same descent as the manor of Polling,<sup>162</sup> to which it became annexed before the end of the 16th century.<sup>163</sup> The district called Murrell Green is 2½ miles north of the town, and now belongs to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart.

The manor of BOROUGH COURT (Bracourt, Borowcourt, Brokecourt, xvi cent.; Brockcourt or Burrowcourt, xvii cent.) was held of the priory of St. Mary Magdalen, Winchester, in 1477,<sup>164</sup> and in 1619 was said to be held of Odiham Manor.<sup>165</sup> A licence was given by Bishop Orlton (1333-45) to William Resel to celebrate mass in the oratory of his manor of Brok in the parish of Odiham.<sup>166</sup> The manor of Borough Court is first mentioned in 1477, when Richard Newport died seised of it, leaving John his son and heir.<sup>167</sup> In 1544-5 it was conveyed by Walter Bonham and others to William Dale,<sup>168</sup> and in 1561 it was sold by John Dale to John Fielder.<sup>169</sup> It passed from John Fielder to his grandson John,<sup>170</sup> and was sold by the latter in 1699 to Frederick Tylney of Rotherwick.<sup>171</sup> From that time it passed with Rotherwick (q.v.), and the manor is last mentioned in 1811.<sup>172</sup> Borough Court, which is now the property of Mr. Charles Edward Harris St. John of West Court, Berks, stands on the eastern bank of the River Whitewater, in the extreme north of the parish.

The manor of NORTH WARNBOROUGH was held of the manor of Odiham.<sup>173</sup> In 1555-6 a fulling mill and land in North Warnborough were granted by Robert Creswell to Nicholas Vaus.<sup>174</sup> Possibly it was this estate which was known during the 16th century as the manor of North Warnborough. Nicholas Vaus died seised of it about 1560, leaving Robert his son and heir,<sup>175</sup> who was succeeded in 1609 by his son Richard.<sup>176</sup> After this time no further mention of the manor has been found. The tithing of North Warnborough is about a mile north-west of the town, and belongs to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart.

The manor of RYE (La Rye xiv cent.) was held of the king in chief.<sup>177</sup> Certain land at Odiham was forfeited in the reign of Henry III by Maud de Rya, and was entered upon by Geoffrey de Bath the king's cook before 1235-6.<sup>178</sup> In 1246 the king confirmed the estate to Geoffrey,<sup>179</sup> who was still holding it in 1279-80.<sup>180</sup> It is uncertain whether this is the same estate as a messuage and land at Rye which were settled in 1317 upon Robert de la Rye of Odiham and his wife Denise and their issue, with remainder in default to John de Stourton and his heirs.<sup>181</sup> Robert died in 1343-4 without issue by Denise, and the estate passed under the above settlement to Julia, wife of Sir William Talemache, daughter and heir of John Stourton.<sup>182</sup> Sir William and Julia settled property in Odiham called la Potte in 1348-9 on William de Fremelesworth and Eleanor his wife, with remainder to their sons Richard and William.<sup>183</sup> By a later fine a messuage, land, and rent in Odiham, Polling, Rye, and Murrell were settled on them, their son John

<sup>145</sup> See Liss Turney; Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 258.

<sup>146</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 779 (7).

<sup>147</sup> Ibid. xx (2), g. 266 (33).

<sup>148</sup> Pat. 21 Eliz. pt. vi.

<sup>149</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxlv, 56.

<sup>150</sup> Ibid. 15 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 34.

<sup>151</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 15 Chas. I.

In 1647 John Field (sic) married at Farnborough Constance Pickering, and in 1632 Anthony Pickering married Bridget Velyne, whose sister was the wife of James Wolveridge, showing the connexion between the owners of Stapely. Phillimore and Stooks, Hampshire Parish Reg. iii, 116; information by Mr. J. H. Cope.

<sup>152</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 28 Geo. II, rot. 49.

<sup>153</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, under Castlemaine.

<sup>154</sup> Ibid.

<sup>155</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Mich. 51 Geo. III, m. 53.

<sup>156</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>157</sup> Pipe R. 16 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 122; 21 Hen. II, 190.

<sup>158</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 4 John, 27.

<sup>159</sup> Ibid. 3 Hen. III, 7.

<sup>160</sup> Ibid. 12 Hen. III, 157.

<sup>161</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 235.

<sup>162</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, g. 779 (7).

<sup>163</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 40 Eliz.; Chan. Inq. p.m. 15 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 34; Recov. R. Hil. 28 Geo. II, rot. 49; ibid. D. Enr. Mich. 51 Geo. III, m. 53.

<sup>164</sup> Inq. p.m. 17 Edw. IV, no. 35.

<sup>165</sup> Ibid. W. and L. 17 Jas. I, bdle. 30, no. 32.

<sup>166</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 95.

<sup>167</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 17 Edw. IV, no. 35.

<sup>168</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 36 Hen. VIII.

<sup>169</sup> Recov. R. East. 3 Eliz. rot. 105.

<sup>170</sup> Inq. p.m. W. and L. 17 Jas. I, bdle. 30, no. 32; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 15 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 34.

<sup>171</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 11 Will. III.

<sup>172</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Mich. 51 Geo. III, m. 53.

<sup>173</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxviii, 71.

<sup>174</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 2 & 3 Phil. and Mary, m. 22.

<sup>175</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxviii, 71.

<sup>176</sup> Inq. p.m. W. and L. 8 Jas. I, bdle. 14, no. 163.

<sup>177</sup> Cal. Pat. 1313-17, p. 649.

<sup>178</sup> Assize R. 775, m. 21.

<sup>179</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 291.

<sup>180</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>181</sup> Cal. Pat. 1313-17, p. 649.

<sup>182</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Edw. III. (1st nos.), no. 10.

<sup>183</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 22 Edw. III; Inq. p.m. 16 Ric. II, pt. i, no. 13.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

being placed first in remainder.<sup>184</sup> The manor, as a messuage and a carucate of land called la Rye, was held in 1377 by William Dobbes of Eleanor Fremelesworth for his life.<sup>185</sup> Eleanor died in 1392, and part of her estate at Odiham, apparently la Rye, passed to her granddaughter Joan, daughter of John Fremelesworth, wife of John Grant, and la Potte to a second granddaughter Joan daughter of William de Fremelesworth, wife of Richard Alderton.<sup>186</sup> Anthony Moore died in 1583 holding the manor in right of Alice his wife.<sup>187</sup> In 1596 his son Richard Moore granted the manor to John Osborne and Anne his wife, a natural sister of Richard,<sup>188</sup> and John and Anne sold it in 1598 to William Coldham of Stedham (co. Sussex).<sup>189</sup> In 1630 the manor was sold by William Carique, William Arderne senior, and William Arderne junior, to Edward Bathurst.<sup>190</sup> In 1811 the manor was in the possession of Catherine Tylney Long.<sup>191</sup> Great Rye Farm and Little Rye Farm now belong to Mr. Lionel Phillips of Tylney Hall, having probably been purchased by him in 1899 at the same time as Tylney Hall.<sup>191a</sup>

The manor of STURTONS.—A messuage and land in Odiham was held in 1278–9 by Walter de Stourton and Julia his wife.<sup>192</sup> It probably passed, by the marriage of Julia daughter of John de Stourton to Sir William Talemache, and seems to have followed the same descent as Rye to the Moore family. Anthony Moore held it at the time of his death in 1583, in right of his wife Alice.<sup>193</sup> It afterwards passed to Benjamin Rudyerd, and was conveyed by him in 1736 to Paulet St. John.<sup>194</sup> Rudyerd and St. John sold it in 1742 to Richard Boddicott.<sup>195</sup> In 1752 Richard Boddicott and his wife Mary conveyed the manor to Edmund Boddicott,<sup>196</sup> doubtless for the purpose of settling it upon their son Richard, who married Sarah daughter of Samuel Tyssen in that year.<sup>197</sup> Richard the son died in 1759, and his widow Sarah settled it in 1780 upon her daughter Sarah, wife of Samuel Tyssen.<sup>198</sup> Sarah died in 1800,<sup>199</sup> and the manor passed to her grandson, Samuel Tyssen, and was settled upon him in 1807 on his coming of age.<sup>200</sup> The further descent of the manor has not been traced.

The manor of PARKERS or GERRARDS.—Hugh the Parker of Odiham is mentioned in 1130–1.<sup>201</sup> The manor may have originated in land at Odiham held in the 13th century by Robert the Parker. In 1235 Robert was excused a rent of 20s. which he had been accustomed to pay for land in Odiham, because 20 acres of his meadow had been taken by King John for building Odiham Castle, and his mills had been burnt by that king.<sup>202</sup> In rentals of the manor of Odiham in the reigns of Edward I and Edward III William Parker is returned as holding half a hide of land and the site of a mill.<sup>203</sup> The first mention of the manor occurs in 1699. It was purchased by Sir Thomas Higgons of Greywell from Walter Richards and Nathaniel Pickering, and was sold by his three sons George, Thomas, and Beville Higgons in 1699 to Henry, Lord Hyde, and others.<sup>204</sup> It had passed before 1739 to the Tolls of Greywell, and in that year it was settled upon Anne Toll for life with remainder to Charles Toll.<sup>205</sup> In 1778 the estate was sold for the benefit of the creditors of Edmund Pittman, a bankrupt.<sup>206</sup> The manor still existed as such in 1862,<sup>207</sup> and now belongs to Baroness Dorchester of Greywell Hill.

A hide of land at BERCHELEI was held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Godwine as one of the king's thegns. It had been held before the Conquest by Edwin of King Edward as an alod.<sup>208</sup> This manor was in 'Efedele' Hundred and probably lay in Odiham. Mr. Round suggests that its site may have been at Bartley Heath.

There were eight mills at Odiham at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>209</sup> One or more was destroyed by King John when the castle was built.<sup>210</sup> A mill was destroyed by fire in 1337–8,<sup>211</sup> and a new corn-mill was built in 1345–6.<sup>212</sup> In 1431 a new millstone was brought from London and various repairs were done.<sup>213</sup> A mill at Warnborough is mentioned in 1630,<sup>214</sup> and its representative still exists. A fulling mill at North Warnborough is mentioned in 1555–6.<sup>215</sup> There is also a mill near the castle called Castle Mill, and Poland Mill on the River Whitewater is to the north of Poland Farm. This last may be the representative of one of the two water-mills which belonged to the manor of Polling in the 16th century.<sup>216</sup>

The church of ALL SAINTS is a CHURCH large rectangular building consisting of a chancel 32 ft. 3 in. by 18 ft. 9 in. with north and south chapels 17 ft. 3 in. wide, that on the south now being used as a vestry and organ chamber, nave 57 ft. 6 in. long, 18 ft. wide at the west, and 20 ft. wide at the east, with west tower 17 ft. 6 in. by 16 ft. 6 in., and north and south aisles continuous with the chapels and extending to the west wall of the tower. The north doorway is inclosed by a porch. All the above measurements are internal.

The width of the nave at the west end probably represents that of an early nave, and there are a few loose stones in the tower, and one or two more built into the south aisle, which belonged to a 12th-century building, but the oldest walls now standing are those of the chancel and its aisles, and the lower part of the tower, which belong to the early part of the 13th century. At this date the

<sup>184</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 25 Edw. III.

<sup>185</sup> Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. I, no. 86.

<sup>186</sup> Ibid. 16 Ric. II, pt. i, no. 13.

<sup>187</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclix, 35.

In 1587–8 the hamlet of La Rye, late in the occupation of Robert de la Rye, was granted to the well known fishing grantees, William Tipper and Robert Dawe, at the request of, and for the good services of, Edward Dyer; Pat. 30 Eliz. pt. xvi.

<sup>188</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclix, 35; Chan. Proc. Eliz. Cc. 18, no. 45.

<sup>189</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz.

<sup>190</sup> Close, 6 Chas. I, pt. v, no. 19.

<sup>191</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Mich. 51 Geo. III, m. 53.

<sup>191a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. J. H. utenville Cope.

<sup>192</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 7 Edw. I.

<sup>193</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclix, 35.

<sup>194</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 10 Geo. II.

<sup>195</sup> Ibid. Trin. 16 Geo. II.

<sup>196</sup> Ibid. Hil. 25 Geo. II.

<sup>197</sup> Berry, Herts. Gen. 96.

<sup>198</sup> Recov. R. East. 20 Geo. III, rot. 131.

<sup>199</sup> Berry, Herts. Gen. 96.

<sup>200</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Mich. 47 Geo. III, m. 66.

<sup>201</sup> Pipe R. 31 Hen. I (Rec. Com.), 36.

<sup>202</sup> Cal. of Chart. R. 1226–57, p. 209.

<sup>203</sup> Rentals and Surv. R. 589, 590.

<sup>204</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. East. 11 Will. III, m. 4.

<sup>205</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. East. 12 Geo. II, m. 18.

<sup>206</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. East. 18 Geo. III, m. 14.

<sup>207</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 305.

<sup>208</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 504.

<sup>209</sup> Ibid. 450.

<sup>210</sup> Cal. of Chart. R. 1226–57, p. 209.

<sup>211</sup> Exch. Q. R. Accts. bdle. 478, no. 27.

<sup>212</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 979, no. 12.

<sup>213</sup> Ibid. 979, no. 27.

<sup>214</sup> S.P. Dom. Chas. I, clxxxi, 16.

<sup>215</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. East. 2 & 3 Phil. and Mary.

<sup>216</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xx (2), g. 266 (33).

church was as long from east to west as it now is, and the chapels possibly as wide as at present, and there was doubtless a nave with aisles. This has entirely gone, to be succeeded by a spacious 16th-century building with aisles made equal in width to the chapels and prolonged to the west face of the tower. The eastward widening of the nave dates from this time. The tower was rebuilt in the 17th century, and is a very pretty piece of brickwork, like that of Crondall, but more ornamental.

In 1850-1 a considerable amount of restoration work was done with the result that practically all the window tracery is modern.

The east windows of the chancel and the two chapels have each three cinquefoiled lights with tracery of 14th-century style under two-centred arches.

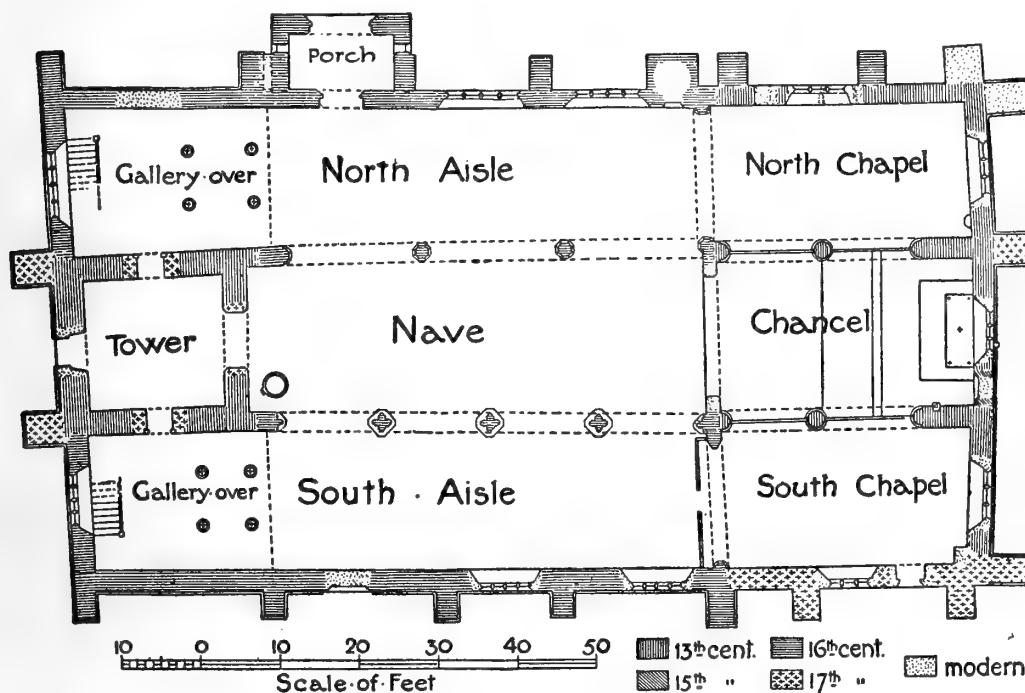

The chancel arcades are of two bays with circular columns having moulded circular bases and irregular octagonal capitals with semicircular responds to match. The west respond of the south arcade has a modern capital of 15th century detail.

jamb of a doorway which may be contemporary with it. Further to the east is a blocked doorway of red brick with a moulded four-centred head and jambs; it is of early 16th-century date.

Near the south jamb of the east window of this chapel is an octagonal image bracket, and a number of brasses and monuments have been collected from various parts of the church and placed here. The south chapel has a side window of the same design as that in the opposite chapel, and to the east of it is a small modern doorway with chamfered jambs and two-centred arch. Its walling does not look ancient, and it may have been rebuilt in the 17th century.

The western arches of both chapels are alike, and practically of the full width of the chapels. The responds are semi-octagonal, and the arches of an obtuse two-centred shape with two chamfered orders. They belong to the general rebuilding of the nave; the arch to the south chapel has no north respond.

The north arcade of the nave is of three bays with slender octagonal columns having plainly-moulded

PLAN OF ODIHAM CHURCH

The arches are pointed and have one chamfered order. To the south of the east chancel window is the three-centred head of a blocked doorway which appears to have led into an east vestry below the east window outside the church.

Near the east respond of the south arcade is a pillar piscina, c. 1190, the basin being formed of a capital with foliage of an early type; the shaft has a water-moulded base with spurs at the angles.

The chancel arch has modern square jambs with chamfered angles, and the arch is two-centred, apparently of old stonework retooled, with two chamfered orders, dying out at the springing.

The north window of the north chapel is entirely modern, and has three cinquefoiled lights under a square head, and below its sill is that of a 13th-century lancet, possibly in position, and further west the bases and capitals. The arches are two-centred, and of wide span and obtuse form; the details are the same as those at the west of the chapels.

The south arcade has four bays with columns composed of four attached shafts between four large hollow chamfers. Each shaft has an octagonal moulded base and capital, the whole resting on a high plain plinth, while the arches are two-centred and moulded with a large casement continued from the hollow chamfers of the piers. The work is better and probably earlier than the north arcade.

In the north aisle the two north windows and the west window have old arches and jambs fitted with modern tracery; a north-west window formerly existed, but is now marked only by a patch of brick-work.

The north doorway with its porch is of the same date as the aisle, and has moulded jambs and four-centred arch under a square head with carved spandrels. The outer arch of the porch has two orders of double ogee mouldings, and there is a small modern window in each side of the porch. The upper and lower doorways of the rood stair and part of the turret containing the stair remain at the north-east of this aisle.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The windows of the south aisle, two in the south wall and one in the west, are all alike, and have each four plain lights with plain, unfoiled vertical tracery, the internal splays being old. The rear arches are plastered.

Opposite the north doorway, in the south wall, is a blocked doorway showing only on the outside, with hollow-chamfered jambs and rough four-centred head, probably 16th-century work.

The tower arch has plain, slightly chamfered jambs and pointed arch. At the springing is a 12th-century abacus, grooved and hollow-chamfered, which is not as wide as the jambs, and is evidently re-used here. The arch itself has been rebuilt, but partly with old stones. The north and south walls of the tower are not pierced with arches, but have square-headed doorways with wood frames, leading into the north and south aisles. In the east wall near the south respond of the tower arch is a small opening in which is a piece of late Gothic tracery; it is blocked, but visible from both sides, and is doubtless a late insertion. The west doorway is modern and has a four-centred arch and a square head with carved spandrels. Above it is a three-light window with a transom and uncusped tracery in a four-centred arch, which is part of the 17th-century work. The tower has three stages, the two upper ones being of brickwork in Renaissance design, with small angle pilasters with Ionic capitals. At the top is an embattled parapet with modern angle pinnacles of brick banded with stone. The belfry windows have semicircular heads, and are flanked by projecting Ionic pilasters carrying a moulded cornice. The capitals of the pilasters are of cut brick or perhaps terra cotta. In the west face of the middle stage is a stone two-light window with a square head and moulded label, and at each stage are weathered stone strings with grotesque heads at the angles and corners. The chancel has an arched ceiling with modern boarding, while the whole of the other roofs are of old timber with arched braces below the rafters.

The chancel arcades are filled with oak screens, the one in the east bay on the north side being modern, but that in the second bay is old and is of eight bays, solid below and open above, with tracery heads of 15th-century style under a moulded cornice.

In the opposite arcade the screen in the first bay is partly old, with trefoiled lights and tracery of the same style as the modern one opposite, and that in the second bay is modern.

The pulpit is of late 16th-century date, and is hexagonal in shape, the sides having rectangular lower panels with arched panels over with a moulded and carved cornice. All the panels, styles, and rails are covered with carving in low relief. At the west ends of the north and south aisles are galleries with pretty balustraded oak fronts, each carried by four Ionic columns with rather clumsy entasis. There is a carved top rail with small round-headed arches between the heads of the balusters, and below the balusters a row of small panels and an enriched cornice, on which in the south aisle is the inscription: '[Joh]n Rivers senior gave forty shillings, John Keye and Richard Flory churchwardens 16,' continuing in the north aisle with '32, Alexander Serle gave all the balesters not of wealth but of good wil that othe(r).' The unfinished and divided inscription shows that the front is moved, having been originally across the west end of the nave. On the die of a baluster in the south aisle is the name 'George Searle.' The stairs up to these galleries at the west ends of the aisles have contemporary ornamented strings, turned balusters and newels and moulded handrails.

The font is placed at the south-west corner of the nave. It is of chalk, of 15th-century date, and has a circular moulded basin, stem and base. On the south-west side of the bowl is a curious rectangular projection, the top of which is hollowed into a small basin from which are two outlet holes. It is probably part of an arrangement for fastening the cover, as staples driven into the chalk rim of the bowl would have been likely to split it. Round the bowl is an inscription in black letter. It is much damaged owing to the soft nature of the material, but can still be read: 'Auxiliū meum a dñō qui fecit celū & t̃rā.'

In the tower is an old chest with ornamental hinges. On the lid is the following in nail heads:

CHVRCHWARDENS
M.W. 1662
H.S. 18

In the nave are the figures of a civilian and his wife from an early 15th-century brass. The man wears a long robe with loose sleeves and a girdle with purse and dagger. His wife wears a low-cut gown having tight sleeves with turn-over cuffs. The skirt is full with long folds, and she wears a horned head-dress. The inscription is lost. Below is a priest in mass vestments; the inscription reads: 'Hic jacet magist' Willm̃s Goode nup vicarius de Ponteland in Northūbria et rector de Dogmāsfeld qui obiit xj die Septēbris anno Dñi millm̃o cccc<sup>o</sup>lxxxviii<sup>o</sup> cujus aīē ppiciet<sup>9</sup> deus amē.'

There are several brasses fixed on the north wall of the chapel, the first having the inscription, 'Here lyeth interred the body of Edward Seagar gent who departed this life in certaine hope of a joyfull resurrection ye 11th of July A<sup>o</sup> D<sup>m</sup> 1640.' Above is a small plate with the arms, a chevron between three molets. The crest is a dragon's head.

The next brass has the figures of a woman and nine daughters, and an inscription: 'Here lieth Thomas Chapmān and Agnes hys wyffe which Thomas decessid the first day of Maye in the yere of owre lord God m<sup>c</sup>ccccxxiii<sup>d</sup> on whois soules Iht have mercy A.'

To the east of this is an early 16th-century brass figure of a man in armour cut off below the knees, and another brass with the figure of a woman in a pedimental head-dress, with her six daughters, and the inscription, 'Hic sub pede jacent corpora venerabilis viri Joh̃is Haydok armig<sup>9</sup>i et Elizabeth consorte sue q<sup>i</sup> quidem Joh̃is obiit vicesimo sexto die mensis marci anno dñi millm̃o quingentesio quarto quo; aīābus ppicietur de' amen.'

Another brass represents a man in a fur-trimmed doctor's robe with hanging sleeves. The inscription is 'Willm̃s jacet hic q̃uōd'm Goode ex patre dictus | Presbiter & doctor artibus Oxonie | quē clare enutriti

ODIHAM CHURCH : THE FONT

ROTHERWICK CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING WEST

quodā Merton dom⁹ alma | huic gen⁹ & mores, Leycestria terra dat ort⁹ | P⁹ quō qui legis hec carmina funde preces.’

On the south wall of the north chapel, near the east end, is part of a 17th-century alabaster monument with a lozenge of the arms of Poyninges with three quarterings.

Over the wall monument is a black marble slab to ‘Mary late wyffe of Edward More eldest daughter and coheire of S<sup>r</sup> Adryan Poyninges, knight and brother to Thomas last Lord Poyninges & of Mary wyffe of the said Sir Adryan & daughter & sole heir of Sir Owen West knight’ etc. She died in 1591.<sup>216a</sup>

On the floor below is the indent of a large brass of a man and his two wives; under the second the figures of five daughters and one son still remain.

There is another floor slab to Richard Compton, who died in 1659. The arms are those of Compton of Godalming: Ermine a bend sable with three helmets or thereon.

In the south chapel is a floor slab in which is a brass inscription to Margaret Pie, second daughter of Thomas Pie, who only lived a little over a month and died in 1636. In the middle of the slab the child is represented in swaddling clothes. In the top of the stone is a small brass panel with Cupids’ heads and a scroll bearing a Latin text. There is also a shield of the arms of Pie, which are Vert three fleurs de lis stalked and slipped or.

Above this is a monument with Ionic pillars and a pediment over, containing a shield of the arms of Heydock of Greywell. There is a painted black-letter inscription, now practically perished, only a few words being legible.

The tower contains six bells, of which the treble and tenor are by Lester & Pack, 1761, the second is by Henry Knight, 1615, the third is by the same founder, 1614, the fourth has ‘Henry Knight made mea 1667,’ and the fifth is by William and Robert Cor, 1713.

The plate consists of a silver-gilt chalice and paten of 1617, the gift of Robert South, of London, goldsmith; another silver-gilt paten of 1711; two silver flagons, one of 1630; two silver chalices of 1849 and 1893; a silver paten of the latter date and a glass flagon.

There are ten books of registers, the first being a large well-bound volume containing baptisms from 1538 (a paper copy of 1603) to 1653 and from 1660 to 1739. The marriages are from 1538 to 1653, and from 1662 to 1739, and burials from 1538 to 1739. The second volume is one that was probably overlooked in binding up the first, as it fills up the above gap, the baptisms being from 1653 to 1660, marriages from 1655 to 1659, and burials from 1653 to 1660.

The third book contains baptisms and burials from 1740 to 1783, and marriages from 1740 to 1754. The fourth contains marriages from 1754 to 1771, the fifth continues the same to 1783, and the sixth brings the marriages up to 1812. The seventh contains burials from 1783 to 1800, the eighth has baptisms from 1783 to 1793, and the ninth book has baptisms on printed forms from 1793 to 1812, and the tenth contains burials from 1800 to 1812.

Other books are as follows—tithe book 1743, vestry book 1785 to 1789, banns book 1771 to 1838, and a churchwardens’ account book from 1809 to 1873. There is also a curious old black-letter book entitled Christs Victorie over Sattans Tyrannie, by Thomas Mason, 1615.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two churches at Odiham to which belonged two hides of land,<sup>217</sup> and of the manor of Odiham two priests held two churches<sup>218</sup> with 2 virgates of land. Odiham Church was granted by Henry I about 1115 to the church of St. Mary of Salisbury and to Roger the bishop.<sup>219</sup> Stephen confirmed the grant and collated the church to the use of the master of the school of Salisbury, or the chancellor of the cathedral, whose duty it was to superintend the schools of the chapter.<sup>220</sup> Subsequently the church of Odiham seems to have been lost to the cathedral, for about 1157 Henry II restored it to Jocelin, Bishop of Salisbury, in exchange for the castle of Devizes.<sup>221</sup> It then became the custom for the Chancellor of Salisbury to be parson of Odiham.<sup>222</sup> The presentations to the vicarage were made by the chancellors till 1856, when on the death of the last chancellor<sup>223</sup> the patronage was transferred to the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>224</sup>

The parson of Odiham had common of pasture in the demesne lands of Odiham and in the wood of Whitmondelye and in Holnhurst.<sup>225</sup>

The chapels of Greywell, Liss, Weston Patrick, and Rotherwick were annexed to the church of Odiham,<sup>226</sup> and there was also a chapel dedicated to St. Michael in Odiham.<sup>227</sup> It is called the king’s chapel, and may have been in the castle.

There was also, in the middle of the 16th century, a chapel of ease at North Warnborough, which was ‘imploid in the time of the plague for ministration to the whole, and for a place to teach children in.’ This chapel was founded by the inhabitants ‘to have continuance for ever, there to be assisting and adding to such ministration as is required to be among the people by the word of God and to the intent to teach children grammar.’ At the Reformation the inhabitants of Odiham stated that in the town of Odiham were ‘above 1,000 houseling people,’ and that the town extended into divers tithings or hamlets, being distant some 2 and some 3 miles, ‘being very yeve wayes in the winter season for the people to come to the parish church of Odiham,’ and the vicar kept a priest in the chapel of ease at Greywell, where there were more than eight score ‘houseling’ people who had ministration in the said chapel.<sup>228</sup> In 1587–8 Odiham chapel, at the end of the Netherdonninge, was granted to Edward Downing and others.<sup>229</sup> The <sup>216a</sup> Mr. Round points out that this inscription is of importance as it has been held by some authorities that the old barony of De La Warr is vested in the heirs of Sir Owen West.

<sup>217</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 450.

<sup>218</sup> Possibly these were the churches of Liss and Bentworth, which were granted to the Chancellor of Salisbury, with that of Odiham, by King Stephen. Sarum Chart. and Doc. (Rolls Ser.), 8.

<sup>219</sup> Old Reg. of Sarum (Rolls Ser.), i, 201.

<sup>220</sup> Ibid. 192.

<sup>221</sup> Sarum Chart. and Doc. (Rolls Ser.), 29.

<sup>222</sup> Inq. p.m. 7 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 76; Cal. Close, 1333–7, p. 166.

<sup>223</sup> Lond. Gaz. 5 Sept. 1856, p. 2999.

<sup>224</sup> Clergy Lists.

<sup>225</sup> Cal. Close, 1333–7, p. 166.

<sup>226</sup> Wykeham’s Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 388; Cal. S. P. Dom., 1595–7, p. 558.

<sup>227</sup> Cal. Pat. 1343–5, p. 55.

<sup>228</sup> Aug. Off. Chant. Cert. 52, no. 3.

<sup>229</sup> Pat. 30 Eliz. pt. xv.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

chapel at North Warnborough was apparently destroyed; there is now an iron mission room there.

The Congregational chapel at Odiham was founded in 1662.<sup>280</sup> There is a Baptist chapel which was built in 1877,<sup>281</sup> and the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists also have places of worship at Odiham. A house at Odiham was licensed in 1672 for Presbyterian worshippers.<sup>282</sup>

The Consolidated Charities are regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners, dated 4 June 1886, as varied by a scheme of 11 March 1904. They comprise the following charities:—The almshouses founded by Sir Edward More (will and indenture of 1623), and by Daniel Wyeth, by deed 1648, and by Richard Raggett.

The charity of John Mapleton who gave a rent-charge of £6 13s. 4d. (less land tax) out of Roke Farm, as appeared from an inscription in the church bearing date 1758.

The charity of Julian Smith, who by deed of 1622 gave a cottage and garden attached to the almshouses, and now used as an almshouse.

The charity of Frances Clarke (deed 1608), consisting of a rent-charge of £10 received from the Merchant Taylors' Company.

Henry Smith's General Charity, being a share of Longley Farm and Rectory, varying from £11 to £15.

The charity of Robert Ray (deed 1674), formerly endowed with a moiety of the New Inn public-house with its appurtenances and certain quit-rents which were sold in 1904 for £1,900, which was invested in £1,872 os. 4d. War Stock with the official trustees. (For the other moiety see under Hartley Wintney.)

The charity of Richard Gurney, who by deed of 1638 devised a freehold estate at Hammersmith, let on building leases, amounting in 1904 to £343 2s.

The charity of John Vaus (will 1630), now consisting of a rent-charge of £27 a year charged on Odiham Down Farm, belonging to Sir Henry Paulet St. John-Mildmay, bart., who also paid £1 a year out of Odiham Brick Kiln, which was redeemed in 1905 by the transfer to the official trustees of £33 6s. 8d. India 3 per cent. stock.

The charities of John Gale (will 1825), John Thomas Webb (will proved in the P.C.C. 1853), Elizabeth Webb (will proved at Winchester 1871), Susan Bricknell (will 1874), Helena Mary Webb, (see below).

The scheme of 1886 directed that £210 per annum should be paid out of the income to the governors of the grammar school, in respect of which a sum of £8,400 consols was, under the scheme of 1904, transferred by the official trustees to a separate account; that £250 per annum should be applied in support of the almshouses, and the remainder for the benefit of deserving and necessitous poor.

In July 1907 the official trustees held on the 'general account' £1,828 19s. 9d. consols, and in respect of a moiety of Robert Ray's Charity £936 os. 2d. War Stock, and £16 13s. 4d. India 3 per cent. Stock, and £1,259 os. 5d. 2½ per cent. annuities, representing a share of Helena Mary Webb's Charity (see below), also a sum of £11 os. 5d. consols as a repair fund. The official trustees also hold the sums of £765 12s. 4d. consols and £69 6s. 5d. like stock on investment accounts. The War Stock ceased to exist on 5 April 1910, and the moiety of Ray's Charity, namely the £936 os. 2d., has been invested in £940 13s. 3d. New South Wales 3½ per cent. stock.

The following charities are also under the management of the trustees of the Consolidated Charities:—

The charity of John McIntyre, M.D., who by will proved on 19 March 1903, bequeathed £1,000 for providing a village hospital. This amount, less costs, was invested in £1,009 16s. 7d. consols. By a scheme of 4 July 1905 the dividends are made applicable for the maintenance of a parish nurse, and are being accumulated pending arrangements for the erection of a house for the nurse.

The charity of Samuel White, who by will proved 24 May 1905, bequeathed a sum of money for the erection and maintenance of almshouses, which was invested in £2,266 3s. 5d. London County 3 per cent. Consolidated Stock. In July 1907 £253 5s. 11d. of this stock was sold for the erection of new almshouses.

The charity of Helena Mary Webb, who by her will proved at London 7 January 1902, directed her residuary estate, amounting to £3,777 1s. 2d. consols, to be divided equally among the Odiham charities. By an order of the Court of 11 November 1902 one third of the capital sum was directed to be applied in augmenting the value of any scholarships tenable at the Odiham Endowed School, one third for the Odiham Consolidated Charities, and the remaining one third to be held in trust for 'Webb's Charity.' The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees.

The church rents are represented by an annual payment of 35s. given by Nicholas Vaus by deeds of 1543 and 1553. This sum is paid to the churchwardens as to 30s. out of a farm called Bean Lands, and as to 5s. out of a small meadow called Turtles, and applied in aid of the church rates.

The Grammar School, founded in 1694 by Robert May and enlarged by James Zouche in 1702, is regulated by schemes under the Endowed Schools Acts of 20 October 1874, as amended by schemes of the Charity Commissioners of 16 May 1884 and 22 December 1899.<sup>283</sup>

The trust property consists of the school and master's house, a rent-charge of £22 10s., £9,510 12s. 10d. consols, including £8,400 like stock set aside out of the Consolidated Charities (see above), and £1,259 os. 5d. 2½ per cent. annuities, being one third share of Helena Mary Webb's Charity (see above).

Additions to the school buildings were made in 1877 out of a legacy of £1,000 bequeathed by will of Miss Susan Bricknell, and further additions have recently been authorized by the Board of Education.

Elizabeth Webb and Sarah Webb, by deed dated 5 October 1848, conveyed certain property at North Warnborough for a school, which by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 28 April 1901 ceased to be carried on; the net rents of the two cottages and gardens belonging to the trust, let at £6 a year, were directed to be applied for augmenting the value of any scholarships or exhibitions tenable at the Odiham Endowed School.

<sup>280</sup> Congreg. Yr. Bk. 1908, 252.

<sup>281</sup> Baptist Hd. Bk. 1908, 67.

<sup>282</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1672, p. 574.

<sup>283</sup> See article on 'Schools,' V.C.H. Hants, ii, 367, 387.

ROTHERWICK

Retherwic, Retherwyke, Rutherwyk (xiii cent.); Rotherwyke, Rytherwyke (xv cent.); Rotherwicke (xvi cent.).

The parish of Rotherwick covers an area of 1,988 acres, and is situated 7 miles north-east from Basingstoke. The River Whitewater forms part of its eastern boundary, while in the west it is intersected by the Lyde River, which flows into the Loddon at the north-western extremity of the parish. The country is well wooded and fairly level, the greatest height recorded being in Tylney Park—300 ft. above the ordnance datum. The village lies along Cowfold Lane, which branches off from the main road from Odiham to Reading in the north-east of the parish, and is situated about  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles north-west from Hook Station on the main line of the London and South-Western Railway. Tylney Park takes up the south-west of the parish, its western boundary being formed by the Lyde River. Tylney Hall, which was rebuilt in 1879 close to the site of the old hall, was considerably enlarged and altered by Mr. Lionel Phillips between 1899 and 1901. It stands on a hill overlooking the village, and is approached by a long avenue of trees. According to the Agricultural Returns for 1905 the parish contains  $913\frac{1}{2}$  acres of arable land,  $893\frac{3}{4}$  acres of permanent grass, and  $508\frac{1}{2}$  acres of woods and plantations. The soil is clay mixed with sand and gravel, and the subsoil is clay. The chief crops are a succession of grain. Bricks and tiles are made in the parish. Amongst the place-names occurring in various records are :—Larugmedes, La Lude<sup>1</sup> (xiii cent.); Bowmeade,<sup>2</sup> Rooke's Farm<sup>3</sup> (xvi cent.); Chawcrofts,<sup>4</sup> and The Pewkes<sup>5</sup> (xvii cent.). The present Cowfold and Hook Farms suggest the ancient residences of Richard atte Coufolde and Thomas atte Hooke.

ROTHERWICK was probably comprised in the royal manor of Odiham at the time of the Domesday Survey. Part of it was apparently included in the grant by Henry II to Juliana de Aquila of the manor of Greywell (q.v.), which up to this time had also formed part of Odiham. Thus the manor of Rotherwick was stated in 1422 to be held of the Duchess of York,<sup>6</sup> who was at that time lady of Greywell. Again, at a somewhat later date, the L'Estranges, who were lords of Greywell, were returned as the overlords of Rotherwick.<sup>7</sup> Further, in 1590 William Haydok of Greywell sold to Richard More, lord of Rotherwick, 'all his woodgrounds, underwoods, and waste called Rotherwick Wood, and all his other wastes in Rotherwick and Hartley Wespall containing 500 acres, and all his free and customary rents of the same, services, heriots, etc.,—which descended to the said William Haydok as son and heir of James Haydok, deceased.'<sup>8</sup>

Between 1333 and 1345, Adam Orlton, Bishop of Winchester, granted permission to John atte Hooke<sup>9</sup> to have divine service celebrated in the manor of Rotherwick within the parish of Odiham.<sup>10</sup> In 1336 there was a settlement of a messuage, 70 acres of land, 4 acres of meadow, 4 acres of wood, and 20s. rent in Rotherwick and Hartley Wespall upon this same John, who is described in the fine as 'son of Hugh atte Hooke of Berkeley,'<sup>11</sup> and some forty-three years later Alice the relict of Hugh released all her lands and rents in Berkeley and Rotherwick to her son John.<sup>12</sup> In 1387, Katharine wife of Sir John de Thorpe died seised of apparently the same estate,<sup>13</sup> which then passed to Sir Maurice Berkeley, her son by a previous marriage.<sup>14</sup> Sir Maurice made a grant of his holding for life to Thomas Wyke, who died seised in 1420, when it reverted to Sir Maurice Berkeley, the son of the grantor.<sup>15</sup> Sir Maurice was seised at his death in 1464 of one messuage, one carucate of land, and 9s. rent in Rotherwick, held of Lord L'Estrange,<sup>16</sup> and he was succeeded therein by his son William. The estate seems to have passed soon after into the family of More,<sup>17</sup> Richard More dying seised of 2 messuages, 100 acres of land, 40 acres of pasture, 20 acres of meadow, 20 acres of wood, and 4s. rent in Rotherwick, held of Lord L'Estrange in 1495.<sup>18</sup> From this date the Mores continued in possession for about a century and a half, and there is evidence that from time to time they added to their estate,<sup>19</sup> ultimately dignifying it by the name of the manor of Rotherwick. At length in 1629 Richard More, the then owner, sold the manor of Rotherwick to Richard Tylney,<sup>20</sup> who was already possessed of property in the parish.<sup>21</sup>

Frederick Tylney, descendant of this Richard, built a great mansion called Tylney Hall on his estate in 1700.<sup>22</sup>

MORE OF ROTHERWICK.
Argent two bars wavy between nine martlets gules.

TYLNEY. Argent a chevron between three griffons' heads raved gules.

<sup>1</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), A. 8231.

<sup>2</sup> Close, 34 Eliz. pt. ii.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 39 Eliz. pt. xxiv.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 45 Eliz. pt. ii.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 5 Jas. i, pt. xxv.

<sup>6</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Hen. V. no. 21.

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. IV, no. 29; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 55.

<sup>8</sup> Close, 32 Eliz. pt. xvi, m. 35.

<sup>9</sup> He was probably descended from William atte Hooke, who was settled in the parish in 1262 (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 46 Hen. III.).

<sup>10</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 59 d.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 10 Edw. III.

<sup>12</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.) D. 865.

<sup>13</sup> Inq. p.m. 11 Ric. II, no. 50.

<sup>14</sup> Her first husband was Thomas Berkeley.

<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Hen. V, no. 21.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. IV, no. 29.

<sup>17</sup> Katherine, Lady Stourton, daughter and eventually sole heiress of Sir Maurice Berkeley, was not seised of this estate at her death (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], x, 156.)

<sup>18</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 55.

<sup>19</sup> In 1590 Richard More bought Rotherwick Wood from William Haydok. (Close, 32 Eliz. pt. xvi, m. 35.) In 1592 Richard purchased a messuage and lands in Rotherwick from William Stynt (Close, 34 Eliz. pt. ii.).

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Chas. I.

<sup>21</sup> Vide Close, 45 Eliz. pt. ii; 5 Jas. I, pt. xxv.

<sup>22</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse MS. Surv. of Hants (1778) penes Lord Swaythling.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Frederick on his death in 1725 was succeeded by his only daughter Anne, who married William, Lord Craven. On the death of Anne in 1730, her only daughter having predeceased her, the manor passed to her cousin Dorothy, the wife of Richard Child, Viscount Castlemaine.<sup>23</sup> On his wife's succession to her inheritance Richard Child assumed the name of Tylney, and in 1731 was created Earl Tylney.<sup>24</sup> When he died in 1749 the estate passed to his son John, Earl Tylney. The latter died unmarried in 1784, and thereupon all his honours became extinct. His nephew, Sir James Tylney-Long, bart., succeeded to the property, and his son after him.<sup>25</sup> The latter dying in 1805 at the age of eleven years, Tylney Hall passed to his sister and co-heir, Catherine Tylney-Long,<sup>26</sup> who dealt with it by recovery in 1810.<sup>27</sup> Two years later she married William Wellesley-Pole, nephew of Richard Wellesley, second Earl of Mornington, who by royal licence, 14 January 1812, took the additional surname of Tylney-Long between those of Pole and Wellesley.<sup>28</sup> The latter, who succeeded his father in the earldom in 1845, died in 1857.<sup>29</sup> His trustees sold the estate about 1870 to Mr. C. E. Harris, from whom it passed by sale to the present owner, Mr. Lionel Phillips, in 1899.

Another estate in Rotherwick,<sup>30</sup> originally also part of Odiham, was in the 14th century held of the king as of Windsor Castle by suit at Odiham Hundred Court. Richard atte Coufold died seised in 1361,<sup>31</sup> leaving as his co-heirs his three daughters Edith, Margaret, and Isabel, who married respectively Nicholas atte Broke, William Gregory, and John Helwys. Isabel and Margaret gave up their portions to Nicholas atte Broke and Edith in 1382 and 1383,<sup>32</sup> respectively. Nicholas at his death in 1396 was seised of a messuage, 2 gardens and a dovecote, 60 acres of land, 12 acres of wood, and 5s. 6d. rent in Rotherwick; his son and heir was John, aged seventeen.<sup>33</sup> The further history of this holding has not been traced, but it probably became absorbed in the More estate in the 16th century.

The church, the dedication of which CHURCH is unknown, consists of a chancel 22 ft. 4 in. by 15 ft. 3 in., with a vestry and organ chamber on the north, a nave 52 ft. by 21 ft. 9 in. with a short north aisle 20 ft. 9 in. by 11 ft. 1 in., and a west tower 12 ft. 1 in. square. There is also a timber south porch. All the above dimensions are internal.

The oldest part of the building is the chancel, which is of flint and stone and dates from the latter part of the 13th century and is set with a slight northward inclination from the axis of the nave. The nave was a timber-built structure of 15th-century date with herringbone brick filling, like Mattingley; but in the 16th century was built round with brick-faced walls, and its main timbers cut away, the roof and east and west gables being the only parts now remaining. In the 17th century a red brick west tower was added; the north aisle dates from 1876, and the porch and vestry are modern, and there are many other modern repairs.

The east window of the chancel has three lancet lights under a two-centred arch with moulded label and carved head stops. The centre light is higher than the others, and the spandrels are not pierced. Only a few of the jamb and mullion stones and part of one of the heads are old, of late 13th-century date. The two windows in the south wall of the chancel each consist of a single trefoiled ogee-headed lancet. The inner splays and chamfered rear arches are old, belonging to the first half of the 14th century. Between these two windows is a modern doorway with chamfered jambs and two-centred head. The archway into the vestry on the north side of the chancel is modern and has chamfered jambs and drop arch of two chamfered orders.

The two east windows of the vestry are similar to those of the south wall of the chancel, but one of them is modern and the other is of old stonework retooled, having been formerly in the north wall of the chancel. In the north wall is a modern doorway and a window of two trefoiled ogee-headed lights.

The vestry opens to the north aisle by an arch now filled with the organ. There is no chancel arch, its place being taken by a wooden lintel with modern carved bracket supports. Above the lintel the original gable remains, with vertical timbers filled in with herringbone brickwork.

The arcade opening to the north aisle is of two bays with an octagonal column with moulded base and capital and chamfered responds. The arches are two-centred of two chamfered orders.

The aisle has two modern north windows of two traceried lights each, and under the easternmost is a square-headed doorway.

The eastern window in the south wall of the nave is of 16th-century date and has four cinquefoiled lights under a square head with a modern label and sill. The other south window and the only north window of the nave are modern copies of this and have the same number of lights. About the middle of the north wall of the nave is a blocked doorway, but it can only be seen through one of the wall gratings connected with the heating apparatus.

The south doorway between the two windows is modern and has cement jambs and a four-centred head. At the east end of the south wall of the nave is a small projecting turret which originally contained the stair to the rood-loft; the positions of the steps are now marked by stones in the walls. The turret is now open to the nave, and is spanned by a modern arch; externally it is brick-faced like the rest, and lighted by a narrow modern trefoiled window.

The west doorway of the nave has a semicircular head and a wooden frame. At each side of the doorway is a post supporting a large lintel, part of the framing of the wooden nave. Between the posts are bracket supports. The gable above the lintel is of half-timber work similar to that at the east end, and

<sup>23</sup> Pishey-Thompson, Hist. of Boston.

<sup>24</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, ii, 183.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. v, 377.

<sup>27</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 51 Geo. III, rot. 438.

<sup>28</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, v, 377.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid.

<sup>30</sup> The de la Rugges may have had this estate in the 13th century, although no connexion has been found between them and the atte Coufolds. Walter de la Rugge obtained a quitclaim of half a hide of land in Rotherwick from Alan de Brenningfaud in 1203 (Feet of F. Hants, 5 John), and his successor Richard de la

Rugge leased land in Rotherwick to Sir Philip Basset, Lord of Mapledewell, in 1262 (Anct. D. P.R.O. A. 8231).

<sup>31</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. i (1st nos.), no. 50.

<sup>32</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Ric. II; Hil. 6 Ric. II.

<sup>33</sup> Inq. p.m. 20 Ric. II, no. 12.

filled with roughly laid brick, evidently not meant to show. Some of the bricks are moulded for use in cornices or strings.

The west doorway in the tower has a three-centred brick arch and a moulded square-headed wood frame of 17th-century date with an old studded oak door.

Above this is a three-light window with brick mullions, jambs, and three-centred arch.

The tower is of three stages with an embattled parapet. In each side of the top stage is a two-light window with a wood frame. In the west face there is a small single light in the middle stage.

The roof of the chancel is of modern open timber-work, but that of the nave of 15th-century date, of five bays with braces forming four-centred arches beneath the principals and continued upwards as curved struts, two purlins a side with arched wind braces, and a well moulded plate. The main posts are cut away a foot below the plate level.

A simple but good modern screen is set across the opening to the chancel, and in the nave are a number of plain seats with roll-moulded tops, which may be as old as the nave, some of the backs being made of very large planks.

The font has a plain cylindrical bowl on a modern base, and may be as early as the 12th century; it stands close to the south door of the nave.

In the north aisle is a large marble monument of white and grey marble with a pediment carried by Ionic columns, to Frederick Tylney of Tylney Hall, who died in 1725. The monument was erected by his widow Anne, daughter of George Pitt of Stratfield Saye; and a shield of their parted arms commemorates this marriage.

In the north wall of the chancel is a pretty little monument to Anthony More, son of Thomas More of Lanceveley in Sheffield Loddon. The date is almost obliterated, but is perhaps 1583, the last figure only being certain. Above, in a curved pediment, are his arms of the bars and martlets.

On the floor of chancel and sanctuary are several 17th and 18th-century slabs to the Tylney family, the oldest being to 'Richardus Tylney, Armiger,' who died in 1646. This has a shield of Tylney impaling Haydok.

The tower contains five bells, the first being inscribed 'Love God 1630,' and the second 'Fear God 1630,' the letters of both being reversed. The third is a pre-Reformation bell inscribed a small crown being used as a sign of abbreviation, with a cross of four fleurs de lis between the first and last words. The fourth bell bears the black letter inscription, 'Our hope is in the Lord 1607 R. E.' The fifth is inscribed, 'Sancte Johannes ora pro nobis' in black letter, the initials being crowned. It bears the Reading marks, a lion's face, a cross and a groat, and is of 15th-century date.

HAC IN CONCLAVE GABRIELIS NC PAGE SVAVE (sic)

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten cover and flagon of 1568, 1614, and 1776 respectively, the latter being given by Sir J. Harris in 1875; and a pewter almsdish.

There are six books of registers, the first containing baptisms, marriages, and burials from 1569 to 1630, the second the same from 1630 to 1727, and the third continues them from 1728 to 1754. The fourth book is the printed marriage form with entries from 1754 to 1802, the fifth contains baptisms and burials from 1756 to 1812, and the sixth marriages from 1802 to 1812.

Rotherwick was a chapelry dependent on Odiham until 1867, when by order in Council the benefice was declared a rectory in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>34</sup>

In the latter half of the 14th century the parishioners received a warning from the bishop to attend the parish church, and not the manorial chapel, on Sundays and holy days.<sup>35</sup>

An annuity of £2 11s. 9d. was formerly applied in the distribution of calico to the poor, supposed to be charged on some moorland and houses.

A sum of 5s. a year known as Poor's Money has also ceased to be paid.

The school, originally erected in 1713 by Frederick Tylney, and endowed by him with £10 a year, was rebuilt in 1872, and has in recent years been considerably enlarged.

SHALDEN

Seldene (xi cent.); Schalden, Scaldeden, Scaudedene (xii cent.); Chalden, Scalden (xiii cent.).

The parish of Shalden contains 1,536 acres. Its eastern boundary is formed by the high road from Alton to Odiham, and the village lies about half a mile to the west of this road and is connected with it by Stancombe Lane. The principal road through the village is that from Shalden Green to Alton. The nearest railway station is at Alton, on the Farnham and Winchester Branch of the London and South Western Railway.

The land in the north is high, more than 600 ft. above the ordnance datum, but it falls in the south to some 400 ft. above the same datum. The parish is well wooded, and there is a small park at Shalden Lodge, the residence of Mr. Frank Mangles, J.P. At Shalden Green there is a small common with a few cottages on the western side, and Park Farm on the east.

In 1905 there were in the parish 370 acres of arable land, 877 acres of permanent grass, and 194 acres of woodland.<sup>1</sup> The soil is clay and chalk, with a subsoil of chalk, and the chief crops produced are cereals. A large number of old chalk-pits indicate that the chalk was once worked in this neighbourhood.

Roman remains were found to the west of the village in 1854.

Place-names occurring in connexion with Shalden in the 17th century are Gregories Farm and Shrubbs.<sup>2</sup>

John Lightfoot the botanist was rector of Shalden from 1765 until 1777.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>34</sup> Lond. Gaz. 4 June 1867, p. 3166.

<sup>35</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 255b.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics supplied by Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxxiii, 21.

<sup>3</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The manor of SHALDEN was held MANOR at the time of the Domesday Survey by William Mauduit ; formerly it had been held by four freemen of King Edward the Confessor as an alod.<sup>4</sup> The overlordship of the manor passed to the descendants of William Mauduit in the same way as the manor of Hartley Mauduit (q.v.), of which Shalden was held.<sup>5</sup>

The manor was apparently held by the Mauduits of Hartley Mauduit in demesne<sup>6</sup> until near the end of the 12th century, when William Mauduit of Hanslope gave this manor to his brother Robert Mauduit of Warminster to be held of William and his heirs for the service of half a knight's fee.<sup>7</sup> Robert Mauduit died in 1191,<sup>8</sup> and his son and successor Thomas was holding the manor in 1235-6.<sup>9</sup> He died in 1244, and was succeeded by his son William.<sup>10</sup> Thomas the successor of William left a son and heir Warin, a minor, whose custody was assigned by Henry III to his brother Richard, Earl of Cornwall.<sup>11</sup> From Warin some interest in the manor seems to have passed on his death in 1299-1300<sup>12</sup> to his son Thomas, for he granted a virgate of land at Shalden to Walter Stoner his freeman for his homage and services.<sup>13</sup> Before this time, however, the manor seems to have passed to Richard, Earl of Cornwall, for he obtained from Henry III a grant of free warren there, and on his death in 1272 the manor descended to his son Edmund,<sup>14</sup> who was summoned in 1280 to show by what right he claimed free warren and the assize of bread and ale in the manor.<sup>15</sup> At that time Sir Nicholas de Boys held the manor of the earl as a tenant for life.<sup>16</sup> In 1297 the earl, in consideration of the good services of Sir Nicholas, granted the manor to him and his heirs for ever.<sup>17</sup> Sir Nicholas was to pay nothing for the manor, but his heirs were to pay £12 a year to the earl.<sup>18</sup> This rent was, however, remitted in 1320 by Edward II,<sup>19</sup> to whom the earl's interest had descended. In 1309 Sir Nicholas de Boys granted the manor to Robert de Kendale and Margaret his wife and the heirs of Margaret. The manor was then held by Ralph le Mareschal for life.<sup>20</sup>

MAUDUIT. Paly wavy or and gules.

RICHARD, Earl of Cornwall. Argent a lion gules crowned or in a border sable bezanty.

He was still holding it in 1310,<sup>21</sup> but it had passed to Robert de Kendale before 1316.<sup>22</sup> Robert died in 1330, and his son Edward succeeded to the manor,<sup>23</sup> but it was held by Margaret widow of Robert till her death in 1347.<sup>24</sup> Sir Edward de Kendale died in 1373, leaving a son Edward his heir.<sup>25</sup> Edward (then Sir Edward) and his brother Thomas both died without issue in 1375.<sup>26</sup> Sir Robert Turk and Beatrice his wife, sister and heir of Sir Edward and Thomas de Kendale, conveyed the manor in 1376-7 to Sir William Croiser and William Bukbridge,<sup>27</sup> trustees for Elizabeth widow of Sir Edward de Kendale the younger, to whom they transferred it in the same year.<sup>28</sup> Elizabeth afterwards married Sir Thomas Barre, and died in 1421. Her heir was her grandson, John son of Thomas Barre,<sup>29</sup> but the manor of Shalden passed to John de Kendale, who held it in 1428.<sup>30</sup> From him the manor passed by descent or purchase to Robert Lee and his wife Joan, who conveyed it in 1437-8 to Stephen Dyer and his son William.<sup>31</sup> William Dyer conveyed the manor in 1444-5 to Richard, Bishop of Chichester and others.<sup>32</sup> The Dyers seem, however, to have been merely trustees for the Lees,<sup>33</sup> for in 1485-6 Maud, Anne, Elizabeth, Jane, and Ellen, daughters of John Lee, claimed the issues of the manor during the nonage of their brother John under the will of their father, and complained that they had been prevented from enjoying them by Reginald Sandes and Robert Norton, trustees.<sup>34</sup> In 1567 William Lee sold the manor to Anne Twynne,<sup>35</sup> and

LEE. Or a chief sable battled with three bezants therein.

KNIGHT of Chawton. Vert a bend indented or with a cinquefoil argent in the foot.

WOOD of Thedden Grange. Gules three woodmen having on their left arms shields argent each with a flowered cross gules and in their right hands clubs resting on their shields with a chief invected or and a star between two fleurs de lis azure therein.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 493.

<sup>5</sup> Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. III, no. 26; 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 122; 37 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 20.

<sup>6</sup> It was confirmed to William Mauduit by King Stephen; Halstead, Succinct Gen. 127.

<sup>7</sup> Halstead, Succinct Gen. 130; Pipe R. 23 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 170.

<sup>8</sup> Herald and Gen. vii, 386.

<sup>9</sup> Assize R. 775, m. 21.

<sup>10</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 418.

<sup>11</sup> Assize R. 785, m. 18 d.; 1006, m. 55 d.

<sup>12</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. I, no. 41.

<sup>13</sup> Halstead, Succinct Gen. 134.

<sup>14</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>15</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 772.

<sup>16</sup> Assize R. 787, m. 68 d.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Close, 1318-23, p. 208.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. 266.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 2 Edw. II.

<sup>21</sup> Cal. Pat. 1307-13, p. 253.

<sup>22</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>23</sup> Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. III, no. 26.

<sup>24</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333; Cal. Close,

1346-9, p. 350; Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 19.

<sup>25</sup> Inq. p.m. 47 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 20.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. 49 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 74, 75.

<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 50 Edw. III.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.

<sup>29</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 Hen. V, no. 47.

<sup>30</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 345.

<sup>31</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Hen. VI.

<sup>32</sup> Close, 23 Hen. VI, m. 7.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.

<sup>34</sup> Early Chan. Proc. bde. 66, no. 114.

<sup>35</sup> Information supplied by Mr. M. G. Knight.

in 1591 Richard Miller and William Gregory sold it to William, afterwards Sir William, Kingswell.<sup>36</sup> It was sold in 1628 by Sir William's son and successor Edward Kingswell to Sir Richard Young, bart., of Weybridge,<sup>37</sup> of whom it was purchased in 1632 by Humphrey Benett.<sup>38</sup> Humphrey, then Sir Humphrey compounded for his estate in 1649,<sup>39</sup> and sold the manor of Shalden in 1653 to Anne Mynne, widow of George Mynne of Woodcote, and to John Lewkenor and Anne, daughter of George Mynne, his wife.<sup>40</sup> John Lewkenor and Anne were succeeded by their son John, and this manor passed in the same way as that of Steventon (q.v.) to the Knights of Chawton, in whose family it remained till 1840, when it was sold by Edward Knight to Mr. John Wood of Thedden Grange.<sup>41</sup> On his death in 1871 it passed to his son Mr. John Gathorne Wood, the present owner.<sup>42</sup>

The church of ST. PETER and CHURCH ST. PAUL is a small structure consisting of a chancel with a north vestry and an aisleless nave with a north porch and a small bell-cot over the west end. It was built in 1863, and is of very plain 13th-century design. The old church stood a few feet to the south of the present one, and has been completely destroyed. The only thing remaining is the font, which is re-used in the new church. It is of 15th-century date and octagonal form, with a moulded octagonal stem and a panelled bowl. The bell-cot contains one modern bell.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1628; a paten of Sheffield plate and a glass flagon with plated mount.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1686 and marriages and burials from 1687, baptisms and burials running to 1790, marriages to 1753. This book contains notes of affidavits of burials in woollen. The second book contains baptisms and burials from 1791 to 1812, and the third marriages with banns, the printed form, from 1754 to 1812. There is also a book of churchwardens' accounts from 1754 to the present day.

The church ADVOWSON of Shalden was given by William Mauduit the chamberlain to the prior and convent of Southwick between 1147 and 1153.<sup>43</sup> The grant was confirmed by Robert Mauduit, Pope Eugenius III, and by Pope Urban III in 1185.<sup>44</sup> Thomas Mauduit claimed a presentation in 1223,<sup>45</sup> but the suit apparently went against him, and the advowson remained in the possession of the priory till the Dissolution<sup>46</sup>; it then passed to the Crown, in which it has since been vested.

SOUTHWICK PRIORY.
Argent a chief sable with two roses argent therein.

SHERFIELD UPON LODDON

Sirefelda (xii cent.); Shirefeld, Schirefelde, Scirefeld, Shyrefeud, Shyrefeld Werbylnton (xiii cent.); Shirfield on Lodon (xv cent.).

Sherfield upon Loddon is a large parish situated four miles north-east from Basingstoke station on the London and South Western main line to Southampton. The Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway passes near the western boundary, the nearest station on that line being at Bramley. The boundaries of the parish are, roughly, the River Loddon on the east; Petty's Brook, a tributary of the Loddon, on the south; Bow Brook, another tributary of the Loddon, on the north; and the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway on the west. The parish has an area of 2,324 acres of land and 13 acres of land covered by water. Bounded as it is by rivers, the parish is low-lying, the greatest height recorded being 272 ft. above the ordnance datum at Sherfield Hill in the south-west.

The village lies along the main road from Reading to Basingstoke, which enters the parish at Long Bridge over the Loddon and intersects it from north-east to south-west. Wildmoor Lane branches off from this road at Church End, and skirting the park at St. Leonards, leads to the district called Wildmoor, which consists of several isolated farm-houses. The name of one of these, Great Marshall's Farm, is probably connected with the tenure by which the manor was held. At Wildmoor, which was formerly in the hundred of Basingstoke,<sup>1</sup> lay the meadow land belonging to the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>1a</sup> It was in the charge of a mower or keeper, who was elected at the court of the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>1b</sup> The fishing in the water at Wildmoor seems to have been strictly preserved.<sup>1c</sup> After passing through Wildmoor, Wildmoor Lane trends north and north-west, rejoining the Reading and Basingstoke road south of Wheler's Court. This house was the capital messuage of the Wheler estate in the parish, and to it the manorial rights of Sherfield are now annexed. There the courts leet for the manor were held. The house, which was of Caroline date, was pulled down and rebuilt a few years ago by Mr. James B. Taylor.<sup>1d</sup>

Archer Lodge,<sup>2</sup> at one time the residence of Mr. Paynton Pigott Stainsby Conant, was pulled down by Mr. John Bramston Stane, who erected a handsome new house, called Buckfield, in the middle of a wood of that name. Mr. Charles Lethbridge added to this house and changed its name in the early part of

<sup>36</sup> Information supplied by Mr. M. G. Knight.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid.; Close, 4 Chas. I, pt. vii, no. 1.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 8 Chas. I.

<sup>39</sup> Cal. of Com. for Comp. 1944.

<sup>40</sup> Information of Mr. M. G. Knight of Chawton.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid.

<sup>42</sup> Information of Mr. J. G. Wood.

<sup>43</sup> Add. MS. 33280, fol. 52, 53, 56,

211.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid. 67, 56, 211.

<sup>45</sup> Cur. Reg. R. 85, m. 5 d.

<sup>46</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 25 d.; 2032, fol. 28 d.; 2033, fol. 30 d.; 2034, fol. 59, 103, 153.

<sup>1</sup> Baigent and Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 344.

<sup>1a</sup> Ibid. 195, 197, 198, 200, 292, 344.

<sup>1b</sup> Ibid. 235, 283, 284.

<sup>1c</sup> Ibid. 314, 332.

<sup>1d</sup> Information supplied by Mr. Frederick Barker and the Rev. J. G. Crowley, M.A., rector of Sherfield upon Loddon.

<sup>2</sup> So called from the maiden name, Archer, of Mrs. Gillery Pigott of Bridge Villa, Maidenhead, whose property Mr. P. P. Stainsby Conant inherited. (Ex inform. Miss Pigott of Heckfield Heath House.)

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

1880 to Sherfield Manor.<sup>3</sup> The present Sherfield Manor, which was entirely rebuilt by Mr. J. B. Taylor in 1898, stands in a park of about 250 acres to the east of the Basingstoke road. Mr. Taylor purchased the estate in 1896, increased the park and laid out extensive grounds and gardens. On the opposite side of the road are St. Leonards' Church and the old manor-house of Sherfield Court, now used as a farmhouse. Behind it is one of the finest moats in the county, within which the original house stood.<sup>4</sup>

Farther south, standing in a small park, is St. Leonards, which was built as a rectory-house. It, with the glebe land, was bought about 1874-5 by the late Rev. Alfred Gresley Barker, who resided there and provided another house in the village to serve as a rectory. To this estate Mr. Barker added some of the adjoining land of Mr. Henry Lannoy-Hunter of Beech Hill.<sup>5</sup> St. Leonards was purchased about two years ago by Mr. Eustace Palmer, who changed its name to Drayton House. Near it is Sherfield Hall, formerly known as Hill House, and Sherfield Hill Park. This estate, formerly a farm homestead, was purchased of Mr. Henry Lannoy-Hunter by Baron Pigott, fourth son of Mr. Paynton Pigott Stainsby Conant of Archer Lodge. Moulshay Farm and other farm lands were added to it, and the whole was sold on the baron's death in 1899 to Mrs. Trevor Goff, who added to the house and changed its name to Sherfield Hall.<sup>6</sup> The house was built by Baron Pigott, and was rented by Major George Frederick Downing Fullerton until August 1909. It is now occupied by Mrs. Goff.

At Lancelevy Farm, to the east of Sherfield, are the remains of a moat. This farm is now included in the Sherfield Manor estate.<sup>7</sup> The house formerly stood within the moat, but was rebuilt in its present position about two hundred years ago. The house is of the Queen Anne description, and takes its name from the Warwickshire family of Lancelevy. The estate, which is sometimes called a 'manor,' belonged during the 17th century to the family of Palmes,<sup>8</sup> and the house was once occupied by Sir Francis Palmes, whose daughter Anne married Sir Hampden Paulet. Sir Francis married Mary the eldest daughter of Stephen Hadnall,<sup>9</sup> a Privy Councillor of Queen Mary, who acquired land in Sherfield in 1578 from Richard More.<sup>9</sup> The Mores had been in possession of land in Sherfield, apparently the Lancelevy estate, in 1496 and before.<sup>10</sup> There is another imperfect moat at Breach Farm, but the house is quite modern.

There are no large tracts of woodland in the parish, but there are numerous small copses. The proportion of arable, grass, and woodland in 1905 was 1,057 acres of arable land, 928½ acres of permanent grass, and 182½ acres of woodland.<sup>11</sup> The soil is mixed, and the subsoil gravel and clay. The gravel was, and is still to a small extent, worked in the district. The chief crops are wheat, oats, and beans.

Thirteenth-century place-names which occur in connexion with Sherfield are la Breche, la Wyldemore.<sup>12</sup> Sixteenth and 17th-century place-names are Marschall, Lamboll, Dealand, Little Kendall, and Downes Land.<sup>13</sup>

In 1543 it was ordained at a meeting of the Privy Council that John More was to remove a bridge which he had recently erected over the River Loddon between Sherfield and Hartley.<sup>14</sup>

The manor of SHERFIELD UPON MANOR LODDON is not mentioned under that name in the Domesday Survey, as it formed at that time part of the royal manor of Odiham.<sup>15</sup> It remained in the Crown till the reign of Henry II, by whom it was granted, before 1167-8,<sup>16</sup> to his marshal William Fitz Aldelin on his marriage with Juliane daughter of Robert Dorsnell.<sup>17</sup> William held the manor by the serjeanty of being the king's marshal.<sup>18</sup> The manor was said to be held in 1317 in free socage for suit at Odiham Hundred,<sup>19</sup> and in 1332 for the service of carrying the marshal's wand in the king's house.<sup>20</sup> In 1375 the service is given as the serjeanty of being marshal de meretricibus and dismembering malefactors condemned, and measuring the gallons and bushels in the king's household.<sup>21</sup> This service continued till 1603-4, when it is mentioned for the last time.<sup>22</sup>

Juliane apparently survived William Fitz Aldelin, and died at the end of the 12th century, leaving co-heirs Ingram Monceux and William de Warborton or Warblington.<sup>23</sup> On the actual partition of the possessions of Juliane in 1205 Compton<sup>24</sup> passed to Waleran Monceux the heir of Ingram, and Sherfield to William de Warblington, who had apparently come of age in 1204 (vide King's Somborne).<sup>25</sup> William died in 1226, and was succeeded at Sherfield by Thomas de Warblington, who was possibly his son.<sup>26</sup> Thomas died towards the end of the reign of Henry III,<sup>27</sup> and the custody of the manor was granted about 1274 to John de Wintershill.<sup>28</sup> In exchange for certain land which they had taken from the men of Sherfield to throw into their park, John and his wife Amice granted the said men quittance of a certain rent and common in the pastures called Sherfield and la Breche.<sup>29</sup> Later on the men of Sherfield, claiming <sup>3</sup> Information by Mr. F. Barker and the Rev. J. G. Crowdy.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. by Mr. Frederick Barker.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. by the Rev. J. G. Crowdy.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. by Miss Pigott and the Rev. J. G. Crowdy.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. by Mr. F. Barker.

<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 5 Jas. I; Mich. 4 Chas. I; Recov. R. Hil. 1654, rot. 50.

<sup>9</sup> Information by the Rev. J. G. Crowdy; Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 32 Eliz.

<sup>10</sup> Close, 20 Eliz. pt. xiii, More and Hadnall.

<sup>11</sup> Cal. of Inq. Hen. VII, i, 530. There is an inscription in Rotherwick Church to Anthony son of Thomas More of Lancelevy (1583).

<sup>12</sup> Statistics supplied by Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>13</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 186; Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 220.

<sup>14</sup> Close, 20 Eliz. pt. xiii, More and Hadnall; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccclxxviii, 130.

<sup>15</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xviii (i), 401; Act of P.C. 1542-7, 111.

<sup>16</sup> Plac. Abbrev. (Rec. Com.), 263.

<sup>17</sup> Pipe R. 14 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 180.

<sup>18</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rolls Ser.), 209.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. II, no. 55.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. 6 Edw. III, no. 72.

<sup>22</sup> Memo. R. L.T.R. East. 41 Edw. III, m. 13; Chan. Inq. p.m. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 5 Hen. IV, no. 15; ibid. (Ser. 2), ccclxxi, 55. In 1469 the manor was said to be held by knight service (Chan. Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. IV, no. 44).

<sup>24</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 19.

<sup>25</sup> In King's Somborne parish. Afterwards known as Compton Monceux.

<sup>26</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 217, 310.

<sup>27</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 146.

<sup>28</sup> Assize R. 780, m. 4 d.; Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 263.

<sup>29</sup> Cal. Close, 1272-9, pp. 81, 167.

<sup>30</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 263.

SHERFIELD-UPON-LODDON : SHERFIELD MANOR

to be tenants in ancient demesne as parcel of the manor of Odiham, complained that John and Amice exacted from them more service than they had been accustomed to do when the manor belonged to the kings of England.<sup>30</sup> In 1274 John de Wintershill was accused of deforcing the king of a certain fish-pond in 'Iwode la Wyldemore.'<sup>31</sup> The heir of Thomas de Warblington was his kinsman Thomas son of William de Warblington,<sup>32</sup> and in 1281 John de Wintershill and Amice conveyed the manor to this Thomas.<sup>33</sup> Thomas died in 1316-17, leaving as his heir a son John,<sup>34</sup> who obtained licence in 1321 to settle the manor upon himself and his wife Margaret in tail.<sup>35</sup> John died about 1332,<sup>36</sup> and the manor was delivered to Margaret to be held by her for life.<sup>37</sup> John's heir was his son John,<sup>38</sup> who died in 1375 leaving Thomas his son and heir.<sup>39</sup> Katherine widow of John, who afterwards married Sir John del Hay, held the manor till her death in 1403-4, when she was succeeded by her grandson William son of Thomas de Warblington,<sup>40</sup> who settled the manor of Sherfield in 1405 upon himself and his wife Julia.<sup>41</sup> In 1425 William settled the manor upon himself and Margery his wife, widow of Sir Peter Besilles, and their issue male,<sup>42</sup> and a further settlement was made upon them in 1444, probably owing to the failure of their heirs, with contingent remainder to Henry Puttenham, son of Margaret Puttenham, eldest daughter of John de Warblington, the grandfather of William.<sup>43</sup> William de Warblington died in 1469,<sup>44</sup> and his widow Margery, having outlived Henry Puttenham, died in 1484, when William son of Henry Puttenham succeeded to the estate.<sup>45</sup> William settled the manor in 1485 upon his son George on his marriage with Alice daughter of Thomas Wyndesore.<sup>46</sup> Robert son of George Puttenham conveyed the manor in 1550 to his second son Richard.<sup>47</sup> It was either this Richard or his elder brother George who was the author of a treatise entitled The Arte of English Poesie, published anonymously in 1589. The author was the first writer who attempted philosophical criticism of literature, and his book was much appreciated. Ben Jonson's copy of the work is now in the Grenville Library at the British Museum.<sup>48</sup> Richard Puttenham gave the manor in 1567 to his daughter Anne wife of Francis Morris of Coxwell,<sup>49</sup> and she and her husband sold it in 1572 in moieties to Thomas Colby and George Speke.<sup>50</sup>

Thomas Colby died in 1588 leaving a daughter Dorothy,<sup>51</sup> who afterwards married John Tamworth.<sup>52</sup>

John died in 1594 holding the reversion of half the manor after the death of Elizabeth wife of Sir Michael Molyns, relict of Thomas Colby, leaving Colby Tamworth his son and heir.<sup>53</sup> Colby died in 1603-4 in the lifetime of his grandmother Elizabeth Molyns, and of his mother Dorothy, then the wife of Philip, Lord Wharton, leaving his sisters Bridget, Elizabeth, and Catherine his heirs.<sup>54</sup> Lady Molyns survived till 1606,<sup>55</sup> and Dorothy, Lady Wharton died in 1621,<sup>56</sup> when the moiety of the manor passed to her daughters Bridget wife of William Molyns, Elizabeth wife of Sir George Reresby, and Catherine wife of Sir George Dalston.<sup>57</sup> These co-heirs conveyed the manor in 1623 to Sir Henry Wallop and others,<sup>58</sup> probably as trustees for a settlement of the Dalstons' share upon Lady Reresby, for two-thirds seem to have passed to her, and were purchased of her by her daughter Lady Elizabeth Foljambe, and sequestered for Lady Reresby's recusancy in 1648.<sup>59</sup>

The other third, that had belonged to Bridget and William Molyns, apparently passed to Tamworth Reresby, a younger son of Sir George and Elizabeth Reresby,<sup>60</sup> through his marriage with Mrs. Mary Preston, widow of William Molyns of Sherfield, as he made conveyances of a third in 1661 and 1673.<sup>61</sup> On Tamworth's death this third passed to Anne daughter and heir of William Molyns, who married Philip Saltmarsh.<sup>62</sup> It passed from her to her son William Saltmarsh, who in 1756 vested half the manor of Sherfield in trustees for sale.<sup>63</sup>

Lady Elizabeth Foljambe died in 1695, leaving by her third husband, Viscount Monson of Castlemaine, a daughter Elizabeth who married Sir Philip Hungate, bart., of Saxton.<sup>64</sup> There is no indication that any part of the manor passed to the Hungates, and it seems probable that Lady Foljambe's share was purchased by the Saltmarsh family, as William Saltmarsh owned half the manor in 1756.<sup>65</sup> Saltmarsh probably sold the estate to John Hasker, for John and his wife Mary conveyed it in 1758 to Thomas Hasker,<sup>66</sup> and in 1813 John and Thomas Hasker dealt with the manor of Sherfield.<sup>67</sup> This probably refers to the Sherfield Court estate, for Anne wife of Philip Saltmarsh is described as the daughter of William Mullens of 'Skervill Court,'<sup>68</sup> and the Haskers certainly lived at Sherfield Court.<sup>69</sup> This estate was purchased from Mr. Chute in 1838 by the Duke of Wellington, to whose family it still belongs.<sup>69a</sup>

The moiety of the manor bought by Sir George Speke, sometimes known later as the Wheler Court

<sup>30</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 263.

<sup>31</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 220.

<sup>32</sup> Cal. Close, 1279-88, p. 421.

<sup>33</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Edw. I.

<sup>34</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 10 Edw. II, no. 55.

<sup>35</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 152, no. 5.

<sup>36</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III, no. 72.

<sup>37</sup> Cal. Close, 1330-3, p. 466.

<sup>38</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III, no. 72.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>40</sup> Cal. Pat. 5 Hen. IV, no. 15; Cal. Pat. 1381-5, p. 172.

<sup>41</sup> Cal. Pat. 1401-5, p. 466.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. 1422-9, p. 320.

<sup>43</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. III, no. 33.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid. 8 Edw. IV, no. 44.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. 2 Ric. III, no. 33. In the inquisition taken on the death of William de Warblington in 1469 the jurors stated that it was the custom of the manor of Odiham when a tenant died leaving daughters that the land should go to the eldest daughter or her issue (Chan. Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. IV, no. 44).

<sup>46</sup> Cal. Pat. 1476-85, p. 551.

<sup>47</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 4 Edw. VI.

<sup>48</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>49</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxxii, 41.

<sup>50</sup> Close, 14 Eliz. pt. iii, m. 29.

<sup>51</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxxii, 41.

<sup>52</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 32 & 33 Eliz.

<sup>53</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxli, 112.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), cclxxxi, 55.

<sup>55</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 63, no. 111.

<sup>56</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage under Wharton.

<sup>57</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxlii, 33;

Blome, Hist. of Rutland, 55.

<sup>58</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 21 Jas. I.

<sup>59</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, iii, 1769.

<sup>60</sup> The Genealogist (New Ser.), xv, 38.

<sup>61</sup> Recov. R. East. 13 Chas. II, rot. 150; East. 25 Chas. II, rot. 44.

<sup>62</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry (11th ed.); Hutchinson, Hist. of Durham, iii, 462.

<sup>63</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Hil. 30 Geo. II, m. 77-87.

<sup>64</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.; G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, ii, 190.

<sup>65</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Hil. 30 Geo. II, m. 77.

<sup>66</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 31 Geo. II.

<sup>67</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 53 Geo. III, rot. 132.

<sup>68</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry (11th ed.); Hutchinson, Hist. of Durham, iii, 462.

<sup>69</sup> From entries in old rate books.

<sup>69a</sup> Information from the Duke of Wellington.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

estate, was held by his widow Dorothy till her death in 1589, when her son Hugh succeeded.<sup>70</sup> He and his wife Elizabeth made conveyances of a quarter of the manor of Sherfield in 1600-1 and 1605 to William Wollascott, junior.<sup>71</sup> Possibly he was a trustee for Sir Michael Molyns, of whose will he was one of the executors,<sup>72</sup> for Sir Michael died in 1615 holding a quarter of the manor of Sherfield, which descended to his son Sir Barentinus.<sup>73</sup> Sir Barentinus and the executors of the will of his father sold this quarter in 1616 to Sir William Herrick and Christopher Colby.<sup>74</sup> They may have been trustees for Robert Herrick, Sir William's brother, for part of the manor passed to William Wheler son of Martha daughter of Robert Herrick.<sup>75</sup> William Wheler was created a baronet in 1660 and died without issue in 1666, having bequeathed his estates on the death of his widow, who died in 1670, to the Rev. Sir George Wheler, Prebendary of Durham.<sup>76</sup> Sir George died in 1723-4 leaving his son, the Rev. Granville Wheler, his heir.<sup>77</sup> Granville dealt with the manor in 1727,<sup>78</sup> but no further connexion of the Wheler family with the manor has been discovered. However the manorial rights of Sherfield ultimately became annexed to this estate held by the Wheelers.

WHELER, Baronet.
Or a chevron between three leopards' heads
sable.

The interest of the Spekes in the remaining quarter of the manor has not been traced from the death of Dorothy Speke in 1589. This quarter may possibly have been included in the 'manor of Sherfield upon Loddon,' held in 1755 by John, Earl Tylney.<sup>79</sup>

Paynton Pigott Stainsby Conant purchased the manor of Sherfield upon Loddon in 1817 or soon after.<sup>80</sup> On his death in 1862 the manor was bought by John Bramston Stane,<sup>81</sup> by whose trustees it was sold in 1888 to Charles Lethbridge.<sup>82</sup> It was purchased of him in 1898 by Mr. James B. Taylor, who sold it in 1907 to Mr. J. Liddell,<sup>83</sup> the present owner.

Certain land in Sherfield belonging to the corporation of Reading was purchased by John Bramston Stane and added to the Sherfield Manor estate. A park was probably made at Sherfield or an existing one enlarged about 1273 by John de Wintershill, who then held the manor.<sup>84</sup> It was a deer park as early as 1299.<sup>85</sup> In 1332 this park, now containing over 250 acres, contained only 40 acres.<sup>86</sup> John de Warblington in 1368 obtained a grant of free warren at Sherfield.<sup>87</sup>

A water-mill at Sherfield is first mentioned in 1316-17, but probably existed in the 13th century as John the Miller is mentioned in 1274.<sup>88</sup> Two water-mills are mentioned in an extent of the manor taken in 1332.<sup>89</sup> The number of mills had increased in the 17th century, for in 1601 two water-mills and a fulling-mill passed with a fourth of the manor,<sup>90</sup> and in 1608 four water-mills were annexed to Lord Wharton's share of the manor.<sup>91</sup> In the 18th century a mill described as a water-corn or fulling-mill belonged to the Wheler estate.<sup>92</sup> There is now only one mill, known as Longbridge Mill, on the River Loddon, near Long Bridge.

An estate consisting of a messuage and a carucate of land was held under the Warblingtons by the Kendales of Shalden for an annual payment of 3s. 2d.<sup>93</sup> It is first mentioned on the death of Robert de Kendale in 1330-1,<sup>94</sup> and descended in the same way as Shalden (q.v.) till 1376.<sup>95</sup> Its further descent has not been traced.

An estate at Sherfield belonged to the Brocas of Beaurepaire<sup>96</sup> from the 14th century to the beginning of the 19th, Mrs. Brocas being returned as a ratepayer as late as 1803.<sup>97</sup>

The church of ST. LEONARD consists of a chancel 22 ft. 9 in. by 18 ft. 7 in., with a small vestry and organ chamber on the north side, nave 65 ft. 4 in. by 22 ft. 3 in., with a north transept 14 ft. 10 in. by 7 ft. 6 in., and a south-west tower 11 ft. 6 in. square, the lower part of which serves as a porch.

The oldest parts of the building are the bay of the north wall of the nave to the west of the transept, which contains an old blocked doorway and the upper stage of an old buttress, and part of the south wall of the nave opposite. They belong to the second quarter of the 14th century, but all the rest of the church has been rebuilt, some of the old details being used. The tower was built in 1872 in memory of a brother of the Rev. A. G. Barker, rector, 1863-75.

The east window of the chancel is partly of 14th-century date, and has three trefoiled lights and net tracery. The mullions and internal splays are modern.

The eastern window in the south wall of the chancel is a single trefoiled light, but only the chamfered external jambs are old stone. On one of them, now set upside down, is scratched an early 16th-century shield with three indistinct charges on a bend, and in chief a human hand or a gauntlet.

The western window in this wall is of early 14th-century style, two trefoiled lights with a trefoil in the head, and is nearly all modern. Between

<sup>70</sup> W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 3, no. 231.

<sup>71</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 43 Eliz.; Hants, East. 3 Jas. I.

<sup>72</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxxviii, 130.

<sup>73</sup> Ibid. In the inquisition on the death of Lady Molyns a quarter of the manor was said to be held in her right; W. & L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 63, no. 111.

<sup>74</sup> Close, 14 Jas. I, pt. vi, no. 24.

<sup>75</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, ii, 1510; G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, iii, 106-7.

<sup>76</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, iii, 106-7; Recov. R. Trin. 5 Geo. I, rot. 152. In 1665 Sir William gave a 41 years' lease of Bowbridge House to Christopher Maynard of Sherfield, who had to do suit and service at Sherfield Manor Court while he enjoyed rights of house-boote, gateboote, paleboote, railboote, and styleboote; ex inform. Mr. J. Hautenville Cope.

<sup>77</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Hil. 1 Geo. II, m. 18; Surtees, Hist. of Durham, i, 176.

<sup>78</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Hil. 1 Geo. II, m. 18.

<sup>79</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 28 Geo. II, rot. 49.

<sup>80</sup> Information by Miss Pigott.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid.

<sup>82</sup> Information by Mr. F. Barker.

<sup>83</sup> Ibid.

<sup>84</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 263.

<sup>85</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 465.

<sup>86</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III, no. 72.

<sup>87</sup> Chart. R. 42 Edw. III, m. 3, no. 10.

<sup>88</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 186.

<sup>89</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III, no. 72.

<sup>90</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 43 Eliz.

<sup>91</sup> Ibid. Hants, Trin. 6 Jas. I.

<sup>92</sup> Recov. R. D. Enr. Hil. 1 Geo. II, m. 18.

<sup>93</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 4 Edw. III, no. 26.

<sup>94</sup> Ibid.

<sup>95</sup> Cal. Close, 1346-9, p. 350; Chan. Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 19; 47 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 20; 49 Edw. III, pt. 1, no. 74; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 50 Edw. III.

<sup>96</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 362, 400; Exch. Inq. p.m. bdle. 961, no. 9.

<sup>97</sup> Information by the Rev. J. G. Crowdy.

these two windows is a small modern doorway with a modern triangular window over.

The north organ chamber and vestry are modern additions, but the east window of the latter is old and has two trefoiled lights similar to the second south window of the chancel.

The north window in the organ chamber is modern and has three trefoiled lights under a square head. The arch between this chamber and the chancel is of a drop form and has two chamfered orders. The chancel arch is of two chamfered orders, the springing being only a foot or so above the floor.

The west window in the transept and the two easternmost windows in the north wall of the nave are modern copies of the second south window of the chancel. The third north window of the nave is a modern circular light with tracery. The old blocked doorway in this north wall referred to above has chamfered jambs and two-centred head with a moulded label of 14th-century date.

The first window in the south wall of the nave has two trefoiled lights and is of the same date and design as the second south chancel window. The other two windows in this wall are modern copies of the same.

The south doorway is rebuilt mostly of old stones and has two chamfered orders and a two-centred arch of 14th-century detail like the rest.

The west window of the nave is modern and has three trefoiled lights and a traceried head. Beneath it is a late 15th-century blocked doorway with moulded jambs and four-centred head.

The tower is of three stages with a west stair turret. The bottom stage serves as a porch and has a south doorway with moulded jambs and two-centred arch and a small east window. The two upper stages are lighted by modern windows and the top is finished with a shingled octagonal spire. The walls generally are of flint and stone. The lower parts of the chancel walls are of old stonework and the upper parts of flint. The old part of the north wall of the nave is of stone and uncut flint, and the south wall of the nave has many old stones bonded into the flint. All the internal woodwork is modern.

On the sill of the north-west window of the nave are two pieces of an old helmet which were dug up from the foundations of the tower. There is also an old tile representing a man on horseback blowing a trumpet.

In this same window is a panel of 16th-century glass representing St. George and the Dragon. There are also some fragments of late 16th-century heraldic glass in the west window of the transept.

On the north wall of the chancel is a brass to Stephen Hadnall of Shropshire, who married Margaret Atkins, daughter of Thomas Atkins, by whom he had two daughters. He died in 1590 and his wife set up this monument in 1600. Above the inscription is the kneeling figure of a man, and a shield with his arms, Or a sleeve sable impaling those of Atkins of Bristol, Or a quarter-pierced cross flowered at the sides azure between four molets sable.

At the west end of the north wall of the nave is a brass to 'Marye th(e)lder coheire of Stephen Hadnoll Esquier,' who was married to Francis Palmes. She had six sons and four daughters and died in 1595. She is represented above the inscription kneeling between her sons and daughters, and above are three shields, the first being charged with the maunch of Hadnoll; the second has the arms of Palmes, Gules three fleurs de lis argent and a chief vair; in the third shield is a raven.

Below is another brass to Edmund Molyneux, second son of Edmund Molyneux. He was born in 1532, but the blank spaces for the date of his death have never been filled in. Above the inscription is a shield of six quarters: (1) a cross moline; (2) semy of scallops with a lion; (3) a lion; (4) a cross with a fleur de lis in the quarter; (5) a chevron between three crosses paty; (6) a molet. Below is the motto 'En droyt devant,' and above is a crest of peacocks' feathers.

The tower contains six bells, the treble and second being cast by Mears and Stainbank, 1872. The third is by Henry Knight, 1664, and bears his mark, three bells, a battle axe, and the initials E K, all on a shield between the initials H K. The fourth is a pre-Reformation bell and bears the following black letter inscription: 'Sancte Petre ora pro nobis,' and the maker's mark, a circle with four fleurs de lis, &c., round a shield with cross. The fifth bell is also of pre-Reformation date and is inscribed in black letter with crowned capitals, 'Sancte Gabriel ora pro nobis,' with a lion's face and a cross, the marks of the Reading foundry. The tenor is by Joseph Carter, 1582, and has 'Blessed be the name of the Lorde' in rough black letter.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1651 given by John Boxe in 1652; a silver credence plate of 1901, given at the coronation of Edward VII; a pewter and a brass almsdish and an electro-plated flagon.

The registers are contained in four books, beginning in 1640. The first has baptisms, marriages, and burials from that date to 1746. The second has baptisms and burials from 1745 to 1811, and marriages from the same date to 1753 only. The third contains marriages only from 1754 to 1812, and the fourth baptisms and burials from 1811 to 1812. There are two volumes of churchwardens' accounts from 1691.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Sherfield upon Loddon was given by William de Warblington to the priory of Merton in 1222.<sup>98</sup> It remained in the possession of successive priors till the Dissolution,<sup>99</sup> when it passed to the Crown. It was granted in 1545 to Sir William Paulet, Lord St. John,<sup>100</sup> who was created Marquis of Winchester in 1551.<sup>101</sup> The advowson descended with the title of Marquis of Winchester and Duke of Bolton till after 1730.<sup>102</sup> In 1772 Robert Sloper and Charles Paulet presented,<sup>103</sup> and two years later the advowson was sold by Samuel Prince to Peter Rich.<sup>104</sup> In 1780 the presentation was made by John Eyre and in 1815 by the king on account of the lunacy of John. The advowson descended in the Eyre family till 1860, when it passed from the Rev. William Eyre to the Rev. G. H. Nutting. It passed from him in

<sup>98</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Hen. III.

<sup>100</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xx (1), p.

<sup>102</sup> P.R.O. Inst. Bks.

<sup>99</sup> Cal. Pat. 1345-8, pp. 222, 538;

<sup>105</sup>

<sup>103</sup> Ibid.

Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 49.

<sup>101</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage.

<sup>104</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 14 Geo. III.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

1863 to George Barker of Stanlake Park, co. Berks.<sup>105</sup> He died in 1868, and on the death in the following year of his eldest son, George William, without issue, the advowson passed to his third son, the Rev. Alfred Gresley Barker.<sup>106</sup> He died in November 1906, and the living is now in the gift of his trustees.

There are Baptist, Primitive Methodist, and Plymouth Brethren's chapels at Sherfield.

In 1735 James Christmas by his CHARITIES will bequeathed £100 to be laid out in erecting a charity school, and £1,100 to be laid out in land, the rents thereof to be applied in schooling, and clothing poor persons, subject to the payment of £10 for bread to the poor of Stratfieldsaye. The trust estate now consists of the teacher's house, let at £12 a year, and £3,437 14s. consols, with the official trustees, arising from the sale of the real estate in the parish of Swallowfield, purchased in 1738. The charity is regulated by a scheme dated 23 October 1883. By an order of the Charity Commissioners of 11 September 1903, made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, the sum of £1,800 consols, producing £45 a year, was directed to be set aside as 'Christmas's Educational Foundation.'

The annual sum of £10 is paid to the overseers of Stratfieldsaye for distribution in bread, and the surplus income of the eleemosynary portion is applied in support of the coal and clothing clubs in Sherfield.

Duke of Bolton's Charity—see under Basingstoke. The sum of £10 16s. is applicable in this parish.

In 1854 Mary Lyford, by will proved in the P.C.C. 21 December, bequeathed £500 consols, the dividends to be distributed yearly in Christmas week equally among ten poor industrious families residing in the parish. The stock is held by the official trustees, who also hold a sum of £666 13s. 4d. consols, the dividends of which, now amounting to £16 13s. 4d., are under the terms of the will of Paynton Pigott Stainsby Conant, dated 16 December 1861, applicable as to three-fourths in beef and bread, and one-fourth in coals among the poor on Christmas Eve.

WESTON PATRICK

Weston Patrik (xiv cent.).

Weston Patrick is a small parish containing 1,183 acres. There is a small detached portion of 16 acres on the west, separated from the main part of the parish by Upton Grey. Tyle Barn, a part of Weston Patrick, was in 1879 transferred to Upton Grey parish,<sup>1</sup> and a detached portion of the parish became part of South Warnborough in 1882.<sup>2</sup> Weston Patrick is divided from the neighbouring parish of Weston Corbett by the road leading to Upton Grey, and on the south-eastern side of this road lies the village, situated at an elevation of about 400 ft. above the ordnance datum. To the south the land rises towards Weston Common, where it reaches a height of 600 ft. The nearest station is at Hook on the London and South Western Railway. The parish contains no main roads, but it is intersected by a number of small roads bordered by trees. The whole of the southern portion is occupied by a well-wooded and elevated common. Disused chalk pits are numerous in the parish. The arable and grass land of the parish was returned in 1905 with that of Weston Corbett. The figures for the two parishes are 695½ acres of arable, 297¼ acres of permanent grass, and 457 acres of woodland.<sup>3</sup> The soil and subsoil are chalk, and the chief crops are wheat, barley, and roots.

The manor of WESTON PATRICK, MANOR which probably derives its name from its 13th-century owner, Patrick de Chaworth, was held of the king in chief by the service of suit at the hundred court of Odiham.<sup>4</sup> It is not mentioned in the Domesday Survey,<sup>5</sup> and was then probably included in the extensive manor of Odiham. The first known owner of the manor was William Briwere,<sup>6</sup> and it was probably granted to him by Richard I or John, with both of whom he was in great favour. The manor passed from William in the same way as King's Somborne (q.v.),<sup>7</sup> and became part of the Duchy of Lancaster.<sup>8</sup> It remained in the Crown till 1546–7,<sup>9</sup> when it was granted by Henry VIII to Lawrence Herward and Stephen Tennant,<sup>10</sup> who were probably trustees for William Paulet, Lord St. John.<sup>11</sup>

From that time the manor has descended in the same way as that of Basing<sup>11a</sup> (q.v.), and it now belongs to Lord Bolton.

In 1257 Patrick de Chaworth obtained licence to PATRICK DE CHAWORTH. Burelly argent and gules.

<sup>105</sup> Information by the Rev. J. G. Crowdy.

<sup>106</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry, 1906.

<sup>1</sup> Census of Engl. and Wales (1891), ii, 177.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics supplied by Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> Cal. of Inq. p.m. Hen. III., 114; ibid. Edw. I., 288.

<sup>5</sup> The manor of Weston held by Durand de Gloucester at the time of the Survey has been identified in a previous volume as Weston Patrick (V.C.H. Hants, i, 493); but it was more probably Weston Corbett in the hundred of Bermondspit.

<sup>6</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1300–26, pp. 339–40.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 1257–1300, p. 1; Cal. of Inq. Hen. III., 114; ibid. Edw. I., 288; Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 122.

<sup>8</sup> Duchy of Lanc. Ct. R. portf. 108, no. 1605; Duchy of Lanc. Mins. Accts. bdes. 683–90.

<sup>9</sup> For leases see Duchy of Lanc. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 77; vol. 21, fol. 197, 199.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. vol. 22, fol. 223.

<sup>11</sup> The site of the priory of Austin Friars in London was granted in 1546–7 to Herward and Tennant, and afterwards passed to William Paulet; Pat. 38 Hen. VIII, pt. xii; Dugdale, Mon. Angl. vi, 1594. No conveyance of Weston Patrick from Herward and Tennant to Lord St. John has been found, nor is there documentary evidence that it belonged to the Lords St. John until 1598 (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cclxii, 125), but it probably passed to Lord St. John with the priory at the end of the reign of Henry VIII.

<sup>11a</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 26 Geo. II.

inclose with a dike and hedge his two woods of Weston called Heywood and Haselmangrave, with the adjacent lawn, containing altogether 70 acres.<sup>12</sup> This grant marks the foundation of Weston Patrick Park, of which frequent mention is made during the 13th and 14th centuries.<sup>13</sup> A grant of free warren at Weston Patrick was made in 1316-17 to Henry de Lancaster and his wife Maud.<sup>14</sup> Two woods called the Great and Little Park were included in the grant of the manor of Weston to Laurence Herwood and Stephen Tennant in 1546-7.<sup>15</sup>

The little church of ST. LAW-CHURCH RENCE was rebuilt in 1868, and now consists of a chancel with south organ chamber and vestry, nave with south aisle and north porch, and west bell-turret. The nave and chancel are of the same width, with red tiled roofs, and the bell-turret is of wood with a shingled spire. The only part of the old church which has been preserved is the north doorway of the nave, which dates from the end of the 12th century, and has a round arch of a single order with an edge roll and double-chamfered label, the roll being continued down the jambs. At the springing are square abaci with a roll and hollow chamfer beneath.

The single bell is modern, dating from the rebuilding of the church.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1568, a silver-gilt chalice and paten dated 1896, and a pewter paten and flagon.

The first book of the registers runs from 1598 to 1715, and the second from 1766 to 1812. There is also a book of burials in woollen, 1679-1770, and the printed marriage register, 1755-1809.

The living of Weston Patrick was ADVOWSON a chapelry annexed to Odiham,<sup>16</sup> but it was declared a rectory in April 1866,<sup>17</sup> and the living is now in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

Duke of Bolton's Gift. See under CHARITIES Basingstoke. The sum of £2 8s. is applicable in this parish.

WINCHFIELD

Winesflet (xi cent.); Winchelefeld, Wynchefeud (xiii cent.); Wynchingfeld (xiv cent.)

Winchfield is a parish to the north-east of Odiham containing 1,582 acres of land, and 9 acres of land covered by water. The London and South Western Railway passes through the north of the parish and has a station, called Winchfield Station, at Shapley Heath. The high road from Odiham to Staines divides about a quarter of a mile south of Potbridge, and one branch leads to Winchfield station, rejoining the main road at Shapley Heath. Part of the Basingstoke Canal passes through the south of the parish.

The little village of Winchfield lies on the road from Pilcot, a hamlet in Dogmersfield, to Hartley Row; it consists of a few cottages, Hurst Farm and the 'Barley Mow,' with the Old Barley Mow Farm on the opposite side of the bridge over the Basingstoke Canal. The church, rectory, and school, and the Court House Farm<sup>1</sup> lie some distance to the west of the village, but the chief part of the population of the parish is collected at Shapley Heath near the station. Hartley Wintney Union Workhouse is in Winchfield parish in the south-eastern part of the village.

The parish is low in the north near the railway, the average level being about 200 ft. above the ordnance datum, but the land rises in the west and south to between 250 ft. and 300 ft. The parish is well-wooded by small copses, and there are parks at Winchfield House,<sup>1a</sup> the seat of the Beauclerk family, lately occupied by Lady Margaret Crichton Maitland, but now vacant, and at Winchfield Lodge, the residence of Mr. Spencer Charrington. The former park covers about 80 acres of well-wooded ground and contains a small lake.

In 1905 there were in the parish 601 acres of arable, 564 acres of permanent grass, and 159 acres of woodland.<sup>1b</sup> The soil is light with a subsoil of clay, producing crops of wheat, oats, barley, and roots.

Thomas Tanner the historian became rector of Winchfield in 1679, and died there in 1682. His chief work is The Entrance of Mazzarini.<sup>2</sup>

Place names which occur in connexion with Winchfield are Manewood and Great and Little Hameseye.<sup>3</sup>

According to a charter contained in the MANOR registers of Chertsey Abbey thirty mansae at WINCHFIELD and Elvetham formed part of the endowment of the abbey of Chertsey by Frithwald, subregulus of Surrey in 675.<sup>4</sup> Considerable doubts have however been cast on the authenticity of the charter containing this grant,<sup>5</sup> and the entry in the Domesday Book for Winchfield seems to be in direct contradiction to it, for it is there stated that in the time of King Edward the Confessor Alwin had held the manor of the king as an alod, and that it had not formerly been held by the abbey, though it was so held at the time of the Survey.<sup>6</sup> Probably the manor had been granted to the abbey by King William, as stated by Henry I in a charter confirming the manor to that house.<sup>7</sup> The manor was confirmed to the abbey in 1175 by Pope Alexander III.<sup>8</sup> The overlordship remained in the possession of the abbey till the 14th century, but is not mentioned after 1328.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>12</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 1.

<sup>13</sup> Cal. Pat. 1281-92, p. 89; 1292-1301, p. 548; 1301-7, pp. 85, 92; 1327-30, pp. 274, 425; 1330-4, p. 203, &c.

<sup>14</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. II, m. 10, no. 15.

<sup>15</sup> Duchy of Lanc. Misc. Bks. vol. 22, fol. 223.

<sup>16</sup> Bacon, Liber Regis, 930. The advowson of Weston Patrick is returned in 1603-4 as annexed to the manor (Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I). It may have been held by the Marquess of Winchester at that time under a lease from the Chancellor of Salisbury.

<sup>17</sup> London Gaz. 3 Apr. 1866, p. 2217.

<sup>1</sup> Court House Farm, generally known as Court Farm, is the site of the old manor-house. Near it are remains of old fish ponds.

<sup>1a</sup> Winchfield House was built by Lady Charlotte Beauclerk, and has since been enlarged.

<sup>1b</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>3</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 7 Edw. I.

<sup>4</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 64-5; Kemble, Codex Dipl. 988; Dugdale, Mon. Angl. i, 429; Cott. MS. Vitel. A. xiii, fol. 22.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 55.

<sup>6</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472.

<sup>7</sup> Cott. MS. Vitel. A. xiii, fol. 55 d.; Dugdale, Mon. Angl. i, 432.

<sup>8</sup> Cott. MS. Vitel. A. xiii, fol. 70.

<sup>9</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 86; Cal. Close, 1327-30, p. 263.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

At the time of the Survey the manor was held under the abbey of Chertsey by Walter Fitz Other.<sup>10</sup> It passed before the beginning of the 13th century to the Bendengs, who held land at Liss, Odiham, and Elvetham at an early date. Stephen de Bendeng was a tenant of the abbey of Chertsey in 1166,<sup>11</sup> and in 1207 King John gave all Maurice de Bendeng's land in Winchfield and Hartley to John Fitz Hugh.<sup>12</sup> Restitution must have been made shortly after, as Maurice appears as one of the knights of the abbey of Chertsey in 1211-12 holding half a knight's fee,<sup>13</sup> and in 1213 Stephen son of Maurice de Bendeng had livery of all his father's lands in Hampshire.<sup>14</sup> In 1230-1 an agreement was made between Stephen and Peter de Bendeng by which Peter granted to Stephen the manor of Winchfield, with the exception of the advowson of the church, to be held by Stephen of Peter for the service of three-quarters of a knight's fee.<sup>15</sup> Peter de Bendeng held the manor in 1279-80, and claimed there view of frankpledge, the assize of bread and ale, tumbrel, and pillory.<sup>16</sup> He granted two-thirds of the manor in 1288-9 to Ralph de Sandwich, with the reversion of a messuage and a mill and six virgates of land in the manor which John de Cheverdon and Alda his wife held for the life of Alda, who was the widow of Stephen de Bendeng.<sup>17</sup> In 1316 the manor belonged to Sir Fulk Payfre, who seems to have been a tenant only for a term of years, or possibly as the second husband of Julia widow of Sir Ralph de Sandwich.<sup>18</sup> Julia de Leyburn, daughter and heir of Sir Ralph de Sandwich, died seised of the manor in 1327-8,<sup>19</sup> and her heir was her granddaughter Julia, daughter of Thomas de Leyburn.<sup>21</sup> This lady was married three times, first to Sir John de Hastings, secondly to Thomas le Blount, who was her husband at the time of her grandmother's death,<sup>22</sup> and thirdly to William de Clinton, upon whom the manor was settled in 1328-9.<sup>23</sup> In 1331-2 William and Julia granted the manor to Henry de Leyburn for life with reversion to them and the heirs of Julia.<sup>24</sup> William was created Earl of Huntingdon in 1336-7,<sup>25</sup> and was holding the manor at the time of his death in 1354.<sup>26</sup> Julia survived him,<sup>27</sup> and in 1362-3 the manor was settled on her for life with remainder to the king.<sup>28</sup> She died in 1367, and the reversion of the manor after the death of Robert de Kimberley,<sup>29</sup> a tenant for life, was granted by Edward III to trustees, who in 1382 granted it to the dean and canons of the chapel or college of St. Stephen, Westminster.<sup>30</sup>

Robert de Kimberley died in 1403-4,<sup>31</sup> when the manor passed to the dean and canons, and it remained in their possession till the Dissolution.<sup>32</sup>

The manor was granted in 1550 to Thomas, Earl of Southampton,<sup>33</sup> who sold it in 1550-1 to Edward, Duke of Somerset,<sup>34</sup> on whose forfeiture in 1552 it again passed to the Crown. It was leased for twenty-one years to John Belmayne in 1552,<sup>35</sup> and in the same year it was granted in fee to Sir John Mason.<sup>36</sup> It descended in the Mason family till 1591, when it was sold by John Mason to James Rudyerd.<sup>37</sup> He died in 1611 and was succeeded by his son Lawrence,<sup>38</sup> on whose death in 1621 the manor passed to his son Lawrence.<sup>39</sup> From Lawrence it passed in 1634 to his brother James,<sup>40</sup> and he was succeeded in 1638 by his brother Benjamin,<sup>41</sup> who died in 1675. James Rudyerd, son of this Benjamin, died in 1687 and was succeeded by his brother Benjamin, who dying in 1734 devised the manor to his three grandsons, Benjamin, James, and Lawrence, the sons of John Rudyerd, for their lives, and in default of their issue to his daughters Mary, wife of James Tichborne of Aldershot, and Frances, as tenants in common.<sup>42</sup> The three grandsons and Frances died without issue, and the estate was sold by the trustees of the will of Benjamin Rudyerd in 1767 to Lord George Beauclerk.<sup>43</sup> A conveyance to Anthony Pye of a moiety of the manor in 1768 by Nicholas Mayhew and his wife Frances and Mary Lodge, widow,<sup>44</sup> was probably made for the purpose of vesting their interest as heirs at law of Benjamin Rudyerd their grandfather, of Lawrence Rudyerd their brother, and of their aunt Frances, in Lord George Beauclerk or in his widow Margaret, for Lord George died in that year leaving no issue.<sup>45</sup> Sir Henry Tichborne, bart., son of James and Mary Tichborne, released all his right in a moiety of the manor in 1789 to Lady Margaret Beauclerk,<sup>46</sup> who resided at Winchfield till her death in 1792.<sup>47</sup> By her will she left the manor to her two nephews William and George Bainbridge for their lives with remainder to Lord Amelius Beauclerk, son of Aubrey fifth Duke of St. Albans and great-nephew of Lord

RUDYERD. Argent fretty sable a quarter gules with a crescent argent thereon.

<sup>10</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472.

<sup>11</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rolls Ser.), 198.

<sup>12</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 83.

<sup>13</sup> Red. Bk. of Exch. (Rolls Ser.), 606.

<sup>14</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 480.

<sup>15</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 15 Hen. III.

<sup>16</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 68 d.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 17 Edw. I;

Trin. 42 Hen. III.

<sup>18</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 314.

<sup>19</sup> Seymour and Trower, Records of Winchfield, App. B.

<sup>20</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 86; G.E.C. Complete Peerage, under Leyburn.

<sup>21</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 86.

<sup>22</sup> Cal. Close, 1327-30, p. 263.

<sup>23</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 3 Edw. III.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. Hants, Mich. 5 Edw. III.

<sup>25</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage.

<sup>26</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 59.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 36 Edw.

III.

<sup>29</sup> This name is given as John de Kimberley in some deeds (Harl. Chart. 43 E.

16; Cal. Pat. 1385-9, p. 548; 1401-5,

p. 266).

<sup>30</sup> Harl. Chart. 43 E. 16. The dean and canons, perhaps by some arrangement with Kimberley, seem to have entered on the manor at once and were expelled from it by Sir Simon de Burley. He forfeited all his possessions about 1388, and the manor was taken into the king's hands, but was restored to the dean and canons in that year on their petition. Cal. Pat.

1385-9, pp. 539, 548.

<sup>31</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 3 Hen. VI, no. 33.

<sup>32</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), i, 428.

<sup>33</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. VI, pt. vii, m. 4.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid. 4 Edw. VI, pt. vii.

<sup>35</sup> Acts of P.C. 1552-4, p. 67.

<sup>36</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. VI, pt. vi.

<sup>37</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 33 Eliz.

<sup>38</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxxii, 151.

<sup>39</sup> Inq. p.m. W. & L. bdlc. 32, no. 128.

<sup>40</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxxii, 167.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), 15 Chas. I, pt. ii, no.

119.

<sup>42</sup> C. F. Seymour and C. F. Trower, Re-

ords of Winchfield, 29, and App. C.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 3 Geo. III.

<sup>45</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>46</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 29 Geo. III, rot. 39;

Seymour and Trower, loc. cit.

<sup>47</sup> Sir T. Gatehouse, MS. Survey of Hants, 1778, in possession of Lord

Swaythling.

George Beauclerk.<sup>48</sup> Lord Amelius died without issue in 1846 and was succeeded by his brother the Rev. Lord Frederick Beauclerk, on whose death in 1850 the manor passed to his son Charles William Beauclerk. Mr. Frederick Edward Beauclerk son of the latter sold the property in 1908 to Mr. S. Charrington,<sup>49</sup> who bought it in trust for his son.

The tenement called CHIVERTON, now represented by Chiverton's Farm, in the west of Winchfield, near the Odiham and Staines high road, takes its name from its owners in the 13th century. John de Cheverdon and Alda his wife acquired land in Winchfield in 1255-6 from William de Stratton,<sup>50</sup> and in 1279 Peter de Bendeng granted to John de Cheverdon a messuage and two parts of a mill and some land at Winchfield to be held by John for life with reversion to Peter,<sup>51</sup> and this estate was still held by John in 1288-9.<sup>52</sup> John obtained a further grant of land at Winchfield in the following year from William Bidon,<sup>53</sup> and in 1304-5 the estate was settled on John de Cheverdon and his wife Joan.<sup>54</sup> The estate seems afterwards to have become annexed to the manor of Winchfield, for it was granted with it in 1550 to Thomas, Earl of Southampton, as a late possession of the college of St. Stephen, Westminster,<sup>55</sup> and was sold by the earl in 1550-1 to the Duke of Somerset.<sup>56</sup>

A mill at Winchfield is mentioned in 1279,<sup>57</sup> but no further records have been found of any mills, and none exist in the parish at the present day.

The church of ST. MARY CHURCH consists of a chancel, nave, north aisle, west tower, and south porch, and a small north vestry and heating chamber. The nave and chancel are of mid-12th-century date, while the tower was added a little later, probably shortly after their completion. The porch was added in the latter part of the 15th century, but except for this the church remained in its original state up to modern times. In the middle of the last century the upper stage of the tower was rebuilt and the north aisle and vestry, &c., were added. New windows were also inserted in the nave and chancel.

The east window of the chancel is modern and of 12th-century design, with somewhat anachronistic banded shafts at the inner angles, and external shafts, but otherwise of similar design to the windows described below. There are four symmetrically placed windows in the north and south walls of the chancel, all of 12th-century date. The openings are very narrow, on an average about 9 in., and have small external glazing rebates and round heads. The internal splay is very wide, and on their jambs and continued on the rear arches is a band of zigzag ornament. The first window on the south has been cut down in modern times to form a sedile. In the east jamb is a small recess formed by reversing the double zigzag and carrying it inwards. A part of this is modern and contains the capital of a modern pillar piscina, but the upper half is original and was probably intended for a similar purpose to its present one. On the east wall to the south is a trefoiled recess with moulded jambs and head. Between the two windows on the north is a small modern round-headed door to the vestry. The chancel arch is of most unusual detail and is of mid-12th-century date. It is semicircular and on the west is of two highly ornamented moulded orders with a label enriched with zigzag and acanthus leaf. The outer order has a broad band of zigzag, the inner has a curious wavy ornament to which the outline is cut, forming a multi-foiled head to the arch, the cusps having long rolls extending through the whole width of the order. This inner order rests upon double keeled shafts half engaged in the square respond of the inner order of the jamb. The shafts have well-moulded Attic bases and varied capitals enriched with foliage, and just above the necking a band of flat vertical leaves strongly reminiscent of the 'water-leaf' of the Corinthian capital. The outer order of the jamb has two-way vertical zigzag on the angle and circular shafts with Attic bases, and on the north a capital ornamented with foliage, and on the south a capital with curious concave scallops. The abaci of all six capitals are the same and common to each set, enriched with a cable mould with small nail heads in the twist. On the east the arch is quite plain. North and south of the chancel arch are plain square squints now wholly restored. South again of the south squint is an arched recess in the west face of the wall which joins a similar continuation in the south wall of the nave.

PLAN OF WINCHFIELD CHURCH

The whole of the north side of the nave is filled with a modern arcade of 14th-century design with two-centred arches of two chamfered orders and octagonal columns with moulded capitals enriched with ball-flower. On the south are two windows of two trefoiled lights with modern tracery of 13th-century detail. Between them is the south door of the same date and similar design to the chancel arch. It is of two moulded orders, but the label is plain and the inner order uncusped, and both orders are shafted. The capitals are foliate in various patterns and one has slim angular scallops. At the angle of the outer order is a vertical course of zigzag set at an angle of 45 degrees to the wall face.

The tower arch is of slightly later detail than the chancel arch and south door. It is round-headed and with a keeled roll and a chamfer, and a moulded label.

<sup>48</sup> Information supplied by Mr. F. E. Beauclerk.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid.

<sup>50</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 40 Hen. III.

<sup>51</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 7 Edw. I.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. Trin. 17 Edw. I.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. Trin. 18 Edw. I.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. Mich. 33 Edw. I.

<sup>55</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. VI, pt. vii, m. 4.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 4 Edw. VI, pt. vii.

<sup>57</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 7 Edw. I.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Both orders are shafted, the inner having semi-engaged shafts. The capitals are of varied design, and with those of the chancel arch and the south door furnish examples of nearly every type of 12th-century foliate and scalloped capital. The inner capital on the north is a curious example of the concave scalloped type, the circular heads of the scallops being interlaced. The tower itself is of three stages and is unusually large considering the size of the rest of the church. The top stage is modern with belfry openings of 12th-century design and two round-headed lights with a shaft in between. There are no lights in the second stage.

The north aisle is completely modern except for the north door. It is lit on the north by a modern window of two trefoiled lights and two modern single trefoil lights with a similar window at the west, while to the east is a modern window of 14th-century design and three trefoil lights. The north door is of late 12th-century date, removed from the old north wall of the nave and reset in a gable in the third bay of the modern north wall. It has a two-centred head of a chamfered and a moulded order, the latter continuous, the former carried on restored circular shafts with capitals enriched with transitional foliage. There is a plain external label.

The south porch is of late 15th or early 16th-century date. The entrance has a four-centred head with a narrow double chamfer. The vestry is quite modern and is ingeniously planned so as to avoid interference with the windows of the chancel.

The roofs and seating are all quite modern except for two plain bench ends incorporated with the modern work which are of uncertain date, but may be of considerable age. In the vestry is a small table of mid-17th-century date. The font has an old octagonal bowl of Purbeck marble with plain sunk round-headed arcading. It is of late 12th-century date, but has been patched and scraped. The stem is modern. The pulpit is a rather elaborate example of the first half of the 17th century with panels in two ranges, the lower worked into strapped frames containing small grotesques, the upper in small round arches with palms in pots, floral designs, &c. The chancel rails are of early 18th-century date with carved and turned balusters.

Externally the church has walls of flint rubble, in whole flints in the original parts of the nave, tower, and chancel. The angles are quoined in freestone all much scraped and restored, as is most of the dressed stonework throughout. The roofs are steep pitched and tiled, with overhanging eaves.

In the nave is a brass inscription plate, partly hidden by the pews, to Elizabeth Tylney, daughter of Anthony Niccols of Paddington and widow of Richard Tylney of 'Rotherweek'; she was first married to Lawrence Rudyerd of Winchfield, by whom she had three sons and three daughters. She died in 1652. The arms are Rudyerd impaling a fesse between three lions' heads razed for Niccols. The Rudyerd arms also appear in brass on a slab in the north aisle, of which the inscription is lost. In the north aisle is another brass with an inscription to Frances (Camvil), 1652, the wife of Benjamin Rudyerd, by whom she had six children. Three shields are given, the first bearing three molets; the second a wheatsheaf; and the third Rudyerd impaling three molets. In the same part of the church is a gravestone to Bridget (Godson), the wife of Benjamin Rudyerd, 1733, with the arms of Rudyerd impaling a chevron between three lions passant. There are also stones to Lawrence Rudyerd, son and heir to James Rudyerd, 1621, who married the above Elizabeth (Niccols); to James, eldest son of Benjamin Rudyerd, 1687, with the arms of Rudyerd quartering a cross formy fitchy, on an escutcheon in pretence three molets; crest a leopard's head; to James Rudyerd, 1611, who married Mary (Kidwelly), by whom he had five sons and two daughters; to Benjamin Rudyerd 1675 and his wife Frances (Jay), widow of Sir Thomas Jervoise, 1679; and to their daughter Bridget, 1690.

The tower contains three bells. The treble is inscribed, 'Henri Knight Made Me 1617.' The second, 'Sancta Margrita ora pro nobis' in black letter smalls with the mark of a Winchester founder, as at Stoke Charity, probably John Sanders; and the third, 'Sancte Peter or . . .' in black letter smalls with crowned Gothic capitals, with the marks of the 15th-century Wokingham and Reading foundry, of which Roger Landon is the best known master.

The plate consists of a silver chalice of 1640, given by Richard Cannon in that year, and a silver paten and flagon of 1849.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms between 1660 and 1804, marriages between 1660 and 1807, and burials between 1659 and 1804. The continuations of the baptisms and burials up to 1812 appear to have been lost, but there is a printed book containing marriages between 1754 and 1812.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Winchfield followed the same descent as the manor<sup>58</sup> until the death of Lawrence Rudyerd in 1757.<sup>59</sup> Instead of passing with the manor to his aunts, Frances and Mary Tichborne, it passed to his sisters Mary Lodge and Frances, wife of Nicholas Mayhew, by whom it was sold in 1767 to the Rev. Ellis St. John. It was sold by his son Henry in 1848 to Lady St. John-Mildmay,<sup>60</sup> from whom it has passed to Sir Henry P. St. John-Mildmay, bart., the present patron.

<sup>58</sup> In 1230-1 Peter de Bendeng granted to Stephen de Bendeng the manor of Winchfield, but he retained the advowson of the church (Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 15 Hen. III). The advowson was included in the grant to Ralph de Sandwich in 1288-9 (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 17 Edw. I).

<sup>59</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 128; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 222; Cal. Close, 1354-60, p. 52; Chan. Inq. p.m. 3 Hen. VI, no. 33;

Pat. 6 Edw. VI, pt. vi. In 1725 the presentation was made by Trinity College, Oxford, and in 1755 by Ellen Wright for that turn. Bacon, Liber Regis, 928.

<sup>60</sup> Seymour and Trower, op. cit. 30; Berry, Hants Gen. 67, 230.

WINCHFIELD CHURCH : THE CHANCEL ARCH

WINCHFIELD RECTORY : WEST FRONT

THE HUNDRED OF BASINGSTOKE

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

BASING	MAPLEDERWELL	TUNWORTH
BASINGSTOKE	NATELY SCURES	UP NATELY
BRAMLEY	NEWNHAM	WINSLADE
CLIDDESSEN	SHERBORNE ST. JOHN	KEMPSHOTT TITHING
EASTROP	STEVENTON

The above list represents the extent of the hundred in 1831. Between 1831 and 1841 various changes were made, Steventon being added to Overton Hundred, and Pamber, Sherfield-on-Loddon, Monk Sherborne, Wootton St. Lawrence and Worting transferred to Basingstoke Hundred, the first from Barton Stacey Hundred, the second from Odiham Hundred and the other three from Chuteley Hundred.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred comprised the same parishes as in 1831 with the addition of the tithing of Chineham in the parish of Monk Sherborne.<sup>1</sup> There were then 39½ hides in the hundred, as compared with 56 hides at the time of Edward the Confessor; Basingstoke being ancient demesne was not assessed.<sup>2</sup>

Henry III in 1228 granted the hundred with the manor to the men of Basingstoke at a rent of £72 12s. This grant appears to have continued in force till 1256, in which year the king issued another charter whereby he made the grant perpetual at a fee-farm rent of £80 a year.<sup>3</sup> From this date the hundred has followed the same descent as the manor.

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456, 469, 471, 479, 480, 487, 493, 502, 509. The unnamed church in Basingstoke Hundred (ibid. 469) is Basing Church (q.v.). The hide of land belonging to it represents the manor of Basing Byfleet. 'Lichepit' (ibid. 471) is Lickpit in Basing (q.v.). Campesete (ibid. 480) is Kempshott, a tithing in Winslade (q.v.). 'Heche' (ibid. 502) is Hatch, now in Cliddesden (q.v.). Newnham, Up Nately and the extra-parochial district of Andwell are not mentioned by name in Domesday Book, being at that time included in Mapledewell (q.v.). 'Clere' (Kingsclere) and 'Esseborne' (Hurstbourne Tarrant) are also entered under Basingstoke Hundred (ibid. 456), but this is due, apparently, to an error, for they had already given their names to hundreds (the 'Clere' and 'Esseborne' Hundreds of Domesday Book afterwards known as Kingsclere and Pastrow).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. 456.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

An inquisition held in 1275 shows clearly that the hundred of Basingstoke comprised by this time also the tithings of Woodgarston in the parish of Monk Sherborne and Hazeley partly in Heckfield and partly in Hartley Wintney.<sup>4</sup> There is no mention, however, of Somershill, which was afterwards included in the hundred.<sup>5</sup>

A hundred court was held every third Saturday at Basingstoke. The court leet or view of frankpledge held twice a year at Basingstoke on the first Saturday after the Feast of St. Martin and the first Saturday after Hock-tide<sup>6</sup> was attended by tithingmen from Basing, Basingstoke, Bramley, Chineham, Cliddesden, Eastrop, Hatch, Hazeley, Kempshott, Maplederwell, Nately Scures, Newnham, Sherborne St. John, Somershill, Steventon, Tunworth, Up Nately, Winslade and Woodgarston,<sup>7</sup> and cert-money was also paid by Basingstoke, Chineham, Cliddesden, Eastrop, Hatch, Hazeley, Kempshott, Nately Scures, Somershill, Steventon, Tunworth, Winslade and Woodgarston.<sup>8</sup> In 1831 Chineham was still reckoned in Basingstoke Hundred, although Hazeley and Woodgarston were returned under Heckfield in Holdshot and Monk Sherborne in Chuteley respectively. The name Somershill has now been lost.

<sup>3</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 236.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 177-185. The jurors returned that Roger de Scures was holding Nately Scures and Woodgarston for one knight's fee (ibid. 178), also that the Prior of Merton had made an encroachment upon the king's demesne in Hazeley.

<sup>5</sup> The locality of this place is not known, but it was probably near Bramshill and Stratfield Turgis, for in 1264 Henry Turgis granted a messuage and a carucate of land in Somershill for life to Henry de Bramshill (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 48 Hen. III).

<sup>6</sup> Baigent & Millard op. cit. 218-19.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 238-9. Up Nately and Newnham were not infrequently represented by an official called a suffragan instead of the tithingman.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

BASING OR OLD BASING

Basinges (xi cent.).

Basing is a parish lying to the north-east of Basingstoke, and covering about 5,300 acres. It is watered by the River Loddon, which rises west of Basingstoke and flows through the parish from the south-west to the north-east. The soil is clay and chalk, on a subsoil of London clay. About 2,400 acres are in cultivation, and wheat, oats, barley and root crops are raised. The parish has many plantations and one large park, and the total area covered by woodland is nearly 1,000 acres.<sup>1</sup>

The village of Basing, about two miles east of Basingstoke, consists of a long straggling street lying between the River Loddon and the Basingstoke Canal, which is a little to the south of the river. The Loddon works the mills which have existed in Basing since the 11th century.<sup>2</sup> One, Lower Mill, is at the north end of the village, and near it is the Hants County Council farm. The other mill, Old Basing Mill, stands also on the north side and nearly under the special arches of the railway bank which crosses the valley here. A Primitive Methodist chapel, built in 1867, stands higher up the street.

The village contains many small houses and cottages dating from the 17th century; they are mostly of narrow red bricks with gabled tiled roofs; one of the houses has a semi-octagonal projecting stair turret. Some of the cottages are of half timber and brick construction with roofs of thatch.

The most interesting part of the village is the south end, where, encircled by a curve of the canal, which has taken the place of the old ditch, stands all that remains of Basing House, which was destroyed during the Civil War. Under John fifth Marquess of Winchester it sustained a close siege by the Parliamentary armies for many months, and was finally stormed by Oliver Cromwell in 1645, and ordered to be 'totally slighted and demolished.'<sup>3</sup> Memories of the siege are preserved in the names of Slaughter Close, a meadow close by the castle on the opposite side of the canal, and Oliver's Battery, at the north end of the village. On Cowdrey's Down, across the 'meades' of Peat Moor, is a chalk-pit known as Oliver's Dell. On this down the Roundheads had their camp. Just north of it is the ancient manor-house of Lickpit, now called Lickpit Farm.

From the village street a road runs directly south under the London and South Western Railway as it passes through the village, then across the canal past Byfleet manor farm, the old manor-house of the Byfleet family. Passing by the National school, and skirting the original park of Basing House, it crosses the great high road from Basingstoke to London, and runs on to the large park surrounding Hackwood House. On the east of this road is the traditional scene of a battle between the Saxons and Danes in the year 871. Only a part of Hackwood Park is in Basing, the rest being included in Basingstoke, Eastrop, Cliddesden, and Winslade parishes. The parish boundary runs through Hackwood House, which stands near the western boundary of the park in the highest part of the parish, which here reaches a height of 400 ft. above the ordnance datum. The first Duke of Bolton converted Hackwood into a large house, but does not seem to have resided there. It is surrounded by the beautiful oaks and beeches of the park, the most picturesque part of which is Spring Wood, in the heart of which is an amphitheatre, constructed about the beginning of the 18th century, in the style of the famous French gardener Le Nôtre.<sup>4</sup> Spring Wood is the sole or almost the sole survival in England of a garden-wood laid out in the French style, with avenues radiating from a round point, temples, terraces and ponds.<sup>5</sup>

The hamlet of Cufauds, known locally as 'Cuffell,' in the north-west of the parish, is reached by a lane running across the Loddon from the north end of Basing village, through the hamlet of Pyot's Hill, and then across the high road from Basingstoke to Reading. Two miles further on is the site of the old manor-house of the Cufaud family, the surrounding moat of which is still visible.

An Independent chapel, built in 1868, stands near the village on the road to Cufauds.

A Private Act for the inclosing of this parish was passed in 1796, and an award was made in the next year.<sup>6</sup>

Among place names in Basing mentioned in the records are '100 acres of pasture called Causingrey,' a field at 'La Ellenestubb,' 'Poorsland,' 'Blacklake,' and 'Exfould.'

BASING is first mentioned in the will MANORS of King Edred, who left to his mother 'the lands at Amesbury, Wantage and Basing.'<sup>7</sup> Under Edward the Confessor it was held by Alteï, who could 'betake himself whither he would.' It was then assessed at 11 hides. In 1086 it was assessed at 6½ and was held of the Conqueror by Hugh de Port as the chief of his fifty-five lordships in Hampshire. He had seven serfs here and three mills worth 50s. The value of the place had increased from £8 to £16.<sup>8</sup> When Hugh de Port subsequently entered the monastery at Winchester as a monk<sup>9</sup> he was succeeded in his estates by his son Henry,<sup>7</sup> who

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>3</sup> After this the Marquess went to live at Englefield Manor, near Reading, which he had acquired through his second wife, and lived and died there. It was his son, the first Duke of Bolton, who came back to Basing and enlarged Hackwood House (ex inform. Lord Curzon of Kedleston).

<sup>4</sup> Such an amphitheatre was a familiar feature of the formal garden, and it was intended for pastoral performances in sylvan plays. The amphitheatre in Spring Wood has long ago lost its original character and been planted with trees and heather, but Lord Curzon contemplates restoring a portion of it. In its original form it covered 4 acres of ground (ex inform. Lord Curzon of Kedleston).

<sup>5</sup> A good many of these features have disappeared in the course of time, and were deliberately destroyed at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th century, when the reaction against formal gardening was at its height. However, enough remains to give an idea of the original ground plan, and to render the wood a unique survival in this country. The principal temples or pavilions were erected by the famous architect James

Gibbs, and illustrations of them may be seen in his Book of Architecture (1728), Plates LXXII, LXXIII and LXXIV (ex inform. Lord Curzon of Kedleston).

<sup>6</sup> By Inclosure Award of 23 Mar. 1797, under Private Act of 1796, cap. 16.

<sup>7</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 54.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b. In the time of the Confessor it had been worth £12 and then £8.

<sup>9</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vii, 1014.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. This well-known pedigree of the de Ports appears many times. See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 9, et passim.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

had a son John de Port.<sup>8</sup> John by his wife Maud left a son and heir Adam,<sup>9</sup> who succeeded him in the latter part of the 12th century. Adam married Mabel granddaughter of Roger de St. John, and their descendants took the name of St. John.<sup>10</sup> Their son was William, who married Godeheld Pagnell,<sup>11</sup> by whom he had a son Robert. Apparently William had some dispute with the Crown concerning his lands, for in 1254 the king confirmed to Robert de St. John the land within the manor of Basing, which he, the king, had by judgement of his court recovered against William de St. John father of Robert.<sup>12</sup> He was to pay annually 5 marks at Easter and 5 at Michaelmas for all service.<sup>13</sup>

John de St. John, son of Robert, was returned lord of Basing in 1275,<sup>14</sup> and proved his right to the liberties of the manor in 1280.<sup>15</sup> He died in 1301, and in the following year it was agreed between his wife Alice and his son and heir John that she should receive as dower the manors of Chawton and Walberton in lieu of her dower in Basing, Sherborne and elsewhere.<sup>16</sup> John granted the custody of Basing and other manors for life to Thomas de Mareys, with 'a daily wages of 12d. and one coat, or 20s. yearly, a yearly salary of £4 . . . litter and hay daily for two horses, and half a bushel of oats for the same every night, and brushwood for his chamber.'<sup>17</sup> This John was the first Baron St. John of Basing, and was summoned to Parliament under that title in 1299.<sup>18</sup> At his death in 1329 he was succeeded by his son Hugh,<sup>19</sup> but Alice his widow held Basing in dower during her lifetime.<sup>20</sup> In 1334 Hugh had release to himself and his heirs, 'for the special affection which the king bore him,' of the rent of 10 marks due at the exchequer for the manor of Basing.<sup>21</sup> He died in 1337,<sup>22</sup> and his son Edmund died without issue only ten years later.<sup>23</sup> His heirs were his two sisters, Margaret wife of John de St. Philibert, and Isabel wife of Henry de Burghersh.<sup>24</sup> Margaret inherited for her share the manor of Basing,<sup>25</sup> out of which a rent-charge was paid to Elizabeth, widow of Edmund.<sup>26</sup> She died in 1361,<sup>27</sup> and her infant son a month later,<sup>28</sup> so that Isabel, now wife of Sir Luke de Poynings, became sole heir to the St. John estates, of which she had seisin in 1362.<sup>29</sup> In 1390 the manor was settled on her with remainder to her son Sir Thomas de Poynings,<sup>30</sup> who succeeded to the manor in 1393.<sup>31</sup> On his death in 1428 the

ST. JOHN. Argent a chief gules with two molets or therein.

barony of St. John fell into abeyance; his heirs were Constance wife of John Paulet and daughter of his son Hugh, Alice her sister wife of John Orell, and John Bonville, son of a third sister, Joan.<sup>32</sup> A partition of the inheritance was made by the heirs, and Basing fell to the share of Constance and John Paulet.<sup>33</sup> Constance was succeeded by her son John, who in 1475 settled the manor on his son John and his other sons and daughters.<sup>34</sup> He himself had a lawsuit with his cousin John Bonville to compel him to give up the documents relating to their inheritance to some indifferent person, to whom they could go if they wished to verify their titles.<sup>35</sup> It does not appear whether the action was successful, but Sir William Paulet, his grandson, son and heir of his son John, was called upon to show his title in 1537,<sup>36</sup> and was presumably able to do so. The barony of St. John was revived in his favour, and he was created Marquess of Winchester in 1551.<sup>37</sup> He survived four monarchs and retained high office during all the changes of administration, finally dying at a great age in 1572.<sup>38</sup> His son John was his heir and died in 1576.<sup>39</sup> William was the next to succeed, and died seised of the manor in 1598, leaving a son and heir William.<sup>40</sup> John, son and heir of William, followed, and is famous for his staunch defence of Basing House against the Parliamentary forces.<sup>41</sup> During the Commonwealth his lands were of course sequestered. It appears from the investigations of the sequestration committee that the accounts of the manor were not very satisfactory.<sup>42</sup> Many of the tenants were in arrears with their rent, and were 'so miserably poor that nothing was to be had from them.'<sup>43</sup> The rents of Basing and other lands of the marquess were granted to Robert Wallop in 1650.<sup>44</sup> The estates of the marquess were restored to him in 1662, when an 'Act for confirming the estate of John Marquess of Winchester in certain manors and lands whereof the deeds and evidences were burnt and lost at the taking of the Castle of Basing' received the royal assent.<sup>45</sup> His son Charles was created

POYNINGS. Barry or and vert with a baston gules.

PAULET, Marquess of Winchester. Sable three swords in pile with their hilts or.

<sup>8</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1014.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. iv, 646.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i,

<sup>13</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 234.

<sup>14</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>15</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 76b.

<sup>16</sup> Close, 30 Edw. I, m. 3.

<sup>17</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 8.

<sup>18</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 14.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Close, 3 Edw. III, m. 8.

<sup>21</sup> Pat. 8 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 28.

<sup>22</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>23</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 15.

<sup>24</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 186.

<sup>25</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), 186-7.

<sup>26</sup> Close, 21 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 16.

<sup>27</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 60.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.

<sup>29</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 270.

<sup>30</sup> Pat. 14 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 17.

<sup>31</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 16.

<sup>32</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 7 Hen. VI, no. 69.

<sup>33</sup> De Banc. R. 18 Hen. VII, m. 515.

<sup>34</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 14.

<sup>35</sup> Early Chan. Proc. bdle. 34, no. 50.

<sup>36</sup> L.T.R. Mem. R. East. 29 Hen. VIII, rot. 23.

<sup>37</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 16.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. viii, 171; Dict. Nat. Biog. xlv, 92.

<sup>39</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 16.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid.

<sup>41</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. xlv, 90.

<sup>42</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, i, 348.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid.

<sup>45</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. vii, App. 60a.

first Duke of Bolton,<sup>46</sup> and Basing descended in the family till the death of Harry sixth and last duke, in 1794, when, in accordance with the will of his elder brother Charles, the fifth duke,<sup>47</sup> it was inherited by the latter's illegitimate daughter. She married Thomas Orde, who took the name of Powlett in addition to his own and was created Lord Bolton in 1797.<sup>48</sup> His great-grandson, the present Lord Bolton, is now lord of the manor.

ORDE-POWLETT, Lord Bolton. The arms of PAULET with a quarter argent and therein a scutcheon sable with a salmon rising.

The ruins of Basing House have been very carefully and thoroughly excavated by Lord Bolton, and a plan, which is at any rate intelligible, can now be obtained. The arrangement of the site is of considerable interest, the earthworks of a castle of the mount and bailey type having been in the first place adapted to the terraces and walled gardens of a 16th-century country house, and in the next century hastily strengthened by lines of outworks and ditches during the civil wars. Some of the latter have been levelled out in modern times, and the cutting of the Basingstoke Canal about 1780 has destroyed the appearance of the north and east sides of the inclosure, but the mount or citadel with its ditch and parts of those which surrounded the two baileys are still in very good condition. The fall of the ground is northward towards the marshy valley of the Loddon, which must have formed an important item in the mediaeval defences, and on the brow of the slope is the principal earthwork, already referred to as the mount. This belongs to an uncommon type, of which Old Sarum and Castle Rising are examples, in which the diameter of the circular earthwork is very large, and instead of being a flat-topped mount it becomes a high rampart of earth surrounding a circular inclosure, the level of which is but little higher than the general ground level outside the ditch. The diameter, taken from the crest of the rampart, is not less than 100 yds. in the present instance, and the bottom of the ditch is nearly 40 ft. below the same point. The entrance is from the north-east, through a break in the earthen rampart, opening to a court or bailey bounded on all sides by a ditch, and having to the east another court which was defended in like manner. The canal running along the east side of the second court has destroyed the evidence of its original defences, but the general disposition of the earthworks is clear. Basing seems to have come into importance only when Hugh de Port, the first owner after the Conquest, made it the chief manor of the fifty-five which he held in the county, and it is probable that the citadel and two courts are his work. The earliest mention of a castle here, contained in a mid-12th-century grant by John de Port to Sherborne Priory,<sup>49</sup> is rather puzzling, as it refers to the 'old castle of Basing,' implying as it would seem that there was also a new castle at the time. But that the 'old castle' was that whose remains exist to-day is clear from a mention of the chapel of St. Michael 'in the old castle' in 1349,<sup>50</sup> undoubtedly the castle chapel or Free Chapel of Basing; so that if any part of the defences, or any other work at Basing, was ever known as the new castle, the name has long fallen into disuse.

In 1261<sup>51</sup> Robert de St. John had licence to strengthen his dwelling at Basing with a stockade, but no other reference to the mediaeval buildings on the site is known. Now that the site has been cleared, it seems that some foundations in the citadel are older than the early 16th-century brickwork which forms the main part of the ruins, and these are doubtless part of the mediaeval castle; but they are too fragmentary to give any idea of what its plan may have been, or its extent. One piece of 12th-century detail has been found on the site, the voussoir of an arch, but this by itself cannot be taken as evidence of the character of the early buildings; and the fact that the bulk of the objects found—and everything found has been most scrupulously preserved—dates from the 16th and 17th centuries shows that a very clean sweep must have been made when the brick house was built.

Its date is fixed by a licence<sup>52</sup> to crenellate, granted to Sir William Paulet in 1531, which refers in the customary terms to a building of stone and lime, though the actual material is red brick with stone dressings. It is difficult to distinguish between the dates of the various parts, and Sir William evidently added to his original work at several times during his long life: probably the work in the 'citadel,' called in the 17th-century accounts the Old House, was the first to be done, and the buildings in the east court, 'the New House,' followed at some interval. A stone preserved in the museum on the site records the completion of some work in 1561, but it is uncertain to what part of the building it refers. The arrangement of the buildings is dictated by the position, and follows no normal type, nor is it possible to identify any but the most obvious parts of the plan.

The circular rampart was at this time strengthened by a red brick wall on the outside and a line of buildings set against its inner face, the area within the rampart being divided into several courts. The principal court was at the north-east, entered directly from the gatehouse, and was fan-shaped, having the great hall on the west side, with kitchen, butteries, &c., on the north-west. The ranges of building on either side of the gatehouse have cellars, and under the hall is a large cellar, the walls of which remain up to the ground level, but everything has been destroyed above this point except the walls set against the rampart. South of the hall is a block which doubtless contained the principal living-rooms, the great chamber, &c., overlooking a second court on the south-west, while a third and somewhat smaller court, of a regular rectangular shape, was at a little distance to the south. There was a small court on the west of the hall and another at the south-east of the site, east of the rectangular court. The kitchen at the north-west of the hall was a hexagonal building with large fireplaces in three of its sides, and the rooms on either side of it had ovens in the thickness of the walls, and were doubtless bakehouses or something of

<sup>46</sup> G E.C. Peerage, viii, 171.

<sup>47</sup> P.C.C. 245 Rushworth.

<sup>48</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>49</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vii, 1014.

<sup>50</sup> Pat. 22 Edw. III, m. 23.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid. 45 Hen. III, m. 74.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. 22 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m.

GENERAL PLAN OF BASING HOUSE.

BASING HOUSE: GROUND PLAN AS EXCAVATED

the sort, while another room north of the great hall shows remains of two large fireplaces set against the rampart, and was evidently a second kitchen. The hall itself was a fine room measuring some 60 ft. by 25 ft., with screens at the north end and a north-east porch, and a shallow bay window at the south-east; at the north end beyond the screens a broad flight of steps leads down to a cellar beneath the hall, formerly covered with a brick vault and lighted by two small windows on east and west; on either side of the entrance to the cellar are rooms in the mediaeval position of buttery and pantry, that toward the east having a bay window looking into the principal court.

The block at the south of the hall, already noted as that which probably contained the chief living-rooms, seems from its construction of flint and stone instead of brick to be of an earlier date than the 16th century, and other work to the south-west, forming part of the walls of a cellar, is also of the same material and earlier than some red brick walls built against it. Walls underlying the 16th-century brickwork exist on the south side of the second court, but have no features by which their date may be more closely fixed. The brickwork itself is clearly of several periods, and bricks of 2 in.,  $2\frac{1}{4}$  in., and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  in. are used; the limits of possible date must lie between 1530 and 1645, and it is probable that some of the brickwork is as late as the time of the great sieges of 1643-5. At the north-east are the remains of the gatehouse, a fine building with a central entrance passage and round turrets at its four angles; in the diary of the Marquess of Winchester, who defended the house during the siege, it is described as 'the loftie gatehouse with foure turrets looking northwards.' It opened to a brick bridge over the dry moat, which still remains in part and forms the principal approach to the citadel, the only other being from the south by what was probably a drawbridge over the moat; only its foundations now exist. Within the first court the gatehouse was flanked by ranges of buildings with cellars, which show clear evidence of alteration, the second room from the gatehouse on each side having been enlarged and, perhaps, carried up as a tower; the presumption that this was done to strengthen the defences seems reasonable, and the work may therefore be of the date of the siege. The inner facing of the eastern rampart at the north-east is also of later date, as some of the 16th-century detail is used up in its footings, and this work may be contemporary with that just noticed. A narrow range of building with two projecting stair turrets at the south-east of the first court preserves in its cellar the remains of some curious drawings, chiefly of ships, which seem to be of 17th-century date, and its arched doorway at the east end is still perfect, but shows many traces of fire.

The least well preserved part of the Old House is the eastern part, which is reduced to a very fragmentary condition, and its plan can only be guessed at. In one place there has been a small open court against the rampart wall, and the base of a moulded brick chimney stack remains on the wall, and further to the south is the base of a stair. To the north of the third court, already noticed, is a large well-preserved pit some 20 ft. deep, built in flint and stone, and spanned near one end by two thin walls carried on brick arches, set close together but at different levels. Half the bottom of the pit is paved with stone slabs set at a considerable slant, while the other half is merely the natural sand, and the entire absence of black soil makes it doubtful whether this could have been the shaft of a garderobe, as at first sight seems probable. It may be suggested that its original use was that of similar pits in use at the present day in Holland and elsewhere, namely, cold storage, for preserving provisions in hot weather. There are two wells within the circular rampart, the principal one being in the middle of the first court; a good supply of water is obtainable at about 40 ft. from the surface.

The New House was entered from the west through a gatehouse with turrets at two and probably at all four angles, and consisted of two courts surrounded by ranges of buildings. The evidence for the existence of two courts is established by the accounts of the siege, but no trace has been found of any range dividing into two the irregular four-sided area which the foundations of the house inclose. Little can be said of the buildings, which were all of red brick and evidently of considerable strength: there was a second gatehouse on the south-east, and turrets at intervals all round the inner side of the buildings. At the south-west was a well-house with a large well 50 ft. deep and of oval plan, about 11 ft. by 10 ft., its sides built in brickwork 2 ft. 6 in. thick; it has now been cleaned and roofed over, and is in excellent preservation. The east side of the house is represented by a few fragments of brickwork, the destruction being largely due to the making of the canal which runs close by, but it is also to be noted that this was the part of the house which suffered most in the siege. The New House was, according to contemporary accounts, a very magnificent building, so much so that to save the expense of keeping it up part was pulled down, apparently in the first decade of the 17th century. A view of it from the east, taken apparently about 1645, and showing the breach made by the Parliament's batteries, gives some idea of its extent, the many turrets breaking the skyline giving it a very stately appearance. This view exists in several copies, that in Warner's History of Hants being very little understood by the copyist, who has added a wide moat full of water and crossed by a causeway. The terraces and walled gardens already referred to as part of the 16th-century layout are to the north, on the slope of the valley, and make a most picturesque setting to the site. Their red brick walls are of no particular strength, having been built for beauty and not for defence, but played their part in the siege, and still show traces of rough loopholing for musket fire. At the north-west angle is an octagonal pigeon house, preserving its revolving ladder, and this point was known as the Basingstoke bulwark, and was the scene of a good deal of fighting. Close to it an eastern platform has been thrown out into the ditch, and is perhaps the site of the 'blind' made of timber and earth made by the garrison in 1643 to command the mill on the Loddon just opposite. A terrace runs northward from a point north-west of the Old House, and its line is continued by the wall which joins the pigeon house at the north-west angle of the gardens. At the end of the terrace nearest the old house is a small brick building now used as a museum, the lower part of its walls being old, and there is evidence that a building adjoined it on the east, part of its arched cellars remaining. It has been called a banqueting house, but was probably a garden pavilion or something of the sort. To the east of it is a piece of ground, now an orchard, which seems to have been used as a cemetery during the siege, burials being found in it wherever the ground is disturbed. Eastward from the pigeon house the garden wall runs to another octagonal turret, and thence irregularly to the main gateway of the inclosure. The wall is much broken down, but part of a small embattled turret is still standing. The gateway has been carefully repaired of late and its four-centred stone arch is perfect, with the Paulet arms above; it is doubtless the work of the first marquess. From this point the wall continued eastward for a short distance, then turning south, and eventually joining the south-east angle of the New House, but all this part has been destroyed embattled curtain wall round the Old House, over which the gables, chimneys and turrets rise. The large gabled block at the south end of the hall is recognizable, but otherwise the drawing is probably not very close to the original. A few pieces of moulded brick cusping show that tracery of this sort was used, and a very fine terra cotta medallion of one of the Caesars, like those at Hampton Court, witnesses to the use of first-class work of Italian style here as at the Holy Ghost Chapel and elsewhere in the county.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The pottery, iron, &c., found on the site are all carefully preserved, and make a very interesting collection, not from its rarity, but from its claim to represent the ordinary utensils of the time. Numbers of shot of all sizes, and fragments of thirteen-inch shells thrown by the mortar in 1645, the final siege, are to be seen, and small objects of common use are plentiful.

BASING HOUSE GATEWAY.

by the canal. The main approach to the two houses was by a road walled on both sides starting from the north-east gateway and running westward, skirting the first bailey or court, and entering it from the north-west by a bridge over the ditch and a square gatehouse with angle turrets. From this point the road went to the bridge in front of the gatehouse of the Old House, a branch continuing eastward to another bridge and gatehouse giving access to the New House.

The masonry details found on the site are largely from the stone cappings of the turrets with which the house abounded, from the mullions of the windows and from stone strings, gargoyles, &c., all being of late Gothic type, dating from c. 1530-40. Hollar's general view of the house, taken about 1644, shows the appearance from the south, with an Royalty was frequently entertained at Basing House during the long life of the first Marquess of Winchester,<sup>58</sup> and by his successors till the house was taken and demolished in the civil wars. It has never been rebuilt, though, according to a continuator of Camden's Britannia, one of the Dukes of Bolton built 'some convenient lodgings' out of the ruins. These 'lodgings' were to the north, on part of the land of the grange: the house here was pulled down about 1740, and only the fine red brick piers of its entrance gate now remain. Its materials were taken, it is said, to Cannons near Kingsclere.

Among the liberties of the manor to which John de St. John laid claim in the 13th century were free gallows, tumbrel, pillory, free warren and assize of bread and ale. He declared that his ancestors from time immemorial had enjoyed these liberties with the <sup>58</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1591-4, p. 504; Hist. of Basingstoke, 415-16; Cal. S. P. Dom. 1580-1625, p. 428.

REMAINS OF THE CITADEL OR OLD HOUSE FROM THE NORTH-EAST

REMAINS OF THE CITADEL OR OLD HOUSE FROM THE SOUTH EXCAVATIONS ON THE SITE OF BASING HOUSE

exception of free warren, which was granted to his father Robert de St. John by Henry III. His rights were acknowledged, and the sheriff was ordered to allow him to re-erect the gallows, pillory, and tumbrel, which had fallen down through age.<sup>64</sup> A free fishery is also mentioned as an appurtenance of the manor.<sup>65</sup>

Of the three mills in Basing mentioned in the Domesday Survey as belonging to Hugh de Port one appears to have been appurtenant to the manor.<sup>66</sup> The other two were conveyed by John de Champayne to Peter des Roches in 1324.<sup>67</sup> Peter des Roches quit-claimed them to John Brocas and Margaret his wife in 1339,<sup>68</sup> and in 1357 John Brocas sold them to John de St. Philibert.<sup>69</sup> They are again heard of in a suit between John Paulet and William Brocas in 1502.<sup>60</sup> A mill worth 20s. was attached to the church of Basing at the time of the Survey, but which of the four mills are represented by the existing Lower Mill and Old Basing Mill it is difficult to say.

BASING BYFLEET (Basing till xvii cent.) seems originally to have been the land in Basing which formed the endowment of the church. It appears in 1234 among the possessions of the newly-founded priory of Selborne,<sup>61</sup> to which Peter Bishop of Winchester had granted the church of Basing with its appurtenances in his foundation charter.<sup>62</sup> The land was held of the Priors of Selborne<sup>63</sup> apparently till the dissolution of the priory in 1486.<sup>64</sup> It did not follow the other lands of the priory into the possession of the Master and fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, but was retained by the Bishops of Winchester, of whom it was thenceforth held.<sup>65</sup> It is first called a manor in 1389,<sup>66</sup> and took the name of Byfleet from the family which held it for three centuries.

In 1260 Ralph de Basing was holding this fee in Basing.<sup>67</sup> He was party to a fine in that year with the Prior of Selborne concerning services which he owed for his freehold. It consisted of one messuage, one carucate of land, and one mill with the appurtenances; and the prior demanded a yearly rent of 60s., 'which service the said Ralph at first did not recognise.' It was agreed that Ralph and his heirs should pay the 60s.<sup>68</sup> He appears to have been succeeded by Sir John de Basing, on whom the land was settled in 1333, with remainder to his heirs.<sup>69</sup> His son and heir John released in 1343 to Joan his father's widow all his rights in Basing.<sup>70</sup> In 1389 the manor was in the hands of Thomas Byfleet,<sup>71</sup> whose wife Alice was probably the heiress of John de Basing.<sup>72</sup> Thomas son of Thomas was in possession at the beginning of the 15th century,<sup>73</sup> and died in 1408.<sup>74</sup> Another Thomas, probably his son, mortgaged the manor in 1448 to Roger Inge.<sup>75</sup> His nephew Thomas Byfleet died seised in 1500, leaving a brother and heir John.<sup>76</sup> John was succeeded by his son Thomas and Thomas by another John.<sup>77</sup> Robert Byfleet, son of John, died in possession in 1641,<sup>78</sup> after settling the manor on his son Thomas and his wife Mary daughter of George Speake.<sup>79</sup> It seems probable that Thomas and Mary left co-heiresses, for Weston Browne with Mary his wife,<sup>80</sup> and Anthony Bedingfield with Margaret his wife,<sup>81</sup> each dealt with a moiety of the manor by fine in the reign of Charles II. One half was conveyed to Francis Bacon, the other to Peyton Bacon and Robert Hastings. Before 1725 the whole must have been purchased by the Limbrey family, as Henry Limbrey was in possession in that year.<sup>82</sup> Basing Byfleet remained in the family, following the descent of their manor of Hoddington<sup>83</sup> to Magdalen Limbrey wife of Richard Sclater, and subsequently to George Limbrey Sclater-Booth, second Lord Basing, the present lord of the manor.

BYFLEET. Azure two swords argent crossed points downwards with their hilts or between four fleurs de lis or.

LIMBREY of Hoddington. Party argent and gules a chevron between three lions counter-coloured.

SCLATER-BOOTH, Lord Basing. Argent a saltire and a border azure with a quarter ermine and therein a boar's head erect and rased sable between three crescents or.

Byfleet is now a farm-house standing to the north-east of the church; the house, which is built of red brick with tiled roofs, is almost wholly modernized.

The liberties of tol, theam, and infangentheof in this manor were granted to the Prior of Selborne in 1234.<sup>84</sup> Henry III also granted that their lands here which were within the bounds of his forest should be free 'of regard and views of foresters' and other officers, and that the prior and his men should be immune from suits, summonses and pleas.<sup>85</sup>

<sup>64</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 766.

<sup>65</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I.

<sup>66</sup> V.C.H. Hants. i, 479b; Chan. Inq. p.m.

<sup>67</sup> Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57; 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 60.

<sup>68</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 17 Edw. II.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid. East. 13 Edw. III.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid. Trin. 31 Edw. III.

<sup>71</sup> De Banc. R. 18 Hen. VII, m. 515.

<sup>72</sup> Cart. Antiq. NN. 33, PP. 48, QQ. 40.

<sup>73</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 44 Hen. III.

<sup>74</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 510.

<sup>75</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xv, 22; ccccxcviii, 19.

<sup>68</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Ric. II.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid. Hil. 44 Hen. III, no. 30.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid.

<sup>71</sup> Ibid. East. 7 Edw. III.

<sup>72</sup> Close, 17 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 23 d.

<sup>73</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Ric. II.

<sup>74</sup> She is so described in Visit. of Somers. (Harl. Soc.), 18.

<sup>75</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 378.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid. 253.

<sup>77</sup> Close, 26 Hen. VI, m. 32.

<sup>78</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xv, 22.

<sup>79</sup> Visit. of Somers. (Harl. Soc.), 18; Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 382, 389.

<sup>78</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccccxcviii, 79.

<sup>79</sup> Ibid.

<sup>80</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 19 Chas. II, 82.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid. Trin. 21 Chas. II.

<sup>82</sup> Recov. R. East. 11 Geo. I, rot. 265.

In 1717 John Limbrey paid rental for lands in Basingstoke 'formerly Robert Byfleet's and late F. Dickens's' (Hist. of Basingstoke, 391).

<sup>83</sup> V.C.H. Hants. iii, 384; Recov. R. 42 Geo. III, rot. 326.

<sup>84</sup> Cart. Antiq. PP. 48.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid. QQ. 40.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

CUFAUDS was for centuries in the hands of a family of that name; they held it of the Crown as of the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>86</sup>

William Cufaud is the first member of the family of whom there is any record. He paid an impost of 20s. to the Exchequer in 1167.<sup>87</sup> In the next century certain lands in Basingstoke with a meadow called La Cufaulds-mede were held of Robert Cufaud.<sup>88</sup> According to the traditional pedigree of the family a William Cufaud held the manor in the reign of Edward I and had a son John.<sup>89</sup> The latter was succeeded by his son John, who was member of Parliament for Basingstoke in 1295 and 1302.<sup>90</sup> He had a son Alexander,<sup>91</sup> and Alexander was succeeded by Thomas.<sup>92</sup> John Cufaud did fealty in 1440 for lands that had belonged to Ralph Cufaud,<sup>93</sup> and Thomas, probably son of John, was lord in 1443.<sup>94</sup> His son William married Ellen daughter of Richard Kingsmill, and had by her a son John, sometimes called William.<sup>95</sup> John had a son Simon lord of the manor in 1567.<sup>96</sup> He left it at his death in 1588 to his great-nephew Simon, grandson of his brother William.<sup>97</sup> The younger Simon died in 1619.<sup>98</sup> He left five sons,<sup>99</sup> of whom the eldest, Matthew, was lord in 1637.<sup>100</sup> He followed the example of his great neighbour the Marquess of Winchester in supporting the king,<sup>101</sup> and his lands were sequestered in 1646, but were leased to him by the County Commissioners for £45 a year.<sup>102</sup> He compounded in 1655, and Cufauds was inherited at his death by John Cufaud,<sup>103</sup> who died in 1701.<sup>104</sup> Henry Cufaud was lord of the manor in 1732,<sup>105</sup> and his widow Martha sold it in 1737 to Christina Broughton<sup>106</sup> and Francis White. Nearly twenty years later John Waters dealt with the manor by fine.<sup>107</sup> He was still in possession in 1769, when he sold Cufauds to John Chute,<sup>108</sup> who owned the neighbouring estate of The Vyne in the parish of Sherborne St. John. From that date it has followed the descent of The Vyne (q.v.), and Mr. Charles Lennard Chute is the present lord of both manors.

HACKWOOD does not appear to have been a manor, though it is once so called.<sup>109</sup> Before 1223 it was probably a wild woodland appurtenant to the Brayboefs' manor of Eastrop.<sup>110</sup> In that year Henry de Brayboef had licence to inclose his wood of Hackwood with a trench, so that the king's deer could not enter and depart without hindrance.<sup>111</sup> In 1280 the further privilege was granted to his son William of em-parking his wood of 'Hagwood' with the lands adjacent, amounting to 40 acres within the metes of the forest of Pamber and Eversley; he was to hold it in fee simple; notwithstanding the king would lose 12d. yearly, as the deer sometimes repaired thither.<sup>112</sup> There has been an inclosed park at Hackwood from the time of William de Brayboef till the present day. In the 16th century it first appears in the possession of the Paulet family, who probably bought it from the descendants of William de Brayboef. John Paulet Marquess of Winchester held it in 1579.<sup>113</sup> From that time it has followed the descent of the manor of Basing<sup>114</sup> (q.v.). It was leased at one time to Lord Chancellor Westbury; its present tenant is Lord Curzon of Kedleston, who has made many improvements both in the house and grounds.

The original building of Hackwood House is said to have been a lodge built in the time of Queen Elizabeth and used as a banqueting house for hawking parties. This lodge formed the nucleus of the present mansion, and doubtless some of its fabric still remains in the saloon which was the original hall open to the roof. After the destruction of Basing House, in spite of an attempt to render the ruins more or less habitable for a time, it became expedient to rebuild or enlarge Hackwood to serve as the family seat on the estate. The middle building was enlarged and wings were built connected by open corridors to the main building. The date 1687 which appears on the rainwater heads, backs of grates, &c., marks no doubt the completion of this work. Between 1759 and 1765 Charles fifth Duke of Bolton made further alterations; the great hall was reduced in height by the insertion of a floor and some fine old panelling brought from Abbotstone, near Alresford, was fitted in the rooms, as were also several fine pieces of carving by Grinling Gibbons. The open corridors to the wings were closed in and new offices were erected.

When Hackwood came into the possession of Thomas first Lord Bolton in 1794 he, finding the house in many ways inconvenient, increased its accommodation by building a new north front about 24 ft. from the former one, and forming the present entrance hall, &c., which he connected with the old wings by quadrant corridors.

The second Lord Bolton, who carried out many alterations between the years 1807 and 1830,<sup>114a</sup> had the south side refronted from designs by Lewis Wyatt to correspond in style with the north front, so that little is left in the outward appearance of the house to prove its original date.

Both fronts are in Roman cement, with a tetrastyle Ionic portico rising the height of two floors. That on the north side has a pediment, on the CUFAUD. Burelly argent and gules a quarter gules.

<sup>86</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxvii, 14.

<sup>87</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 192.

<sup>88</sup> MS. penes Merton Coll. Oxf.

<sup>89</sup> Gent. Mag. lviii, 574.

<sup>90</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 77.

<sup>91</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 34 Edw. I.

<sup>92</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 378.

<sup>93</sup> Ibid.

<sup>94</sup> Ibid. 273; Gent. Mag. lviii, 574.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid.

<sup>96</sup> Recov. R. East. 9 Eliz. rot. 155.

<sup>97</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxii, 14.

<sup>98</sup> From a memorial tablet in Holy Ghost Chapel, Basingstoke.

<sup>99</sup> Ibid.

<sup>100</sup> Recov. R. East. 13 Chas. I, rot.

71.

<sup>101</sup> A Major Cuffauds helped in the defence of Basing House. This may have been the lord of the manor of Cufauds (vide 'The Siege of Basing House').

<sup>102</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, 1487-8.

<sup>103</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 6 Will. and Mary, rot. 24.

<sup>104</sup> Tablet at Chapel of the Holy Ghost, Basingstoke.

<sup>105</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 6 Geo. II, rot. 262.

<sup>106</sup> Close, 11 Geo. II, pt. xvii, no. 30, 31.

<sup>107</sup> Feet of F. (K.S.B.) East. 28 Geo. II.

<sup>108</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 9 Geo. III, 123.

<sup>109</sup> Pat. 21 Eliz. pt. vii, m. 44.

<sup>110</sup> Close, 7 Hen. III, m. 2; 12 Hen. III, m. 9 d. See Eastrop.

<sup>111</sup> Close, 7 Hen. III, m. 2.

<sup>112</sup> Pat. 8 Edw. I, m. 24.

<sup>113</sup> Ibid. 21 Eliz. pt. vii, m. 44.

<sup>114</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 42 Eliz.; Mudie, Hist. of Hants, ii, 50.

<sup>114a</sup> Ex inform. Lord Curzon of Kedleston.

A. THE OLDE HOUSE. B. THE MEW. C. THE TOWER THAT IS HALFE BATTERED DOWNE. D. THE KINGES BREAST WORKS. E. THE PARLIAMENTS BREAST WORKS.

HOLLAR'S VIEW OF BASING HOUSE C. 1644

tympanum of which are the arms of the family. The south front has an additional story rising above the frieze of the portico, but the rest of the main structure is of two stories above the basement. The wings also are of two stories.

In plan the house is of an E shape, the main portion having two ranges of apartments. The entrance hall is in the middle of the north range, and the great saloon to the south of it, to the west of the entrance hall is the main staircase with offices beyond, and to the east the billiard-room with the study beyond. In the southern range to the west of the saloon is the morning-room, and at the end a large dining-room with a semicircular west end, and to the east of the saloon a boudoir and large drawing-room or ball-room more or less in character with the other end. The eastern wing is devoted to the family residential purposes and the western is occupied by the offices. On the first floor are bedrooms, &c.

William the fourth Marquess of Winchester died here in 1628.<sup>115</sup> According to one of Camden's continuators, it was the first Duke of Bolton who 'reared himself a stately palace here.'<sup>116</sup>

LICKPIT was granted in 945 by King Edmund to Ethelnod, his chaplain, with a certain 'monastic house in Basing called the king's horse-croft.'<sup>117</sup> Shortly afterwards Ethelnod gave all the lands which King Edmund had granted him in Basing to the new monastery at Winchester, known as St. Peter's and later as Hyde Abbey,<sup>118</sup> and apparently Lickpit was held of the Abbots of Hyde till the Dissolution. In the 11th century Hugh de Port, lord of Basing, was enfeoffed of the manor, which in 1086 he was holding 'of St. Peter's Abbey.'<sup>119</sup> It was then assessed at 2 hides, and was worth 60s. The descendants of Hugh de Port, the family of St. John, continued to hold a mesne lordship here,<sup>120</sup> which followed the descent of their manor of Basing.

Lickpit was held of them from the 13th century by the Brayboefs, lords of the manor of Eastrop. In 1275 William de Brayboef held Lickpit of John de St. John for a fourth part of a knight's fee.<sup>121</sup> From this date the manor followed the descent of the manor of Eastrop<sup>122</sup> in the Brayboef, Camois and Whitehead families till late in the 17th century,<sup>123</sup> when Richard Whitehead appears to have sold his lands.<sup>124</sup> Lickpit was in the hands of Thomas Head in 1740.<sup>125</sup> Later it came into the hands of a family named Horne, who in 1765<sup>126</sup> conveyed it to Robert Palmer to hold to the use of Mary Jane Horne.

At Lickpits, a small farm-house about a half-mile to the north-west of the village, are the remains of the manor-house of Lickpits dating from the latter half of the 16th century. It appears to have been originally of an L-shaped plan, but the greater part of the middle portion has disappeared, leaving the north end of one limb (forming part of the present house) and a portion of the other or southern limb now a stable. It is possible that the latter limb was really the main portion of a house with two wings running northwards and that the eastern wing has been replaced by the existing barn of later date.

The stable retains a stone-headed Tudor doorway towards the former courtyard (present farmyard) and to the east of it a square-headed and mullioned stone window with a hood-mould, and on the west side are the remains of a similar window; this wall has also a moulded stone plinth. The other sides of this building are of plain red brick, but there are signs of a former chimney at its west end. The other old portion is the north end of the farm-house; it has on its outer or west face two or three blocked mullioned windows, a chamfered stone plinth and a chamfered string course between the two floors. The east face towards the farmyard has a moulded plinth like the stable, and this continues round the north end, which also has an old chimney stack, proving that it was the original end of that wing. The barns of the farmyard are picturesque and also of some age.

The church of ST. MARY, a red-CHURCH roofed building with a red-brick tower, consists of a chancel 29 ft. by 18 ft.; central tower, 21 ft. square; north chapel, 50 ft. 1 in. by 18 ft. 2 in.; south chapel, 50 ft. by 20 ft.; nave, 47 ft. 6 in. by 21 ft., with north and south aisles, 15 ft. 8 in. wide, all the measurements being internal.

A 12th-century building evidently stood here, but no more of it is now to be seen than the north and south arches of the central tower; this is, however, sufficient to show that its plan was cruciform, and in all probability the nave and chancel were of the same dimensions as at present, the width of the present aisles being equal to the depth of the original transepts. In the north aisle is a re-used 13th-century doorway, but nothing else in the building is older than the 16th century, unless it be the east wall of the chancel.

At the east end of the north aisles of the nave is an inscription set high in the wall, as follows:—
'In laudem xpi et marie matris sue per lohēm Poulet militē hoc opus est consistm (?) aº dni 1519.'<sup>127</sup>

The position is somewhat ambiguous and might refer to the chapel to the east or the aisle to the west, and it is to be noted that the arms of this Sir John Paulet, who married his cousin, Constance Paulet, of Hinton St. George, occur on the west wall of the nave below a niche containing figures of our Lady and Child. From his will it appears that he left unfinished at his death the endowment and furnishing of a chantry, for which it is probable that he built

HYDE ABBEY. Argent a lion sable and a chief sable with two keys argent having their bows linked therein.

<sup>115</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 416.

<sup>116</sup> Camden, Britannia, 866.

<sup>117</sup> Birch, Carr. Sax. ii, 560-1. The name 'King's horse-croft' is now applied to a mounded meadow close to the old ford of Pyot's Hill (ex inform. Dr. Samuel Andrews).

<sup>118</sup> Ibid. 562.

<sup>119</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 471b.

<sup>120</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Chan. Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. I, no. 13.

<sup>121</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>122</sup> Q.v.

<sup>123</sup> Chart R. 41 Edw. III, m. 3; Cal. Pat. 1377-81, p. 437; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cxiv, 26; Recov. R. Mich. 5 Chas. I, rot. 9.

<sup>124</sup> Compare Eastrop.

<sup>125</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 14 Geo. II, rot. 221.

<sup>126</sup> Close, 5 Geo. III, pt. xv, m. 29; Recov. R. Trin. 5 Geo. III, rot. 406; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 12 Geo. III.

<sup>127</sup> The date looks like 1549, but this is impossible, as Sir John Paulet died in 1525.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

the north chapel, with the monuments of his father and himself between the chapel and the chancel.

The south chapel is of somewhat later date, and was doubtless added by Sir William Paulet, whose monument is in its north wall, and from the evidence of the heraldry was not finished before 1543.

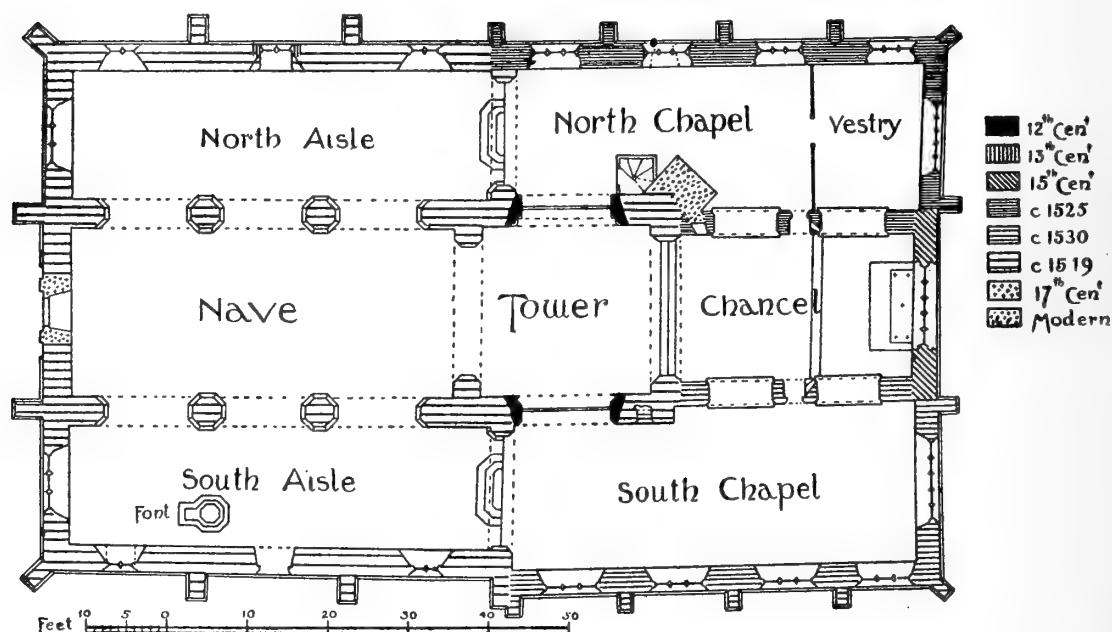

The nave with its aisles and the east and west arches of the central tower are probably all of one date, and are either the work of Sir John Paulet or perhaps of his father, John Paulet.

The interior is very spacious and dignified, the simple and massive nave arcades of plastered brickwork setting off the rich carving of the Paulet tombs in the chancel, and the external brickwork is of a beautiful deep red colour. The nave, south chapel and tower are nearly entirely built of brick, with stone dressings, and the chancel and north chapel are of flint and stone, but their east gables are heightened and rebuilt in brick.

altered. The outer order towards the crossing has a plain semicircular arch of a single order, with engaged jamb-shafts having simple scalloped capitals in two cases, the third being of cushion type, and the fourth, which seems recent, having a simple leaf pattern.

In the south-east pier of the tower and opening from the south chapel is a blocked stairway which led to a rood loft; its lower steps have been recently opened out, and a piece of 13th-century foliage found in the blocking is now in the museum at Basing House. The east window of the north chapel has five cinquefoiled lights under a four-centred head, the mullions and outer jambs being moulded, while the inner splay and rear arch are simply hollow chamfered at the angles.

The four north windows of this chapel are filled with contemporary wooden tracery of very good design, each having three cinquefoiled lights with tracery in the head, set in stone frames, the inner

PLAN OF ST. MARY'S CHURCH, BASING

The east window of the chancel is of 15th-century date and has five cinquefoiled lights with vertical tracery under a low four-centred head with deep casement mouldings in head and jambs.

The north and south walls of the chancel are entirely taken up with the Paulet tombs, described below, having two arched recesses in each wall with a small doorway between them.

Both of these doorways have small squints in their eastern jambs, and there is another squint, now blocked, on the north wall of the chancel near the west end, opening from the stair to the tower. The east and west arches of the tower have plain half-octagonal jambs with moulded bases, partly hidden by the floor, and simple capitals of two orders.

The arches are high and have three chamfered orders, the whole being of brickwork, plastered and whitewashed.

The north and south arches of the tower are much lower and are of fairly early 12th-century date, with the inner order cut back and its sections splays being like those of the east window. Beneath the third window from the east is a small modern doorway with a four-centred head.

In the south chapel the five-light east window is somewhat like the corresponding one in the north chapel, while the four south windows have each three cinquefoiled lights and four-centred heads.

The heraldry of the two chapels is very interesting. On the roof corbels in the north chapel the Paulet badge of a key in a wreath<sup>127a</sup> alternates with the Roos badge of a peacock and the arms of Skelton and Fitzpiers. On the exterior of this chapel the labels of the windows and the cornices are ornamented with shields as follows:—On the labels of the east window Fitzpiers and Albini, on the east cornice Roos and Delamore, and over the window the Paulet key. On the north wall a shield on the cornice in each of the four bays of the chapel, namely, St. John, Paulet, Irby, and Skelton, going from east to west, while the Paulet key occurs on the west end of the labels of each window and on the east ends Hussey, Paulet, Irby and Delamere. On the south chapel the shields on the labels, reading from south-west eastwards and continuing on the east wall, give in their correct order the quarterings borne by the first marquess, namely, Paulet, Roos, Poynings, St. John, Delamere, Hussey, Skelton, Irby and Delamere. On the cornice the shields bear, in the west bay the Paulet key, in the second bay the three coats of Paulet, Roos, and Poynings impaled, in the third Fitzpiers (?), Delamere and Hussey, and in the fourth Skelton, Irby and Delamere. On either side of the buttress dividing the west bay from the second are portrait busts of a man and woman, perhaps meant for the first marquess and his wife Elizabeth Capel.

<sup>127a</sup> This badge dates from the 15th century at least, and is not, as often stated, a record of the treasurership of the first Marquess of Winchester.

The western arches of both chapels are similar to those of the tower but on a smaller scale, and the nave arcades are of three bays, each with large octagonal piers having moulded bases and capitals, with arches of low two-centred form, and three chamfered orders, built like the rest, of plastered brickwork. They are said to inclose the pillars of an earlier arcade, but no proof of this is forthcoming, and the statement was probably suggested by their massive character. The nave is lighted by three windows in each aisle, each of two cinquefoiled lights with vertical tracery over, with a heavy roll in the first order of the tracery, and all except two in the south aisle have external moulded labels.

Beneath the middle window in the north aisle is a re-used 13th-century doorway with foliate capitals, engaged shafts and a moulded arch of which the projecting members have been cut away. Opposite to it in the south aisle is a plain doorway with a pointed head and wide hollow chamfer of uncertain date.

The west windows of the aisles are of three cinquefoiled lights and that of the nave of five, with tracery over, and they are of different section from the side windows, and may be earlier in date.

Beneath the west window of the south aisle is a large breach filled up with brickwork, and below that of the nave a round-headed doorway under a moulded cornice with flat pilasters and rusticated masonry (c. 1560) of good and delicate detail. Above the west window of the nave is a canopied niche containing figures of our Lady and Child, doubtless with reference to the inscription of 1519 quoted above; the projecting base of the niche is supported by an angel bearing a shield of the arms of Sir John Paulet, with Paulet of Hinton in pretence.

The nave roof is modern, but those of the aisles preserve their main 15th or 16th-century timbers; each is of five bays with principals having arched braces which are prolonged as curved struts to the principals, and pairs of purlins with arched wind braces. The stone corbels to the three roofs are for the most part carved with angels holding blank shields, the upper members of the corbel having a moulding of early Renaissance character, suggesting an early 16th-century date for the work. The member is usually square in plan, but the two middle corbels on each side of the nave are half octagonal and wider than the others. One has a shield in strapwork, the angel being left out.

The upper stage of the tower has a stepped embattled parapet of red brick with stone copings, standing on a moulded cornice with grotesque heads

ST. MARY'S CHURCH, BASING, FROM SOUTH-WEST at the angles and centres of the sides, and stone-crocketed angle pinnacles of coarse detail, renewed in modern times.

On each side of the top stage is a window of two four-centred lights under a square head with a moulded label.

The stair turret is on the north-east corner in the north chapel and is of plastered woodwork, and does not rise above the roof.

There are no effigies or brasses on the Paulet tombs on either side of the chancel. Above each is a four-centred arch under a square head with moulded panelled and traceried jambs and soffit, and having shaped shields in the spandrels on both faces of the arch.

Above runs a moulded cornice on both sides with shields over the apex of each arch. In the frieze over the north-east tomb is the inscription on the north side:

HIC · JACĒT · JŌHES · FOVLET · ARMIG'ET · ELENOR · VX'EI, continued on the south thus:

QVI · OBIEVIT · MĒSE · SEPTE · BRIS · ANNO · DNI · 1488 · IH

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The shields on the cornice are quarterly of eight : Poynings, St. John, Paulet, Delamere, Hussey, Skelton, Irby and Fitzpiers.

The actual date of his death was 1492, as given in an inquisition p.m. of 9 Henry VII, and Gough in his Sepulchral Monuments only gives part of the inscription, which may have been renewed since his time.

Over the second tomb, and arranged in the same manner, is the inscription :

HIC · JACĒT · JOHES · POVLET · MILES · ET · ALICIA · VX'RI,

QVI · OBIERVNT · MENSE,

the rest being obliterated. This tomb has also on the soffit of the arch the same shield of eight quarterings, but charged with an escutcheon of Paulet, and impaled with Paulet (of Hinton) quartering Denebaud.

The two tombs in the south wall of the chancel are of later date than those on the north side, and have no inscriptions. The cornice above on both sides of the tombs is enriched with a very beautiful leaf cresting of Renaissance style with pedestals, on which are small skulls and heads. The heraldry on the cornice of the south-east tomb, quarterly of nine within a garter, shows the tomb to be that of Sir William Paulet, first Marquess of Winchester. Its date must be between 1543, when he became Knight of the Garter, and c. 1566, when he married his second wife, whose arms do not appear on the tomb. The arms of his first wife, Elizabeth Capel (1509-58), occur in the spandrels, quartered with a chevron between three roundels and in chief a fret between two roses. On the south-west tomb the shields, quarterly of nine in a garter, occur in the cornice, but those in the spandrels are blank, and there is nothing to show to whom it belongs, though it may reasonably be assigned to the second marquess. The badge of the first marquess, the falcon, occurs as a crest on both tombs.

Between each pair of tombs is a doorway, that on the north surmounted on each side of the wall by an empty canopied niche with mutilated heads badly restored, and projecting moulded jambs which have shields as corbels.

Over the south doorway on each side are the Paulet arms, quarterly of nine, in a garter with helm, mantling, crest, and supporters, two hinds. The arms are Paulet, Roos, Poynings, St. John, Delamere, Hussey, Skelton, Irby and Delamore.

Below the shields is the motto Aymes loyaulte on a scroll. In the spandrels of the doorway are four shields, with Paulet, Capel, the coat quartered with Capel above, and the key in a wreath.

The chancel has a modern boarded roof. The chapels have plastered segmental ceilings.

The pulpit was brought here from Basingstoke Church and is hexagonal, of Jacobean style, with arched and square panels elaborately carved with strap ornament and other designs. Its date is 1622, the record of its making being extant in the Basingstoke churchwardens' accounts.

In the vestry are a chest and table of the same date, and in the north chapel the arms of Charles II, dated 1660.

The Purbeck marble font is of late 15th-century date with an octagonal bowl, stem and base. Each side of the bowl has a quatrefoiled circle between two narrow trefoiled panels, and the stem has small trefoiled panels.

On the walls of the south chapel are hung five funeral helms, two pairs of gauntlets and a single gauntlet. Two of the helms bear the falcon crest, the others being quite plain. On the east wall of the chapel is a modern brass plate giving the names of the members of the Paulet family who have been buried in the vault below. The lead coffins which were there in 1643-5 were stolen by the Roundhead troopers occupying the church and made into bullets, the bones of their occupants being thrown about the vault in confusion, but the names on the coffin-plates were written on the wall, apparently at the time, and have been reproduced on the brass plate.

In the south-east angle of the north chapel are a few mediaeval tiles, some belonging to eight and twelve-tile patterns, with hunting scenes. There are also several interesting single-tile patterns, one of a bishop standing under a canopy of 14th-century style holding a crozier and having his left hand raised in blessing. Another tile has the crowned initials of William Paulet, first marquess, in a quatrefoil. A number of similar tiles, found on the site of Basing House, are now in the museum there. In recent repairs of the church three different levels of tiled floor are reported to have been found.

The treble bell is by T. Mears, 1838, and the second has the names of the churchwardens and the date 1676. Between the c and the w for churchwardens is a small horizontal figure of a man.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1688, the gift of George Wheler, vicar ; a silver flagon of 1788, given in 1830 by James Blatch, vicar ; also a silver spoon, two alms plates and a pewter bowl.

There are three books of registers, the first containing baptisms from 1671 to 1750, burials 1655 to 1750 and marriages from 1660 to the same date. The second continues baptisms from 1750 to 1812 and burials from 1781 to 1812 ; the third contains marriages from 1754 to 1812.

The church of Basing was held at ADVOWSON the time of the Domesday Survey by the Abbot of Mont St. Michel, to whom it had apparently been granted by the Crown.<sup>128</sup> It was confirmed to the abbey in 1194 by Godfrey de Lucy, Bishop of Winchester,<sup>129</sup> and in the early part of the 13th century the abbot and convent presented to the living, which was apparently at that time a rectory.<sup>130</sup> In 1233, however, they granted the church to Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester, together with its chapel of Basingstoke.<sup>131</sup> The bishop made both churches part of the endowment of the newly-founded priory of Selborne,<sup>132</sup> and their appropriation to the priory was confirmed by the pope in 1233-4.<sup>133</sup> A joint vicarage was endowed in them shortly afterwards, and the arrangements for service in Basing and Basingstoke had the effect of increasing the importance of the latter at the expense of the former.<sup>134</sup> By the end of the 14th century the vicarage was known as the vicarage of Basingstoke,<sup>135</sup> and Basing sank into the

<sup>128</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>129</sup> MSS. penes Magdalen Coll. Oxf.

<sup>130</sup> Ibid.

<sup>131</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 510.

<sup>132</sup> Ibid.

<sup>133</sup> MSS. penes Magdalen Coll. Oxf.

<sup>134</sup> Ibid.

<sup>135</sup> Ibid.

BASING CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST

BASING CHURCH : THE SOUTH CHAPEL

position of a dependent chapelry. Its advowson consequently was identical with that of Basingstoke<sup>136</sup> and passed with it into the hands of the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1864 the living was separated from Basingstoke and declared a vicarage,<sup>137</sup> but the presentation is still in the same hands.

A 'free chapel' of St. Michael, described in 1349 as 'the chapel of the Old Castle of Basing,' was granted by John de Port, grandson of the Hugh de Port who was lord of Basing in 1086, to Sherborne Priory.<sup>138</sup> The priors apparently presented till the suppression of the priory in 1414, though the advowson still appears among the possessions of the descendants of John de Port.<sup>139</sup> In 1349 the king presented to the chapel, which was in his gift while he held the temporalities of the priory of Sherborne.<sup>140</sup> After the suppression of the priory, the descendants of the Ports seem to have regained possession of the chapel, which was treated as an appurtenance of the manor down to the 17th century.<sup>141</sup>

In 1634 Henry Lamport by his CHARITIES will gave a sum of £4 annually, issuing out of a farm called Ironmonger's Land, for distribution to the poor.

In 1694 Charles Duke of Bolton by his will gave a sum of £102 per annum for ever for the benefit of the poor in certain parishes in the county of Southampton (see Basingstoke Municipal Charities). The sum of £31 13s. is distributed amongst the poor of this parish.

In the church at Basing there is the following inscription: 'To the pious memory of the Uptons of Basing, who gave to this parish two bushels of wheat to be baked in twenty-four loaves to be given on Good Friday to the poor yearly for ever.' The bread is provided out of a charge of 10s. upon a field of about fourteen acres.

William Barber (date not known) gave the poor 100 threepenny loaves to be distributed on every Good Friday, and a yearly sum of £1 5s. for placing six poor boys to school. The loaves and the yearly sum are charged upon an estate called Sumner's, now the property of Lord Bolton.

In 1812 the Rev. Thomas Sheppard, D.D., by his will proved in P.C.C. in 1814, gave the sum of £20 per annum for endowing a school, which was confirmed by the will of Mrs. Sophia Sheppard, the widow. The amount is received from Magdalen College, Oxford, and applied to the National School.

BASINGSTOKE

Basingstoches (xi cent.); Basingstok (xiii cent.).

The parish of Basingstoke covers an area of 4,172 acres and is situated in the north-east of Hampshire, its western boundary being formed by the Roman road from Winchester to Silchester. The soil is chiefly loam and the subsoil chalk. The land is mostly arable, producing abundant crops of sainfoin, turnips, wheat, barley and oats.

The town of Basingstoke is in the east of the parish at the point where the two high roads from Winchester and Salisbury unite on their way to London. It was doubtless its position which first gave the vill importance and made it, rather than the neighbouring vill of Basing or Old Basing, the head of the hundred. A market was already established there at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>1</sup> and Basingstoke remains to the present day what an 18th-century writer called it, 'a good market town and a great thoroughfare.'<sup>2</sup> Before the introduction of railways the town was an important coaching station, and several of its inns were posting houses in the reign of Henry VIII. Fifty coaches are said to have passed through in a day. At the present time Basingstoke is of still greater importance as a 'thoroughfare,' since the London and South-Western and Great Western Railways have their junction there. This has been the cause of the great increase in the population of the town—from 2,500 to nearly 11,000—which has taken place in the last century.

Probably the main streets of the town are very much the same in plan as they were in the 13th century. The vill would at first consist of a few houses standing on either side of the great high road. Then as the vill developed in importance the Mote Hall or Town Hall was built. The Mote Hall, St. Michael's Church, a little farther north, and the Holy Ghost Chapel are still the chief landmarks in the town. The Mote Hall stands by the market place, through which runs the road to Winchester and Salisbury, dividing as it leaves the town. It is called London Street east of the market place, Winchester Street after it has passed through. Some building existed here to serve the purpose of a town meeting place as early as 1250, when it is referred to as the 'clocherium.'<sup>3</sup> When rules were made for the administration of the manor in 1392, the freeholders met for the purpose 'in commune praetorio.'<sup>4</sup> This was the building afterwards known as the Mote Hall. No description of its appearance before the 17th century is in existence, but it seems to have been a two-storied building with outside stairs, under which was a booth. In May 1511 the jurors at the court leet ordered the bailiffs to build the walls of the Mote Hall before the following Whitsunday, and thirty-eight years later they presented that 'The common hawll called the Mote Hawll is in decay and ruinous, and the rain comes in because it is not well covered with tiles; therefore it is ordered that the bailiffs amend and sufficiently repair it before Christmas next under a penalty of 20s.'<sup>5</sup> Probably at that date the hall was very old. In 1570 various men of the town gave 12d. each towards repairing the Court House called the Mote Hall.<sup>6</sup> Nearly a

<sup>136</sup> Q.v.

<sup>137</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 27.

<sup>138</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1014.

<sup>139</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 12; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 180.

<sup>140</sup> Pat. 23 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 15.

<sup>141</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 7 Hen. VI, no. 69; (Ser. 2), viii, 74; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 7 Jas. I; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112.

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456.

<sup>2</sup> Camden, Britannia, 865.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. penes Merton Coll. Ox.

<sup>4</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 213.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 316, 339.

<sup>6</sup> 'Domus praetorii.' Ibid. 347.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

hundred years later it is recorded that 'the Town House and a great part of the town of Basingstoke was destroyed by fire.'<sup>7</sup> Consequently it was rebuilt in 1657, and that building, engravings of which are still extant, stood till 1832, when a new hall was raised on the present site on the north side of the market place and facing south. The plan of the latter was similar to that built in the 17th century—a large room supported on pillars, under which the frequenters of the market found shelter. In 1865 the open space was inclosed, and several rooms made,<sup>8</sup> and in 1887 a clock-tower was added in honour of the Jubilee at the sole expense of Lieut.-Col. May. A handsome new Corn Exchange was erected in 1865. The aldermen and councillors of the town were formerly called to their meetings in the Town Hall by a bell stamped with the name of the Paulet family and probably a gift of one of its members.

From the market place two streets run down the hill towards the north and almost parallel—Wote Street and Church Street. The name Wote Street has been supposed to have some connexion with Mote, from the Mote Hall to which it leads. But this seems to be an unlikely corruption, and the earliest form of the name occurring in the records is Oat Street. Church Street lies to the west and leads to the parish church of St. Michael, which stands on the low ground between the two hills and west of the street. Near it is the rectory, in the extensive grounds of which the two streams which form the River Loddon unite and flow eastwards. This small trout river flows on to Basing, turning Basingstoke Mill just east of the town, and then continues in a north-easterly direction to join the Thames. For a few miles it runs alongside of the Basingstoke Canal, which, by joining the River Wey in Surrey, connects Basingstoke and London by water. The canal was first made by a company incorporated under an Act of 1777–8.<sup>9</sup> A new company reopened it towards the end of the 19th century.<sup>10</sup>

Church Street and Wote Street cross first the Loddon and afterwards Brook Street, which runs across them from east to west. Then under changed names they run up the hill to the north—Wote Street, from which the road to Reading branches off to the north-east at the point where it meets Brook Street, becomes Station Hill, and leads to the stations of the London and South Western and Great Western Railways, which stand here side by side, and were opened respectively in 1838,<sup>11</sup> and Church Street becomes Chapel Street and runs up to the ruins of the Holy Ghost Chapel, which stand a little to the north of the station, and are one of the conspicuous features of the town. The building dates from 1524 and was added by William Lord Sandys to the south side of a chapel which had stood on the site since the 13th century. From the time of Queen Mary, at least, the chaplain of the Holy Ghost Chapel has been also the teacher of the boys of Basingstoke.<sup>12</sup> Gilbert White, author of the Natural History of Selborne,<sup>13</sup> was educated here, as were the two poets, Joseph and Thomas Warton, whose father was vicar of Basingstoke from 1725 to 1745<sup>14</sup> and master of the Holy Ghost School. In 1720 the building was described as 'a curious chapel upon a hill in this town, dedicated to the Holy Ghost. Upon the roof of it the history of the Apostles, Prophets and Disciples of Christ is very artificially described. Near it is a free school.'<sup>15</sup> At the present day a building on the Salisbury road west of the town, called the Queen's Free Grammar School, has taken the place of the Holy Ghost School and is supported by its endowments.

Surrounding the ruins of the chapel is the ancient Liten or burial ground, closed for burials in 1855 when the Burial Board purchased the present public cemetery. In 1856 and in following years they also purchased land north and immediately adjoining the old Liten for burial purposes.<sup>16</sup> The Liten was for centuries the common playground of the children of the town, and is associated with a somewhat gruesome story of premature burial told in a pamphlet published in 1675 under the title :—

News from Basingstoke of one

Mrs. Blunden,

a Maltster's wife who was buried alive.

Relating how she was overheard by the school boys that were playing near her grave, and afterwards by their master and several others, to repeat these words :

'Take me out of my grave,' whereupon she was caused to be dugged up, being found beaten and bruised in a lamentable manner, and all people then concluding her dead, they interred her again the second time, but on the morrow, which was five days after her funeral, taking her up again, they found she had torn off her winding-sheet, and beaten herself far worse than before.<sup>17</sup>

The names of most of the streets of Basingstoke have remained the same for many centuries. Brook Street is a very old name, and Church Street has naturally always been so called. Chapel Street was once Holy Ghost Street or Whitewaye. A short street leading out of Church Street into the Salisbury Road is called Flaxfield or Flaxpool, a name which dates from the reign of Edward I.

Surrounding the town till the 18th century were the common fields of the manor, named according to their position the Middlefield, West or Salisbury field, South or Winchester field, North or Holy Ghost field. Wildmoor and the marsh of Ywode were the names of the tract of marshy land lying north-east of the town. These were all inclosed in 1786 with the exception of a common of 107½ acres lying to the south-east and known as Basingstoke Common.<sup>18</sup>

The fire which destroyed the Mote Hall in 1656 was the third from which Basingstoke had suffered. In 1392 (see infra) a 'sudden and unforeseen fire' had caused the people of the town 'serious injury and utter loss.'<sup>19</sup> Again in 1601, when Queen Elizabeth was paying a visit to Basing, a great fire had devastated Basingstoke, 'where was consumed with fire fourteen fine houses, besides barns and stables.' The inhabitants of the town had then suffered still further damage by the action of thieves, who turned the confusion of disaster to their own profit.<sup>20</sup> The queen, moved to compassion, granted licence for the people of Basingstoke to appeal for assistance to

<sup>7</sup> 'Domus praetorii.' Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 685.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. 82.

<sup>9</sup> Add. Chart. 38759–38762.

<sup>10</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 562–3.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 568. The Alton Light Line was opened about 1898.

<sup>12</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 384.

<sup>13</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. lxi, 37.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. lix, 432, 428.

<sup>15</sup> Camden, Britannia, 865.

<sup>16</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John A. Kingdon, Town Clerk of Basingstoke.

<sup>17</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 162.

<sup>18</sup> Munic. Corp. Rep. i, App. pt. ii, 1099 ff.

<sup>19</sup> Chart. R. 15–17 Ric. II, m. 21.

<sup>20</sup> Accs of P.C. 1601–4, p. 222.

London and the seven neighbouring counties.<sup>31</sup> This was done and contributions were made most liberally by London, but it appears that there was a great deal of difficulty in getting the money subscribed into the right hands.<sup>32</sup> The fact that the buildings of the town were for the most part composed of wood, which was true even in 1669, accounts perhaps for this series of disasters.

Among the many place names occurring in the records of Basingstoke are Coppyd bridge (apparently a bridge over the Loddon north-east of the town), Wiltenysshury (Winklebury, the old camp to the north-west),<sup>33</sup> Benetfield, Ywode.

Very little is known of Basingstoke BOROUGH before the Norman Conquest. There is evidence in favour of Roman occupation in the existence of a Roman road passing through the parish between Basingstoke and Worting, about a mile west of the town; and some Roman tiles and pottery were unearthed within the town area in 1880.<sup>34</sup>

Probably in Saxon times Basingstoke was not distinguished from the neighbouring village of Basing. In the will of King Edred, which mentions his land at Basing, there is no mention of Basingstoke,<sup>35</sup> though it appears from the Domesday Survey that the latter had always been a royal manor.<sup>36</sup> Gradually, however, it developed into an independent vill, Basing becoming, by way of distinction, Old Basing. The two were quite distinct in 1086. Basingstoke was held in demesne by King William, who had there 20 villeins and 8 bordars with 12 ploughs, 6 serfs and 12 freemen. A market brought in a yearly revenue of 30s., and there were three mills, the combined value of which was also 30s. It is recorded that in Winchester four suburban tenants paid 13s. all but one penny.<sup>37</sup>

Down to the reign of John the kings of England held Basingstoke as a demesne manor, and the sheriff accounted for its revenues with those of the other royal lands in Hampshire.<sup>38</sup> The vill was in an unusual position with regard to its hundred. Instead of itself forming part of a hundred the manor had not only the hundred of Basingstoke, but also, till the 13th century, five other hundreds among its appurtenances.<sup>39</sup> The revenues drawn from the hundred courts would therefore be returned along with the issues of the manor.

It is clear that from an early period some organization existed among the king's freemen of Basingstoke. An official called the reeve of the town is mentioned as early as 1174,<sup>40</sup> and in 1207 the town of Basingstoke was surety to Roger Fitz Adam for 10 marks 'by William the reeve.'<sup>41</sup> It is possible that the sheriff of the county let the manor out to the tenants to farm, making some one person, either elected by them or nominated by himself, responsible for the return of the revenue. In 1210-11 the men of Basingstoke, acting as a body, petitioned to have their pasture of Hatche as they were wont to have it in ancient times.<sup>42</sup> In this year also they made a further step towards corporate responsibility. They appear on the Pipe Roll in 1211-12 as directly responsible to the king for £104 12s., the farm of their manor of Basingstoke, which must thus have been let to them in the preceding year.<sup>43</sup> For the next few years they continued to farm their own manor, paying a rent to the Crown by their bailiffs, whom they doubtless elected from among themselves to collect it. They did not, however, succeed in completing payment,<sup>44</sup> and in 1214 were £46 3s. 11d. in debt. In the next year the king ordered their bailiffs to let the sheriff have without delay the fee-farm rent for that year, which was in arrears.<sup>45</sup> It was probably for this reason that the manor was taken out of their hands and committed in 1216 to Baldwin de Aire,<sup>46</sup> and in the next year to Bartholomew Pecche, whom the men of Basingstoke were ordered to obey in all things as the king's bailiff.<sup>47</sup> In 1217 the manor was taken from Bartholomew Pecche and granted to Luke de Drumare 'for his support.'<sup>48</sup> It appears from a mandate to the sheriff 'to deliver to Luke de Drumare the rent of the town of Basingstoke, just as the men of that town were wont to yield at the king's Exchequer while the town was in their hands,'<sup>49</sup> that Basingstoke was under the old royal financial administration, with the difference that the amount which the sheriff accounted for was fixed, and was paid not to the king but to his grantee. In 1221 part of the farm had been paid into the treasury by mistake, and the sheriff was ordered to deliver it to Luke de Drumare.<sup>50</sup>

In the next year it appears that the men of Basingstoke were again renting their town with six hundreds for the old yearly rent of £104 12s. They were soon hopelessly in debt to the Crown once more,<sup>51</sup> and in 1226 the arrangement was altered, the men of Basingstoke paying £72 12s. for their town and hundred only, while the other five hundreds were accounted for by the sheriff.<sup>52</sup> Even this plan did not work effectually, and in 1228 the manor was committed to the custody of Sir John de Gatesden, at the same rent as the freeholders had paid.<sup>53</sup> He was expected apparently to levy the arrears of rent for the previous years, as well as the rent for the current year. In 1229 he was ordered to give back to the men of Basingstoke their cattle, which he had seized for the arrears of the preceding years, on the ground that they had already paid those arrears to their own bailiffs.<sup>54</sup> All those who had been bailiffs of the town during the years mentioned, with any others whom the men of the town should name, were to appear before the barons of the Exchequer at Westminster and account for the missing sums.<sup>55</sup> Sir John's connexion with the town only lasted for a year and a half, at the end of which time he was himself £36 6s. in debt to the

<sup>31</sup> Acts of P.C. 1601-4, p. 420.

<sup>32</sup> Harl. MS. 368.

<sup>33</sup> Possibly a relic of the battle between the Saxons and the Danes fought near Basingstoke in 871.

<sup>34</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 305.

<sup>35</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 54.

<sup>36</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid.

<sup>38</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 357 ff. Valuable extracts from the Pipe Rolls are given here. The authors have also examined all the muniments of the Corp. of Basingstoke.

<sup>39</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>40</sup> Pipe R. 21 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 194.

<sup>41</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 64.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. 361.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 362.

<sup>44</sup> Close, 17 John, pt. i, m. 24.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. m. 2.

<sup>46</sup> Pat. 1 Hen. III, m. 11.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid. m. 2.

<sup>48</sup> Close, 4 Hen. III, m. 7.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid. 5 Hen. III, m. 12.

<sup>50</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 363-4.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid. This grant is enrolled on Chart. R. 12 Hen. III, m. 19.

<sup>52</sup> Close, 13 Hen. III; Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 365-6.

<sup>53</sup> Cal. Close, 1227-31, p. 251.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Crown.<sup>46</sup> The burden was again laid upon the men of Basingstoke, and they found it no lighter to bear. In 1237 their debt was £127 1s. 4d. and the yearly rent of the manor was unpaid.<sup>47</sup> It appears that the officials of the town were reduced to borrowing, for in 1236 William de Haughton, Richard Cokerel, and Hythe son of William de Watford, who were probably the reeve and two bailiffs of the town, were summoned to appear before the king's justices and explain why they had borrowed £20 of a Jew in the name of the men of Basingstoke and without their consent.<sup>48</sup> As a result of the indebtedness of the freeholders, Walter de Burgh was appointed in 1237 as the king's bailiff.<sup>49</sup> Three years afterwards Walter de Merton, founder of Merton College, Oxford, and holder of certain lands in Basingstoke, had a grant of the manor for five years at a yearly rent of £80.<sup>50</sup> He appears to have been more successful than the other custodians in levying the rent. In 1240 his £80 was paid, and the town managed to clear off £43 10s. of its outstanding debt. After Walter de Merton's lease of the manor lapsed it came again into the hands of the sheriffs, who continued to account for its revenues till 1256.<sup>51</sup> During this time the town probably became rather more prosperous, so that when a fresh attempt was made in 1256 to leave the management of its revenues in the hands of the freeholders, the latter were better prepared for the privilege.

The charter of Henry III,<sup>52</sup> granted in that year to the men of Basingstoke and their heirs, made their tenure of the manor and hundred perpetual at a fixed rent of £80, and gave the town certain liberties which, if they did not at once transform it into a 'liber burgus,' tended in that direction.<sup>53</sup> The men of Basingstoke were to return their own writs and summonses, and to be entirely free from the interference of the sheriff or any other royal official; they were also to be exempt from toll throughout the royal dominions, and from cheminage and hambling of dogs. By this charter Basingstoke became a self-governing community whose relations with its lord were almost purely financial.

The fee-farm rent of £80, which, considering that the average revenue of the town while it was in the hands of the sheriffs was not more than £85,<sup>54</sup> was by no means a light one, was collected by bailiffs elected by the townspeople,<sup>55</sup> and paid to the Exchequer. During several reigns it was assigned as part of the dowry of the Queens of England. Eleanor, wife of Henry III, held it in dower in 1236,<sup>56</sup> and in 1299 the town and hundred of Basingstoke were assigned to Margaret, the sister of Philip of France and wife of Edward I.<sup>57</sup> In 1318 it was granted to Queen Isabel for life, with all the issues accruing from the death of Queen Margaret.<sup>58</sup>

Edward II made a new departure, however, in 1319, when he granted the rent to his brother, Edmund de Woodstock, created Earl of Kent on 28 July 1321, and his lawful heirs.<sup>59</sup> On his forfeiture in 1330 it escheated to the Crown,<sup>60</sup> without prejudice, however, to the rights of his son John, during whose minority it was granted to William de Bohun.<sup>61</sup> The latter conveyed it to Richard de la Pole, of London,<sup>62</sup> who held it till 1347, when it was delivered to John Earl of Kent.<sup>63</sup> After the death of John, in 1352, the rent was paid to his widow Elizabeth, with the consent of his sister and heir Joan and her husband, Sir Thomas Holand,<sup>64</sup> to whose heirs the reversion must have been secured; for on the death of Elizabeth in 1411 her heirs were the four surviving sisters of Edmund Holand, tenth Earl of Kent<sup>65</sup>; Joan wife of Edmund Plantagenet Duke of York, Margaret widow of John Beaufort Earl of Somerset, Eleanor wife of Thomas de Montacute Earl of Salisbury, and Elizabeth wife of Sir John Nevill. His eldest sister, Eleanor Countess of March, then deceased, was represented by her son and heir, Edmund Earl of March. The rent was thus divided up into five portions. Between 1411 and 1416 payments were made to Margaret Countess of Somerset, Thomas Duke of Clarence, Lucy the widow of the Earl of Kent, Thomas de Montacute Earl of Salisbury, and John Nevill Earl of Westmorland.<sup>66</sup> Elizabeth Nevill died seised of one-fourth in 1423.<sup>67</sup> In 1484 the share of Margaret Countess of Richmond, which she had inherited from the Countess of Somerset<sup>68</sup> and had forfeited to the Crown, was granted to John Earl of Lincoln, but she regained possession of it on the accession of her son as Henry VII.<sup>69</sup> In this way the rent was divided up until the 16th century, by which time a large proportion had passed by inheritance to the Crown.<sup>70</sup> In the reign of Edward VI the whole, which had been reduced to 80 marks, came, partly by grant and partly by purchase, into the hands of William Paulet, Lord St. John.<sup>71</sup> His descendants remained in possession, and the rent is paid at the present day to Lord Bolton.

It must be noted that the grantees of this fee-farm rent, though nominally they held the 'manor and town of Basingstoke,' in reality only received the rent and were in no feudal relationship with the men of Basingstoke. The town had no lord but the king, who, even after the manor was placed permanently in the hands of the freemen, seems to have reserved to himself the right to interfere with its administration. Thus in 1256-7 he sent a writ to the sheriff of the county ordering him to cause the ancient customs of

<sup>46</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 366.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid. <sup>48</sup> Ibid. 66-7.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid. 367-8.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid. <sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Cart. Antiq. QQ. 49, referred to in Chart. R. 41 Hen. III, m. 14. It was confirmed by Edw. III (Chart. R. 3 Edw. III, m. 16).

<sup>53</sup> In the same year the men of Basingstoke made a grant at the king's request to Walter de Merton of the marsh of Ywode, within their territory of Basingstoke (Chart. R. 41 Hen. III, m. 14; Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 71). The seals of twelve men of the community were attached.

<sup>54</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 371.

<sup>55</sup> Close, 4 Edw. III, m. 41.

<sup>56</sup> Chart. R. 20 Hen. III, m. 6. See also Cal. Pat. 1272-81, p. 439; Pat. 14 Edw. I, m. 23.

<sup>57</sup> Cal. Pat. 1292-1301, p. 452.

<sup>58</sup> Pat. 11 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 20.

<sup>59</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 250.

<sup>60</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 25.

<sup>61</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, pp. 100, 217.

<sup>62</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 119.

<sup>63</sup> Close, 21 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 5.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid. 27 Edw. III, m. 25. Sir Thomas Holand was created Earl of Kent in 1369. His grandson, Edmund Holand, tenth Earl of Kent, died without issue in 1408 (G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iv, 351-2).

<sup>65</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 12 Hen. IV, no. 35.

<sup>66</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 376-7.

<sup>67</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 7 Hen. VI, no. 7.

<sup>68</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vi, 357.

<sup>69</sup> Pat. 1 Ric. III, pt. ii, m. 5.

<sup>70</sup> G.E.C. Peerage. The Nevills, Earls of Westmorland, held their share till 1549, when Henry Nevill, the fifth earl, sold it to William Paulet (Recov. R. Hil. 3 Edw. VI, rot. 307).

<sup>71</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. iii, m. 38; Recov. R. Hil. 3 Edw. VI, rot. 307; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccccxlvi, 102. See also Andover.

common of pasture to be observed by the tenants of the manor;<sup>72</sup> and ten years later a similar order was issued that the men of the manor of Basingstoke were to be prohibited from cutting the corn of the manor before it was ripe.<sup>73</sup> It was nearly the end of the 14th century before they were sufficiently independent to draw up on their own account a set of 'Regulations and customs of the manor.'<sup>74</sup>

When the fee-farm rent was granted to Edmund de Woodstock he had also a grant of free warren 'in his demesne lands of Basingstoke,'<sup>75</sup> but it appears that the men of the town resented the idea that he was in any sense the lord of their manor. In 1330 a suit brought before the bailiffs of the town in which the plaintiff produced the king's writ of right was rejected because the writ was directed to 'the bailiff of Edmund late Earl of Kent at Basingstoke,' 'whereas,' they declared, 'Edmund had naught in the said town except the ferm.'<sup>76</sup> There is no evidence that any further effort was made to impose a mesne lord of the manor upon Basingstoke. The bailiffs remained the king's bailiffs till they became the 'bailiffs of the men of Basingstoke.' They now had all the official business of the town in their hands; the reeve is not mentioned after the middle of the 13th century. They were now as before elected yearly from among the men of the town, and their duties were to 'hold the king's courts, and do whatever appertains to justice.' The assize of bread and ale, the return of writs, the gallows and the pillory, which had been granted to the town by Henry III,<sup>77</sup> were all under the control of the bailiffs. There is a record of one man who escaped their justice. In 1261 the sheriff of the county was ordered to take bail for William le Neweman 'confined in Winchester prison, being innocent of robbing the church of Steventon, and of breaking from the prison of Basingstoke, for which he was hanged, but escaped by the breaking of a cord.'<sup>78</sup>

The privilege of incorporation came to Basingstoke earlier than to most towns, and it came as the result of one of its series of misfortunes by fire. When in 1392 the town was devastated the inhabitants petitioned the king for relief, and he, 'taking into consideration the serious injury and utter loss which the good men of the town of Basingstoke have sustained . . . and from which they will necessarily suffer for a long time,' gave them relief in the form of a licence to become a perpetual community of themselves, and to have a common seal.<sup>79</sup>

This charter, like others of the same date, was lacking in the careful legal phraseology and the attention to details which appear in the later charters of the town. It gave the corporation no legal name, nor did it make any rules with regard to public offices, but it was effective as giving the freeholders power to deal with land as a corporate body. They took advantage of this privilege in 1399, when the bailiffs, with the consent of the entire commonalty, demised to Henry Clerke, shepherd, and his wife Joan a toft with twenty acres 'at Northbrook,' for a rent of 5s. to be rendered to the fee-farm of the town. In this deed, the first in existence to which the common seal of Basingstoke was affixed, the commonalty is described as consisting of the 'good men' of the town.<sup>80</sup> In a sense, though the term was not yet applied, every free suitor was a burgess. He took part in the election of the bailiffs, and assisted in holding the manorial courts, at first in the name of the king, later in the name of the corporation. Other officials now begin to be mentioned; the sub-bailiffs or constables, responsible for keeping the peace,<sup>81</sup> and four assessors, who sat in the courts to assess the amount of the fines to be paid by delinquents.<sup>82</sup> As early as 1444 there was a steward of the manor, who was concerned with the maintenance of manorial rights.<sup>83</sup>

There were two courts held at Basingstoke—the court of the hundred held every third Saturday throughout the year and the court leet or view of frankpledge.<sup>84</sup> The most important business of the hundred court was to determine by writ of right all controversies relating to right to land within the manor and hundred. It also took cognizance of everything which tended to the keeping of the peace, settlement of disputes and of personal actions of debt and trespass where the debt or damage did not amount to 40s. as well as the general administration of justice. Also at the first hundred court coming in due course on the first, second or third Saturday after the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross (14 September) the bailiffs and other officials were elected. The court leet or view of frankpledge at which most of the business of the manor or hundred was transacted was held twice a year, in April and November, the two courts being called 'The Tourn of Hock' and 'The Tourn of St. Martin.' All the free suitors of the manor came and paid their suit of court, and each tithing in the hundred sent its tithingman (an elected official) to report on its condition. Basingstoke itself was also represented by its tithingman. The bailiffs presided over the court, and a jury of twelve free suitors heard the presentments of the tithingmen and made others themselves. They also nominated the tithingmen yearly at the view held in November from certain names submitted to them, and elected both a mower to look after the meadow or marsh land called The Wildmoor and an ale-taster. Another of their duties was the control of the assize of bread and ale. The matters brought before the court were many and diverse—slight breaches of the peace, irregularities in trade, the sanitary arrangements of the town, and offences against manorial custom. A very common offence was the neglect of the ditches and gutters, each man being responsible apparently for the part of a ditch near his own holding. Entries such as 'Richard at Howke has a foul gutter standing out beyond the north entrance of the hospice Le Swan, in the common street, to the common nuisance of the people of the lord king, therefore he is at mercy, fined 8d.,' occur in almost every court roll. So do records of the fining of tradesmen who have charged excessive prices for their goods, while persons of both sexes were frequently fined or subjected to more severe punishment for being 'common abusers,' or scolds, 'to the detriment of all.'

<sup>72</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 72.

<sup>73</sup> Ibid. 72-3.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid. 213.

<sup>75</sup> Chart R. 14 Edw. II, m. 5.

<sup>76</sup> Close, 4 Edw. III, m. 41.

<sup>77</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), 221-2.

<sup>78</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 68.

<sup>79</sup> Chart R. 15-17 Ric. II, m. 21.

<sup>80</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 249.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid. 287.

<sup>82</sup> Ibid. 245, 293.

<sup>83</sup> Ibid. 274.

<sup>84</sup> See the court rolls of Basingstoke, extracts from which are printed in Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 247-356.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

It is interesting to trace through the court rolls the gradual growth of independence on the part of the inhabitants of the town. Down to the 16th century they are always 'the good men and tenants of the king in Basingstoke.' The bailiffs are the 'bailiffs of the lord king in Basingstoke,' and any breach of manorial custom is an offence against the king. Gradually these expressions begin to change. The king's tenants become 'the good men of the manor,' the pound of the town is 'the pound of the good men of Basingstoke,' not of the king. And in 1543 the view of frankpledge is described as 'the court of the good men of the town and of their manor.' Thus before 1622, the next great landmark in the history of Basingstoke, the men of the town were to all intents and purposes lords of the manor. Meanwhile in the 16th century they placed the holder of the fee-farm rent in a definite position with regard to the town which must have been advantageous both to them and himself. In 1551 Sir William Paulet, into whose hands the rent had just come, was elected Lord High Steward of the town, and his successors continued to hold the office until the 19th century. It never carried with it any very definite duties, though the holder was always a justice of the peace of the borough. The ordinary duties of the steward were from the first discharged by a deputy.

In 1622 James I gave the town a second charter and a new administrative and judicial system.<sup>85</sup> 'Under whatever name or names they had previously been incorporated,' the men of the town were now to be a community or body public under the name 'the bailiffs and burgesses of Basingstoke,' and the town was to be a 'free borough.' The main body of the freeholders were deprived of the elective franchise, and a close corporation took their place, consisting of fourteen burgesses and two bailiffs, the latter to be elected annually from and by the burgesses. Vacancies in the corporation were to be filled up by the election of suitable inhabitants of the town, nominated and voted for by the burgess body. The burgesses and bailiffs for the first year of the corporation's existence were appointed by the Crown. The king did as a matter of fact nominate the two bailiffs who had been elected under the old régime,<sup>86</sup> otherwise the inhabitants of the town would have had no voice whatever in the choosing of their officials. The office of high steward was recognized by the Crown, and William Marquess of Winchester was appointed during the will of the bailiffs and burgesses. An under-steward, a town clerk, and two serjeants-at-mace were also appointed.<sup>87</sup>

The old manorial courts under this new charter were robbed of much of their importance. The court of the hundred disappeared altogether, its functions being transferred to a new court of record, which was to be held every Tuesday. The court leet was still to be held, and the justices of the peace—the high steward, under-steward, and bailiffs for the time being—were empowered to exact fines and amercements therein; but a general session of the peace took over its functions of dealing summarily with small offences. A town gaol, granted for the 'safe housing of prisoners,' was to be under the control of the bailiffs. The tolls of the markets and fairs were to be paid to the bailiffs and burgesses towards the expenses of the town.

The new officials of Basingstoke took the oaths of office in July 1622.<sup>88</sup> They approached their new duties with becoming seriousness. In 1625 a memorandum was made that it was ordered and decreed by Thomas Hall and Richard Spier, bailiffs, and George Baynard and others, burgesses, 'that they and the other burgesses of the town should at or before the next sessions . . . provide gowns decent and fit for their places, and from time to time wear them at the assemblies for the town affairs on pain of 100s.'<sup>89</sup> Five years afterwards they made an arrangement by which they were to meet in the Town Hall on the first Monday in each month to discuss the affairs of the town. The penalty for absence was 2s. 6d.<sup>90</sup> A much more severe penalty was imposed soon afterwards on any of the burgesses who should 'hereafter rehearse or repeat any words, passages, or acts which have formerly occasioned any difference among them.'<sup>91</sup>

In 1633-4 the corporation made a new plan for the good government of the town. It was agreed that the bailiffs and burgesses should form themselves into committees, each committee to deal with a different part of the town area. They were to frequent the part assigned to them, and 'take notice of the carriage and behaviour of such persons as do reside and dwell within their respective limits and circuits; survey and note the number of the persons in each poor family, and how they are employed and set to work, that such course may be taken for the reformation of the ill-mannered and behaviour of such persons as are of lewd conversation as to justice appertaineth, and care taken for the relief of such persons as are in necessity and poverty.'<sup>92</sup>

The town was governed according to the charter of James I for only 19 years. In 1641 Charles I reconstructed the corporation, which was henceforth to consist of a mayor, 7 aldermen, and 7 burgesses, with a high steward, a recorder, a town-clerk and 2 serjeants-at-mace.<sup>93</sup> The aldermen were to be elected from among the burgesses and the mayor from among the aldermen. Otherwise the new charter made very little difference. The electing body was as before the corporation. All its members were elected for life, as before, and there was a decided tendency for it to become a body consisting entirely of friends and kinsmen. As there were so few aldermen, the same person was necessarily mayor of the town for an indefinite number of times. The office of recorder was created by this charter. The holder of it was to be judge of the court of record and a justice of the peace for the borough.

The charter of 1641 remained in force till the reorganization of the borough system in 1835. The report on Basingstoke made in that year shows a fairly satisfactory state of affairs. The only complaint made against the corporation was that it neglected to fill up vacancies in the burgess body, and frequently preferred outsiders to the inhabitants of the town.<sup>94</sup> The old manorial court leet had by this time fallen into

<sup>85</sup> Pat. 20 Jas. I, pt. viii, no. 1. The original grant is in the possession of the Corporation of Basingstoke.

<sup>86</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 439.

<sup>87</sup> Pat. 20 Jas. I, pt. viii, no. 1.

<sup>88</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 443-4. At the same time every free suitor took an oath to be true and faithful to them as lords of the manor.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid. 453.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid. 453-4.

<sup>91</sup> Ibid. 454.

<sup>92</sup> Ibid. 454-5; cf. Winchester.

<sup>93</sup> Pat. 17 Chas. I, pt. vi.

<sup>94</sup> Munic. Corp. Rep. i, App. pt. ii.

disuse. It still had jurisdiction over its nineteen tithings, but its functions were 'reduced to the appointment of tithingmen and the return of residents within the respective tithings.' The court of record had only tried one action for sixteen years, its disuse being attributed to the nature of its rules and the inadequacy of its fees, and the court of pie powder had not been used in the memory of the authorities. All offences not touching life or limb were tried at the half-yearly sessions or petty sessions, held once a week. There was also sometimes held a court of ancient demesne, at which fines were levied and recoveries suffered of ancient demesne lands within the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>95</sup>

The Municipal Corporations Act remedied the abuse of the electoral system by giving the franchise to all the inhabitants of the town. Twelve town councillors were to be elected from among them and four aldermen. The mayor was to be elected from among the aldermen and councillors. One-half of the aldermen were to go out of office every three years and one-third of the town councillors.<sup>96</sup> This is the arrangement in force at the present day. In 1888 the maintenance of a separate police force for the borough was stopped. It is now under the control of the county police.

Basingstoke has had a common seal since the charter of Richard II in 1392, the grant being confirmed by the other charters of incorporation.<sup>97</sup> It is circular and of the size of a penny, ornamented with a figure of St. Michael, the patron saint of the town, slaying the dragon.

Another seal used by the corporation is stamped with a heraldic rose, and the inscription:—'Sigill. Vill. de Basingstoke, in com. Southton.'<sup>98</sup>

Two members of Parliament were returned for Basingstoke in 1295, 1302 and 1306, but the inhabitants of the town found the custom such a trouble and expense that it ceased at their petition.<sup>99</sup>

A market existed in Basingstoke at the time of the Domesday Survey. It was apparently held on a Sunday, but the day was changed to Monday in 1203.<sup>100</sup> Eleven years afterwards Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester, granted, on behalf of the king, that the day should henceforth be changed to Wednesday,<sup>101</sup> 'in order that this market may not be injurious to other markets.' In 1829 (10 Geo. IV) an Act was passed vesting the market in the hands of certain commissioners therein named and also for enlarging the market. In 1900 the powers of the commissioners were transferred by deed to the mayor and corporation of Basingstoke. The market is still held on Wednesday and another is also held on Saturday.<sup>101a</sup>

The first grant of a fair to the men of Basingstoke was made by Henry VI in 1449, when he confirmed all previous charters and granted an annual fair to be held about and around the chapel of the Holy Ghost from Wednesday in Whitsun week till the following Friday.<sup>102</sup> Another must have been granted between then and 1622, for the charter of James I mentions 'two fairs of ancient date'; 'one kept within the town on the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, and the other on Wednesday in Whitsun week . . . continued . . . until the hour of twelve of the Friday then following.'<sup>103</sup> These were confirmed to the town by both James I and Charles I.<sup>104</sup> Charles II in 1671 added a grant of two new fairs to be held on Basingstoke Down, one on the Tuesday and Wednesday after Easter, the other on the 10th and 11th of September.<sup>105</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse, writing in 1778, mentions four fairs held respectively on the Wednesday in Whitsun week, Michaelmas Day, Easter Tuesday, and 23 September.<sup>106</sup> The last of these seems to have been discontinued before 1784, when the fairs regularly held were 'At Basingstoke, Whit Wednesday and 10 October; Basingstoke Down, Easter Tuesday,'<sup>107</sup> but by 1792 the latter fair was transferred to 23 September. In 1888 two fairs only were held, on 13 July and 11 October,<sup>107a</sup> and these ceased before 1905.

The manufacture of woollen goods was practised in Basingstoke from an early date. John Finian, a merchant of Basingstoke, had licence to export wool in 1273.<sup>108</sup> In a list of tradesmen of the town given on a court roll of 1456 fullers of cloth and dyers of cloth are mentioned.<sup>109</sup> The trade had been regulated by statute before 1588, when Awsten Phillip was presented for following the art of clothing in his house contrary to the queen's statute.<sup>110</sup> Further complaint was made that the clothiers of the town 'put out their wool to the todmen, which was a great wrong, and a great impoverishment to the poor craftsmen of the town.'<sup>111</sup>

During the 17th century the trade of Basingstoke was very much depressed,<sup>112</sup> and the woollen industry suffered with the rest. The clothiers of the town petitioned in 1631 to the justices of the peace for Hampshire. They 'heretofore made in Basingstoke 30 broadcloths and 100 kersies, which employed the poor of 80 parishes.' In 1631 'there are not more than 7 broadcloths and 20 kersies made weekly, and their cloth lies on their hands, the merchants refusing to buy, whereby the petitioners are discouraged and the poor daily increase.'<sup>113</sup> It appears from an investigation made into the matter two years later that the decay of the industry was partly due to the fault of the manufacturers. The cloth of Reading, Newbury and Basingstoke was, it appears, 'more falsely made than white cloth ever was;' and partly owing to this and partly to the introduction of 'an excellent sort of cloth called Spanish cloth,' the manufacture of which was under no restriction,<sup>114</sup> it found no sale. It was proposed that the manufacture of Spanish cloth should be regulated,<sup>115</sup> but it seems to have been too late to resuscitate the old industry, which was further paralysed by the Civil War. A

<sup>95</sup> Munc. Corp. Rep. i, App. pt. ii.

<sup>96</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John A. Kingdon, Town Clerk of Basingstoke.

<sup>97</sup> Chart. R. 15-17 Ric. II, m. 21.

<sup>98</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 63.

<sup>99</sup> Ibid. 77; Hants N. & Q. i, 13.

<sup>100</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 361.

<sup>101</sup> Close, 16 John, pt. iii, m. 5.

<sup>101a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John A. Kingdon, Town Clerk of Basingstoke.

<sup>102</sup> Chart. R. 27-39 Hen. VI, no. 47.

<sup>103</sup> Pat. 20 Jas. I, pt. viii, no. 1.

<sup>104</sup> Ibid.; Pat. 17 Chas. I, pt. vi, no. 11.

<sup>105</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1671, p. 273.

<sup>106</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>107</sup> Sadler, Hants Dir. (1784).

<sup>107a</sup> Rep. on Markets and Tolls, i, 166.

<sup>108</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. I, m. 8 d.

<sup>109</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 284.

<sup>110</sup> Ibid. 355.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid.

<sup>112</sup> The secretary of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, who passed through Basingstoke in 1669, speaks of the 'total absence of trade' in the town (Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 80).

<sup>113</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1629-31, p. 481.

<sup>114</sup> Ibid. 1633-4, p. 86.

<sup>115</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

letter written from Basingstoke in 1642 describes the 'great charge' laid on the clothiers of the town by the demands of Royalist gentlemen who gathered there to meet the king.<sup>116</sup>

The trade of malting has also been carried on in the town for many centuries. In 1720 it was apparently the chief industry of Basingstoke, and one of the richest maltsters in the country was resident there.<sup>117</sup> References to the tanning of leather also appear on the earliest court rolls.<sup>118</sup>

At the present day in Basingstoke there are still manufactories of clothing, malt houses and breweries, though the manufacture of agricultural implements has superseded these in importance.

There are also large ironworks and engineering works.

The descent of the manor of MANORS BASINGSTOKE is identical with that of the borough, as the burgesses held the whole manor of the Crown.

TAULKES, BASINGSTOKE MERTON, or WATERMARTENS Manor took its first name from the family of Tawke or Tauke, who held it for several generations. Its other names suggest some connexion with Walter de Merton, the nature of which is very difficult to understand, as most of the land held by Walter de Merton in Basingstoke was granted by him to St. John's Hospital.

TAUKE. Argent a text T gules and three wreaths vert in the chief.

Taulkes appears to have been one of those holdings which by gradual accumulation reach a sufficient size to be spoken of loosely as manors. There are indications, however, that in the 16th century it possessed a manorial court of its own. Several men were fined at the court leet of Basingstoke in 1541 for carrying meat, bread and ale 'out of the jurisdiction of the manor of Watermartens.'<sup>119</sup>

The first Tauke who held the manor inherited it from Thomas de Worthing,<sup>120</sup> who lived in the reign of Edward II, and left a daughter and heiress Maud.<sup>121</sup> She married William Tauke, who held 297½ acres in Basingstoke in 1311.<sup>122</sup> In the 15th century Edmund Tauke represented the family;<sup>123</sup> his name is frequently mentioned in the court rolls in connexion with acts of violence.<sup>124</sup> He was bailiff of the town in 1437-8.<sup>125</sup>

John son of Edmund succeeded him and died in

1480.<sup>126</sup> His son John died without issue,<sup>127</sup> and the manor was inherited by Joan, one of his two sisters, and wife of John Beausarvice.<sup>128</sup> Her son,<sup>129</sup> William Beausarvice, paid rental for the manor to the fee-farm of Basingstoke in 1519.<sup>130</sup> His sister and heir Elizabeth married John Fisher,<sup>131</sup> into whose possession the manor therefore came. His claim was disputed, however, by a certain William Bekynshale, who declared that the manor had been let to him to farm by William Beausarvice for a term of years. It appears in the usual way that John Fisher, John Green and others 'came armed to the said manor in the night time, and carried away the corn and wheat, which the complainant had cut, in a most riotous manner.'<sup>132</sup>

John Fisher, son of this John,<sup>133</sup> paid rental in 1541,<sup>134</sup> and died seised in 1545.<sup>135</sup> His son John died in 1591, having settled the property on his son William.<sup>136</sup> Two years later William Fisher sold it to Richard Deane,<sup>137</sup> who paid the rental in 1601,<sup>138</sup> and died in the same year.<sup>139</sup> His brother and heir was James Deane, who died without issue in 1608.<sup>140</sup> Five years later his next heirs sold the manor to John Hall,<sup>141</sup> who died seised in 1633,<sup>142</sup> leaving a son and heir John. The manor was still in the hands of the family in 1714, when it was conveyed by William Hall and Frances his wife to William Russel and John Hall.<sup>143</sup> Nothing more is heard of it, and it is no longer a manor.

Lands in Basingstoke were inherited by Walter de Merton and granted by him in the 13th century to endow the hospital of St. John the Baptist here. The hospital was made dependent on Merton College, Oxford, in 1336, and its endowments are college property at the present day.<sup>144</sup>

MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD. Or three chevrons parted and counter-coloured gules and azure.

Three mills in Basingstoke are mentioned at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>145</sup> One remains at the present day a water-mill on the Loddon. It is difficult to trace the separate history of these mills. One called the King's Mill was taken into the hands of the Crown in 1277-8 because Hugh de Kingsmill had alienated it without licence to John de St. John.<sup>146</sup> In 1399 Walter, muleward of Kingsmill, was fined with two other millers for taking toll contrary to the statute.<sup>147</sup> In the next century it was in the hands of the Cowdray family. John Kybulwhite, heir of Peter Cowdray, <sup>116</sup> 'They demanded two thousand yards of woollen cloth and five hundred yards of linnen at fourteene pence the yard. So the linnen drapers brought theirs in, but the clothiers and woollen drapers made no great haste so they served themselves some at one shop and a greater quantity at another' (Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 432).

<sup>117</sup> Camden, Britannia, 865.

<sup>118</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 240 ff.

<sup>119</sup> Ibid. 333.

<sup>120</sup> Ibid. 201.

<sup>121</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 234.

<sup>122</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 200.

<sup>123</sup> According to Berry, William Tauke left a son Robert, whose heir was his son Thomas living in the reign of Hen. II (Berry, Hants Gen. 234).

<sup>124</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 261, 266, 271.

<sup>125</sup> Ibid. 435.

<sup>126</sup> Ibid. 380.

<sup>127</sup> De Banc. R. Hil. 18 Hen. VII, m.

<sup>128</sup> Ibid.; Baigent & Millard, op. cit.

380.

<sup>129</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 234.

<sup>130</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 382.

<sup>131</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 234.

<sup>132</sup> Star Chamb. Proc. bdle. 22, no.

346.

<sup>133</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 234.

<sup>134</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 385.

<sup>135</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxv, 56.

<sup>136</sup> Ibid. ccxxii, 52.

<sup>137</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 35 Eliz.

<sup>138</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 388.

<sup>139</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 129.

<sup>140</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlv,

47.

<sup>141</sup> Notes of F. Hants, East. 9 Jas. I,

142; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 11 Jas. I.

<sup>142</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), d, 25.

<sup>143</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 1 Geo. I.

<sup>144</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, ii, 210.

<sup>145</sup> Ibid. i, 456.

<sup>146</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 30.

<sup>147</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 243-5.

paid 10s. for relief in 1464-5 on his kinsman's death.<sup>148</sup> Before 1541 it seems to have been sold to the St. John family, for in that year Lord St. John paid rental for 'the mill called Kynges Myl,'<sup>149</sup> and William Marquess of Winchester did the same in 1601.<sup>150</sup>

A water-mill, possibly that in existence at the present day, was granted in 1318 by the king to Robert de Ewer. It had previously been granted to the king by William de Butworth.<sup>151</sup>

The third mill was known as Houndsmill,<sup>152</sup> and gave its name to a family which held estates in Basingstoke for many generations. In the 15th and 16th centuries the warden of New College, Winchester, paid rental for Houndsmill.<sup>153</sup>

The church of ST. MICHAEL CHURCHES consists of a chancel 36 ft. 7 in. by 16 ft. 1 in., south vestry 12 ft. 3 in. by 11 ft., south chapel 24 ft. 2 in. by 12 ft. 3 in., nave 67 ft. 5 in. by 21 ft., west tower 15 ft. 4 in. by 14 ft. 10 in., north and south aisles 18 ft. 9 in. wide flanking both nave and tower, and south porch with a parvise over. These measurements are taken within the building.

The earliest parts are the chancel, south chapel and vestry. The arches opening north and west from the south chapel look like 14th-century work, and the responds of the former arch, though now showing 15th-century detail in capitals and bases, may be as early. In an account roll of Selborne Priory for 1464-5 is an entry of £22 10s. for the new building of the chancel of Basingstoke Church; the contract price for the whole work is noted as £120, and it seems clear that the chancel took its present dimensions at this time. The nave was entirely rebuilt and no doubt enlarged early in the 16th century, with its aisles and the tower. There was also an intention to rebuild the chancel and chapel, but it was never carried out; preparation was made by the insertion of a large archway in the east wall of the south aisle; it was partly closed up until the south chapel should be enlarged, and so remains. The south porch appears to have been a slightly later addition; it was apparently building in 1539<sup>154</sup>; beyond this nothing else has been done but the insertion of galleries and the usual restorations. A west gallery carrying the organ formerly stood in the tower; this has been removed, the organ being put in the south chapel, and again removed recently to the west end of the south gallery. The nave roof was renewed in 1841, and the church was reseated and repaved, the old floor slabs being destroyed or covered over.

The east window has five cinquefoiled lights under a traceried two-centred head; the tracery is modern, but the inner quoins, etc., belong to the original 15th-century work. The two north chancel windows are each of three cinquefoiled lights under four-centred heads; they are of 15th-century date excepting the outside of the first window and parts of the outside of the second. A doorway between them is also old, it has a four-centred arch under a square head and moulded label with shield stops on which are illegible inscriptions. In the spandrels are shields with the letters IHS and MA respectively, and another in the middle of the label has been read as a date, 1525. On the south side are two arches, the first spanning a large recess, with jambs and two-centred arch of square section; a doorway set askew in it gives admission to the vestry in its north-west corner and another arch and skew passage opens into the south chapel; the second large arch has half-round responds with moulded octagonal bases and capitals and an arch of two hollow-chamfered orders. Part of its west respond is buried in the later buttress which abuts the nave arcade; west of the archway is a blocked doorway with a four-centred head which once gave admission to a rood-stair turret. The chancel arch is old; the jambs, which are square on the west face and cut back askew on the east, probably belong to the same date as the chancel; the arch is moulded with a wide hollow between two double ogee moulds and has more the appearance of having been put in when the nave was rebuilt; its moulded label has for stops a bishop's and a queen's head, both modern. To the north of the archway is a squint from the north of the nave; the axial line of the chancel being to the south of that of the nave, there is a larger space of wall there.

The south vestry has its east wall flush with that of the chancel; it is pierced by a window of three plain lights with four-centred heads under a square label, original with the wall but partly repaired; the doorway into it across the north-west angle is also old and has a two-centred head. Four corbels (two in the east wall and two in the west) suggest the former existence of an upper floor. In the south wall of the chapel is a piscina with a plain four-centred head; the two south windows have old inner quoins and lintels but modern tracery; each is of two cinquefoiled lights with tracery under a square head; the arch opening into the south aisle has a four-centred head of two hollow-chamfered orders dying in the side walls without responds. When the aisle was built a larger archway was provided for future extension; its south jamb is traced by a straight joint in the walling, and its two-centred segmental arch, which is moulded, can be seen outside. The walling of the chancel, vestry and chapel is of flint with stone dressings; the two eastern angles have modern diagonal buttresses of flint and stone.

The nave arcades are each of four bays; the piers have engaged three-quarter shafts between wide hollow chamfers and the bases are moulded and rise some five feet above the floor (the floor having recently been lowered the foundations of the piers are now exposed); the capitals are moulded, their members being unusually ill-proportioned; the arches are four-centred and—like the chancel arch—have a wide hollow between two double ogee moulds, and a moulded label; above the arcades is a clearstory lighted by four windows a side, each of three cinquefoiled lights under four-centred heads; the jambs and mullions are moulded. The parapets of the nave are embattled and the roof corbels are old, though repainted in 1841, and bear the royal arms of Henry VIII, of Magdalen College, Oxford, of Sir John Paulet, and of Bishop Fox of Winchester. The other heraldry is entirely modern.

<sup>148</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 295.

<sup>149</sup> Ibid. 384.

<sup>150</sup> Ibid. 388.

<sup>151</sup> Pat. 12 Edw. II, pt. 1, m. 9.

<sup>152</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 243.

<sup>153</sup> Ibid. 380, 383.

<sup>154</sup> Ibid. 31.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The north aisle windows are all alike in size and detail ; there are five in the north wall and one in the east, each of four cinquefoiled lights under traceried four-centred heads ; below the westernmost is a doorway with a four-centred arch in a square head ; the jambs and arch have two moulded orders separated by a hollow ; the spandrels have had their carvings of deeply undercut late Gothic foliage broken away. The wall outside is divided into five bays by buttresses, the two at the corners being set diagonally ; all three walls of the aisle have been faced externally with modern chequer work of flint and stone. The parapet string is moulded and has at intervals peculiarly coarse and ugly grotesque heads ; the coping is of brick.

The south aisle has four side-windows resembling those opposite ; between the third and fourth is the south doorway, which has moulded jambs and a four-centred arch under a square head with a moulded label ; the spandrels are carved with foliage of Renaissance detail and shields bearing the crossed spears and three nails of the Passion. The walling of the aisle is faced with large blocks of ashlar and has a plain moulded parapet with grotesques like those on the north side.

The tower, which is of three stages, has arches opening into the nave and both aisles ; their jambs are moulded with a wide hollow between two double ogees, and on the inner faces they have attached shafts with moulded bases and capitals ; some of the base-moulds and the greater part of the shafts of the eastern arch are of modern stone. The arches are four-centred and of three orders of double ogees, the outer two continuous from the jambs. The west doorway is wholly modern, and it is doubtful if one existed originally ; it has moulded jambs and four-centred arch ; the window over it is of four cinquefoiled lights under a traceried four-centred head ; it has been partly repaired in modern times. The second stage has a west window of two cinquefoiled lights under a two-centred traceried head ; the third stage or bell-chamber has similar lights in each wall, those to the north and south being now partly hidden by clock faces. At the north-west corner is an octagonal stair turret ; its entrance is now outside on its north face, but was formerly by a four-centred doorway—now blocked—on its south-west face ; the turret is in five stages and is finished by an eight-sided pyramidal stone roof which stands up above its embattled and pinnaced parapet ; the other three corners of the tower are strengthened by smaller octagonal turrets, which are solid ; these also have embattled cornices and plain tall pinnacles. The pinnacles were added in 1879. The parapet of the tower itself is embattled and has grotesques projecting from its moulded string course. The walling of the tower is faced with ashlar.

The south porch is ashlar faced of smaller stones than those of the aisle ; it has an outer doorway with moulded jambs and four-centred arch, and is lighted by a window of two plain four-centred lights to the east. East of the doorway in the aisle wall is a hollow recess, probably the remains of a holy water stock. A modern wood stairway gives access to the parvise above now used as a vestry ; it is lighted south and east by square windows of three lights with plain four-centred heads ; their mullions are modern. The former entrance was through a doorway in the west wall, which has moulded jambs and four-centred heads ; it is now filled in. Over the outer doorway and below the window is a recess in which are the remains of a Crucifixion ; the central figure has been entirely destroyed, and the two side figures have had their heads demolished. A moulded string course divides the two stones ; the parapet is embattled and has grotesque heads projecting from its string course.

The roof of the chancel is of high pitch ; most of its timbers are old, the cornice and tie-beams are moulded, above which are four-centred arched trusses and the chamfered purlins are strengthened by arched wind-braces. The nave has a flat roof, divided into four bays by moulded tie-beams resting on stone corbels, carved with angels carrying shields of arms ; the angels in the corners are set diagonally ; each bay is divided into twelve squares by moulded ridge purlins and intermediates.

The aisles have flat roofs with moulded timbers, and in the south aisle narrow bands of sunk tracery ornament the principals and ridge piece.

Both aisles have galleries running their whole length with modern fronts ; they are approached by stairs at the west end.

Little traces of old arrangements remain ; on the north jamb of the chancel arch is a small bracket for an image or a light for the north nave altar, and at the west end of the nave a framed drawing shows the decoration over the chancel arch discovered in 1850, and destroyed. It was of late 16th-century date or early 17th ; the Commandments filled the upper portion of the wall, and below were two large medallions, one having a Tudor rose with the words 'Deum time,' and the other the Prince of Wales's feathers and ICH DINE (sic).

All the furniture of the church is of modern date ; the font, which stands under the tower, is elaborately carved and has a tall traceried oak canopy over it. An altar (with a large triptych) was fitted up in the south chapel in 1907. The east window of the north aisle is fitted with old glass, mostly of early 16th-century date with Renaissance detail and of very beautiful colour and design. It is, unfortunately, very fragmentary, having come from the Holy Ghost Chapel in 1869. Parts of several subjects, such as the Agony in the Garden, the Meeting of Mary and Elizabeth, and the Annunciation, are recognizable. The arms of Sandys, Argent a ragged cross sable, and the quarterly coat of Bray are glazed in with the rest. Over the tower arch are the royal arms of Elizabeth, dated 1596, and at the west end of the south aisle those of James I.

The poor-box standing under the tower has a modern top, but stands on a carved baluster leg of Elizabethan character.

There were, before 1890, painted shields in the spandrels of the nave arcades with the arms of Sandys impaling Bray, Paulet, Magdalen College, Oxford, Deane, Lancaster, and Blunden.

The altars in the church mentioned in rolls were, besides the high altar of St. Michael, those of our Lady, St. Stephen, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and the Jesus altar. St. Katherine's light is also mentioned.

There are eight bells : the treble is by Warner, 1878, a recasting of one by Lester & Pack, 1766 ; the second is by Edward Read, Aldbourne, 1751 ; the third by Warner, 1878, recast from one of 1812 ; the fourth by Thomas Mears, 1841; the fifth by Henry Knight, 1670; the sixth is of pre-Reformation date and is inscribed 'Sancta Margrita ora pro nobis'; the seventh bears in two lines 'God be our gyd, Richard Colle, John Arme, John Blundene, 1602, William Cowdry, RW  H.S.'; and the tenor is by Henry Knight, 1670.

The plate consists of three silver and one silver-gilt chalice of 1726, 1865, 1863 and 1895 respectively, that of 1865 having been given by J. E. Millard, vicar; three silver and one silver-gilt patens of 1811, 1865, 1879 and 1895 respectively, that of 1865 having been given by J. B. W. Woolnough, curate; a silver flagon of 1819, given by James Blatch, vicar, and a silver bowl of 1730.

There are nine books of registers; the first contains baptisms, burials and marriages from 1638 to 1687; the second and fourth baptisms and marriages from 1687 to 1738 and 1738 to 1797 (marriages only to 1754) respectively; the third, fifth and seventh burials from 1692 to 1739, 1739 to 1797 and 1797 to 1813 respectively; the eighth baptisms from 1798 to 1813; the sixth and ninth marriages from 1754 to 1807 and 1807 to 1813 respectively.

All that now remains of the chapel of the HOLY GHOST is a portion of the apsidal east end, the south wall with a south-west hexagonal turret, and a small portion of the return west wall. The length inside from east to west is 53 ft. 6 in., and the original width was about 24 ft.

This building, which now passes by the name of the Holy Ghost Chapel, is really the chapel of the Holy Trinity, built by Lord Sandys on the south side of the chancel of the Holy Ghost Chapel, which has now entirely disappeared. It had a half-hexagonal east end like the Trinity Chapel, and perhaps added at the same time, and opened at the west to a nave, the plan of which is given in Baigent & Millard's History of Basingstoke.<sup>155</sup> At the west end of the nave was a tower, the lower parts of the walls of which still stand.

The appearance of the chapel in 1669 has been preserved in a view taken for Cosmo III, Grand Duke of Tuscany, and published in an account of his travels in 1821.

Enough remains to show that the Trinity Chapel was a beautiful building in the style transitional between late Gothic and early Renaissance, with red brick walls faced with wrought stone. It had a half-hexagonal east end with a window in each of its three sides, a body of four bays with windows in the first three, and a door in the fourth, and a west end in which was a gallery, reached by a stair in a south-west turret. All the windows were apparently the same and had deeply-moulded inside and outside jambs, and three cinquefoiled lights under four-centred heads. Near the west end of the south wall is a large breach showing the site of a doorway, and over it the remains of a square-headed three-light window. Between each two windows on the outside was a canopied niche resting on octagonal attached pillars, with panelled faces and moulded bases. The pedestals of the niches are richly carved with foliage between shields, the only recognizable device being a demi-griffin on a torse. The canopies were richly carved with finials, pinnacles and crockets of late Gothic design, but show no distinctly classic detail.

The south-west turret contained a stair, now destroyed. It was entered from the north-west and also through the chapel from the north, having an upper doorway, still fairly perfect, which led to a gallery across the west of the chapel. In its spandrels are shields, on one of which a cross raguly is still visible. Externally it is of three stages divided by moulded strings.

In the top stage is a single light with a four-centred head under a square label in each of the outside faces. Above these is a moulded cornice with a shield in the middle of each face, and gargoyles at the angles, and the elevation was finished with embattled parapets, now nearly all destroyed. On the shields are the following devices and arms:—North-west face, <sup>W</sup><sub>M S</sub> for William and Margery Sandys; west face, a winged demi-goat (the Sandys crest); south-west, a ragged cross (Sandys of the Vyne); south-east, the quarterly coat of Bray, and east a brake, the Bray badge.

The four external angles of the turret have attached polygonal shafts enriched with lozenge-diaper which stops at a moulded string course with acanthus leaves growing round the shaft immediately above the string. These shafts support canopied niches as in the south wall, but all their details are of Renaissance character. On the heads of the lights below the niches are various Sandys badges, &c., as on the cornice of the tower, including <sup>M S</sup><sub>M S</sub> for Margery Sandys, the motto Good Hope, the Sandys coat, &c. The details, which have only lately been freed from masses of ivy, are of admirable design. The roof of the chapel, which in 1720 was mentioned as having on it the 'history of the Apostles, Prophets and Disciples of Christ very artificially described,' has entirely perished, and the size of the buttresses makes it unlikely that it was a stone vault. To the north-west of this chapel is the ruined base of the west tower of the Holy Ghost Chapel, which is of 13th-century date; the walls are of rubble, and appear to be built in two thicknesses with a hollow between, and at the angles there are brick buttresses.

The west wall contains a 15th-century doorway with moulded jambs and four-centred head, above which is a window of the same date with three trefoiled lights and a transom; the mullions are gone. This building was used as a school from 1670 to 1844, but is now entirely ruined and covered with ivy.

The piece of north wall contains a small trefoiled light, with a wood frame in an outer rebate, looking like late 13th-century work. A new chapel and school seem to have been in building in 1636, from the Holy Ghost Chapel accounts, but no part of the ruins can date from this time.

Two recumbent effigies lie among the tombs near the ruins; one is that of a knight, dating from the latter part of the 13th century, and is now headless and in a very dilapidated condition, the surface being worn away and the right arm and the legs below the knees broken off; the figure wears mail and over it a long surcoat; on the left side is a shield now defaced, and the left hand appears to be grasping the hilt of a sword; the legs were crossed, and an angel supported the head on either side. The effigy was discovered in 1817, apparently in position in a recess of the north wall of the chancel.

<sup>155</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 156.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The other figure is that of a man in a long gown of Elizabethan date; the effigy is of very poor style, and has nothing by which it might be identified.

Several pieces belonging to the tomb of William Lord Sandys, 1542, lie among the ruins of the chapel, the most notable being one of its sides, bearing the Sandys arms between two circular sinkings inclosing his badge of a rose halved with a sun. The material is a dark marble, called in the original contract, now at Antwerp, of 1 March 1536, 'pierre d'Antoing.' The tomb was made by 'Arnoult Termassone, natif d'Austerdamm en Hollande, à présent demeurant à Aire en Artois,' and it was to have on it a cross of copper engraved with the names of Lord Sandys and Margery his wife.<sup>156</sup> There was to be a second tomb set under an arch in the wall between the chapel and the chancel, but nothing is said of its inscription: the pieces which remain perhaps belong to it, as they do not tally with the contract for Lord Sandys' tomb, which was to have three shields of arms on each long side.

Part of a slab to one of the Cufaud family, of early 17th-century date, also remains. There was a famous image of the Holy Ghost here, to which several contemporary references are extant: it was destroyed about 1536.

ALL SAINTS' temporary iron church in Southern Road is attached to the parish church, as are also two mission rooms, one, the St. Thomas' Home Chapel in Reading Road, and the other in May Street.

All Saints' possesses a silver chalice and paten of 1902. The St. Thomas' Home Chapel has a silver chalice and paten of 1864 and a silver-gilt chalice and paten of 1866. Two of the vessels belonging to St. Michael's, the silver chalice and paten of 1863 and 1879, are used at the May Street Mission.

It is not clear at what date there ADVOWSON was first a church at Basingstoke, though it seems certain that at the time of the Domesday Survey there was only one church for Basing and Basingstoke, and that was the church of Basing.<sup>157</sup> When one was built at Basingstoke it was at first a chapel dependent upon Basing Church, and like it in the possession of the Abbot and convent of Mont St. Michel in Normandy, who held it of the gift of the king.<sup>158</sup>

In 1233 the 'churches of Basinge and Basingestok' were transferred by the abbot to the patronage of Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester,<sup>159</sup> and the grant was confirmed by Henry III in 1233.<sup>160</sup> Early in the next year the bishop granted them to the priory of Selborne, which had just been founded.<sup>161</sup> The pope confirmed the appropriation of the churches to the priory two months later.<sup>162</sup> A vicarage was endowed in 1244,<sup>163</sup> and arrangements were made for the celebration of divine service in both churches.<sup>164</sup>

The vicar was to reside at Basingstoke, and two chaplains were to serve the church at Basingstoke and live in the house of the vicar there.<sup>165</sup> This began the gradual reversal of the position of the two churches,<sup>166</sup> which ended in the description of Basing as a chapelry of Basingstoke.<sup>167</sup>

The Prior and convent of Selborne continued to present vicars till the suppression of the priory.<sup>168</sup> The rectory and advowson of the vicarage then passed with the rest of the possessions of the priory<sup>169</sup> to the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, who present<sup>170</sup> at the present day. Basing was made a separate parish in 1864.<sup>171</sup>

The chapel of the Holy Ghost was in existence early in the 13th century, probably to celebrate masses for the souls of those buried in its Liten or burying-place.<sup>172</sup> A chaplain was maintained here by a voluntary association of certain people of the town in a gild called the Fraternity of the Holy Ghost. It appears that his salary was £6 13s. 4d., and he held his appointment at the will of the wardens of the gild. The latter was legalized by Henry VIII but suppressed by Edward VI. In 1556 it was revived and its endowments restored, with special provision for the maintenance of a chaplain, who was also to be responsible for the education of boys in the town. He was to be appointed by the aldermen and wardens of the gild, who from the reign of James I were elected from the members of the town corporation.<sup>173</sup> As a result of constant disputes between the corporation and the chaplains the matter was dealt with by the Court of Chancery. The management of the school was put into the hands of trustees and the appointment of a chaplain is now in the hands of the Crown and the town council.<sup>174</sup>

A chaplain for the hospital of St. John was maintained out of the endowment of Walter de Merton.<sup>175</sup> The warden of Merton College was responsible for appointing him, but appears to have frequently neglected the duty.<sup>176</sup> The chantry was thus surveyed in the 16th century: 'A stipendiary priest, founded of devotion to have continuance for ever in chapel in the said town called St. John's Chapel, standing near the parish church of Basingstoke, who has yearly for his stipend in ready money, paid out of the farm of St. John lying in the said town, which farm belongs to Merton College in Oxford, 20s.'<sup>177</sup> In 1697 a surveyor sent down to Basingstoke by Merton College reported as follows: 'There is a sort of chapel near in which formerly there was preaching once a month, and the tenant paying the curate and was on that account exempted from all tithes. It would be a mighty improvement to our estate and the tenant would be glad to pay a curate could the custom be revived, but I am afraid it has been disused too long.'<sup>178</sup>

The new Roman Catholic church, dedicated to the Holy Ghost and situated in Sherborne Road, was built in 1902.

<sup>156</sup> Le Beffroi (Bruges, 1872-3), iv, 202.

<sup>157</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>158</sup> Ibid.

<sup>159</sup> MSS. penes Magdalen Coll. Oxf.

<sup>160</sup> Chart. R. 17 Hen. III, m. 3.

<sup>161</sup> MSS. penes Magdalen Coll. Oxf.

<sup>162</sup> Ibid.

<sup>163</sup> Ibid.

<sup>164</sup> Ibid.; Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 14.

<sup>165</sup> Ibid.

<sup>166</sup> Presentations in the 14th century were made to 'the vicarage of Basingstoke.'

<sup>167</sup> Bacon, Liber Regis, 929.

<sup>168</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 151; 2032, fol. 37; 2034, fol. 160.

<sup>169</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 511.

<sup>170</sup> Inst. Bk. (P.R.O.).

<sup>171</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 27.

<sup>172</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, ii, 214 for a more complete account of the chapel.

<sup>173</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit.

<sup>174</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 384.

<sup>175</sup> Ibid. 210.

<sup>176</sup> Ibid.

<sup>177</sup> Chant. Cert. 52, no. 2.

<sup>178</sup> MSS. penes Merton Coll. Oxf.

BASINGSTOKE : HOLY GHOST CHAPEL

The Congregational church in London Street was erected in place of a chapel formerly in Cross Street in 1800 and enlarged in 1860. There is also a Congregational chapel at Worthing Town End.

The Countess of Huntingdon's chapel in Wote Street was built in 1802, and the new Primitive Methodist chapel on Sarum Hill in 1902.

There are barracks for the Salvation Army in Reading Road, and there are also Wesleyan and Particular Baptist chapels and places of worship for the Brethren and the Society of Friends.

The National School in Church Street was built in 1901 for 130 boys and girls and 230 infants. The Board School near the Southern Road was opened on 16 February 1888 for 1,300 children. A new Council school has quite recently been opened in Lower Brook Street.

The municipal charities are regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners, dated 11 July 1902. They comprise the charities of—

1. Duke of Bolton's gift founded by will 1694, consisting of an annual payment of £42, being part of a rent-charge issuing out of lands in the counties of Dorset, York and Southampton. The annuity—less land tax—is distributed to the poor annually.

2. The almshouses, founded by will of Sir James Deane, 1607, endowed with a sum of £1,837 18s. 7d. consols, being the proceeds of redemption of rent-charge of £55; £200 10s. consols, belonging to the charity of Robert Cottle and £695 1s. 5d. consols derived under the will of Francis Russell, 1798. The almshouses accommodate six poor widows of Basingstoke and two of Deane.

3. Sir James Deane for the provision of a preacher, trust fund £334 3s. 4d., representing the redemption of an annuity of £10, formerly payable out of the manor of Ashe.

4. Sir James Deane for the repair of the highway, trust fund £33 8s. 5d. consols, representing the redemption of an annuity of £1 issuing out of the manor of Ashe.

5. Sir James Deane for bread, consisting of a rent-charge of £10 8s. issuing out of the manor of Deane.

6. Richard Deane's gift for poor, by will 1601, consisting of a rent-charge of £4 19s. a year issuing out of an estate known as Sclaters.

7. John Hall, will 1632, consisting of an annual sum of £5 4s., charged upon 'Round Mead,' otherwise 'Rowe Meadow,' for distribution in bread amongst twenty-four poor people, twelve of whom must be poor widows.

8. Sir James Lancaster's Charities.—In 1618 by his will Sir James Lancaster gave the sums of £45 and £40 annually for the benefit of the poor and for a preacher respectively, charged upon the manor of Maydenwell and other tenements in the county of Lincoln, and in the parish and forest of Pamber in the county of Southampton.

The Webb Fund, founded in 1877 by will of Charles Webb, is also administered by the trustees of the Municipal Charities Trust Fund, £189 4s. consols, the dividends of which amounting to £4 14s. 4d. are applicable, one-half equally amongst twelve poor persons and the other half equally amongst six poor.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees. The net income of the charities is by the scheme directed to be applied in accordance with the subsisting trusts.

Other charities formerly under the corporation are as follows:—

In 1619 Matthew Stocker by will bequeathed a sum of £10 for the poor.

In 1622 Robert Payne by will gave a sum of £100 to the corporation.

In 1634 George Pemerton gave a sum of £100 to the bailiffs and burgesses, the interest of £6 13s. 4d. to be distributed amongst the poor.

The income of the three preceding charities is distributed as follows:—£1 annually amongst twenty poor by the churchwardens in respect of Payne's gift, £8 10s. annually amongst thirty-four poor, being 10s. in respect of Stocker's gift, £3 in respect of Payne's gift, and £5 in respect of Pemerton's gift. The remaining £1 13s. 4d. belonging to Pemerton's gift is distributed on St. Thomas Day to the inhabitants of the Little Almshouses in New Street.

In 1638 John Smith by will gave a rent-charge of £4 per annum, issuing out of his lands and tenements in Basingstoke, to provide woollen and linen cloth for eight poor persons of the age of sixty and upwards. The corporation also pay a sum of £2 annually, representing the interest on £40 accumulations of income placed in their hands. The number of recipients has been increased to twelve.

In addition to the almshouses founded by Sir James Deane (see under the municipal charities), there were formerly almshouses in Chapel Street unproductive of income, which were sold by order of the Local Government Board.

The almshouses founded by James Acton in 1690 for four old people were restored in 1890.

The Little Almshouses in New Street consist of almshouses and site, and the annual sum of £1 13s. 4d. paid by the corporation to the inmates in respect of the charity of George Pemerton.

Page's Almshouses.—(See infra.)

In 1784 an allotment of 1 acre was made in respect of an old institution known as the 'Pest House.' The building and part of site were sold and a hospital was erected on the land remaining. The official trustees hold a sum of £103 1s. 4d. consols as a repair fund, arising from sale in 1866 to the London & South Western Railway Company. The charity is regulated by scheme of 31 May 1878.

Basingstoke Cottage Hospital in Hackwood Road, founded in 1879, was endowed by will of Edmund Portsmouth with £896 17s. 3d. consols, producing yearly £22 8s. 4d. for the benefit of this institution. The buildings have been much enlarged by Col. John May, of Basingstoke, and Mrs. Wallis, of Coombhurst, Basingstoke. The endowment has been increased by various legacies, and is now invested thus:—£900 London & South Western Railway (3 per cent. consolidated), legacies of the late Mr. John Bizo and Mrs. Ransome, 1884; £2,000 London & South Western Railway (3½ per cent. preference), legacy of the late Mr. George Wm. Hillyer, 1891; £392 Caledonian Railway (4 per cent. preference 1884), Queen's Jubilee Fund and legacies of the late Miss Jane Hutton and Col. Bridges, 1897; £529 London & South Western Railway (3½ per cent. preference), legacies of the late Mr. F. Budd, Major Barrett, Mr. E. A. Williams and Miss Campbell, 1900; £240, twenty-four £10 shares in Axminster and Lyme Regis Light Railway Co.,

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

legacies of the late Mr. A. Wallis and Mrs. Anne Hampton, 1900; £100 London & South Western Railway (3 per cent. debenture stock), legacy of the late Mrs. Roberts, 1903; £1,000 London & North Western Railway debenture stock, legacy of the late Mr. G. Macdonald, 1905; £1,000 Midland Railway stock, legacy of the late Sir Wyndham Spencer Portal, bart., 1906; £100 legacy of the late Mr. J. S. Swinford, 1908; £50 legacy of the late Mr. J. Barton, 1909.<sup>179</sup>

Blunden's Gift.—William Blunden, who died in 1732, by his will devised £10 a year charged upon his lands and tenement in Warbsdown, Surrey, to be distributed on Christmas Day amongst the poor.

The Provident Clothing Society.—In 1884 John Bristow by will left a legacy represented by £53 10s. 11d. 2½ per cent. annuities with the official trustees for the benefit of this society.

Queen Mary's School.<sup>180</sup>

The Aldworth Exhibition Foundation.—This foundation, which was created by the will of Richard Aldworth dated 21 December 1646, is regulated by schemes of the Charity Commissioners dated 26 February 1880 and 11 December 1894, and is endowed with a sum of £8,082 13s. 1d. consols with the official trustees.

By an order of the Charity Commissioners made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, the portion of the trust fund applicable for educational purposes was determined to be £7,207 19s. 9d. consols, and the balance of the fund, amounting to £874 13s. 4d. consols, was directed to be placed to a separate account for providing £10 for a lecturer, £6 13s. 4d. for gowns and £5 4s. 8d. for bread.

The Basingstoke Church of England Sunday Schools are regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners, dated 19 December 1890:—

1. Comprising the charities of Sir James Lancaster, consisting of an annuity of £13 6s. 8d. received from the trustees of the Municipal Charities (see above).

2. Dr. Sheppard, by deed 1816, trust funds, £636 13s. 4d. consols for the support of the National School for Boys, and £333 6s. 8d. stock for the National School for Girls.

3. Mrs. Sophia Sheppard, widow of Dr. Sheppard, by deed 1818 conveyed 5 a. 2 r. 20 p. in Wildmoor, now let at £9 a year, for the use of the National School for Girls.

4. Charity of Thomas Hooker, trust fund and £100 consols.

5. Mrs. Waldo, trust fund and £100 consols.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees. By scheme £30 per annum of the income is authorized to be expended in support of the Sunday schools, and the remainder in prizes for the scholars.

The Evening School Charity.—The official trustees hold a sum of £655 5s. 6d. consols, representing proceeds of sales in 1890 of the British Schools.

The trust is regulated by a scheme of 11 February 1890.

Nonconformist Charities.—The Congregational chapel in London Street is endowed with the sums of stock mentioned below, held by the official trustees, namely, £830 5s. 4d. consols, arising under the will of Thomas Allder, 1796, and of other donors; £311 12s. consols, arising from gifts of Mrs. Hannah Cooper and others; £162 10s. consols, from gifts of Richard Hearne, and of Elizabeth Caston, by deed 1827; and £199 15s. arising under the will of John Bristow, proved in 1884. The dividends thereon amounting to £37 11s. 4d. are received by the minister.

Page's Almshouses in Hackwood Road, founded by Joseph Page, who by deed dated 15 June 1802 gave to Dissenters in Basingstoke several pieces of land with tenements thereon, the rents to accumulate until there was sufficient to purchase a piece of land and erect two cottages, to be used as almshouses for poor persons belonging to the congregation of the Independent persuasion of Calvinistical principles, the rents to be expended in the upkeep of the almshouses and the support of the inmates.

The trust property consists of six almshouses, real estate bringing in £136 per annum, and £99 17s. 6d. consols, with the official trustees, bequeathed by will of John Bristow, proved in 1884.

BRAMLEY

Brumelai (xi cent.); Brummeleghe, Bromelega (xii cent.); Bromlegh, Bromleye (xiii cent.); Bromle (xiv cent.).

The parish of Bramley, covering an area of 2,297 acres, is situated about 5 miles north from Basingstoke, and is served by Bramley station on the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway. The site of the Roman road from Winchester to Silchester cuts through the extreme west of the parish and in its vicinity finds of Roman pottery have been made. Bow Brook or the Little Loddon spanned by Bow Bridge (built in 1830) forms roughly the southern boundary of Bramley, and in the extreme south-east of the parish empties itself into the Loddon. The level of the parish varies little; in the south by the river the ground is comparatively low-lying, but in no place does it reach a greater height than 240 ft. The village is situated in the south of the parish about half a mile north of the Little Loddon. It is a well-built and picturesque little place of some four hundred inhabitants, the cottages, which are dotted about at irregular intervals, being excellent and far above the average in comfort and appearance. The stocks originally stood on the village green under the chestnut tree. In the first half of the 19th century new roads were made in the parish, farms were consolidated and hedgerows grubbed up, while allotment schemes were set on foot, to meet, however, with <sup>179</sup> From the Thirtieth Rep. and Financial Statement of the Hospital, and ex inform.

Mr. John A. Kingdon, Town Clerk of Basingstoke.

<sup>180</sup> See article on 'Schools,' V.C.H. Hants, ii, 368-85.

little success.<sup>1</sup> The soil and subsoil are chiefly sand and clay, and the chief crops raised are wheat, beans, oats and barley. The parish contains about 1,328 acres of arable land, 672 acres of permanent grass and 312 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1a</sup> The schools were built in 1848.

The following are place-names mentioned in documents relating to the parish :—Le Swapes,<sup>2</sup> Poblyn-gesperke, Helfelyngs, Le Strode, Alissislond, Ose-godesstret, Voxham, Prevetmede, Wodemede, Farylane, Trandelmede, Barksdale (xiv cent.); Stertemede, Sadlerscroft, Le Smythes Place<sup>3</sup> (xv cent.); Hyde House, Greet and Little Dockes<sup>4</sup> (xvi cent.).

The manor of BRAMLEY, which had MANORS been held under Edward the Confessor by Alvrice, belonged to the great Hampshire landowner Hugh de Port in 1086.<sup>5</sup> It continued in the possession of the Ports and their successors, the St. Johns,<sup>6</sup> until the death without issue of Edmund de St. John in 1347.<sup>7</sup> Bramley was assigned in dower to Elizabeth widow of Edmund,<sup>8</sup> and on her death in 1362 reverted to his sister and heir Isabel the wife of Sir Luke de Poynings.<sup>9</sup> Isabel died in 1393 and was succeeded by her son Sir Thomas de Poynings,<sup>10</sup> on whose death in 1428 it passed to his granddaughter Constance, the wife of John Paulet.<sup>11</sup> From this date Bramley followed the same descent as the manor of Basing (q.v.) until 1642,<sup>12</sup> when John fifth Marquess of Winchester sold it to Edward Pitt, lord of Stratfieldsaye.<sup>13</sup> Its later history is given under Stratfieldsaye<sup>14</sup> (q.v.), Arthur Charles Wellesley fourth Duke of Wellington being at the present day lord of both manors.

Not far from the church is a mid-16th-century half-timber building known as the manor-house, now divided into several tenements. Internally there is little of interest, except some panelling with butted mouldings, for the whole building has been a good deal modernized; but externally the old design is fairly complete. The construction is entirely half-timber, and the main front which is on the line of the village street faces north-east, and has a central block with a projecting wing at either end, the whole being of two stories: in the case of the central block the upper story overhangs. The ground story of this block has been as usual the hall, with the screens at the west, the four-centred doorway to which is still the principal entrance to the house; the door is also original and retains its strap hinges. The windows are set in slightly projecting frames with moulded sills and where not under the eaves or the projecting upper story have small tiled pentise roofs; all are now fitted with metal lattice casements, which add largely to the general effect. The best features, however, are the bargeboards to the gables of the two projecting wings carved with pierced quatrefoil tracery. The roofs are of red tiles and the cut brick chimneys are modern, of very good design.

There were two mills worth 20s. in the manor at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>15</sup> but they were apparently separated from it at an early period,<sup>16</sup> and may possibly represent the mills owned in the 13th century by the de Linlee family, who gave their name to the modern Lillymill Farm. In 1307 William de Linlee settled the reversion of one messuage, two mills and 26½ acres of land in Bramley and Stratfieldsaye upon his daughter Eleanor<sup>17</sup> on her marriage with Richard son of John de Oakland.<sup>18</sup> In 1333 Richard and Eleanor granted the same holding to Thomas de Wandlesworth and Katherine his wife and their issue.<sup>19</sup> Thomas Stiff was the owner of two water-mills and a free fishery in Bramley and Stratfieldsaye in 1707.<sup>20</sup> There is one mill in the parish now—Lillymill, situated on its eastern boundary and worked by the River Loddon. The old mill-house stood where the mill now stands. It was pulled down and rebuilt by the first Duke of Wellington.<sup>20a</sup>

In 1245 Robert de St. John obtained licence to inclose his wood of Bramley, which was within the metes of the forest of Pamber, provided that the king's deer had free entry and egress.<sup>21</sup> This marks the formation of Bramley Park, which is mentioned in an inquisition of 1347.<sup>22</sup> Its site is perhaps marked by Bramley Frith Wood, which is situated about half a mile north of the village.

In 1252 Aimery de Chanceaus, in return for an annuity of 10 marks of silver, granted 1½ carucates of land with appurtenances in BRAMLEY which he held of Robert de St. John as of his manor of Bramley to his son Aimery to hold of him and his heirs by the rent of 6d.<sup>23</sup> Aimery the younger dealt with premises in Bramley in 1257<sup>24</sup> and

<sup>1</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>1a</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 399.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 407–415.

<sup>4</sup> Close, 36 Eliz. pt. xvi.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>6</sup> The history of this family is given fully under Basing (q.v.). The following documents show the St. Johns dealing with lands in Bramley: Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 25 Hen. III (a convention between Robert de St. John and John son of Saer concerning common of pasture in Bramley); Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 27 Hen. III (a quitclaim from Hugh de Warbleton and Isabel his wife of lands and rent in Bramley to Robert de St. John); Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III (a quitclaim from Hugh de Warbleton and Isabel his wife of lands in Bramley to Robert St. John in return for an annual payment during their lives of two robes or 24s., 7 quarters of wheat, 7 quarters of barley, 4 fitches of bacon and 6 cartloads of wood); Pat. 19 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 13 (an insepimus and confirmation by the king of a charter of John de St. John [1325] granting 100s. a year of free rent in the manor of Bramley for forty years to his son Hugh).

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57.

<sup>8</sup> Close, 21 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 16. Elizabeth subsequently married Gerard de Lisle, and the latter died seised of the manor which he held in right of his wife in 1360 (Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III, no. 53).

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 36 Edw. III (1st nos.), pt. ii, no. 46.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 17 Ric. II, no. 45. In 1390 Isabel had settled the reversion of the manor after her death on her son Sir Thomas de Poynings and Joan his wife and the heirs of Thomas (Pat. 14 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 17).

<sup>11</sup> Inq. p.m. 7 Hen. VI, no. 69.

<sup>12</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), viii, 74; xx, 3; xlv, 94; cclxii, 125; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I, 7 Jas. I.

<sup>13</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 18 Chas. I.

<sup>14</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 16 & 17 Geo. II, rot. 205; Mich. 13 Geo. III, rot. 162.

<sup>15</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>16</sup> No mills are mentioned in subsequent extents of the manor.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 1 Edw. II.

<sup>18</sup> At this date he was owner of what is now called Oaklands, in the extreme west of the parish of Stratfield Turgis, on the banks of the Loddon.

<sup>19</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 7 Edw. III.

<sup>20</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 6 Anne, rot. 95.

<sup>20a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>21</sup> Chart. R. 29 Hen. III, m. 5. In 1086 there was woodland in the manor worth eighty swine (V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b).

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57.

<sup>23</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Hen. III.

<sup>24</sup> In 1257 William Filiol granted a messuage and a carucate of land in Bramley to Aimery de Chanceaus, to hold to him and his issue with contingent remainder in fee-tail successively to his brother Thomas and his sister Cecily (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 41 Hen. III).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

1259,<sup>25</sup> and in the latter year called upon John de Kendale and Joan his wife, granddaughter and heir of Aimery the elder, as intermedian lords to acquit him from the services which Robert de St. John demanded of him for the freehold which he held from them in Bramley. John de Kendale and Joan promised that in the future they would do so, and in return Aimery granted that if he had no issue his property should pass to his brother Thomas in fee-tail.<sup>26</sup> Aimery was returned as holding one-twentieth of a knight's fee in Bramley of John de St. John in 1275,<sup>27</sup> but before 1277 it had passed into the possession of Robert de Say, who in that year died seised of 20s. rent in Bramley which he held of John de St. John by the service of the twentieth part of a knight's fee.<sup>28</sup> From this date this holding followed the same descent as the manor of Stratfield-saye (q.v.),<sup>29</sup> the Dabridgecourt property in Bramley comprising in the 16th century a capital messuage, 40 acres of arable land, 40 acres of pasture, 10 acres of wood, 14 acres of meadow called Bells and a fulling-mill with 30 acres of land, 30 acres of pasture and 10 acres of meadow adjacent to it.<sup>30</sup>

In the reign of Henry III John de St. John, lord of Bramley, gave in free alms to the Prior and convent of Monk Sherborne a wood in Bramley called 'The Parke,' containing 20 acres of land.<sup>31</sup> The priory had land in the parish worth 13s. 10d. annually in 1291,<sup>32</sup> and Queen's College, Oxford, which acquired the priory and all its possessions in the 15th century, still owns property in Bramley.

Joan the widow of Bartholomew Pecche<sup>33</sup> bought a messuage and a carucate of land in BRAMLEY from John son of Edmund de Swynebrok in 1318,<sup>34</sup> and four years later Richard Terry and William Noreys granted to the same Joan lands in Bramley which they had of the enfeofment of John de Swynebrok.<sup>35</sup> In 1327 Joan granted the reversion of a messuage, a carucate of land and 12s. 6d. rent in Bramley to her son John Pecche, the lord of Beaurepaire,<sup>36</sup> receiving in return from him an annual rent of £6 14s. 2d., issuing out of tenements in Ellisfield and Bramley.<sup>37</sup> This estate was held of the St. John barony like Beaurepaire,<sup>38</sup> and was soon incorporated in the Beaurepaire estate, the history of which is given under Sherborne St. John (q.v.).

The manor of BULLESDENS or BULLESDONS (Bulsdens, xvi cent.; Bulsden, xvii cent.) owed its name to the family of Bullesdon, which owned it from an early period. Very little is known of this family, the names of only two or three of its members having come down to us. In 1313 William Bullesdon and Lucy his wife purchased 15 acres of land and the fifth part of a messuage in Bramley from Thomas Peperwhy and Elizabeth his wife,<sup>39</sup> and it was probably their descendant concerning whom the following presentment was made at the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 17 November 1464:— 'John Bullesdon of Bramley is a common malefactor, because at different times contrary to law he has wounded, injured, and ill-treated and killed several animals belonging to his neighbours, with certain sharp instruments called gags put into the mouths of these animals by the said John Bullesdon, to wit a pack-horse of William Cowfold's worth 6s. 8d.'<sup>40</sup> John was apparently succeeded by a Thomas Bullesdon, who at his death left two daughters and co-heirs. One of them married William Wadham the younger, and in 1483 in conjunction with her husband sold her half of the estate described as half a messuage, 200 acres of land, 12 acres of meadow, 40 acres of pasture and 20 acres of wood to Thomas Windsor,<sup>41</sup> and it is probable that the sale was accompanied by a similar quitclaim on the part of her sister. Thomas Windsor was already possessed of an adjoining tenement called Little Bentworth, the early history of which is given below, and the estates consequently merged, being afterwards known as the manor of Bulldens alias Bentworth, Bulldens alias Little Bentworth, Bulldens Bentworth, or Bulldens cum Bentworth. The property remained in the Windsor family, its history being identical with that of the manor of Bentworth in the hundred of Odiham (q.v.) until 1557, when William Lord Windsor sold it to Richard Puttenham.<sup>42</sup> From the latter it passed by sale the following year to Sir Richard Pexall of Beaurepaire,<sup>43</sup> and from this date followed the same descent as the manor of Beaurepaire (q.v.) until as late as 1678, in which year it was included in the quitclaim of the Beaurepaire estate

WINDSOR. Gules a saltire argent between twelve crosslets or.

<sup>25</sup> In 1259 Robert de Warblington granted tenements in Bramley to Aimery de Chanceaus to hold to him and his issue with contingent remainder to his brother Thomas. In return Aimery granted the tenements to Robert for life, as also permission for two of his cows to pasture on Aimery's pasture in Bramley, and in addition promised to pay him yearly during his life 20s. and eight quarters of wheat (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 43 Hen. III). In the following year John de Mont Fichet and Agnes his wife granted tenements in Bramley to Aimery in return for an annual payment during their lives of 1½ quarters of corn and 1½ quarters of barley (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 44 Hen. III).

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. Mich. 44 Hen. III.

<sup>27</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 222.

<sup>28</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, file 17, no. 6.

<sup>29</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18d, 19.

<sup>30</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 999, no. 33.

<sup>31</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 222.

<sup>32</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213.

<sup>33</sup> The Pecches already held some land in the parish. In 1247 Nicholas de Soway had granted 23 acres of land and 3 acres of meadow and moor with appurtenances in Bramley to Bartholomew Pecche (Feet of F. Hants, 31 Hen. III), and seven years later Herbert the successor of Bartholomew had acquired an additional 2 acres of meadow in Bramley from John de Mont Fichet and Agnes his wife (ibid. East. 38 Hen. III).

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 11 Edw. II.

<sup>35</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 396-7.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 1 Edw. III.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid. After the death of Joan the rent was to be paid to her daughter Elizabeth, and on Elizabeth's death it was to revert to John and his heirs (Burrows, op. cit. 398). Joan released £5 of the rent to Elizabeth in 1340 (Burrows, op. cit. 399).

<sup>38</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18, 18 d.

<sup>39</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 6 Edw. II.

<sup>40</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 293.

<sup>41</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 1 Ric. III.

<sup>42</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 3 & 4 Phil. and Mary, rot. 447.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. Mich. 5 & 6 Phil. and Mary, rot. 153. After the death of William Lord Windsor one of his younger sons, William Windsor, claimed the manor on the ground that in 1548 his father had settled it upon himself for life with remainder to him in tail-male (Chan. Proc. [Ser. 2], bde. 188, no. 8; bde. 190, no. 75). He finally gave up all his claim to the manor to Sir Richard Pexall in 1570 in return for 340 marks (Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 12 Eliz.).

BRAMLEY MANOR HOUSE

BRAMLEY CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST

from the Gardiners to Thomas Brocas.<sup>44</sup> In 1717 it was in the possession of Jane Fitz William, widow, and John Dally and his wife,<sup>45</sup> but before 1757 it had passed into the hands of the Haskers, who had been located at Bramley for many generations,<sup>46</sup> John Hasker and Mary his wife in that year conveying it to Thomas Hasker.<sup>47</sup> On the death of Thomas Hasker in 1776 the manor passed to his only daughter Dorothy, who married John Lee of Woolley Firs, White Waltham,<sup>48</sup> and left a son Henry Pincke Lee, who conveyed it to John Cole in 1816.<sup>49</sup>

The manor was subsequently purchased by the first Duke of Wellington, and his grandson, the fourth duke, is the present owner.<sup>50</sup>

The site of the manor is now marked by Bull's Down Farm, situated a little to the north of Bow Brook and some distance east of the Reading and Basingstoke branch of the Great Western Railway. Bull's Down Copse, which borders on the banks of the brook some way south-east of the farm, is all that is left of the park, of which several mentions occur in extant records. Thus in 1602 Pexall Brocas claimed compensation for the trees that had been felled in the parks of Beaurepaire and Bullesdens by Dame Elinor and her second and third husbands, Sir John Savage and Sir Robert Remington, and her stepson Edward Savage.<sup>51</sup> Again, in the inquisition held on the death of Sir Pexall Brocas in 1631 the park of Bullesdens and a messuage called the Lodge in the park are mentioned.<sup>52</sup>

In 1317 the tenement afterwards called BENTWORTH or LITTLE BENTWORTH was probably in the possession of William de Bentworth and Maud his wife, who in that year settled a messuage and 22 acres of land in Bramley on Thomas Peperwhyte and Elizabeth his wife, receiving in exchange from them a garden, 48 acres of land and 1 acre of meadow in the same parish.<sup>53</sup> In the course of the century the holding passed to the Windsors, Sir Miles Windsor dying seised of a toft, 80 acres of waste land and 3 acres of meadow in Bramley in 1385–6.<sup>54</sup> His widow Alice held the estate in dower, and it was not until her death nine years later<sup>55</sup> that it passed to his son Brian, who died seised of a messuage and 60 acres of land in Bramley called Little Bentworth worth four marks, and held of Lord St. John in 1399.<sup>56</sup> Thomas Windsor, the great-grandson of Brian, purchased Bullesdens in 1483, since which date the history of the two estates has been identical.

The church of ST. JAMES consists CHURCH of a chancel and nave in one range 23 ft. 2 in. wide and together 65 ft. 6 in. long, the chancel occupying 17 ft. 8 in. of this; a WELLESLEY, Duke of Wellington. Quarterly, 1 and 4: Gules a cross between twenty roundels argent, for WELLESLEY; 2 and 3: Or a lion gules, for COLLEY; and in the chief a scutcheon of the union device of Great Britain and Ireland.

south transept, 18 ft. 6 in. by 24 ft. 3 in.; a west tower, 12 ft. 11 in. by 12 ft. 2 in.; and a south porch. The nave and chancel were built on their present plan, with no masonry division, late in the 12th century, the south transept, which was the Lady Chapel, was probably added at the end of the 13th century, and the west tower of brick replaced one of timber in 1636. The Lady Chapel was rebuilt early in the 19th century, and the porch is a late 18th-century addition, succeeding a mediaeval one of wood.

The east window of the chancel is of 15th-century date, and three rather wide cinquefoiled lights with sub-mullions and smaller lights over. Above this in the gable head are traces of an original window with shafted jambs. Externally it shows as a round-headed recess, a good deal of which is in new stonework. In the north wall of the chancel is a square locker and above it an original window with a semicircular head. Externally it has a small glazing rebate, but is very much restored. Internally the wide splay and semicircular rear arch have a continuous roll with small moulded bases at the sill. At the south-east is a late 12th-century pillar piscina, the head of which with a foliated capital is old, and is fitted to a slender mixed shaft, which is entirely modern. There is now no drain to be seen, and the capital formerly projected further from the wall. The window on the south of the chancel, c. 1360, is a single cinquefoiled light, and just west of it is a door of the same date with a continuous chamfer and a pointed head.

In the nave on the north are two windows of the same detail as that in the north wall of the chancel, the eastern of the pair being modern. Between them is a 15th-century window of three cinquefoiled lights under a square head—an original north door probably occupied this position. At the east end of the south wall of the nave are remains of the rood stair and the door to the loft, formerly entered from the Lady Chapel; there is a short flight of steps in the thickness of the wall. West of this is the plain pointed arch opening to the transept, of one chamfered order and somewhat uncertain date. It takes the place of an original window, and the east jamb of another original light may be seen over the present south door. The original late 12th-century south doorway remains about midway in the south wall, now covered externally by a small brick heating chamber. It was only discovered at a recent restoration, and remains of shafted jambs are said to have been found. The present entrance is further west and is made up of 15th-century stones reset. It is continuously moulded with two hollow chamfers, and is of a distorted two-centred form, the original opening having apparently been a wider one. Between the two doors is a late 16th-century window of three uncusped lights of equal height with rounded heads. The tower is of three stages, built of red brick with an embattled and pinnacled parapet, the latter very much restored. The belfry openings are of two uncusped lights in a square chamfered stone frame, and there is a single light of similar detail in the second stage. The west window

<sup>44</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 244.

<sup>45</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 3 Geo. I.

<sup>46</sup> In 1626 Thomas Hasker of Bramley lent Charles I £2 13s. 4d. (Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 399–400).

<sup>47</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 31 Geo. II.

<sup>48</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 3), II.

<sup>49</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 57 Geo. III.

<sup>50</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. T. Hayes Belcher, M.A., vicar of Bramley.

<sup>51</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 93, no. 29.

<sup>52</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxiii, 93.

<sup>53</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East, 10 Edw. II.

<sup>54</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Ric. II, no. 46.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 18 Ric. II, no. 51.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 22 Ric. II, no. 52.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

is of three cinquefoiled lights under a square-headed label, and is possibly a copy of Gothic work dating from 1636. All the windows are stone dressed in the brickwork. The tower arch is of two chamfered orders and of plain workmanship. It is thickly plastered and whitewashed but probably of stone.

The south transept is of brick with a plaster ceiling in the form of a ribbed barrel vault. It has a door to the east and a large 'perpendicular' window of five lights to the south, and was the tomb-chapel of the Brocas family of Beaurepaire. The south portion is a plain brick building of late, probably 18th-century, date.

The font is probably contemporary with the earliest parts of the church. It has a shallow square Purbeck bowl, much defaced, the sides of which are decorated with fluting, rough chevron ornament and a grotesquely drawn agnus dei. The bowl is supported on a central shaft with a modern capital and four restored angle shafts.

The roofs of nave and chancel are of early 16th-century date, both having panelled bays at the east, the rest being plastered. The chancel panelling is modern, but that in the nave roof is old, and on the north side pierced by a wooden rood window made in 1531. The panelling or ceiling over the rood is contemporary, having been made between 1529 and 1531.

The rood loft seems to have been set up in 1525. It was destroyed in 1573 and its place filled with boarding, but this is now removed and a modern beam and cross set up. The lower part of the rood screen still exists, with an arched central doorway of two wide tracery bays on each side of it, and the grooves for the boarding of the panelled covering below the loft may be seen. Some of the old seats with buttressed bench ends remain, and are doubtless those mentioned in 1535-6. The chancel rails are of late 17th-century date with carved twisted balusters and a moulded rail. Filling the west end of the nave is a good early 18th-century gallery designed in three bays of an Ionic order with a superimposed Corinthian one, the entablatures being complete with modillions, crown moulds, &c., to both. The Ionic order has flat fluted wall pilasters and two circular fluted columns. The capitals of the pilasters are very well carved. The columns are modern and the detail of the pilasters has been carefully followed. The wall pilasters of the upper order alone remain and are a good deal mutilated. The place of the columns is taken by the modern organ case. The pulpit and reading desk are also of 18th-century woodwork.

Many traces of mediaeval painting remain. Over the 12th-century south door of the nave is the martyrdom of St. Thomas of Canterbury, Fitzurse being distinguished among the three knights by the three bears' heads on his shield. The painting is 13th-century work, and there were evidently two tiers of figure subjects of the same date on the south wall, and perhaps on the north. Sixteenth-century texts have been painted over them. Opposite the south door of the nave is a large 15th-century painting of St. Christopher, and under the north-west window a consecration cross, probably of late 12th or early 13th-century date. On the east wall of the chancel are some much repaired late 13th-century paintings, one of St. James to the north of the window, and one of our Lady and Child to the south.<sup>56a</sup> Above is part of a quatrefoiled circle cut into by the head of the inserted 15th-century window, and the wall surface is worked into masonry patterns in red.

On the south wall of the chancel is a marble and alabaster monument to Reginald Hannington, 1604, and there are brasses to Richard and Alice Cartei, 1529, and to Gwen More, mother of Elizabeth Shelford, Abbess of Shaftesbury, 1504. The arms on this brass are on a pale three roses, impaling a cheveron between three boars' heads razed. In the south window of the transept are a number of panels of interesting Flemish glass of the 16th century, and four older shields of English work, with the arms of St. John, Vere, Stafford and Nevill.

In the middle of the transept is a large white marble tomb with a life-size effigy of Bernard Brocas of Beaurepaire, 1777, of excellent workmanship, with allegorical subjects on either end of the tomb and an extravagant inscription.

The church is fortunate in having preserved its churchwardens' accounts complete from 1521, and many of the details of the foregoing description are taken from them. Many mentions of the church-house, called the cross-house or court-house, occur, the Whitsun ales being held in it. In 1523 the confessional, or 'shriving place,' was made, and a wooden 'palm cross' in the churchyard was set up two years later.

In 1532 a set of alabaster images were ordered for the rood loft and set up there in 1533. A locked chest stood in the loft, its lock was renewed in 1534. The font was repaired in the same year, and a lock and bolt made for it. The roofs of the church were covered with oak shingles, which needed constant renewal, in 1540, 1576, 1582, 1589, &c. The rood loft door had a lock, for which a key was provided in 1535; the rood seems to have been painted on a partition, as it was washed out in 1562; in 1584 the commandments were set up. The Lady altar was fitted up with a coved canopy, the cresting of which was painted in 1525, and the canopy itself in 1528. Our Lady window was glazed in 1534; this was probably the predecessor of the present south window. The chapel was called the 'side chancel' in 1585.

The tower was of wood, and a new ground sill was put into it in 1535, and three brick buttresses set against it in 1564. In 1632 it was decided to rebuild it in wood, but this scheme was abandoned and the tower built in 1636 with brick, as it now is.

Repairs to the church palings and gate are common, the latter evidently shut to with a counterpoise, a pulley and cord being mentioned in 1533. There was also a wooden church storehouse, repaired in 1541.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1713 given by the parishioners of Bramley in that year, two silver patens of 1708 bearing the Brocas crest; a silver flagon of 1713 given in 1714 by Thomas Brocas of Beaurepaire, 'as was also another of greater value by his late pious mother Mrs. Mary Brocas which was lately stolen out of this church'; and a silver alms plate of 1728 also bearing the Brocas crest.

There are three books of registers; the first, the original paper book, contains baptisms, burials and marriages from 1580 to 1726 with several gaps, the years 1616 to 1642 being entirely missing; the second contains baptisms and burials from 1724 to 1812 and marriages from 1725 to 1751; the third contains marriages from 1754 to 1812.

<sup>56a</sup> The paintings were uncovered by the Rev. C. Eddy, rector of Bramley, helped by Mrs. J. Hautenville Cope.

There was a church in the parish at ADFOWSON the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>57</sup>

It followed the descent of the manor until the reign of Henry I, when Henry de Port the son and successor of Hugh de Port granted it together with the tithes to the abbey of St. Vigor at Cerisy in Normandy.<sup>58</sup> The Prior and convent of Monk Sherborne or West Sherborne as representatives in England of the Norman house<sup>59</sup> kept the advowson of the vicarage until the general suppression of the alien houses.<sup>60</sup> Edward IV in 1462 granted the priory and all its possessions to the hospital of St. Julian or God's House in Southampton<sup>61</sup> and the warden, chaplains and brethren of that hospital presented to the church three times between 1462 and 1492.<sup>62</sup> God's House had, however, been given by Edward III to Queen's College, Oxford,<sup>63</sup> and hence the endowments of the priory, including the advowson of Bramley, were transferred to that college. During the episcopacy of Fox a vicar was instituted at the presentation of 'the provost of Queen's Hall, Oxford, guardian of St. Julian called Domus Dei in Southampton and the scholars of the same college.'<sup>64</sup> The living is at the present day a vicarage of the net yearly value of £108 with residence in the gift of the Provost and fellows of Queen's College, Oxford.

Thomas Shaw, the famous African traveller and the author of A Geographical Description of the Kingdom of Tunis and Travels or Observations Relating to Several Parts of Barbary and the Levant, was presented to the vicarage of Bramley by Queen's College, Oxford, in 1742.<sup>65</sup> He died on 15 August 1751 and was buried in Bramley Church, where a monument was erected to his memory with a long Latin inscription by his friend Dr. Joseph Browne.

CLIDDESSEN

Cleresden (xi cent.); Cludesden, Cledisdon (xiii cent.); Clydesden (xiv cent.); Cluddysdean (xvi cent.); Cliddesdeane, Clisdon (xvii cent.); Cliddesdowne (xviii cent.).

The parish of Cliddesden covers an area of 1,920 acres, of which no fewer than 1,804½ acres are arable.<sup>1</sup> Moody in his History of Hampshire complained that Cliddesden was very bare from want of timber, forming a striking contrast to Farleigh Wallop,<sup>2</sup> and at the present day only 38½ acres of woods and plantations are comprised in Cliddesden.<sup>3</sup> The village is situated about 2 miles south from Basingstoke, and has a station near it on the Alton and Basingstoke branch of the London and South Western Railway. It lies mostly along the road from Basingstoke to Preston Candover at a height of about 400 ft. above the ordnance datum. The rectory-house with 10 acres of glebe is situated west of the main road, and a short distance to the north are the Manor Farm and 'The Jolly Farmer.' St. Leonard's Church is situated to the east. The Methodist chapel was brought from Basingstoke and re-erected here in 1906. Half of Hackwood House and a large part of Hackwood Park are included in this parish. Audley's Wood, the residence of Mr. Louis de Luze Simonds, is in the north-eastern corner of the parish, its grounds being separated from Hackwood Park by the road from Basingstoke to Alton. This name occurs as 'Oddele' in the 13th century and as 'Odlease' in 1578.<sup>4</sup>

Hatch, containing Hatch Warren Farm, is a detached portion of the parish lying to the west. It was a separate parish until the end of the 14th century, when it was united to Cliddesden, the cause being its poverty and depopulation. Thus in the reign of Edward III it was returned that 300 acres of land in Hatch were lying untilled and unsown,<sup>5</sup> and the petition to the king praying that the church of Hatch might henceforth be exonerated from the payment of tenths states that there was no one at the time living within the parish.<sup>6</sup>

The soil is light loam and chalk, and the subsoil chiefly chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, roots and grass. Among place-names mentioned in the 15th and 16th centuries are the following:—Flemmyngysgrove, Camburnecroftys and Swalowykeswood.<sup>7</sup>

In the reign of Edward the Confessor MANORS the manor of CLIDDESSEN was held by two brothers who could 'betake themselves whither they would.' They were succeeded by Durand de Gloucestre, of whom it was held in 1086 by a certain Ralf.<sup>8</sup> From him it must have descended to the Fitz Herbert family through Lucy daughter and co-heir of Miles de Gloucester Earl of Hereford. Thus Reginald Fitz Peter and his descendant Matthew Fitz Herbert were stated to be overlords in 1275 and 1339 respectively.<sup>9</sup> At a later date the overlordship belonged to the town of Basingstoke, the manor being held by the bailiffs by fealty and a yearly rent of 5s. for all services.<sup>10</sup> The first lords of the manor whose names have come down to us after the Domesday Survey were lords also of Matson (co. Glouc.) and they were consequently called de Mattresdone (or de Mattesdon) or de Cliddesden indifferently. Arnulf de Cliddesden, probably the lord of the manor, witnessed a charter

<sup>57</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>58</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1013-14.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid.; V.C.H. Hants, ii, 226-8.

<sup>60</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 121, 433; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 47, 168-9; Pat. 12 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 6; 15 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 24; 4 Hen. IV, pt. ii, m. 38; 6 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 27; 8 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 40.

<sup>61</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 204.

<sup>62</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 35, 73, 96 d.

<sup>63</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 203.

<sup>64</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 146 d.

<sup>65</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Moody, Hist. of Hants, ii, 57.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf.

<sup>5</sup> Inq. Non. (Rec. Com.), 121.

<sup>6</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 292.

<sup>7</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf. 'Swalowykeswood' still survives as Swallowick Wood to the west of Hackwood Park.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 493b.

<sup>9</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Close, 13 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 31.

<sup>10</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 31; xvii, 31.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

of Adam de Port granting tithes of mills in Sherborne St. John to the church of Sherborne at the end of the 12th century.<sup>11</sup> In 1219 William son of Simon de Cliddesden granted half a hide of land in Cliddesden to Nicholas son of William de Salewike,<sup>12</sup> and he was succeeded by John, who as lord of Cliddesden granted land in Cliddesden to Henry Fleming circa 1240.<sup>13</sup> In 1252 John de Cliddesden as chief lord of the fee granted 1½ virgates in Cliddesden to Walter Bering to hold of him and his heirs,<sup>14</sup> and he was still alive in 1256,<sup>15</sup> but by 1275 he had been succeeded by his son Philip<sup>16</sup> generally called Philip de Mattresdone, who in that year was stated to be holding one knight's fee in Cliddesden of Reginald Fitz Peter.<sup>17</sup> Philip confirmed the warden and brethren of the Hospital of St. John at Basingstoke in possession of lands in Cliddesden which they had of the gift of Henry Fleming circa 1280,<sup>18</sup> and he was still alive in 1286, in which year he obtained a grant of £20 worth of land and rent for five years from the king for his good service in Wales.<sup>19</sup> By 1303, however, the manor had passed to Isabel the wife of William de Gardinis, probably his daughter and heir,<sup>20</sup> who in that year granted it to John de Berewyk.<sup>21</sup> Eight years afterwards Cliddesden was settled by Ralph de Bereford on John de Berewyk and John de Valoignes and the heirs of John de Valoignes.<sup>22</sup> The latter as true patron of the church presented a rector in 1315,<sup>23</sup> but before the end of the next year he had been succeeded by Nicholas de Valoignes.<sup>24</sup> Nicholas was in his turn followed by another John, at whose presentation a rector was instituted by John Stratford, Bishop of Winchester (1323-33).<sup>25</sup> This John was convicted before Bartholomew de Lisle and his fellows, justices of oyer and terminer in Hampshire, of having feloniously broken into the mill of the Prior of Southwick at 'Dagesole,' in the hundred of Barton Stacey, and of having stolen a grindstone and one and a half quarters of wheat found there, and died in the Bishop of Winchester's palace of Wolvesey, to which he had been committed as a convicted clerk.<sup>26</sup> The manor was taken into the hands of the king, who granted it in 1337 to his yeoman John Brocas to hold during his good pleasure without money payment.<sup>27</sup> It was, however, subsequently restored to John son of John de Valoignes, and in 1346 he was returned as holding half a fee in Cliddesden formerly belonging to John de

VALOIGNES. Paly wavy argent and gules.

WALLOP, Earl of Portsmouth. Argent a bend wavy sable.

Berewyk.<sup>28</sup> He presented to the church of Cliddesden in 1373,<sup>29</sup> and was succeeded by Nicholas de Valoignes, who presented a rector in 1396.<sup>30</sup> Nicholas left a daughter and heir Margaret, who married Thomas Wallop,<sup>31</sup> bringing the manor of Cliddesden into the ancient Hampshire family of Wallop. Her second husband William Vachell was holding half a fee in Cliddesden lately belonging to John de Valoignes,<sup>32</sup> and on his death it passed to John Wallop son and heir of Thomas and Margaret.<sup>33</sup> John Wallop at various times was guilty of trespassing on Winchester Field, Basingstoke Heath, The Down and Hyghhamysfield belonging to the men and tenants of Basingstoke,<sup>34</sup> and, in order to bring these outstanding disputes to a termination, the freeholders and tenants of the manor and hundred appointed certain arbitrators in 1465, binding themselves to abide by their decision.<sup>35</sup> The award has unfortunately been lost, but the disputes did not cease entirely, for in 1485 John Wallop was fined 3s. 4d. for appropriating a piece of land near The Down.<sup>36</sup> He died in 1486, and was followed by his son Richard,<sup>37</sup> who was fined 3s. 4d. in 1490 because he persisted in encroaching upon the king's soil on The Down.<sup>38</sup> He died without issue in 1503, and the manor then passed to his brother Robert,<sup>39</sup> who in 1509 was ordered not to allow his sheep to enter upon The Down nightly under penalty of 6s. 8d.<sup>40</sup> His heir was his nephew John Wallop,<sup>41</sup> who died in 1551, leaving as his heir his brother Oliver.<sup>42</sup> John Wallop sixth in descent from the latter was created Lord Wallop of Farley Wallop, Viscount Lymington in 1720 and Earl of Portsmouth in 1743.<sup>43</sup> The manor is still in possession of the Wallop family, the present owner being Newton Wallop sixth Earl of Portsmouth, great-great-grandson of the first earl.<sup>44</sup>

The manor of HATCH (Heche, xi cent. ; Heccha, xii cent. ; Hacche, xiv cent.) was held by Alsì in the reign of Edward the Confessor and was then assessed at 1 hide. William I granted it to Geoffrey, chamberlain to his daughter Maud, in return for the services he had rendered her, notwithstanding the fact that Odo of Winchester had it in mortgage for £10 from Alsì. Odo continued to assert his claim, but in 1086 Geoffrey was still in possession of the estate, which was then assessed at 3 virgates.<sup>45</sup> In 1167 Hatch was in the possession of a certain Henry.<sup>46</sup> By 1311, however, it had become the property of the lords of Cliddesden, and in that year was settled with

<sup>11</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vii, 1014.

<sup>12</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 3 Hen. III.

<sup>13</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf.

<sup>14</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Hen. III.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. Hil. 40 Hen. III.

<sup>16</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 457.

<sup>17</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>18</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf.

<sup>19</sup> Close, 14 Edw. I, m. 5.

<sup>20</sup> In 1303 the fourth part of a fee in Matson was also in the possession of William de Gardinis (Feud. Aids, ii, 253). See also ibid 290.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Edw. I.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. Mich. 5 Edw. II.

<sup>23</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 439.

<sup>24</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>25</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 57.

<sup>26</sup> See Close, 13 Edw. III, pt. ii, m.

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 10.

<sup>28</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>29</sup> Wykebam's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 48.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. 201.

<sup>31</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 42.

<sup>32</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344.

<sup>33</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 42.

<sup>34</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 291-2.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. 296-303.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. 306.

<sup>37</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 31.

<sup>38</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 307.

<sup>39</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xvii, 31; Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 309.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid. 312.

<sup>41</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 42.

<sup>42</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. vi, 51.

<sup>43</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 42-3.

<sup>44</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 502b.

<sup>46</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 189.

Cliddesden on John de Berewyk and John de Valoignes.<sup>47</sup> From that date Hatch has followed the same descent as Cliddesden, the present owner being Newton Wallop, sixth Earl of Portsmouth.

The church of ST. LEONARD is a CHURCH rectangular building 18 ft. 6 in. wide and 70 ft. 8 in. long, of which 23 ft. 5 in. is screened off for the chancel, a north organ chamber and vestry and a south porch.

The walling of the nave probably belongs to the 12th century, but the only old detail now left in the building is a plain blocked round-headed doorway in the north wall; the rest is modern, and the chancel appears to have been wholly rebuilt recently. It has an east window of three lights under a traceried head and two south windows, each of two lights with tracery; to the east of these is a plain square piscina. An archway opens from the chancel into the modern organ chamber and vestry, which is lighted by an east and a north window of two lights and has a west doorway. The nave has three south and two north windows, each of two cinquefoiled lights under pointed heads. The south doorway, coming between the second and third of the windows, has moulded jambs and pointed head; the west window is one of three lights with a traceried head. Over the west wall is a modern stone bell-cote in which hangs a modern bell. The roof is gabled and open timbered below, it is covered with tiles, the part over the chancel being quite new. All the furniture is modern.

The plate consists of a silver-gilt chalice of Nuremberg make, dating from the early 17th century, and a silver paten of 1702, given by Elizabeth Reignolds, widow, at that date.

The registers, which include those of Farleigh Wallop, begin in 1636, the first book containing baptisms to 1758, marriages 1754 and burials 1741; the second has burials 1679 to 1760. Special mention is made of eight members of the Wallop family being buried in linen in preference to woollen; for this they were fined £10 on each occasion. The third book has marriages 1754 to 1812 and the fourth baptisms and burials 1760 to 1812.

There was a church in Cliddesden ADVOWSONS at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>48</sup> It was assessed at £5 6s. 8d. in 1291<sup>49</sup> and at £10 16s. 1d. in 1535.<sup>50</sup> The advowson has throughout followed the descent of the manor,<sup>51</sup> the patron at the present time being the Earl of Portsmouth.

There was also a church in Hatch at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>52</sup> Its value was returned as £4 6s. 8d. in 1291.<sup>53</sup> The advowson throughout the history of the church followed the descent of the manor,<sup>54</sup> the last recorded institution being during the episcopacy of William de Edendon (1346-66) at the presentation of John de Valoignes, the lord of the manor. At the beginning of the reign of Richard II<sup>55</sup> a petition was presented to the king praying that the church might be discharged from the payment of tenths on the ground that it was in ruins and that no one could be found to serve the cure because its value was so small.<sup>56</sup> On 4 July 1380 the church was exonerated from the payment of subsidies,<sup>57</sup> and after this the parish of Hatch became merged in Cliddesden.

The school was built in 1876 for 120 children.

In 1736 Thomas Fellowes by his CHARITIES will gave a sum of £30 to the rector for the use of the poor for ever.

This sum with other monies belonging to the poor was invested in Old South Sea annuities, which is now represented by £164 14s. 8d. consols with official trustees, producing £4 2s. 4d. a year, which is applied for the general benefit of the poor of Cliddesden and Farleigh Wallop in the proportions of  $\frac{3}{4}$  and  $\frac{1}{4}$  respectively in pursuance of a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 25 April 1899.

The School Charity consists of a messuage at Cliddesden, formerly used as a schoolhouse, let at £12 a year and an annual rent-charge of £10 paid by the Earl of Portsmouth. This charity is also regulated by the scheme referred to above in the two parishes in the like proportions in apprenticing, prizes and exhibitions for scholars who are or have been in attendance at a public elementary school.

EASTROP

Estrope (xi cent.); Estropa (xii cent.); Estrop Brayboef (xiii cent.); Esthrop, Esttroup (xiv cent.); Estroppe (xv cent.); Estrip (xviii cent.).

Eastrop is a small parish adjoining Basingstoke on the east, and may be considered to form a suburb of that town. The urban portion was annexed to the borough in 1892 and the rural portion in 1894 to the parish of Basing. Part of its southern boundary is formed by the main road from Basingstoke to Staines, and it is intersected from west to east by the River Loddon and the Basingstoke Canal. To the south of Eastrop Bridge at the end of Goat Lane stands St. Mary's Church, and a short distance to the east of the church is Eastrop Farm. The soil is loam, the sub-soil chalk, and the chief crops are roots, sainfoin, wheat, barley and oats.

Among place-names in the parish mentioned in early records are the following:—Hackwood Field, Holy Ghost Field, and Whitditch (xvi cent.).<sup>1</sup>

The manor of EASTROP which Carle MANOR had held of Edward the Confessor belonged to Alvred de Merleberge in 1086, being held of him by Hugh.<sup>2</sup> Humphrey de Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex was returned as the overlord in 1275.<sup>3</sup> Again, his descendant Humphrey de Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, as guardian of

<sup>47</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Edw. II.

<sup>48</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 493b.

<sup>49</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212.

<sup>50</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 14.

<sup>51</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 63 d.; 2032, fol. 39 d.; 2033, fol. 10; 2034, fol. 37, 74 d.; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec.

Soc.), 439; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 48, 201; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>52</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 502b.

<sup>53</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.),

212.

<sup>54</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Edw. II; Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 57.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 2033, fol. 17.

<sup>56</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 292.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid. 321.

<sup>1</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 348.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 493b.

<sup>3</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

the lands and heir of the lord of the manor, presented to the church during the episcopacy of William Edendon (1346-66),<sup>4</sup> and the manor continued to be held by the Earls of Hereford and Essex until early in the 16th century.<sup>5</sup> Hugh, the tenant of Eastrop at the time of the Domesday Survey, was probably the ancestor of the Brayboefs who held the manor under the Earls of Hereford and Essex until the middle of the 14th century. In 1167 Eastrop was in the possession of another Hugh<sup>6</sup> —probably identical with the Hugh de Brayboef who witnessed a charter of John de Port to the priory of Monk Sherborne.<sup>7</sup> He was succeeded by Henry de Brayboef, who as lord of Eastrop granted a messuage and virgate of land in Eastrop to Richard son of Robert in 1202 to hold of him by the service of the twentieth part of a knight's fee.<sup>8</sup> In 1238 another Henry de Brayboef<sup>9</sup> granted a virgate of land in Eastrop to Walter de Merton of Basingstoke,<sup>10</sup> and he was followed by William de Brayboef, who in 1275 was stated to be holding half a knight's fee in Eastrop of the Earl of Hereford.<sup>11</sup> In 1280 this same William was summoned to show by what right he claimed to have free chase for cats, hares and foxes in the hundred of Basingstoke.<sup>12</sup> William asserted that Richard I had granted the privilege to his ancestors, and the knights of the shire chosen as jurors confirmed his statement.<sup>13</sup> He died in 1283, leaving as his heir his son Hugh,<sup>14</sup> who in 1333 granted a rent of £100 from the manor and advowson to his grandson Hugh son of William de Brayboef.<sup>15</sup> It is doubtful whether this latter Hugh ever succeeded to the manor, for in 1346 he was dead and 'Oliver le Boun' (sic) was holding 'nomine custodie' half a fee in Eastrop.<sup>16</sup> His heir was his daughter Joan, who apparently married (1) Sir John de Podenhale<sup>17</sup> and (2) Sir Hugh de Camois.<sup>18</sup> Sir Hugh obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Eastrop in 1367,<sup>19</sup> and died leaving as his heir his daughter BOHUN. Azure a bend argent cotised or between six lionsels or.

BRAYBOEF. Ermine a bend indented—.

Elizabeth,<sup>20</sup> who as Elizabeth Hamelyn was returned in 1428 as holding half a fee in Eastrop formerly belonging to Hugh de Brayboef.<sup>21</sup> Elizabeth left as her heir her daughter Egidia, who married (1) Robert Ashley and (2) Sir Thomas Thame.<sup>22</sup> In 1472 Egidia released the manor to Maurice Berkeley for the use of John Whitehead and Katherine his wife,<sup>23</sup> and died four years later.<sup>24</sup> On the death of John Whitehead in 1486 the manor of Eastrop valued at 5 marks passed to his widow Katherine,<sup>25</sup> who died the following year. Her heir was her son Maurice Whitehead,<sup>26</sup> who died in 1496-7, leaving as his heir his son John, aged nine.<sup>27</sup> John apparently died while still a minor, and was succeeded by George Whitehead—probably his brother<sup>28</sup> —who died seised of the manor of Eastrop in 1520, his heir being his infant son John.<sup>29</sup> John left no issue, and his property passed to his brother Augustine, who died in 1557, leaving as his heir his son Richard.<sup>30</sup> In 1561 Richard, in return for a money payment, was released from attendance at the Basingstoke hundred units for a year,<sup>31</sup> and twenty-four years later at the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 13 November 1585 he was ordered to make a gate leading into the field called Northdoun, and to refrain from making chase and rebase with his sheep out of the demesne of Basingstoke into the demesne of Eastrop, feeding them in fields called Hackwood Field and Holy Ghost Field, and placing them at night in Whitditch parcel of his manor of Eastrop.<sup>32</sup> On his death in 1593 Eastrop passed to his son Henry Whitehead,<sup>33</sup> who on his death in 1629 was followed by his son Richard.<sup>34</sup> Richard presented a rector in 1662,<sup>35</sup> and the following entry under 1686 in the Basingstoke records, 'Received of Mr. Whitehead lord of the manor of Eastrop for a heriot for his father's death, being agreed on by the mayor and company for a standing heriot upon an alienation £5,'<sup>36</sup> shows the manor still in the possession of the Whiteheads. Within the next ten years, however, it had passed by sale into the Searle family, William Searle, merchant, presenting to the church in 1696.<sup>37</sup> He was succeeded by Gilbert Searle, who presented a rector in 1699,<sup>38</sup> and eighteen years later paid a sum of 3s. for 'Estrop late WHITEHEAD. Azure a fesse between three fleurs de lis or.

<sup>4</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 13.
<sup>5</sup> Inq. p.m. 46 Edw. III, no. 10; Feud. Aids, ii, 344; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 271; xxxv, 106.
<sup>6</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 189.
<sup>7</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vii, 1014.
<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 11 John.
<sup>9</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 459.
<sup>10</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf.
<sup>11</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 281.
<sup>12</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 764.
<sup>13</sup> Ibid.
<sup>14</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. I, no. 13. The mutilated knightly figure with crossed legs now to be seen near the ruins of the Chapel of the Holy Ghost, Basingstoke, in all probability commemorates this William de Brayboef (Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 114-15).

<sup>15</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 7 Edw. III.
<sup>16</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.
<sup>17</sup> William Edendon, Bishop of Winchester, instituted a rector at the presentation of 'Joan who was the wife of Lord John de Podenhale' (Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 13).
<sup>18</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 459.
<sup>19</sup> Chart. R. 41 Edw. III, m. 3; Pat. 3 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 27.
<sup>20</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 459.
<sup>21</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344. See also ibid. 364.
<sup>22</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 459.
<sup>23</sup> Close, 12 Edw. IV, m. 7.
<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 17 Edw. IV, no. 31. Her heir was her son Edmund Ashley. Immediately afterwards the manor was settled by fine on John and Katherine Whitehead in tail-male, with contingent remainder to Edmund Ashley and Margaret his wife in tail-male, with contingent remainder to the right heirs of Egidia (Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Edw. IV).

<sup>25</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 29.
<sup>26</sup> Ibid. iii, 120.
<sup>27</sup> Ibid. xi, 104.
<sup>28</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 125 d.
<sup>29</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxxv, 106.
<sup>30</sup> Ibid. cxiv, 26.
<sup>31</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 345.
<sup>32</sup> Ibid. 348.
<sup>33</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxv, 97.
<sup>34</sup> Ibid. ccccxlviii, 92.
<sup>35</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).
<sup>36</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 390.
<sup>37</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).
<sup>38</sup> Ibid.

Whitehead's.<sup>39</sup> Peter Searle, son and heir of Gilbert, who was a minor under the guardianship of his mother in 1732,<sup>40</sup> presented a rector in 1747,<sup>41</sup> and another Peter Searle appears as patron in 1784<sup>42</sup> and again in 1805.<sup>43</sup>

From this date all manorial rights in Eastrop apparently ceased, but Lord Bolton at the present time owns nearly all the parish.<sup>44</sup>

The modern Eastrop Mill marks the site of the mill appurtenant to the manor in 1086.<sup>45</sup> At the beginning of the reign of George II there was a dispute between Jacob Greene, lessee of the mill under Peter Searle, the lord of the manor, and the mayor and corporation of Basingstoke, the former alleging that the stream which worked the mill had been diverted by the mayor and corporation 'so that he could grind but very little corn, but was obliged to hire to have the greatest part of the corn ground at other mills, which was a great charge and very prejudicial to him and contrary to the covenants of the lease.'<sup>46</sup> The case was tried at the Lent Assizes held at Winchester in 1735, when a verdict was obtained by the defendants.<sup>47</sup>

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN is a small modern building consisting of a chancel, north organ chamber, vestry, nave and south porch. Beyond two 17th-century gravestones and a later one there is nothing of any age in the building. It is proposed to build a larger church in the near future for the growing needs of the parish.

The chancel is built of brick with stone dressings; it has an east window with wood frame and tracery, and a round-headed window on either side, of which that on the north looks into the vestry. It is divided from both organ chamber and nave by pointed archways.

The nave walls are faced with rough ashlar; there are two two-light windows on either side and one to the west of three lights. Over the west wall is a wooden bell-turret covered by a pyramidal tiled roof.

The plate consists of a plated chalice dated 1821, two plated patens and a plated flagon.

Apparently the only old register is that containing marriages from 1754 to 1812.

The advowson of the church, or, ADVOWSON as it was called in early times, the chapel of Eastrop,<sup>48</sup> followed the descent of the manor until the early 19th century, when it was held by the Searle family.<sup>49</sup> From 1879 it was in the gift of the Rev. B. J. Shields, who himself was rector 1879-97. It is now in the gift of his trustees.

At the beginning of the 14th century there was a dispute between the Prior of Selborne and the rector of the church concerning the tithes coming from 73 acres of land within the limits of the parish.<sup>50</sup>

There was also a chapel called Eastrop Chapel which was reckoned in the parish of Basingstoke. This chapel was disendowed in 1536 and the building granted to John Lesse, who transformed it into a mill.<sup>51</sup>

MAPLEDERWELL

Mapledrewelle (xi cent.); Mapelth, Mapeth, Mapeldurewelle, Mapeldorwelle (xii cent.); Mappedrewell, Maperderewell, Mapeldereworth (xiii cent.); Mapuldurwell (xv cent.).

The parish of Maplederwell situated 3 miles south-east from Basingstoke covers an area of 829 acres,<sup>1</sup> rising from north to south and reaching a height of 352 ft. above the ordnance datum on the southern boundary. The Basingstoke Canal intersects the parish from east to west, and it is also watered by several rivulets which join at Andwell, forming one stream which flows north to empty itself in the Loddon. The village mostly lies to the south of the canal on the brow of the northern slope of downs along a road which runs north to join the road from Basingstoke to Greywell, crossing the canal by Luke's Bridge. St. Mary's Church stands south of the village near the source of one of the streams, while a little to the north is Manor Farm. The Congregational chapel was built in 1864. There are 637½ acres of arable land and 127½ acres of permanent grass in the parish,<sup>2</sup> while East Moor, East Moor Copse, Middle Copse and East Moor Upper Copse, all in the north of the parish to the west of Andwell, are responsible for the 30½ acres of woods and plantations which it contains.<sup>3</sup> The soil is loam and the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots. Watercress is also largely grown, while market gardening is carried on by several of the inhabitants. Maplederwell Common was inclosed in 1863,<sup>4</sup> the rest of the common lands in the parish having been inclosed in 1797 by authority of a Private Act of 1796.<sup>5</sup> The name 'Estmore' is found as early as the beginning of the 13th century.<sup>6</sup>

MAPLEDERWELL, which Anschild MANOR had held of Edward the Confessor, was owned by Hubert de Port in 1086,<sup>7</sup> being his sole estate in Hampshire. It covered a far larger area than it does at present, comprising as it did within its boundaries the modern parishes of Maplederwell, Newnham and Up Nately, and the extra-parochial district of Andwell. The names of the descendants of Hubert de Port, lords of the honour of Kingston, who must not be confused with the

<sup>39</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 391.

<sup>40</sup> Add. MS. 25041.

<sup>41</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>42</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 25 Geo. III, rot. 443.

<sup>43</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>44</sup> Ex inform. Lord Bolton.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 493b.

<sup>46</sup> Add. MS. 25041.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 72, 72 d.; Inq. Non. (Rec. Com.), 120; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 15.

<sup>49</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 72 d.; 2033, fol. 13; 2034, fol. 41 d., 77, 99, 125 d.; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 98, 150; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 43, 61; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 7 Edw. III; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>50</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 12 d., 72.

<sup>51</sup> Chant. Cert. Hants, 52, no. 2.

<sup>1</sup> Of these 9 acres are land covered by water.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), A 3242.

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487a.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

successors of Hugh de Port, lords of the honour of Basing,<sup>8</sup> can be ascertained from charters to Andwell Priory now in the possession of Winchester College.<sup>9</sup> At the beginning of the 12th century Adam de Port was the lord of Maplederwell and founded the priory of Andwell in the latter half of the reign of Henry I, granting to it with various privileges £7 14s. worth of his land of Natley,<sup>10</sup> which up to this time had formed part of his manor of Maplederwell. He was succeeded by his son Roger de Port, who granted to the monks the mill and the miller of Andwell,<sup>11</sup> and was in his turn followed by his son Adam de Port,<sup>12</sup> who in 1172 was outlawed for treason and forfeited all his possessions.<sup>13</sup> Cresselin the Jew paid Henry II a large sum for the manor, but in spite of this William Fitz Audelin was holding it of the king's gift in 1185,<sup>14</sup> and Cresselin died in 1190 without gaining possession of the lands to which he was entitled.<sup>15</sup> Richard I then granted the manor to Alan Basset to hold of him with Woking (co. Surr.) for one knight's fee.<sup>16</sup> The exact date of the grant is uncertain, but in 1198 Alan granted 3 hides in Newnham pertaining to his vill of Maplederwell to Hugh de Arundel to hold to him and his heirs for the service of half a knight's fee.<sup>17</sup> Alan was confirmed in his possession of the manor by King John in 1200,<sup>18</sup> and in 1223 to end his disputes with the monks of Andwell restored them 'a way sufficient for a horse laden to go along with his leader in the head of his tillage toward the water of Maplederwell to the house of Endewelle,' obtaining in return for them a release of their claim in Hook wood and 'land in the field "del su" of the chapel of Mapeldurwelle.'<sup>19</sup> Alan died in 1232 and was succeeded by his son Gilbert,<sup>20</sup> who sided with Richard Marshal Earl of Pembroke in his attempt to make Henry III dismiss Peter des Roches and his other alien counsellors. His property in Hampshire suffered much during the civil wars, his wood of Maplederwell being broken by command of the king, timber carried away from his land, and his houses razed to the ground. The king eventually submitted to the demands of the barons, and in 1234 made due reparation to Gilbert, giving him permission to re-inclose his wood,<sup>21</sup> to recover his timber

BASSET. Barry wavy argent and gules.

DESPENSER. Quarterly argent and gules, the gules fretty or, with a bend sable over all.

and to rebuild his premises.<sup>22</sup> Gilbert died in 1241 and was followed by his brother Fulk Basset, Dean of York, and afterwards Bishop of London,<sup>23</sup> who died eighteen years later, when his estates devolved upon his next brother Philip Basset.<sup>24</sup> Philip stoutly adhered to Henry III and was the last man who quitted the field at the fatal battle of Lewes when the king was taken prisoner by the barons.<sup>25</sup> He died in 1271, leaving as his heir his only daughter Alina, then wife of Roger Bigod Earl of Norfolk and Marshal of England, and widow of Sir Hugh Le Despenser.<sup>26</sup> Ela widow of Philip Basset<sup>27</sup> obtained a life-grant of the manor from Roger and Alina in 1272,<sup>28</sup> and eight years later was summoned to show by what warrant she took the fines of the breaches of the assize of bread and ale in Maplederwell, as also to show cause why she should not permit her villeins of Maplederwell to make suit at the king's hundred court of Basingstoke.<sup>29</sup> She died in 1297,<sup>30</sup> and the reversion of the manor, then held by Alan Plunkenet for life,<sup>31</sup> passed to Alina, who died in 1306.<sup>32</sup> Her heir was Hugh le Despenser, generally called the elder, her son by her first husband,<sup>33</sup> who was holding in 1316<sup>34</sup> and two years later obtained a grant for himself and his heirs of free warren in his demesne lands of Maplederwell.<sup>35</sup> In July 1321 the barons condemned Hugh le Despenser and his son Hugh, generally called the younger, to forfeit all their estates and go into exile.<sup>36</sup> Circumstances, however, enabled Edward II to recall his favourites the following year, and in May 1322—two months after the royal victory of Boroughbridge—a commission of oyer and terminer was issued to John de Stoner and others on the king's information that John Maltravers, William de Whitefeld and Nicholas de Percy and their followers had entered Maplederwell and other manors belonging to Hugh le Despenser the elder and committed divers trespasses there.<sup>37</sup> However, the triumph of the Despensers was shortlived, the father being hanged by the forces of Queen Isabel outside Bristol on 27 October 1326, and the son a month later at Hereford.<sup>38</sup> Edward III in 1327 granted the manor of Maplederwell to Alesia the widow of Edmund Earl of Arundel<sup>39</sup>, who was

<sup>8</sup> See article by J. H. Round in Gen. (New Ser.), xvi, 1-12.

<sup>9</sup> See article by the Rev. W. H. Gunner, M.A., in Arch. Journ. ix, 246-261.

<sup>10</sup> Arch. Journ. ix, 247-8.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 249.

<sup>12</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 189.

<sup>13</sup> Mr. Round says: 'The Chronicler's statement of Adam's fall in 1172, "Eodem anno (1172) Adam de Port calumniatus fuit de prodicione regis. Et quia ipse ad summationem regis stare iudicio nollet exlegatus est ab Anglia" (Gesta Regis Henrici, i, 35; Hoveden, Chron. ii, 41), is confirmed by the contemporary Pipe Roll, from which we learn that in that year three cartloads of prisoners reached London from the west in connexion with this affair' (Gen. [New Ser.], xvi, 10).

<sup>14</sup> Pipe R. 31, m. 14.

<sup>15</sup> Pipe R. 37, m. 14.

<sup>16</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rec. Com.), i, 198.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 9 Ric. I.

<sup>18</sup> Chart. R. i John, m. 24.

<sup>19</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), A 3242; vide V.C.H. Hants, ii, 224.

<sup>20</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 231; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 238b.

<sup>21</sup> Close, 18 Hen. III, m. 20.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. m. 11.

<sup>23</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 356.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. ii, 301.

<sup>25</sup> Banks, Dormant and Extinct Baronage, i, 24.

<sup>26</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 554; Inq. p.m. 56 Hen. III, no. 31.

<sup>27</sup> She was the daughter of William de Longespee, Earl of Salisbury. Her first husband was Thomas de Newburgh, Earl of Warwick, who died in 1242 (G.E.C. Peerage, viii, 54). She is called Ela Longespee, Countess of Warwick, in 1280 (Plac. de Quo War. [Rec. Com.], 770).

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 56 Hen. III.

<sup>29</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 770, 772. See also Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>30</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, viii, 54.

<sup>31</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 142-5.

<sup>32</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iii, 90-1.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.

<sup>34</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>35</sup> Chart. R. 11 Edw. II, m. 3.

<sup>36</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iii, 90-1.

<sup>37</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 9 d. See also Close, 15 Edw. II, m. 13 d.

<sup>38</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iii, 90-1.

<sup>39</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. III, pt. 1, m. 13; m. 6.

beheaded at Hereford a few days before the younger Despenser, for his adherence to Edward II.<sup>40</sup> He soon afterwards, however, made other provision for the maintenance of Alesia and her children, as in 1330 he granted the custody of the manor to William de Horewood le Fitz to hold for life at a rent of £11 18s. 8d.<sup>41</sup> Finally, in 1337 the king restored it to Hugh le Despenser, son of Hugh le Despenser the younger, to hold to him and his heirs by the services due,<sup>42</sup> and in 1346 Hugh was stated to be holding half a fee in Maplederwell.<sup>43</sup> In the inquisition taken after the death of Hugh in 1349 his nephew, Edward le Despenser, son of Edward brother of Hugh, was named as his heir.<sup>44</sup> This Edward, however, was not seised of Maplederwell at his death in 1375.<sup>45</sup> Two-thirds were in the possession of his brother Thomas le Despenser when he died in 1381, his nephew Thomas, son of Edward, being returned as his heir.<sup>46</sup> This Thomas was a favourite of Richard II, and in 1397 obtained the reversal of the attainder of his ancestors.<sup>47</sup> On the accession of Henry IV he took part in the conspiracy of the Earls of Huntingdon, Kent, Rutland and Salisbury to restore Richard II. This conspiracy proved a failure; Despenser was put to death at Bristol on 17 January 1400, and all his honours were forfeited.<sup>48</sup> Maplederwell was first of all taken into the king's hands, but later it was restored to Thomas Percy Earl of Worcester, Hugh le Despenser, Thomas Lauton, John Cors, Hugh de Tildesley and Thomas Fauconer, on whom he had settled it in trust three months before.<sup>49</sup> Richard le Despenser son and heir of Thomas died without issue and under age on 14 October 1414, leaving as his heir his sister Isabel,<sup>50</sup> whose second husband Richard Beauchamp Earl of Warwick<sup>51</sup> was stated to be holding in 1428 and again in 1431 half a knight's fee in Maplederwell, formerly belonging to Hugh le Despenser.<sup>52</sup> Isabel died seised of the manor of Maplederwell in 1440, her heir being her son Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick,<sup>53</sup> who died in 1446, leaving as his heir his infant daughter Anne.<sup>54</sup> The latter died three years later, and the manor then passed to her paternal aunt Anne,<sup>55</sup> whose husband Richard Nevill Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, the Kingmaker, in 1464 claimed certain cattle from John Stukeley, lord of Newnham, for issues and amercements of his court of Maplederwell.<sup>56</sup> After the death of the Kingmaker at Barnet on 14 April 1471 the history of the manor is somewhat obscure,<sup>57</sup> but it eventually came into the possession of George Lord Abergavenny, son and heir of Elizabeth, who was the only child of Isabel le Despenser by her first husband Richard BEAUCHAMP. Gules a fesse between six crosslets or.

NEVILL. Gules a saltire argent and a label gobony argent and azure.

Beauchamp Earl of Worcester.<sup>58</sup> George granted it to William Frost of Avington and Juliana his wife, and his grant was confirmed by his son and namesake in 1513 in return for a payment of £150.<sup>59</sup> Sixteen years later William granted the manor to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, 'for the support to the end of time of a fellow of his own blood.'<sup>60</sup> In 1535 the Hampshire holdings of the college included the manor of Maplederwell, worth by free tenants £1 13s., by customary tenants £5 3s. 1d., and by rents of demesne lands £6 4s. 10½d., and certain tenements in Up Nately of the annual value of £1 15s. 10d.<sup>61</sup> The manor and most of the parish belong to the college at the present day.

Neither of the mills included under Maplederwell in the Domesday Survey<sup>62</sup> was in the modern parish of Maplederwell. One is probably represented by Andwell Mill, which Roger de Port gave to the monks of Andwell.<sup>63</sup> The site of the other is perhaps marked by Lyde Mill in Newnham parish which is worked by the tributary of the Loddon called the Lyde River, and if so it was included in the grant of the three hides of land in Newnham

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, OXFORD. Tierced in pale: 1 Azure a pelican or wounding itself, for BISHOP RICHARD FOX; 2 Argent a scutcheon of the arms of the see of Winchester with a mitre; 3 Sable a chevron or between three owls argent and a chief argent with three roses gules therein, for BISHOP OLDHAM.

<sup>40</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, i, 145-6.

<sup>41</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 29.

<sup>42</sup> Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 29. This grant followed two earlier ones dated 3 Oct. 1332 and 3 Aug. 1333 respectively (Pat. 6 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 3; 7 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 24). By the first the king granted Maplederwell with other manors to Hugh in part satisfaction of 200 marks worth of land and rent promised to him by the king pending other provision for his estate. By the second the king granted it with other property to Hugh in consideration of his services in the war against the Scots, to hold until the lands of his inheritance from his mother should come into his hands. His mother died in 1337. Nevertheless, the same year he was finally confirmed in his possession of Maplederwell.

<sup>43</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>44</sup> Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 169.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. 49 Edw. III, no. 46.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. 4 Ric. II, no. 21.

<sup>47</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iii, 92. <sup>48</sup> Ibid.

<sup>49</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Hen. IV, pt. i, no. 84; Pat. 2 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 11 d.

<sup>50</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, iii, 93.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344, 364.

<sup>53</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Hen. VI, no. 3.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. 24 Hen. VI, no. 43.

<sup>55</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, i, 17.

<sup>56</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit.

<sup>57</sup> On his death his own and his wife's vast estates were divided between his two daughters Isabel and Anne by an Act of 1473. This Act was annulled by one of 1487-8 and the property restored to Anne Countess of Warwick, who forthwith settled it upon Hen. VII (G.E.C. Peerage, viii, 62). It is possible that Hen. VII granted Maplederwell to George Lord Abergavenny.

<sup>58</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, i, 17.

<sup>59</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 4 Hen. VIII, m. 1 d.

<sup>60</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 287.

<sup>61</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 246. The total annual value was £14 16s. 9½d., but from this had to be subtracted every year:—£1 3s. 4d. distributed in alms for the souls of William Frost and Juliana, £2 13s. 4d. paid to priests for celebrating daily mass for the souls of the same, £2 paid to the chief seneschal and 13s. 4d. to the bailiff, leaving a net annual value of £8 6s. 9½d.

<sup>62</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487a.

<sup>63</sup> Arch. Journ., ix, 249.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

made by Alan Basset to Hugh de Arundel in 1198.<sup>64</sup>

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN has a chancel 13 ft. 8 in. long by 17 ft. 9 in. wide, with a small south vestry, and a nave 36 ft. 8 in. by 18 ft. 10 in. inside, all of flint and stone.

The nave dates from the end of the 12th or beginning of the 13th century, but has been much modernized; the chancel appears to have been entirely rebuilt in modern times, some of the old stones being re-used.

The east window is a modern pointed one of three lights; in the north wall is a tiny lancet, of which the head and a few of the angle quoins only are old. A modern doorway in the south wall opens to the small modern vestry. The chancel arch is modern. The nave has three windows on each side, all single lancets; the outer stonework is all modern, also the heads inside; but there is old chalk masonry in the jambs. In the west wall is a round-headed doorway of a single chamfered order, which is original work patched with late masonry; the door is also old and has chamfered upright battens on the outer face and cross framing on the back. There is a very plain chancel screen, which has four and a half bays on either side of the central opening, and contains a little old work of 15th-century character. On the west end rises a plain boarded wooden bell-turret.

The roof of the chancel is gabled and has a plastered barrel vaulted ceiling; the roof of the nave has rafters set on a four-centred curve and plastered between with old plain tie-beams, braced collars, and purlins.

The altar pulpit, font, &c., are all modern.

In the chancel floor is a slab containing a 16th-century monumental brass partly covered by the organ; the part visible shows a man in a long fur gown and his wife with four sons and four daughters below. The inscription runs, 'Off your charite pray for the souls . . . and Agnes his wyfe on whos . . .'; the rest is hidden by boarding.

There are three bells: the first is inscribed 'Johannes est nomen ejus'; the second has 'Love God 1659'; the third is by Richard Eldridge, 1620.

A silver chalice, paten cover, paten and flagon, all of 1725, belong to Newnham (q.v.), but are used at Maplederwell, which itself possesses only a silver alms dish of 1841.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1618 to 1666 and burials 1618 to 1644; the second book has baptisms and burials from 1666 to 1676 and marriages 1668 to 1673; the third has baptisms, marriages and burials from 1685 to 1744 and continues the first and last to 1808; the fourth has baptisms and burials 1808 to 1811, and the fifth marriages from 1754 to 1812.

The tithes of Maplederwell and a ADVOWSON yardland in Maplederwell were included in the grant of the chapel of Newnham which Adam de Port made on the day of the dedication of that chapel to the abbey of St. Vigor of Cerisy, of which Monk Sherborne was a cell.<sup>65</sup> At this date—early in the 12th century—there was no chapel in Maplederwell, but one had been built before the end of the 13th century. Maplederwell has continued in a dependent position on the church of Newnham, the living at the present time being a chapelry annexed to the rectory of Newnham of the joint net income of £250 with 25 acres of glebe and residence.

Ela the widow of Philip Basset founded and endowed a chantry in the chapel, and granted the presentation to the chantry to John of Pontoise, Bishop of Winchester, and his successors.<sup>66</sup> The bishop presented certain chaplains with the consent of Ela, but on her death Alan Plunkenet, who had obtained a life-grant of the manor, set over the chantry Robert de Norhamptone, who was not instituted in the regular way, his only title being the grant and will of Alan.<sup>67</sup> An inquiry was held by the official of the Archdeacon of Winchester by the orders of Henry Woodlock, and a return was made on 13 August 1314.<sup>68</sup> The Bishops of Winchester recovered the right to present, and in 1318 John Sendale conferred the chantry, which was vacant by the death of the last chaplain, Peter de Dupehale, on Ralph Frankelyn of Reading.<sup>69</sup>

In 1678 John Smith by deed conveyed to trustees 6a. or. 2p. in the parish of Rotherwick, the rents to be employed in providing clothes for the poor of Maplederwell, among which the kindred of John Smith were to take preference. The land was sold in 1899, and the endowment is now represented by a sum of £469 11s. 3d. consols with the official trustees. The income is £11 14s. 8d. annually.

<sup>64</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 9 Ric. I.

<sup>66</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.),

<sup>67</sup> Ibid.

<sup>65</sup> Dugdale, Baronage, i, 463, and 142-5.
V.C.H. Hants, ii, 226-8.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid. See also ibid. 515.

NATELY SCORES.

Nately Scores is a small parish covering an area of 521 acres, of which  $37\frac{1}{2}$  acres are arable land,  $151\frac{1}{2}$  acres permanent grass and  $5\frac{1}{2}$  acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> It is intersected from west to east by the main road from Basingstoke to London, which enters the parish by the Red Lion Inn at a height of 218 ft. above the ordnance datum, and climbs up to a height of over 332 ft. in a little over half a mile. The village is situated to the south of the main road in the west of the parish about 2 miles west from Hook station on the London and South Western Railway, and 4 miles east from Basingstoke. The church of St. Swithun is one of the smallest in Hampshire, and, standing as it does in the vicinity of a large pond, the old manor-house now used as a farm and the usual farm buildings presents a very pleasing picture. Waterend gate marks the site of the old turnpike, while Priory Farm is reminiscent of the days when the neighbouring priory of Andwell held lands in the locality. Scores Hill, part of the Dorchester estate, has been recently sold or let off for building purposes.<sup>1a</sup> Part of the village of Hook, including its railway station, is in the parish of Odiham and part in Newnham, but nearly the whole of Hook Common is comprised in this parish. On 8 December 1879 a detached part of Nately Scores known as Holt was transferred to Newnham.<sup>2</sup> The soil is stiff clay and the subsoil clay. Wheat and beans are the chief crops grown.

Hodmills is a place-name occurring in this parish early in the 18th century.<sup>3</sup>

The manor of NATELY SCORES, MANOR which had been held by Edwin of Edward the Confessor, was assessed at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  hides in 1086 when it formed part of the Hampshire possessions of Hugh de Port, being held of him by Anschill.<sup>4</sup> The overlordship continued with the descendants of Hugh<sup>5</sup> for many centuries,<sup>6</sup> the manor being said to be held by William Paulet Marquess of Winchester as of his manor of Basing as late as 1617.<sup>7</sup> The exact date when the family of Scores who held the manor of the Ports and their successors obtained the demesne lordship is uncertain, but it is probable that they did so at a very early period. In the reign of Henry I Roger de Scores witnessed a charter of Henry de Port to the abbey of St. Vigor of Cerisy,<sup>8</sup> and he was probably at this time lord of Nately Scores.

SCORES. Azure a fret or.

Nately Scores almost certainly formed part of the four knights' fees in Hampshire which Matthew de Scores was holding of John de Port in 1166,<sup>9</sup> and his descendant Roger de Scores, the son of James de Scores,<sup>10</sup> was holding one knight's fee in Nately Scores and Woodgarston of John de St. John in 1275.<sup>11</sup> Sir John Scores, kinsman of Roger,<sup>12</sup> as lord of the manor presented a rector during the episcopacy of John Stratford<sup>13</sup> (1323-33), and was stated to be holding the fourth part of a fee in Woodgarston and Nately Scores in 1346.<sup>14</sup> He died in 1353, and the manor then passed to his son John, who held it until his death in 1381.<sup>15</sup> His heir was his sister Sybil, who married the same year John Uvedale of Titsey (co. Surr.), sheriff of Hampshire 1388-99,<sup>16</sup> and brought Nately Scores to a family with whom it remained for nearly three hundred years. Sir Thomas Uvedale, the grandson of John and Sybil<sup>17</sup> Uvedale, presented to the church during the episcopate of Henry Waynflete (1447-86),<sup>18</sup> and was followed by his son Sir William Uvedale, who died in 1524.<sup>19</sup> Sir William Uvedale, son and heir of the latter, before his death in 1528 conveyed the estate to trustees for the use of his wife Dorothy for life, directing them only to allow a small annual income to his eldest son Arthur, who was apparently of very extravagant habits, and entrusting 'the reparation of the several manor-places and the charges necessary for the good order and rule of the manors, lands and tenements' to his brother Thomas and his younger son John during Arthur's life.<sup>20</sup> Arthur died between July 1537 and January 1538,<sup>21</sup> and was followed by his son and heir William,<sup>22</sup> who dealt with the manor by recovery in 1567,<sup>23</sup> and died seised two years later, leaving as his heir his son William, aged nine.<sup>24</sup> William, who was afterwards knighted, died in 1616, and the manor and advowson of Nately Scores then passed to his eldest son Sir William.<sup>25</sup> The latter died in 1652, but it is probable that before his death he had alienated this estate, settling it upon Frances his second daughter by his first marriage.<sup>26</sup> This Frances married Sir Edward Griffin of Braybrooke and Dingley (co.

UVEDALE. Argent a mill-rind cross gules.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).
<sup>1a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>2</sup> Loc. Govt. Bd. Order 10102.
<sup>3</sup> Jonathan Plott for Hodmills in Nately Scores 2s. 6d. (Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 391).

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b. <sup>5</sup> See Basing.
<sup>6</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Feud. Aids, ii, 313, 344; Close, 3 Edw. III, m. 4; 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18; Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 983, no. 3.
<sup>7</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. lv, 123.

<sup>8</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1013-14.

<sup>9</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rec. Com.), i, 207-8.

<sup>10</sup> Close, 4 Edw. I, m. 12 d.

<sup>11</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>12</sup> See under Widley and Wickham (V.C.H. Hants, iii, 171, 234).

<sup>13</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 66 d.

<sup>14</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>15</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 234.

<sup>16</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 329.

<sup>17</sup> Surr. Arch. Coll. iii, 185-9.

<sup>18</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 51 d.

<sup>19</sup> Surr. Arch. Coll. iii, 185-9.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. 172.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. iii, 111.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 168; Ct. of Req. bdle. 4, no. 73; Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 103, no. 79; bdle. 114, no. 1.

<sup>23</sup> Recov. R. East. 9 Eliz. rot. 336.

<sup>24</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 12 Eliz. no. 103.

<sup>25</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. lv, 123.

<sup>26</sup> Surr. Arch. Coll. iii, 127.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Northants.), and is thus mentioned in her father's will : 'I give and bequeath unto my loveing daughter the Laday Frances Griffin the sum of twenty pounds.'<sup>27</sup> Sir Edward Griffin was the owner of the manor in 1668.<sup>28</sup> Nately Scures next passed into the possession of Anthony Henley,<sup>29</sup> who died in 1711. His first and second sons Anthony and Bertie both died without surviving issue, and consequently all his estates passed eventually to his third son Robert, created Earl of Northington in 1764.<sup>30</sup> The earl died in 1772 and was succeeded in the peerage and estates by his only son Robert, who died unmarried in 1786.<sup>31</sup> The following year Jane Dowager Countess of Northington, widow of the first earl, and Lady Bridget Tollemache, Lady Jane Aston, Mary Dowager Countess of Legonier, and Lady Elizabeth Eden, the sisters and co-heirs of the second earl, sold the manor to the Hon. Richard Howard and Brook Watson,<sup>32</sup> trustees for Guy Carleton first Lord Dorchester.<sup>33</sup> The latter died in 1808 and was succeeded by his grandson Arthur Henry Carleton second Lord Dorchester, who died unmarried in May 1826, and was buried, like others of his family, at Nately Scures.<sup>34</sup> The manor then passed to his cousin Guy Carleton third Lord Dorchester,<sup>35</sup> whose eldest daughter Henrietta Anna, created Baroness Dorchester in 1899,<sup>36</sup> is the present owner.

There was a mill in the parish in 1086.<sup>37</sup> This, so long as it was in existence, was probably worked by the tributary of the Loddon, which forms part of the western boundary of the parish. A free fishery is mentioned as an appurtenance of the manor in a fine of 1618.<sup>38</sup>

The church of ST. SWITHUN consists of an apse 16 ft. in diameter and a nave 30 ft. long. The history of the church is of the simplest, the whole structure, practically as it stands to-day, having been built in the third quarter of the 12th century. A gallery appears to have been built in 1591 and rebuilt together with the roof in 1786. In modern times the whole church has been a good deal patched and restored and a bell gable built over the west wall, replacing, according to notes in the registers, a bell tower, probably a wooden bell-cot on the roof.

The apse is lit by three small round-headed windows with external chamfers and rebates, and all are very much restored. The internal splays and the rear arches are for the most part of 12th-century date. They are arranged one in the centre to the east and one on each side a little east of the spring of the apse. Beneath the window on the north is a small square chamfered aumbry.

The nave is lit by two windows on the south similar in every respect to those in the apse. There is a third window to the west, originally similar to the others, but now considerably lengthened to give light both to the gallery and to the nave under it. There are no windows on the north of the nave. The only entrance is the north door. It is of late 12th-century date and of two orders. The outer is semicircular in form and enriched with zigzag in two planes, the edge being worked into a bead and reel pattern. The outer order rests upon circular shafts with plain roll bases, plain hollowed abaci and carved capitals. That to the east is ornamented with a carving of a mermaid holding a plait of her hair with her left hand. The capital to the west is scalloped. The inner order is square with a trefoiled head and roll cusps and the abacus of the capitals is broken round to form an abacus to both orders. The label is chamfered and enriched with lozenge and hatched ornament.

The bell gable above the west wall is a poor imitation of 12th-century work and has places for two bells. Externally the church is built of flint rubble with angle quoins and door and window dressings of Binstead stone, with later restorations in the same material and in freestone.

The roof is modern, of open collar construction and covered with tiles. The gallery is all of late 18th-century date except the moulded beam under the front of it, which is a relic of the earlier gallery. Fastened to this is a small brass plate inscribed :

'Willm bbedall founder heere
Henrye Barnes Parson
Builder Heere 1591
H B.'

The font is circular and of late date and a poor imitation of 12th-century work. The seating, fittings, pulpit, &c., are all modern.

There is only one monument of interest, a brass inscription plate under the west window inscribed in Roman capitals as follows :

Here lies John Palmer and Mary his wife
Prisoners of hope to Eternal Life
Who deceased

HENLEY, Earl of Northington. Azure a lion argent with a crown or in a border argent with eight roundels gules thereon.

CARLETON, Lord Dorchester. Ermine a bend sable with three pheons argent thereon.

PLAN OF ST. SWITHUN'S CHURCH, NATELY SCURES

<sup>27</sup> Surr. Arch. Coll. iii, 129.

<sup>28</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 20 Chas. II, rot. 163; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>29</sup> He presented to the church in 1797 (Inst. Bks. [P.R.O.]).

<sup>30</sup> Eyre, Hist. of Swarraton and Northington, 30.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. 31.

<sup>32</sup> Close, 27 Geo. III, pt. xiii, no. 7.

<sup>33</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 288, 292.

<sup>34</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iii, 142-3.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid.; Recov. R. Mich. 3 Will. IV, rot. 23.

<sup>36</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>37</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 16 Jas. I.

NATELEY SCURES CHURCH : THE NORTH DOOR

STEVENTON CHURCH : NAVE SHOWING 17TH CENTURY PEW

BASINGSTOKE HUNDRED

NATELY SCURES

Hee May the 15, 1661, aged 61
Mary make room
To thee I come
And my last home
To the day of doom
Then shall we wake rise live for ay
With Christ a never dying day

Shee October the 13, 1660, aged 50
I went before
To ope death's door
I could not stay
But now give way
Come then my dear we'll sleep in Blisse
And in the dust each other kisse

Twice sixteen year we livd together
In sunshine and in stormy weather
In wedlock bands husband and wife
In joy love peace void of all strife
And ten times changed our habitation
And here at last we fixed our station
Where after ten years spent we have Obtained at length a quiet grave

Palmer eram ante obitum nemo fit palmifer at nunc
Palmifer in caelis qui modo palmer eram
Palmer on earth are pilgrims such was I
My pilgrimage is done and here I ly

The bell gable contains two bells.
The plate consists of a silver chalice of 1795, a silver paten given in memory of Frances Louisa Carlton in 1868, and a plated paten.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1666 to 1786, marriages from 1721 to 1754, and burials from 1693 to 1786. The later burials appear to have been lost, and baptisms between 1780 and 1812 are contained in a number of loose sheets, while there is a printed banns book of marriages containing entries between 1754 and 1812.

The first mention of a parish ADVOWSON church is in 1291, in which year its annual value was given as £4 6s. 8d.<sup>39</sup>

The advowson has throughout its history followed the descent of the manor, the living at the present day being a rectory of the net annual value of £140 with 9 acres of glebe and residence in the gift of Baroness Dorchester.<sup>40</sup>

By will proved 6 December 1898 CHARITIES the Hon. Maria Louisa Carleton bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens a sum of £1,500 for the repair of a vault and memorials, any residue of the income to be applied for the benefit of the poor. The endowment is now represented by a sum of £1,357 9s. 3d. consols with the official trustees, producing an income of £33 18s. 8d. annually.

ST. SWITHUN'S CHURCH, NATELY SCURES, FROM SOUTH-EAST

<sup>39</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212.

<sup>40</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 66 d., 142 d.; 2033, fol. 25 d.; 2024, fol. 51 d., 168;

Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 160; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

NEWNHAM

Neweham (xii cent.); Nywenham (xiv cent.); Newenam (xv cent.).

Newnham is a parish and pleasant village situated  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles west from Hook station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. The western boundary of the parish is formed by the River Lyde, which flows north from Andwell to join the Loddon, while part of the eastern boundary is formed by the River Whitewater, which works Hook Mill. The parish is on the whole low-lying, the highest point being occupied by the village in the south-west at a height of slightly over 300 ft. above the ordnance datum. The village is prettily situated, being grouped round a green a short distance north of the new main road from Basingstoke to London. The old coaching road ran past Newnham Green and St. Nicholas Church, which lies west of the green near the Manor Farm. The schools, built in 1843 and enlarged in 1875 and again in 1896, are south of the railway line near the Dorchester Arms, which is situated on the southern borders of the parish close to Hook Common.<sup>1</sup> Hook, of which a writer on Newnham of the early part of the 18th century says: 'I am informed that the family of Hooke have been possessors of Hooke in this parish for many generations,'<sup>2</sup> is situated mostly in this parish, although its station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway is in Odiham parish and Hook Common is comprised in Nately Scures. It mostly lies along the main road from Basingstoke to London, which is joined near one of the two White Hart Inns by the main road from Odiham to Reading. There are many modern residences, and the place is a growing one owing to the existence of its railway station. There is a large agricultural implement manufactory in the village, and bricks and tiles are also made in the parish.

The area is 1,401 acres of land and 3 acres of land covered by water.<sup>3</sup> The soil is a very fertile loam producing excellent crops of wheat, beans and oats. The subsoil is clay and gravel. On 8 December 1879 a detached portion of Nately Scures known as Holt was transferred to this parish.<sup>4</sup>

Among place-names in the parish mentioned in the 16th century are the following:—Shirland Crofte, Nykkes,<sup>5</sup> Parkers<sup>6</sup> and Ivetott.<sup>6</sup>

NEWNHAM formed part of Mapledermwell (q.v.) until 1198, in which year Alan Basset lord of Mapledermwell granted 3 hides of land in Newnham pertaining to his vill of Mapledermwell to Hugh de Arundel to hold to him and his heirs of Alan and his heirs by the service of half a knight's fee.<sup>7</sup> In accordance with the terms of this grant successive lords of Mapledermwell, the Earl Marshal, Hugh le Despenser the elder, and his grandson Hugh le Despenser, are returned as overlords of Newnham in 1275, 1316 and 1349 respectively,<sup>8</sup> and as late as 1464 Richard Nevill Earl of Warwick, lord of Mapledermwell, claimed suit of court from the lord of Newnham.<sup>9</sup> Hugh de Arundel, who obtained Newnham in 1198, also held the manor of Upton Grey in the hundred of Bermondspit, being succeeded in possession of that estate by his son William de Arundel and by his grandson of the same name,<sup>10</sup> but how long this manor continued in possession of the Arundel family is unknown. By 1275 it had passed to Adam de St. Manefeo, who in that year was stated to be holding the fourth part of a knight's fee in Newnham of the Earl Marshal.<sup>11</sup> The St. Manefeos were also owners of Heckfield in the hundred of Holdshot, and from this date Newnham followed the descent of that manor (q.v.) for nearly a century and a half. In 1346 Robert de St. Manefeo was holding the fourth part of a fee in Newnham formerly belonging to John de St. Manefeo,<sup>12</sup> and his descendant John de St. Manefeo, son and heir of Thomas de St. Manefeo, gave up all his right in the manor to Robert Fulmere and others in 1381.<sup>13</sup> In 1395 this manor together with Heckfield was settled on Edward Bokeland and Amice his wife and the issue of Amice, with contingent remainder to Sir Philip la Vache and his issue, with contingent remainder to the right heirs of Amice.<sup>14</sup> Amice leaving no children,<sup>15</sup> Sir Philip la Vache succeeded to Newnham in 1405,<sup>16</sup> but died without issue about three years later.<sup>17</sup> The history of the manor for a short time after this is obscure, but by 1428 it had passed into the possession of Thomas Stukeley, who in that year was stated to be holding the fourth part of a fee in Newnham, formerly belonging to Robert de St. Manefeo.<sup>18</sup> Thomas was succeeded by John Stukeley, who at the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 14 November 1461 was fined 12d. because he had made the ford badly which was on the common road at Newnham in Wildmore, and another STUKELEY. Checky argent and sable a fesse and a border gules.

<sup>1</sup> The London and South Western Railway Company pay compensation to some of the 'commoners' for disturbance of their common rights (ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope).

<sup>2</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 114. It is mentioned by name as early as 1329, in which year it was returned that Hugh le Despenser lord of Mapledermwell had purchased a messuage and land in 'La Hoke' in Newnham, and at his death was holding of Robert de St. Manefeo lord of Newnham (Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III [2nd nos.], no. 58).

<sup>3</sup> Of this area 426½ acres are arable land, 426½ acres permanent grass and 6 acres woods and plantations (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. 1905).

<sup>4</sup> Loc. Govt. Bd. Order 10102.

<sup>5</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 10, no. 32. The name 'Shirland Crofte' still survives as 'Shirlen's Copse' in the north of the parish a little to the west of the road from Odiham to Reading.

<sup>6</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 154, no. 52.

<sup>7</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 389.

<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 9 Ric. I. The wood called 'Le Ho' (the modern 'Hook Common') was expressly excepted from this grant (ibid.).

<sup>9</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Feud. Aids, ii, 313; Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 169.

<sup>10</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 293-4.

<sup>11</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 383.

<sup>12</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>13</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>14</sup> Close, 4 Ric. II, m. 18 d.

<sup>15</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 18 Ric. II.

<sup>16</sup> See Heckfield in Holdshot Hundred.

<sup>17</sup> Close, 7 Hen. IV, m. 40.

<sup>18</sup> See Heckfield.

<sup>19</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344.

12*d.* because the gate at the end of the lane leading from Newnham to Wildmore was broken and badly fastened.<sup>19</sup> At the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 17 November 1464 the tithingman of Newnham presented that John Stukeley, the lord of Newnham, made his pound in an unknown place and impounded there pigs of William Dene, to the great damage of William and contrary to the custom of the manor of Basingstoke.<sup>20</sup> In the same year John Stukeley complained that John atte Field, the bailiff of Richard Nevill Earl of Warwick, unjustly detained seventeen of his cattle in the pound at Maplederwell.<sup>21</sup> John atte Field maintained that he impounded them in lieu of a sum of 6*s.* 8*d.* which John Stukeley owed the Earl of Warwick as his superior lord for issues and amercements of his court of Maplederwell, but the case was finally decided on 22 December 1464 in the plaintiff's favour and the defendant fined 12*d.*<sup>22</sup> In 1502 the same John Stukeley or his son and namesake was fined 8*d.* for failing to attend two of the Basingstoke hundred courts,<sup>23</sup> and further details about the Stukeley family can be learned from an undated petition—probably of the reign of Elizabeth—in which John Stukeley complained that ‘whereas he was seised of a parcel of ground called Shirland Crofte, in the parish of Newnham, one Richard Rythe entered by force and drove away five kine belonging to suppliant's father. Action was brought against Rythe, and the court awarded that the complainant's father should have deliverance of his cattle and 5*s.* damages. Notwithstanding this, Rythe has grievously maimed and wounded complainant's brother in an ale-house, and also put complainant's father in jeopardy of his life in the churchyard.’<sup>24</sup> The exact date at which Newnham passed from the Stukeleys is uncertain, but William Paulet third Marquess of Winchester was seised of three-quarters of the manor at his death in 1598,<sup>25</sup> and his son and successor William the fourth marquess dealt with the whole manor by fine in 1609.<sup>26</sup> From this date Newnham continued with the Marquesses of Winchester and their descendants for over two centuries.<sup>27</sup> William Powlett Lord Bolton was the owner in 1816,<sup>28</sup> but soon afterwards parted with the manor, the purchaser, however, being unknown. In 1829 James Warne, three times Mayor of Basingstoke,<sup>29</sup> sold a quarter of the manor to Timothy Luff Mullens,<sup>30</sup> who was Mayor of Basingstoke 1808–9 and died in 1833.<sup>31</sup> Shortly afterwards Guy Carleton third Lord Dorchester purchased the whole manor, and it is now in the possession of his eldest daughter Henrietta Anne, who was created Baroness Dorchester in 1899.<sup>32</sup>

Lyde Mill, worked by the River Lyde, probably marks the site of one of the two mills comprised in Maplederwell in 1086.<sup>33</sup> In the 17th century there were no fewer than five mills here; Henry Deane, at his death in 1610, being in possession of two water corn-mills and three water fulling mills in Newnham called Lyde Mills, which he held of the Marquess of Winchester as of his manor of Newnham.<sup>34</sup>

The church of ST. NICHOLAS consists of a chancel 22 ft. by 15 ft. 10 in., nave 41 ft. 7 in. by 20 ft. 8 in. and a north-western tower.

The earliest work in the church dates from the first quarter of the 12th century, and the existing nave and chancel are upon the original foundations and contain much of the walling of that time; but an extensive restoration of the church in 1847–8 by the then Lord Dorchester has destroyed all further evidence of the history of the building. The 12th-century work is found in the chancel arch, the west doorway of the nave, and the south and east doorways of the tower. The structure, except for some roof timbers and part of a mediaeval gravestone, is modern.

The chancel has an east window of three round-headed lights, and a single similar light in either side wall. The chancel arch has jambs of two square orders on the west face, with detached shafts in the outer order, and all its details have an early look; the bases of the shafts are of two rolls of almost equal diameter, and the capitals are simple cushions, the southern one ornamented with a pair of volutes springing from a banded stem at the angle of the capital. The arch is semicircular, of two orders, the inner square, the outer moulded with an edge roll and filleted hollow; with an outer ring of a small triangular ornament.

The nave has three modern round-headed windows a side of very poor design, but the west doorway has old shafts and capitals. The north capital is carved with three early volutes, and the other has a small human head with long ears at the angle, from which issue two knotted and twisted tails; the abaci and arch are modern.

The doorway from the nave into the tower is also old work, entirely plain with a round head, and the south doorway of the tower has old jambs of two square orders with detached angle shafts and early cushion capitals; the arch is round and moulded with an edge-roll between two shallow hollows. The tower is modern, of very poor 12th-century style, its walls ending in gables and a pyramidal leaded roof set diagonally.

The roof of the chancel is gabled, with arched braces under the collars and purlins with carved wind-braces; the nave is similar, but has plain tie-beams; both have been covered with a dark stain, which makes it difficult to distinguish new work from old.

All the fittings, including the plain octagonal font, are modern. In the tower is a panel with the arms of George I. In the north wall of the chancel is part of an early 14th-century gravestone. It is incised with the head and shoulders of a tonsured and bearded priest, apparelled in alb and chasuble, under a trefoiled canopy; the only part of the marginal inscription remaining is + ‘Hic jacet.’

<sup>19</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 287.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. 288–9.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. 293–4.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. 309.

<sup>24</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 10, no. 32.

<sup>25</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125.

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 7 Jas. I.

<sup>27</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112; Stowe MS. 845, fol. 114; Recov. R. Mich. 28 Geo. II, rot. 383.

<sup>28</sup> In that year he conveyed it by fine to George Burley (Feet of F. Hants, East. 56 Geo. III).

<sup>29</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 479–80.

<sup>30</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 9 & 10 Geo. IV.

<sup>31</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 478.

<sup>32</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>33</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487a.

<sup>34</sup> Chan. Misc. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), clcxxxvii, 4.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

There are three bells: the first has the initials W. H. in Gothic capitals and a plain cross; the second is by Henry Knight, 1602, and the tenor by the second Henry Knight, 1662.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten cover, paten and flagon of 1725 (see Mapledewell), a silver-gilt chalice, paten cover, paten and flagon of 1730, and a silver alms dish of 1840 given in memory of George Wylie, for thirty-four years rector of the parish.

The registers begin in 1725, the first book containing baptisms from 1725 to 1812, and burials 1755 to 1812. The second book is a duplicate of part of the first, containing baptisms 1725 to 1798 and burials 1754 to 1788. The third book has marriages from 1754 to 1812.

An iron mission church was built at Hook in 1886 at the sole expense of the Rev. Andrew Wallace Milroy, M.A., late rector of Newnham. The church possesses a plated flagon, chalice and paten given by Dr. Harold Browne, Bishop of Winchester.

Adam de Port on the day of the ADVOWSON dedication of Newnham Chapel granted it together with the tithes of Newnham and Mapledewell to the abbey of St. Vigor of Cerisy, of which Monk Sherborne was a cell.<sup>35</sup> The Prior and convent of Monk Sherborne acted as patrons of the church,<sup>36</sup> receiving a pension of £2 from the rector<sup>37</sup> until the general suppression of the alien houses. The advowson was transferred with the other possessions of Monk Sherborne to the hospital of St. Julian or God's House, Southampton, by Edward IV,<sup>38</sup> and from this time the rectors have been presented by the Provost and fellows of Queen's College, Oxford, as guardians of that hospital.<sup>39</sup> The Hook Congregational Chapel was built in 1816.

This parish participates in the CHARITIES Duke of Bolton's Charity founded by will of 9 April 1694 (see Basingstoke Municipal Charities). The sum of £6 per annum is distributed in small sums amongst the poor, preference being given to poor widows.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN.

Sireburne (xi cent.); Shireburna (xii cent.); Schyreburne (xiii cent.); Shirebourne Decani, Shireburn St. John (xiv cent.).

Sherborne St. John is a large parish situated 2 miles north from Basingstoke station and containing 3,972 acres, of which 1,710 acres are arable land, 916 acres permanent grass and 499½ acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> A Roman road from Winchester to Silchester cuts through the parish, and it is also intersected from south to north by the main road from Basingstoke to Reading. The old coach road, called also the Aldermaston and Basingstoke turnpike, joined the Bath Road at Beenham (Berks.). The Bow Brook, or Little Loddon, forms its northern boundary, separating the parish from Bramley. The height above the ordnance datum varies generally between 200 and 300 ft., although a height of 453 ft. is attained in the extreme south near Park Prewett Farm. The Wey Brook, known locally as the 'Sher,' rises in the west of the parish and skirts the north of the village, flowing thence in a northerly direction to empty itself into Bow Brook at the north-eastern extremity of the parish. The Vyne lies a short distance north-east of the village. The park, which is about 100 acres in extent, abounds with fine old oak and other excellent timber, and contains a large lake formed by the widening of Wey Brook. Beaurepaire House in the north (an ancient mansion surrounded by a moat) stands in a well-timbered park of about 280 acres, which extends into Bramley Parish. The soil is part chalk and part clay and sand, and therefore there is an abundance of good water from good springs. The chief crops raised are wheat, barley and roots. The following place-names are found in documents relating to the parish:—Holemore<sup>2</sup> (xiii cent.); Wachedene, Cufoldesaker, Previttschernaker, Brokaker,<sup>3</sup> Stokbriggelond,<sup>4</sup> Pepirlond,<sup>5</sup> La Machelebruchet,<sup>6</sup> La Frateresmed,<sup>7</sup> Cokysplace,<sup>8</sup> Le Pynmour, Le Burchettes,<sup>9</sup> Le Elde-lond,<sup>10</sup> La Berncrofte, Pollardescrofte, La Walssh-crofte<sup>11</sup> (xiv cent.); Anthmanys, Ostagyscrofte, Ostagslane, Mulwelyssh,<sup>12</sup> Levotelane, Le Russhelese,<sup>13</sup> Danyslond, Holmerslond, Cryps,<sup>14</sup> Joyes, Leches, Hylhend<sup>15</sup> (xv cent.); Cowkesgrove, Wythege Wood, Lyllyngdown Common<sup>16</sup> (xvi cent.).

The manor of SHERBORNE ST. MANORS JOHN, which had been held before the Conquest by Ulveva or Wulfgifu, belonged to Hugh de Port in 1086.<sup>17</sup> It continued in the possession of the Ports and their successors the St. Johns, following precisely the same descent as Basing (q.v.) until 1329,<sup>18</sup> when John de St. John lord of

<sup>35</sup> Dugdale, Baronage, i, 463.

<sup>36</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 92; 2032, fol. 142 d. The kings of England at various times presented owing to the possessions of the priory being in their hands owing to wars with France (Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 142 d.; 2033, fol. 25 d.; Pat. 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 7; 4 Ric. II, pt. iii, m. 15).

<sup>37</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 373; ii, 593.

<sup>38</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 228; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 83.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. fol. 117 d., 140 d., 168 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Montagu Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 375.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 377.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 378.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 379. The name is preserved at the present day in Pepper Wood, which is situated south-east of Beaurepaire Farm.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. 381.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 382.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. 383.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 384.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 397.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 406. Pollardescrofte is represented at the present day by Pollard's End Copse, which borders on the west of Morgaston Wood.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 386.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 388.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 389-90.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. 392. There is still a Hillend Farm in the north-west of the parish, a short distance west of Beaurepaire Park.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 395.

<sup>17</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479.

<sup>18</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191; Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. I, no. 88; 30 Edw. I, no. 36; Close, 30 Edw. I, m. 3; Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

Basing granted it for life to Edward de St. John.<sup>19</sup> Edward de St. John died in 1348, and the king committed the custody of the manor to Bartholomew de Burghersh,<sup>20</sup> but the following year ordered him to deliver it up to the sisters and co-heirs of Edmund de St. John the grandson of John, who had died in 1347,<sup>21</sup> Margaret the wife of Sir John de St. Philibert and Isabel the wife of Sir Luke de Poynings.<sup>22</sup> A final partition of the St. John lands was made between the heiresses in 1355, Sherborne St. John falling to the share of Margaret.<sup>23</sup> Margaret died in 1362, leaving as her heir an infant son John, but the latter only survived his mother a month,<sup>24</sup> and the manor of Sherborne St. John consequently passed to Isabel de Poynings.<sup>25</sup> On the death of Isabel in 1393, her son Sir Thomas de Poynings succeeded to the manor.<sup>26</sup> He apparently settled it in his lifetime upon his son Hugh, for he was not seised of it at his death in 1428,<sup>27</sup> and 'Hugh de St. John son and heir of Lord Thomas Poynings Lord de St. John' presented to the church during the episcopacy of Henry Beaufort.<sup>28</sup> This Hugh predeceased his father, leaving a widow Eleanor and three daughters Joan, Constance and Alice.<sup>29</sup> On the death of Eleanor, who held the manor in dower, Sherborne St. John was apparently assigned to Alice, who married first John Orell and secondly Sir Thomas Kyngeston and died in 1439.<sup>30</sup> Her son Thomas Kyngeston died seised of the manor in 1506, leaving as his heir his grandson John,<sup>31</sup> who obtained livery of his lands on coming of age in 1511.<sup>32</sup> John died in 1514, leaving a widow Susan, to whom one-third of the manor was assigned in dower. He was succeeded by his brother Nicholas,<sup>33</sup> who died without issue two years later. His heir was his sister Mary the wife of Thomas Lisle,<sup>34</sup> who died seised of two-thirds of the manor and the reversion of the other third after the death of Susan Kyngeston in 1539.<sup>35</sup> Her only son Francis had died before her, leaving no issue, and on the death of her husband some three years later the property, which she had inherited from her brothers and they in their turn from their grandfather, was divided among the descendants of her paternal aunts Margaret Gorfen and Katherine Malory, viz. (1) William Gorfen son and heir of Margaret Gorfen, (2) Margery wife of John Cope, daughter of Katherine Malory, (3) Katherine wife of Thomas Andrewes and Margaret wife of Thomas Boughton, daughters of Dorothy Malory, daughter of Katherine Malory.<sup>36</sup> Sherborne St. John was assigned to Katherine and Thomas Andrewes,<sup>37</sup> who sold it in 1550 to Thomas Lord Sandys of the Vyne. Its further history is identical with that of the Vyne,<sup>38</sup> which is traced in detail below.

Three mills worth 27s. 6d. belonged to the manor at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>39</sup> One was apparently included in William de St. John's grant of the Beaurepaire estate to Bartholomew Pecche, and is probably represented by the modern Beaurepaire Mill. Henry de Port, the founder of the priory of Monk Sherborne, granted to that house in his foundation charter the mill of Sherborne by the fishpond.<sup>40</sup> This mill paid the prior and convent a mark of silver a year and ground their corn free of charge until the time of Adam de Port grandson of Henry, who recovered it from the priory, granting in exchange in free alms the tithes of all his mills in Sherborne. He also agreed that if the tithes of the mills did not produce a mark a year the deficit should be made good from the rents of the mills, and moreover made the following promise: 'Et habebunt omnem molituram domus suae quietam in praedictis molendinis, ita quod quandocunque servientes monachorum venerint ad molendinum causa molendi, molendino non molente, statim molent, et si quem molentem invenierint, statim post ipsum molent, nisi bladam domini fundi praesens affuerit quod debet praecedere.'<sup>41</sup> Two water-mills and a fishpond in Sherborne St. John are mentioned in the inquisition on the death of John de St. John in 1302.<sup>42</sup> This fishpond was not included in the lease of the manor to Edward de St. John in 1329, but continued in possession of John de St. John. It was assigned in dower to his widow Alice, and on her death reverted to Edmund de St. John, who died seised in 1347.<sup>43</sup> The mill by the fishpond is still in existence; the site of the other is probably marked by a mill-pool in Wey Brook, a short distance north of the village.

William de St. John inclosed his park of Sherborne which was within the bounds of Pamber Forest with a dike and a hedge, and in 1245 his son Robert de St. John, in return for a payment of 100 marks, obtained licence to keep it so inclosed, as also a promise from the king that it should be quit of waste, regard, and view of foresters, verderers and regards.<sup>44</sup>

Edward I granted John de St. John permission to inclose 100 acres of woodland and pasture in his manor of Sherborne St. John within the bounds of the forest of Pamber, and to make a park there without impediment from the king or his officers.<sup>45</sup> These grants mark the formation of the parks of Prevet and Morgaston which are mentioned as appurtenances of the manor in 1302.<sup>46</sup> Like Sherborne fishpond, these parks were not included in the grant of the manor to Edward de St. John, but passed to Alice de St. John in 1329<sup>47</sup> and from her to Edmund de St. John.<sup>48</sup> Their sites are marked at the present

<sup>19</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 13; Pat. 3 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 19; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 32.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. ii, 193. The 'Edmund' mentioned here is evidently a mistake for 'Edward.'

<sup>21</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>22</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 21.

<sup>23</sup> Inq. p.m. 29 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 55.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 60.

<sup>25</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 270.

<sup>26</sup> Inq. p.m. 17 Ric. II, no. 45.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. 7 Hen. VI, no. 60.

<sup>28</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 24 d.

<sup>29</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 269.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid.

<sup>31</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 961, no. 6.

<sup>32</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, i, 569, 1867.

<sup>33</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxix, 42; L. and P. Hen. VIII, i, 5247.

<sup>34</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxx, 44.

<sup>35</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 991, no. 13.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid.

<sup>37</sup> Vide Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 35 Hen. VIII; L.T.R. Memo. R. Mich. 38 Hen. VIII, rot. 42.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 4 Edw. VI; Recov. R. Mich. 4 Edw. VI, rot. 535.

<sup>39</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479.

<sup>40</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1013-14.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. 1014.

<sup>42</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. I, no. 36.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 21 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>44</sup> Chart. R. 29 Hen. III, m. 5; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 8.

<sup>45</sup> In 1310 his son and heir John obtained licence from the king to keep it so inclosed (Close, 3 Edw. II, m. 11).

<sup>46</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. I, no. 36.

<sup>47</sup> Close, 3 Edw. III, m. 8; 5 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 21.

<sup>48</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 57.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

day by Morgaston Wood, which is situated about half a mile north of the village, and by the farm of Park Prewett, in the extreme south of the parish.

The estate known up to the beginning of the 16th century as the manor of SHERBORNE or SHERBORNE COUDRAY and subsequently as THE VYNE formed part of the manor of Sherborne St. John until the reign of Henry II, when John de Port grandson of Hugh de Port granted it to William Fitz Adam<sup>49</sup> to hold of him and his heirs as of the manor of Sherborne St. John by the service of the fifth part of a knight's fee.<sup>50</sup> William Fitz Adam, who was the founder of the chantry chapel of The Vyne, was still alive in 1202,<sup>51</sup> but how long he subsequently held the manor is unknown. Less than forty years afterwards it was in the possession of Fulk de Coudray, who granted it, together with the manor of Padworth (co. Berks.), to Maud de Herriard and Nicholas her son for their lives in exchange for the manor of Herriard which Maud granted to Fulk and his heirs for ever.<sup>52</sup> Fulk died seised of the manor circa 1251, leaving as his heir his son Peter, aged fourteen.<sup>53</sup> In the following year the king granted Peter's wardship and marriage, in return for a payment of 300 marks, to Ralph Fitz Nicholas,<sup>54</sup> concerning whom the following presentment was made in 1256:—'Ralph Fitz Nicholas withdrew the suit at the hundred court of Basingstoke which he was accustomed to make for the manor of Sherborne which was formerly Fulk de Coudray's. This he did four years ago.'<sup>55</sup> Peter de Coudray obtained licence to inclose Cufald Wood in Sherborne within the bounds of Pamber Forest in 1268,<sup>56</sup> and twelve years later by the production of a charter of Richard I proved his right to free chase for cats, hares and foxes throughout the whole hundred of Basingstoke.<sup>57</sup> In 1281 he leased the manor for life to John de Wyntershull and Amice his wife.<sup>58</sup> The lessees within the short space of two years felled eighty oaks in Sherborne Coudray Park, and in 1283, to pay for the damage they had done, they were obliged to give up their life interest in 100 shillingsworth of land in Herriard and Southrope which they had of the gift of Peter, and to enter into an agreement allowing Peter and his heirs to take whatever timber from the park they might require for building, as also yearly one buck de pinguedine and one doe de fermeycina, with pasture for twelve oxen and cows free of herbage and twenty pigs free of pannage.<sup>59</sup> In 1292 John de Wyntershull, his wife being dead, gave up his lease of the manor to Peter de Coudray in return for an annuity of £22 and permission to take yearly from the park one buck de pinguedine and one doe de fermeycina.<sup>60</sup> Peter de Coudray before 1305 had been succeeded by his son Thomas de Coudray,<sup>61</sup> who was afterwards knighted and continued in possession<sup>62</sup> until his death in 1348.<sup>63</sup> His kinsman and heir Fulk de Coudray leased the manor for eleven years to Robert de Burton, and in 1355 granted the reversion after the expiration of that term to William de Fifhide,<sup>64</sup> who died in 1361.<sup>65</sup> His son and heir William obtained livery of his lands in 1365 soon after coming of age,<sup>66</sup> and in 1371 leased the manor-house of Sherborne Coudray to William Gregory of Basingstoke for certain considerations, including the payment of one rose at the Feast of St. John the Baptist, reserving, however, 'the park and the right of presentation to the chapel,' while Gregory covenanted to keep in repair 'the hall and the adjoining chambers and the grange and the chapel at the house.'<sup>67</sup> On his death in 1386 William was succeeded by his cousin Joan the wife of Sir John Sandys,<sup>68</sup> a knight of the shire for Hampshire and governor of Winchester Castle. Joan married as her second husband Sir Thomas Skelton,<sup>69</sup> and was followed by her son Sir Walter Sandys, who, not foreseeing that Sherborne Coudray was about to become the principal residence of his family, 'gave it out' (says Leland) to his daughter Joan on her marriage to William Brocas of Beaurepaire about 1420.<sup>70</sup> This latter Joan occupied the manor-house during her widowhood and was succeeded by her son Bernard Brocas.<sup>71</sup> In 1474 by fine between Bernard Brocas and Philippa his wife, and Sir William Sandys the grandson of the Sir Walter who had given it out in marriage, the manor was settled upon Bernard and Philippa, and the issue of Bernard, to be held of William and his heirs for rent of a rose, with remainder in default of such issue to William and his heirs.<sup>72</sup> Bernard Brocas left no children, and accordingly on his death in 1488<sup>73</sup> the manor passed to Sir William Sandys, who died seised in 1496.<sup>74</sup> His son Sir William Sandys enjoyed the favour of Henry VIII, who made him his Lord Chamberlain and created him Lord Sandys of The Vyne on 27 April 1523.<sup>75</sup> He built the present house and chapel of The Vyne in the early years of the 16th

COUDRAY. Sable ten billets or.

SANDYS. Argent a ragged cross sable.

<sup>49</sup> The actual grant is not extant, but William Fitz Adam was holding of the new enfeoffment of John de Port in 1166 (Red Bk. of Exch. i, 209).

<sup>50</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 333; Inq. p.m. 36 Hen. III, no. 42a; 23 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 49.

<sup>51</sup> Chaloner Chute, Hist. of The Vyne (1888), 12, 13.

<sup>52</sup> Var. Coll. (Hist. MSS. Com.), iv, 142.

<sup>53</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Hen. III, no. 42a.

<sup>54</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 123.

<sup>55</sup> Assize R. Hil. 40 Hen. III.

<sup>56</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 2, no. 37.

<sup>57</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 764.

<sup>58</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Edw. I.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid. 11 Edw. I.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid. East. 20 Edw. I.

<sup>61</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 53, no. 28. According to some pedigrees Peter died in 1303 (Lipscomb, Hist. of Bucks. iv, 251).

<sup>62</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 8 Edw. II; Feud. Aids, ii, 313, 333; Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 11.

<sup>63</sup> Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 49; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 3.

<sup>64</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 29 Edw. III.

<sup>65</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 88.

<sup>66</sup> Vide Pat. 6 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 4, 5.

<sup>67</sup> Chute, op. cit. 19-20.

<sup>68</sup> Inq. p.m. 10 Ric. II, no. 17. In 1397 Robert Mayhew the grandson of Bartholomew Mayhew sued Joan Sandys for the manor, but failed to gain possession (De Banc. R. Mich. 21 Ric. II, m. 511).

<sup>69</sup> Vide Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 218.

<sup>70</sup> Chute, op. cit. 30-32; Burrows, op. cit. 148-9.

<sup>71</sup> Ibid.

<sup>72</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 14 Edw. IV.

<sup>73</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), iv, 19.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid. xi, 110.

<sup>75</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 55.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN : THE VYNE : RIVER FRONT

century,<sup>76</sup> and it was here that he was visited several times by Henry VIII, the first occasion being in July 1510.<sup>77</sup> In August 1531 the king was again at The Vyne, as appears from his household accounts for that month, which contain the following entries: 'To one who brought a screen to The Vyne from Pexhalles house 40s. To the keeper of Mr. Paulet's and Lord Sandys parks 13s. 4d. To the servant of the Lord Chamberlain for bringing a stag to the Vyne which the king had stricken before in Wolmer Forest 10s.'<sup>78</sup> The king paid his next and last visit in October of 1535, when he was accompanied by Queen Anne Boleyn.<sup>79</sup> William Lord Sandys died in 1542, after a long life spent in the service of his country, and was succeeded by his son Thomas Lord Sandys.<sup>80</sup> On the death of Thomas in 1560 The Vyne passed to his grandson William Lord Sandys,<sup>81</sup> who held it no less than sixty-three years. He was involved in the insurrection of the Earl of Essex in the spring of 1601, for which he was fined £5,000.<sup>82</sup> But after a temporary sojourn in the Tower and a subsequent confinement near Bath he was pardoned on payment of £1,000,<sup>83</sup> and in September of the same year received the Duc de Biron, then sent to England as ambassador of the French king to meet Queen Elizabeth, who was then staying with the Marquess of Winchester at Basing House.<sup>84</sup> For four or five days the ambassador and his suite, numbering nearly four hundred persons, were sumptuously entertained at The Vyne, which was provided with hangings and plate from the Tower and Hampton Court, and with 'seven score beds and furniture which the willing and obedient people of Hampshire upon two days' warning had brought thither to lend to the Queen.'<sup>85</sup> Elizabeth was highly satisfied with the reception accorded her visitors, and affirmed 'that she had done that in Hampshire that none of her ancestors ever did, neither that any prince of Christendom could do, that was, she had in her Progress in her subjects' houses entertained a royal ambassador and had royally entertained him.'<sup>86</sup> William Lord Sandys on his death in 1623 was succeeded by his son William Lord Sandys,<sup>87</sup> who died without issue six years later.<sup>88</sup> In 1636 Colonel Henry Sandys, son of Sir Edwin Sandys of Latimer (co. Bucks.) by Elizabeth half-sister and heir of William Lord Sandys, was in possession of The Vyne.<sup>89</sup> He was mortally wounded at the battle of Cheriton, and on his death on 6 April 1644 the estate passed to his son William Lord Sandys,<sup>90</sup> who sold it in 1653 to Chaloner Chute, one of the most celebrated lawyers of the age.<sup>91</sup> He was unanimously chosen Speaker of the House of Commons upon the assembling of Parliament under Richard Cromwell on 29 January 1659, but the incessant fatigue of his office proved so great a strain upon his health that he was forced to retire to Sutton Court, an estate belonging to him at Chiswick, where he died on 14 April 1659.<sup>92</sup> By his will dated 3 June 1653 he devised The Vyne and his other lands in Hampshire to his son Chaloner Chute, who died in 1666 and was succeeded by his son and namesake.<sup>93</sup> This Chaloner Chute, third of the name, died in 1685, and The Vyne then passed to his brother Edward,<sup>94</sup> who was high sheriff of Hampshire in 1699 and died in 1722.<sup>95</sup> Anthony Chute, Edward's son and heir, was elected M.P. for Yarmouth (I.W.) in 1734 and twenty years later died unmarried and intestate. His heir was his brother John, who devoted himself to literature and archaeological studies, and is well remembered as the friend of Horace Walpole and the poet Gray.<sup>96</sup> He died at The Vyne on 26 May 1776, and with him the male line of this family came to an end.<sup>97</sup> The estate then devolved in accordance with his will dated 4 November 1774 upon his cousin's son Thomas Lobb of Pickenham (co. Norf.), who thereupon took the name of Chute in addition to that of Lobb.<sup>98</sup> Thomas Lobb Chute married Anne Rachael only daughter of William Wiggett, mayor of Norwich,<sup>99</sup> and owned The Vyne until 1790, when he died and was buried at Pickenham.<sup>100</sup> His heir was his son William John Chute, who in 1790 entered Parliament as member for Hampshire and forthwith began to keep a pack of foxhounds which he supported at his own expense till his death in 1824.<sup>101</sup> He bequeathed The Vyne to his brother Thomas Vere Chute, who died unmarried in 1827, having by will dated 23 July 1826 left the estate to William Lyde Wiggett second son of James Wiggett, rector of Crudwell (co. Wilts).<sup>102</sup> On succeeding to The Vyne estate William Lyde Wiggett assumed the name and arms of Chute, and lived at The Vyne from the death of Elizabeth widow of William Chute in 1842 until his own death in 1879.<sup>103</sup> He greatly improved the estate by inclosing the common fields and making new roads, and the improvements which CHUTE of The Vyne.

Gules three swords argent with their hilts or lying barwise, their points to the dexter.

<sup>76</sup> Chute, op. cit. 20, 29. Leland says, 'The late Lorde Sandes afore he was made baron recovered it into his possession. At the which tyme ther was no very great or sumptuous manor place, and was only contained within the mote. But he after so translated and augmented yt, and beside builded a fair base court that at thys time it is one of the principale houses in goodly building of all Hamptonshire.'

<sup>77</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, ii (2), p. 1447.
<sup>78</sup> Ibid. v, p. 755.

<sup>79</sup> Lord Sandys a few days later wrote to Cromwell as follows: 'Pleaseth it you to be advertised that the king's highness and the queen's grace came hither to my poor house on Friday last past the thirteenth day of this month, and here continued until Tuesday then next ensuing' (L. and P. Hen. VIII, ix, p. 224).

<sup>80</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 55-7; Recov. R. Mich. 4 Edw. VI, rot. 535.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid. vii, 55-7; Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 3434.

<sup>82</sup> Acts of P.C. 1600-1, p. 149; Cal. S. P. Dom. 1598-1601, p. 574.

<sup>83</sup> Chute, op. cit. 60.

<sup>84</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 416; Chute, op. cit. 60-1.

<sup>85</sup> Ibid.

<sup>86</sup> Ibid.

<sup>87</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 55-7.

<sup>88</sup> Ibid.

<sup>89</sup> Recov. R. East. 12 Chas. I, rot. 64.

<sup>90</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 55-7.

<sup>91</sup> Chute, op. cit. 72.

<sup>92</sup> Ibid. 74.

<sup>93</sup> Ibid. 76-7.

<sup>94</sup> Ibid. 79; Recov. R. Mich. 2 Jas. II, rot. 171.

<sup>95</sup> Chute, op. cit. 83.

<sup>96</sup> Ibid. 84-5.

<sup>97</sup> Ibid. 117.

<sup>98</sup> Ibid. 120. He was the son of Thomas Lobb by Elizabeth daughter and heir of Thomas younger brother of Edward Chute.

<sup>99</sup> Ibid.

<sup>100</sup> Ibid. 122.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid. 130.

<sup>102</sup> Ibid. 131.

<sup>103</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

he effected are described in the journals of the Royal Agricultural Society of England.<sup>104</sup> His son Chaloner William Chute died in 1892 and was succeeded by the present owner, Mr. Charles Lennard Chute of The Vyne.<sup>104a</sup>

The house, apart from its historical interest, is one of the most attractive in Hampshire. Begun in the early years of the 16th century by William Lord Sandys, it occupies a characteristic site, chosen for shelter and not for strength, with the ground rising gently from it on all sides, and surrounded by lawns and beautifully timbered gardens and fields. It succeeds an older house, which according to Leland was neither 'great nor sumptuous,' and nothing is left of it but its probable site with foundations of walls about 100 yds. south-east of the house. The present house stands east and west and is about projecting gable to which a modern porch has been added, and small rectangular bays covering the junctions of the wings with the main block. The wings end with plain gables at the south, to which canted bay windows of two stories have been added in the 18th century. The north front has in like manner a central portico, an addition by Webb, but perhaps replacing a former porch, and at either end rectangular towers three stories high, the rest of the house being of two stories. Breaks in the masonry of the tower at the east end of the north front suggest that it was partly overlapped by the destroyed east range of the base court, and that its north-west angle projected into the court in the same way as the small bays in the angles of the south front. If the western tower was treated in the same way all evidence of the junction of the west range of the

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN, THE VYNE: ENTRANCE FRONT

220 ft. long with two wings running southwards, and has its principal entrance in the middle of the south side, but as first built is conjectured to have had a large base court on the north, extending as far as the long sheet of water, 250 ft. away from the house, with its principal entrance from the north through the court, the water being crossed by a bridge. It is built of deep red brick with diamond patterns in black brick, very irregularly set, and stone quoins and window frames, the last originally having contained stone tracery, which was removed, with a few exceptions, in 1654 under the directions of John Webb. The general disposition of the plan is symmetrical, the south front having a central court with it has been removed, and it has been conjectured that the west wing of the court stood on the line of Webb's portico. An 18th-century drawing of the house from the north-west, hanging in the Strawberry Parlour, shows a corresponding rectangular tower at the south end of the south-west wing, but there is no reason to suppose that this was ever built, and the drawing probably represents a project of John Chute which was never carried out.

At the east end of the house is a wing containing the chapel, with a building attached to it on the south, and there were formerly other buildings on the north, i.e. the east range of the north court, as may be seen from the evidence of the masonry, and

<sup>104</sup> Chute, op. cit. 132. Up to his time the roads had been no better than drift ways impassable beyond The Vyne except by carts and wagons, so that it was a common saying that 'The Vyne was the last place upon the earth, and Beaurepaire was beyond it.' And Horace Walpole humorously said that 'The Vyne must be approached upon stilts,' and that 'no post, but a dove, could come from it.'

<sup>104a</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry.

GROUND FLOOR PLAN OF THE VYNE

FIRST FLOOR PLAN OF THE VYNE of a picture now at Mottisfont Abbey, said to represent Colonel Henry Sandys, ob. 1644.

The arrangement of the rooms in the time of the first builder, William Lord Sandys, is fortunately preserved to us in an inventory<sup>105</sup> of the contents of the house taken February 1541-2, after Lord Sandys' death. It seems clear, in spite of the comparatively early date, that there was no great hall, with screens, open timbered roof, and bay window, after the mediaeval fashion still in common use at the time, but that the principal room was the present dining-room, then the 'great dining chamber'; it was doubtless entered as now from the west through a vestibule, which probably opened to the base court by a porch on the site of the existing 17th-century portico. To the east of the dining chamber were the 'hall place,' now the chapel parlour, occupying the ground floor of the east tower, then 'my lady's oratory or closet,' now the ante-chapel, and to the east again, as now, the chapel with priest's room and vestry on the south. The pantry and buttery adjoined the dining chamber on the south, and the kitchen and offices were in the south-east wing, as now, with the audit chamber at the south end of the wing.

On the opposite side of the vestibule to the dining chamber was the 'new parlour,' now the drawing-room, opening to a small ante-room, the 'pallet chamber,' on the west, and thence to the 'chamber'<sup>105a</sup> within the new parlour,' now the west drawing-room, occupying the ground floor of the north-west tower. From this the long lower gallery opened southwards as now, and the two small rooms between it and the vestibule, then called the base chambers, completed the ground-floor arrangements. The parallel sets of rooms on either side of a thick central wall are worthy of notice as an innovation in planning, and though as usual till a much later date all were passage rooms, each opening out of the next, the whole plan is a very notable advance on the general usage of the time. On the upper floor the room over the dining chamber was the 'queen's lying chamber,' and from it to the east opened the 'tower chamber' and 'my lord's oratory or closet,' the latter being the gallery at the west end of the chapel. The rooms over the priest's chamber to the south of the chapel were the 'chambers over the gate': the gate is shown in the picture of Colonel Henry Sandys already referred to opening eastwards, but it is difficult to understand how the priest's chamber on the ground floor was arranged in that case. Over the new parlour was the great chamber, now the library, and in the west tower the queen's great chamber, now the tapestry room, with the oak gallery as now to the south. Over the base chamber were the king's chamber and the portcullis chamber, and over the kitchen and offices other chambers, those in the south-east wing being called the rose chambers. The small projecting rooms in the angles of the south front were called, like other small rooms, pallet chambers. The names given to the rooms in the base court show that they were used for the servants' quarters, &c., and doubtless as lodgings for guests. The schoolmaster's chamber, the armoury, and two yeomen's chambers, each with twelve beds, are mentioned.

The general plan of the house, apart from the destruction of the base court, does not seem to have been materially altered. The portico on the north front, as already mentioned, was added in 1654, and besides this the only additions are the tomb-chamber at the south-east of the chapel, 1765, the bays at the ends of the south wings, the offices and bedrooms on the east of the south-east wing, and the porches on the south front and the west side of the stone gallery. The middle part of the main block was altered in 1765 when the existing staircase was set up by John Chute, and many minor alterations to fireplaces, &c., have naturally taken place, but a great deal of 16th-century work is happily preserved. As regards the windows, those lighting the cellars on the south front have preserved their tracery of two four-centred lights, but nearly all the rest are now plain rectangular openings fitted with sashes. The loss of their tracery is recorded in the accounts preserved of John Webb's alterations in 1654, thus:—

'For taking down the old windows and setting up the new, cut into square heads, £10 16s. 0d. each.'

The sections of the stone frames, though differing in various parts of the building, are still all of Gothic character, and are in part original work and in part probably 17th-century copies. The sashes, or rather their predecessors, are usually attributed to the date of Webb's alterations, but so early a date is unlikely; it is more probable that wooden frames with casements were the immediate successors of the stone mullions.

The chapel contains the best and most important of the original fittings, having beautiful canopied seats on north and south, returned on the west. The fronts are panelled, with tracery in the heads and standards with elaborate poppy-heads, while the traceried panelling at the back of the seats is in two tiers, and has moulded and buttressed styles. The middle rail has a band of quatrefoils, and at the springing of the canopy is a line of cresting. On the cornice of the canopy is a band of openwork foliage into which the initials of William Sandys, his badge of a rose and sun, his arms, and the Tudor rose and portcullis, &c., are worked. The rose and pomegranate are repeated in the foliage, and at intervals are pairs of boys, giving a touch of Italian feeling to what is otherwise entirely Gothic. The details of the poppy heads and the admirable lock plate with the initials w. s. on the vestry door show the same influence. It seems probable that the canopy was originally returned against the wall at the east ends of the stalls on both sides, and that its present square ends are due to 18th-century alterations, the panelling east of the stalls being of that date. The ceiling of the chapel is of four-centred form, with a geometrical pattern of wooden ribs and a plastered background, and the chapel is lighted by three three-light windows with cinquefoiled heads and transoms set in three faces of the eastern apse. These windows contain their original glass, and have in the lower lights kneeling figures of Henry VIII and his patron St. Henry of Bavaria (east window), the Princess Margaret and her patroness St. Margaret (south window), and Katherine of Aragon with her patroness St. Katherine (north window). In the upper lights of the south window is our Lord bearing His cross and meeting St. Veronica, in those of the east window the Crucifixion, and in those of the north window the Resurrection; while in the heads of the lights are the arms of Henry VII and his queen and the Tudor rose. The glass, which can be dated by the coat of arms above Princess Margaret, certainly designed before her marriage in 1503, suggests a date in the first decade of the 16th century for the building of the chapel. In the floor of the chapel are a large number of glazed tiles, with ornament or figures in blue, white, yellow, &c., after the fashion of Italian work of the 15th and 16th centuries. The many mistakes in the lettering of the inscriptions which occur on them point to the fact that they are Flemish copies of Italian originals, though some may be Italian, and are probably of mid-16th-century date. Externally the chapel has been a good deal repaired and two blank traceried windows inserted in its north wall, on which a range of buildings formerly abutted; but the em-work with geometrical patterns in wood, painted blue and gold.

<sup>105</sup> Now among the muniments at Belvoir Castle.

<sup>105a</sup> Note the irregular use of the word chamber to describe a ground-floor room.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The chapel parlour adjoining has linen-pattern panelling and a 16th-century fireplace with Purbeck marble head and jambs, and over it a carved oak mantelpiece dated 1691. The dining-room, opening from the parlour, is also panelled in oak, with gilt bosses on the panels, from which it took its former name of the Starred parlour.

The drawing-room and west drawing-room are hung with crimson and white damask, brought from Italy about 1760, and from the latter opens southward the stone gallery, 82 ft. long, which now contains some portrait busts bought in Italy in 1753, a number of Roman tomb inscriptions, and a plaster medallion of the Emperor Probus, after the fashion of the terra-cotta medallions at Hampton Court. The stone flooring was formerly the floor of the entrance hall or vestibule. Two small rooms on the south front are known, one as the print room, its walls having been covered with prints about 1815, and the battled parapet is in the main old and has on it an interesting set of carvings with the royal arms and the arms and badges of Lord Sandys, Bray, &c. The roof is covered with red tiles, but the gable stops short of the apse and has a pretty carved bargeboard and a tall leaded finial. The south side of the chapel is entirely masked by buildings, that at the north-east being the tomb chapel of Chaloner Chute, added in 1765, with a room over, and containing a raised tomb with a recumbent effigy in white marble, by Banks; the coloured glass in the windows was made in 1770 by John Rowell of Wycombe.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN, THE VYNE : GARDEN FRONT

Any detailed account of the other rooms and their contents would be out of place, and reference must be made to Mr. Chaloner Chute's History of The Vyne, published in 1888. In the ante-chapel are part of a well-carved stone figure of early 16th-century date and a number of pieces of painted glass from the Holy Ghost Chapel at Basingstoke, together with some heraldic glass with the arms of St. John, Paulet, Brocas, Sandys, Bray, &c. Its ceiling is 16th-century other as the Strawberry parlour, Horace Walpole's favourite room. From it an original doorway with a four-centred head once opened to the entrance lobby in the angle of the south court. The outer doorway of this lobby and of that in the corresponding angle of the court are perhaps part of John Webb's work, c. 1654, though the Wiggett crest in the pediment of the western lobby must be of much later date. The main staircase, which was built by John Chute about 1765, apparently from his own designs,<sup>106</sup> goes far to justify Horace Walpole's statement that he was an 'exquisite architect of the purest taste.' Its scale is rather too small, but the design is exceedingly happy, the screen of Corinthian columns at the stairhead giving a most dignified effect, while the coffered ceilings contrast pleasantly with the simple panelled walls. As on the ground floor, the principal first-floor rooms are those facing north and west. Sixteenth-century geometrical ceilings remain in the tapestry room at

<sup>106</sup> Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, iv, 151.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN : THE VYNE : PART OF THE ENTRANCE FRONT

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN : THE VYNE : STAIRCASE

the north-west, the library and the bedrooms—formerly a single room—over the dining-room. The library has a fine chimney-piece with the Chute arms, doubtless part of Webb's work, and in the tapestry room is a chimney-piece of early 17th-century date, formerly in the chapel parlour. It bears a shield with the arms of Chute and eight other coats, which must be of rather later date than the rest of the work. The tapestry in the room is worked with imaginary Oriental scenes and is excellent work of early 18th-century date. The long gallery is only second in interest to the chapel, and is panelled throughout with linen-pattern panels in four tiers, a large proportion being original work. They are ornamented with a most interesting series of arms, badges, &c., which would seem to fix the date of their making between 1522 and 1529. Beside the royal arms and badges of Henry VIII and Queen Katherine of Aragon, there are those of Sandys, Bray, Brocas, de Vere, Essex, Foster, Hungerford, Paulet, Power, and Manners, and also of Cardinal Wolsey, Fox Bishop of Winchester, Tunstall Bishop of London, and Warham Archbishop of Canterbury. Tunstall became Bishop of London in 1522, and was translated to Durham in 1530, and Wolsey's arms are not likely to have been set up after his disgrace in 1529. Over the fireplace is a carving of St. George and the Dragon, doubtless in reference to the Order of the Garter, of which Lord Sandys was a knight, and over the doorway at the south-east of the gallery the quartered shield of France and England supported by winged boys, in which the Italian influence is clearly shown.

The house is rich in pictures, china and furniture, which cannot be adequately dealt with here.

The picturesque stables to the east of the house are of considerable interest, but the most notable of the outbuildings is the round brick garden-house with its domed tiled roof and four projecting porches, built by Webb and now used as a pigeon-house. Close to it is a very fine oak, still in vigorous growth, measuring 23 ft. round the trunk. It is said that Mr. William John Chute refused £100 for this tree from the Admiralty buyers in the days of wooden ships.<sup>106a</sup>

Early in the reign of Henry III, William de St. John granted to Bartholomew Pecche the lordship of CROCKEREL HULLE, which up to this time had formed part of his manor of Sherborne St. John,<sup>107</sup> and some years later Robert de St. John, son and successor of William, granted Bartholomew an additional 11 acres of land with appurtenances in Sherborne St. John.<sup>107a</sup> This manor, which was subsequently known as CLOTELY<sup>108</sup> and afterwards as BEAUREPAIRE (Beaureper, xiii cent.; Beurepeir, Berupery, xiv cent.; Baureper, Baroper, Burraper, xvi cent.; Bewrepper, Bewroper, xvii cent.), continued to be held of the St. Johns and their successors as of their manor of Sherborne St. John until the 16th century, when the overlordship fell into abeyance.<sup>109</sup> Bartholomew Pecche, who was alive in 1249,<sup>110</sup> had been succeeded before 1264 by Herbert Pecche,<sup>111</sup> who died seised of a hide of land called Beaurepaire in Sherborne St. John in 1272, leaving as his heir his son Bartholomew.<sup>112</sup> Bartholomew claimed to have free warren throughout the whole hundred of Basingstoke in 1275,<sup>113</sup> and died about seven years later, leaving as his heir his infant son and namesake.<sup>114</sup> The latter, before 1318,<sup>115</sup> had been succeeded by his son Sir John Pecche, who is constantly before us as 'lord of Beaurepaire,'<sup>116</sup> and amongst other ways as obtaining an estate in Peperlond which afterwards became part of the Brocas property.<sup>117</sup> It was this Sir John who heavily mortgaged Beaurepaire,<sup>118</sup> and died in 1350, leaving as his heir his son John,<sup>119</sup> who sold the estate to

Bernard Brocas for 100 silver marks in 1353.<sup>120</sup> Two years later Bernard settled the manor upon his nephew Sir Bernard Brocas, master of the royal buckhounds,<sup>121</sup> whose descendants continued to hold it for over five centuries. Sir Bernard received a grant of free warren in the demesne lands of his manor of Beaurepaire in 1363,<sup>122</sup> and four years later obtained a final quitclaim of the manor from

Agnes the wife of Edward Popham,<sup>123</sup> who was probably the representative of the Pecche family. In 1369 Edward III gave him permission to inclose Beaurepaire Park<sup>124</sup>—a privilege which was followed by a charter of 1388 granting him licence to enlarge it by adding 100 acres of land and wood in Bramley. Sherborne St. John and Monk Sherborne, notwithstanding that 64 acres were within the metes of PECCHÉ. Azure a lion with a forked tail ermine crowned or.

BROCAS. Sable a leopard rampant or.

<sup>106a</sup> Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>107</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 375.

<sup>107a</sup> Ibid.

<sup>108</sup> Aassize R. 778; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18 d., 19.

<sup>109</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18 d., 19; Feud. Aids, ii, 344; Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 961, no. 9.

<sup>110</sup> In that year Thomas Atterrig granted half a virgate of land in Sherborne to Bartholomew (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III).

<sup>111</sup> In 1254 John de Mont Fichet and Agnes his wife granted 2 acres of meadow in Bramley to Herbert (Feet of F. Hants, East. 38 Hen. III).

<sup>112</sup> Cal. Inq. Hen. III, 285.

<sup>113</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>114</sup> Cal. Inq. Edw. I, 293.

<sup>115</sup> In that year John son of Edmund de Swynesbroke granted a messuage and a carucate of land in Bramley to Joan who was the wife of Bartholomew Pecche (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 11 Edw. II).

<sup>116</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 398; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 1 Edw. III; Trin. 3 Edw. III; Mich. 5 Edw. III; Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>117</sup> In 1348 Isabel de Benfeld granted the land called 'Le Peperlond' which she had of the gift of her brother Richard de Benfeld to Sir John Pecche to hold at a rent of 6s. 8d. and 3 lb. of pepper (Burrows, op. cit. 378). She released the rent to Bernard Brocas in 1355 (ibid. 379).

Pepper Wood still forms part of the Beaurepaire estate.

<sup>118</sup> Close, 27 Edw. III, m. 14 d.

<sup>119</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 361.

<sup>120</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 27 Edw. III.

<sup>121</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 400. All the buildings on the estate had fallen into great decay under the late occupation of the Pecches, and Sir Bernard before establishing himself at his new seat circa 1358 was forced to expend large sums in repairs of a very extensive character (Add. Chart. 26559).

<sup>122</sup> Chart. R. 37 Edw. III, m. 11.

<sup>123</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 41 Edw. III.

<sup>124</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 407.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Pamber Forest.<sup>125</sup> Sir Bernard died in 1395 and was followed by his son Sir Bernard, who was attainted for treason in 1400.<sup>126</sup> By means of settlements in trust much of his property, including Beaurepaire, escaped forfeiture and passed to his son William Brocas, who in 1428 was stated to be holding of Lord de St. John as of his manor of Sherborne St. John half a knight's fee in Beaurepaire and Sherborne, formerly belonging to John Pecche.<sup>127</sup> William died in 1456 and was succeeded by his son William,<sup>128</sup> who died in 1484, his heir being his son John.<sup>129</sup> William Brocas the son of John died seised of Beaurepaire in 1506, leaving two daughters Anne and Edith,<sup>130</sup> the latter of whom became sole heir to the Brocas estates on the death of her sister Anne without issue in 1514.<sup>131</sup> Edith died in 1517<sup>132</sup> and Beaurepaire then passed to her husband Ralph Pexall, who died some twenty years later.<sup>133</sup>

Sir Richard Pexall, son of Edith and Ralph, succeeded to the property and married (1) Lady Eleanor Paulet<sup>134</sup> and (2) Eleanor Cotgrave<sup>135</sup>—the cause of those family dissensions and complications which lasted for half a century. By his first wife he had four daughters—Anne, who married Bernard Brocas of Horton (co. Bucks.) and had a son Pexall Brocas; Margery, who married (1) Oliver Beckett and (2) Francis Cotton; Elizabeth, who became the wife of John Jobson; and Barbara, who became the wife of Anthony Brydges; his second wife brought him no children.<sup>136</sup> Sir Richard died in 1571, having by will signed only a day before his death left all his estates to his wife Dame Eleanor for thirteen years—until his grandson Pexall Brocas came of age, and all his estates in Wiltshire and the majority of his estates in Hampshire to her for life should she remain unmarried. To his three younger daughters he bequeathed legacies of £500 apiece, while to Pexall Brocas he granted the reversion of Eleanor's estate in tail-male.<sup>137</sup> Tenants in chivalry, however, were not allowed to aliene more than two-thirds of their lands from their legal heirs, and consequently Sir Richard's will became void for a third part which descended among his four daughters and co-heirs.<sup>138</sup> John and Elizabeth Jobson soon afterwards sold their twelfth to Dame Eleanor and her second husband Sir John Savage,<sup>139</sup> who had settled at Beaurepaire and destined it for his second son Edward.<sup>140</sup> Bernard and Anne Brocas retaliated by purchasing the Brydges twelfth, thus placing at their command one-sixth of the estate.<sup>141</sup> On the coming of age of Pexall Brocas in 1584, Dame Eleanor, though then only legally entitled to the twelfth of the Brocas estates which she and her husband had purchased from the Jobsons, did not move from Beaurepaire,<sup>142</sup> and there seems to have been some arrangement whereby she gave up all right to Steventon (q.v.) in return for a life-interest in Beaurepaire. Thus in 1602, when Pexall sued Dame Eleanor in the Court of Requests to recompense him for wastes in the park of Beaurepaire committed not only by her, but also by Sir John Savage, Edward Savage and her third husband Sir Robert Remington, it seems to have been acknowledged by all the parties concerned that her life-interest in Beaurepaire was a good estate by the common law.<sup>143</sup> After the death of Sir Robert Remington in 1610, Dame Eleanor married as her fourth husband Sir George Douglass.<sup>144</sup> It was not until her death in 1617–18 that the Savages finally quitted Beaurepaire, and Thomas Brocas the only son of Sir Pexall<sup>145</sup> moved thither from Steventon.<sup>146</sup> Sir Pexall died seised of ten-twelfths of Beaurepaire in 1630,<sup>147</sup> and three years later Thomas Brocas bought up the outstanding portions of the estate—the Jobson twelfth which Edward Savage had sold between 1608 and 1618 and the Beckett twelfth.<sup>148</sup>

PEXALL. Argent a flowered cross engrailed sable between four birds azure having beaks and legs gules and collars argent with a scallop argent on the cross.

In 1638 Thomas settled Beaurepaire upon his eldest son Robert Brocas on his marriage with Jane Bodley daughter of Sir John Bodley of Streatham (co. Surr.),<sup>149</sup> and it remained in Robert's possession until his death in 1643.<sup>150</sup> His widow Jane, by whom he had three children, Bernard, Robert and Jane, subsequently married John Thorner, and lived with him for many years at Beaurepaire on her jointure.<sup>151</sup> Bernard the eldest son of the new generation died suddenly of smallpox on 18 December 1660, shortly after coming of age, and his brother Robert having died when an infant, his sister Jane now became the sole heir-in-law to her brother, father and grandfather, as well as heir-general under the will of Sir Pexall Brocas her great-grandfather. She married soon afterwards Sir William Gardiner.<sup>152</sup> On the death of Thomas Brocas the grandfather in 1663 a claimant to the Beaurepaire estate appeared in the person of Jane's cousin Thomas Brocas son of her father's younger brother Thomas.<sup>153</sup> He was supported by his trustee Edmund Brockett, who inter-

<sup>125</sup> Pat. 12 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 15. The park was formed partly out of the property which belonged to Henry atte More in Bramley and Pamber. This we discover from some papers of Joan Renne, Henry's widow, who brought a claim for these lands against Sir Bernard's grandson William, but who gave a quitclaim for them in 1402 (Burrows, op. cit. 153–4, 385).

<sup>126</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Hen. IV, no. 17.

<sup>127</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344.

<sup>128</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Hen. VI, no. 9; P.C.C. Will 6 Stokton.

<sup>129</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Ric. III, no. 23.

<sup>130</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 961, no. 9.

<sup>131</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 189.

<sup>132</sup> Ibid.

<sup>133</sup> P.C.C. Will 14 Dynzeley.

<sup>134</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 195.

<sup>135</sup> Ibid. 201.

<sup>136</sup> Ibid. 208–9.

<sup>137</sup> P.C.C. Will 46 Holney.

<sup>138</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 209.

<sup>139</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 15 Eliz.; Mich. 15 & 16 Eliz.; Trin. 18 Eliz.

<sup>140</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 211. He was so far successful that this son grew up in actual possession of Beaurepaire, and was so far seised of it in 1613 that in that year a plan of the property was 'plotted' by George Wither at the charge of 'the worshipful Edward Savage esquire.'

<sup>141</sup> Ibid. 212.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid. 215.

<sup>143</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle 93, no. 29.

<sup>144</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 261, no.

77. <sup>145</sup> He had been knighted on 11 May 1603 (Burrows, op. cit. 217).

<sup>146</sup> Ibid. 222.

<sup>147</sup> Ibid. 222–3.

<sup>148</sup> Ibid. 226.

<sup>149</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 14 Chas. I.

<sup>150</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 231.

<sup>151</sup> Ibid. 232.

<sup>152</sup> Ibid. 236–7. Sir Pexall Brocas by his will had made his son Thomas tenant in tail with remainder for life to each of Thomas's sons in succession with remainder over to his own right heirs.

<sup>153</sup> Ibid. 232–3.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN : THE VYNE CHAPEL

preted his trust to mean that the Brocas estates should come to the young Thomas as male heir of the junior branch, and this when the grandfather died was no doubt his desire.<sup>154</sup> In 1664 this Thomas appears in the neighbourhood of Beaurepaire, and there is an amusing letter extant from Sir William Gardiner to John Thorner complaining of his father-in-law and guardian Richard Johnson, 'who is already receiving rents at Beaurepaire, and who on the strength of his guardianship sets up a handsome carriage with two fine black horses.'<sup>155</sup> Finally in 1678 a compromise was effected.<sup>156</sup> Thomas Brocas consented to give £1,550 for the relinquishment of the Gardiner claims on the freehold estates of Beaurepaire, Cranes, Bramley, Stratfieldsaye, Stratfield Mortimer, Pamber, Basingstoke, Monk Sherborne, Sherborne Coudray, Sherborne St. John and Basing, while he himself relinquished his claim on the Roche Court estates. The copyhold estates settled originally on Jane Thorner on her first marriage with Robert Brocas in Sherborne St. John, Pamber and Bramley remained with the Gardiners. In order to effect this arrangement Sir William lent Thomas Brocas £1,000 on a mortgage of Beaurepaire.<sup>157</sup> On the death of Thomas in 1715 he was succeeded by his son Thomas, who died in 1750, leaving as his heir his son Bernard.<sup>158</sup> On the death of Bernard in 1777 Beaurepaire passed to his natural son Bernard Austin, who assumed by sign-manual the name of Brocas in 1794 and died in 1809.<sup>159</sup> He was followed by his son Bernard, who died in 1839 and was succeeded by his son of the same name.<sup>160</sup> On the death of the latter in 1861<sup>161</sup> it passed to his widow Jane, who in 1873 sold the reversion after her death to Mr. Julius Alington. From the latter Beaurepaire passed by purchase in 1883 to Messrs. Henry S. Welch-Thornton and Alfred Bidwell Welch-Thornton respectively father and uncle of the present owner, Mr. Henry Welch-Thornton, J.P.<sup>162</sup>

Beaurepaire was twice at least visited by royalty. Thus in August of 1531 there is the following entry in the Privy Purse Expenses: 'Item the v. daye paid to the keeper of Baroper Park in rewarde 6s. 8d. Item the vi. day paid to a servant of Pexall in rewarde at Baroper Park 20s.'<sup>163</sup> Again, in the Bramley parish register is an entry recording payment made to the bell-ringers for ringing the church bells on the occasion of Queen Elizabeth's visit to 'Burraper.' She was then on her way from The Vyne (q.v.), where she had been magnificently entertained.<sup>164</sup>

Although one of the chief mansions of the Brocas family, Beaurepaire House as it existed in the early 17th century was little more than an ordinary manor-house and for the next two generations was used as a dower-house. It suffered much damage during the Civil War, was often deserted during the 18th century, and was finally destroyed and rebuilt about 1777.<sup>164a</sup> This modern house is built within the ancient moat and stands in a park of 280 acres. It presents no features of special architectural interest.

Between Christmas 1357 and Michaelmas 1358 Sir Bernard Brocas spent the following sums on repairing Beaurepaire Mill—2s. 6d. for making a new mill-wheel from the lord's timber, and 1s. 1d. for mending the 'juke' of the mill.<sup>165</sup> This mill probably occupied the site of the mill which in a plan of the Beaurepaire estate of 1613 is marked in the same place as it is now—on the eastern boundary of the park a little to the west of Bramley Church.<sup>166</sup>

The messuage called CRANES PLACE and the lands belonging to it in Sherborne St. John were owned in the middle of the 14th century by Elizabeth Everard of Sherborne St. John and descended from her to her daughter Margaret wife of Thomas Munde, citizen and gold merchant of London, who in 1397 quitclaimed them by the description of a messuage, 80 acres of land and 2 acres of meadow in Sherborne St. John to Oliver Brocas half-brother<sup>167</sup> of the first Sir Bernard Brocas of Beaurepaire.<sup>168</sup> Sir Bernard Brocas the second granted a grove called 'Le Pynmour' to his uncle in 1398,<sup>169</sup> and his gift was confirmed by his son and successor William in 1404.<sup>170</sup> Oliver remained at Cranes Place to the end of his life, acquiring additional property in the neighbourhood, and died circa 1437, leaving as his heir his daughter Joan wife of Lawrence Stonard,<sup>171</sup> to whom William Brocas in 1444 quitclaimed a rent of 13s. 4d. from a messuage in Sherborne St. John held of him by William Hanyton.<sup>172</sup> In 1471 Lawrence and Joan Stonard gave up their right to Cranes Place to John Brocas son of William Brocas the younger in return for £100 in cash and an annuity of £6,<sup>173</sup> and he was seised of it in 1476, in which year he granted the lease of the messuage called 'Cranys' with its appurtenances to Robert Denys at a rent of £3 13s. 4d.<sup>174</sup> John Brocas succeeded to Beaurepaire in 1484, and from that date Cranes Place, or, as it was afterwards called, the manor of Cranes, formed part of the Beaurepaire estate until as late at least as the end of the 17th century.<sup>175</sup> Cranes Farm, which is at present owned by Mr. Charles Lennard Chute of The Vyne,<sup>176</sup> is situated to the west of St. Andrew's Church, a little to the south of Weybrook. Some way to the north on the east of the road to Reading is Cranes Copse, and near it is Pollards End Copse mentioned as 'Pollardyscroft' in a 15th-century deed.<sup>177</sup>

The church of ST. ANDREW has a CHURCH chancel 30 ft. 6 in. by 23 ft. 5 in., nave of equal width by 49 ft. 6 in., north chapel 14 ft. 1 in. by 10 ft. 10 in., north aisle

<sup>154</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 243-4.

<sup>155</sup> Ibid. 243.

<sup>156</sup> Ibid. 244.

<sup>157</sup> Ibid.

<sup>158</sup> Ibid. Chart. Pedigree at end of volume.

<sup>159</sup> Ibid.

<sup>160</sup> Ibid. It was about this time that the house was rented by Mr. Apperley, better known as the celebrated sporting writer 'Nimrod.'

<sup>161</sup> Ibid.

<sup>162</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. T. Hayes-Belcher, M.A., vicar of Bramley.

<sup>163</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 193-4.

<sup>164</sup> Ibid. 218.

<sup>164a</sup> Ibid. 200-1; Gough, Sepulchras Mon. 1786; Gent. Mag. 1787, p. 683.

<sup>165</sup> Add. Chart. 26559.

<sup>166</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 210-11.

<sup>167</sup> Sir Bernard Brocas was the son of Sir John Brocas by his first wife Margaret, Oliver was his son by his second wife Isabel.

<sup>168</sup> Burrows, Family of Brocas of Beaurepaire, 383; Feet of F. Hanta, Hil. 20 Ric. II. Anabella the wife of Richard Stephens joined in the quitclaim. She was probably the daughter and heir of Thomas Munde and Margaret.

<sup>169</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 384.

<sup>170</sup> Ibid. 385.

<sup>171</sup> Ibid. 153, 388, 389, 390.

<sup>172</sup> Ibid. 391.

<sup>173</sup> Ibid. 393.

<sup>174</sup> Ibid. 393-4.

<sup>175</sup> Ibid. 228, 244, 394, 395; Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 15, 27 Eliz.; Com. Pleas Recov. R. East. 15 Jas. I, m. 21.

<sup>176</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. T. Hayes-Belcher, M.A., vicar of Bramley.

<sup>177</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 388.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

14 ft. 4 in. wide, south porch and a west tower 10 ft. 10 in. square, all internal measurements.

A church seems to have been built here about the year 1150, and probably had a nave of the present size with a small chancel; the south doorway is the only detail which remains of this date. The chancel was rebuilt in the middle of the 14th century, the east wall of the nave being taken down and the chancel made equal in width with the nave; where the present three-light south window is inserted there is said to be the threshold of a doorway, proving the window to be a later insertion. The Brocas chapel was built to the north of the chancel in the 16th century, and the south porch of the nave in 1533. The tower was added in the 14th century, but was almost wholly rebuilt in 1837 at the expense of Mrs. Chute, wife of W. J. Chute, and the spire added. The north aisle is an addition of 1854; the chancel roof was restored in 1866, and in 1884 a thorough restoration was undertaken: new seats were put in the chancel, floor levels altered, the plaster stripped from the nave ceiling and other work done, including the insertion of the arch between the north aisle and Brocas chapel.

The chancel has an east window of three cinquefoiled lights under a traceried head of 15th-century character, the jambs and arch, which are of two hollow chamfers and have a moulded label, are old; the mullions and tracery are modern. The north-east window is one of two trefoiled ogee-headed lights with half-quatrefoils over in a square head, which has a moulded label; it is of mid-14th-century date. The south-east window is similar, and the second window on the south has three trefoiled ogee-headed lights with quatrefoiled net tracery in a two-centred head with a moulded label; it dates from about 1340; about 20 in. of the window above the sill have been filled in with masonry.

The north or Brocas chapel has an east window of three feathered trefoiled lights with roll cusp-points under a four-centred arch with moulded label; the stops to the labels are shields on which are the letters R and P respectively, the initials of Ralph Pexall, whose tomb lies under the archway between the nave and chancel. This arch has moulded jambs and a flat pointed head with cinquefoiled panels on the soffit and jambs. The arch is set under a square moulded cornice with ornamental cresting. In the spandrels are shields with the initials R P and R E respectively for Ralph and Edith Pexall. The tomb is described lower down.

The modern north arcade of the nave is of three bays in the style of the 14th century. A doorway in the north wall of the chapel has an old stone four-centred head on moulded wood jambs. In the south wall of the nave are two windows, both probably late 14th or 15th-century insertions; each is of two trefoiled round-arched lights under a square head with a moulded label, the mullion, sill and a few stones in the jambs being modern. The south doorway (in the middle of the wall) is of 12th-century date, it has jambs and round arch of two orders, the outer one chamfered; the label, which is much mutilated, is also chamfered. On the centre stone of the arch is cut a large sundial. Two stones are set in the south wall, one east of the door being part of a holy water stone, the other having a pointed arch on a curved face and looking like part of a font.

The north aisle has a modern pointed arch opening eastward into the Brocas chapel, and its three north windows were in the former nave wall, the first and third being like those on the south wall, and the middle one is of late 15th-century date; it has two cinquefoiled lights under a square head with a label; the jambs and mullions are moulded; the inner jambs and four-centred rear arch are also moulded with a double ogee; the west window of the aisle is a modern one of two lights and tracery.

A small pointed arch now rebated for a door frame opens into the tower from the nave; it has two orders on both faces, a hollow and a wave mould. The tower has a modern plastered west doorway, over it is the date of the 'restoration,' 1834. The west window is also modern (probably brick plastered) of two lights under a four-centred head. No horizontal string divides the tower into stages externally. The lower part of the tower is of the original flint and stone with diagonal buttresses; the upper two stories are modern, the angle diagonal buttresses being of brick plastered. The bell-chamber windows are all modern of two lights under four-centred heads; the parapet is a thin pierced one; at the corners are plain pinnacles, and the octagonal wooden spire is covered with copper.

The south porch, of red brick and stone, is lighted by a single square-headed window in either side wall; the entrance doorway has moulded jambs and a four-centred arch under a square head with a label; in the spandrels are shields with the initial I with Renaissance detail. Over the doorway is a stone panel with the inscription 'OF YOUR CHERETE PRAY for the Sowles of Jamys Spyre and Jane his wyf which caused this porche to be mad at ther cost the yere of our Lōd 1533.' Inside over the inner doorway is another inscription as follows:—'Of your cherete pray for the soul of Jamys Spier departed in the yere of our Lord a mdxxxiiii on hos soul Jesu have marsi.' Over it is a small niche which formerly contained an image; below are the two kneeling headless figures of the donors. The details are of classic style.

The south wall has evidently been raised some 3 ft., the upper part being a little thinner; the evidence for this continues to the east of the three-light south window of the chancel, and beyond this point the walling is of a different character with freestone blocks in it.

The roof of the chancel is of modern panelling, but that of the nave is old, with arched braces to the rafters: the eastern half bay is panelled and ceiled in wood, with an embattled wall plate, and is an example of a ceiling over the rood.

The font at the south-west of the nave is a 12th-century one of Purbeck marble; the bowl is square with sloping sides, which are panelled with shallow round-headed flutes; the stem is round and is flanked by four angle shafts with very rough capitals and bases. Its cover is pyramidal and in part probably of early 16th-century date, with a modern finial. The pulpit is inscribed 'MAD BY HENRI SLV 1634 W.M. I.B.'; it is hexagonal in plan, with round-headed lower panels and rectangular upper panels, one of which contains the inscription and the others carved foliage designs. It has a contemporary back and tester, but is much repaired, and the base is a modern one of stone. The altar

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN : THE VYNE : THE OAK GALLERY

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN CHURCH : MONUMENT TO RALPH PEXALL AND EDITH HIS WIFE

table and rails are of 17th-century date, and in the north aisle stands a three-sided wooden lectern to which are chained three volumes of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which were presented to the church by William Jackman, vicar between 1652 and 1689.

The monument or altar tomb between the chancel and Brocas chapel occupies about one half of the archway; on it are the recumbent effigies of Ralph and Edith Pexall, evidently by the same hand as those in Thruxton Church, with the same use of Renaissance detail in the armour. Both effigies hold hearts in their upraised hands, and the man's head rests on a shield of the Pexall arms; at his feet are his gauntlets. The lady wears a kennel head dress and hair net; a pleated chemise over which is a double chain; her bodice is cut low; her undersleeves are pleated and over them are loose oversleeves; from her sash hangs a purse, and she has a long underskirt covering the feet and a short kirtle over, round her right wrist is wound a pair of beads. The altar tomb has a moulded cornice and base; on the north side are three panels, the first containing a shield bearing Pexall; the middle had an inscription now obliterated; the third has a lozenge bearing Brocas quartering Roche, the details being of Renaissance type. At the west end are two panels, in the first of which are the arms of Pexall impaling Brocas quartering Roche. The inscription on both sides of the tomb reads:—'Conditur hoc tumulo Radulphus noie Pexsal armiger et simul hic cōjugis ossa jacent Edithe heredis nuper ac pulcherrima proles Guillelmi armigeri Brocas Beaurepaire.' A shield in the arch of the canopy has the Pexall arms. Below the cornice are two shields, one with Brocas quartering Roche and the other Pexall impaling the last shield.

On the floor and walls of the chapel are several slabs with brasses. The oldest is set in the south wall and has the half figures of a man and his wife c. 1350; he wears a tight coat or tunic buttoned down the front and at the wrists; she has a tight-fitting dress also buttoned down the front and with tight buttoned sleeves; she has long hair. The inscription reads:—'Raulin Brocas et Margarete sa soure gisount ici. Deu pour sa grace de lour almes eyt m̃ci Amē.'

On a floor slab is a figure of a man kneeling at a desk; he is in full plate armour and a shirt of mail and has a sword. Over him is the emblem of the Trinity and at the corners four shields, each bearing Brocas quartering Roche; the latter have been all obliterated, evidently purposely. The inscription runs:—'Orate p̃ aīa Joh̃s Brocas Armig̃i quōd̃m̃ filii et heredis Will̃i Brocas armig̃i qui q̃d̃m̃ Will̃m̃s decessit Londoñ xxii die Aprilis Anno Regni Reg̃ Ric̃i tercii p̃mo et sepult̃ est in Eccl̃ia hospitalis Sci Barth̃i in Smythfeld in Capella b̃te Marie et p̃dict̃ Joh̃s obiit Scd̃o die Maii a° D̃ni. m̃cccc̃ lxxxii° a° Regni Regis Henrici VII septimo quorum aīabus p̃picietur De' Amen.'

A slab has a mutilated brass of a man between two wives; he is in armour and his head rests on his helmet, of which the crest has been lost, his feet rest on a lion; below one wife are the figures of three sons and two daughters and under the other five sons and a daughter. On the north wall is a small brass kneeling figure of a man in armour; he is bare-headed and kneels before a desk on which is a book, his helmet and gauntlets lie in front of him. From his mouth issues a scroll with the inscription 'O Blessyd Trinite.' Over him are two shields, one with Brocas quartering Roche, the other blank; below is the following inscription:—'Pray for y<sup>e</sup> soule of Willm̃ Brocas of Beaurepaire, Esquyer buried in this chapell which decessed the vii day of July ye xxi yere of y<sup>e</sup> reigne of Kyng Henry the VII havng as his heires two doughters Anne & Edith which Anne was maryed and dyed wt. out yssue & y<sup>e</sup> said Edith toke to husbond Rauff Pexsall Esquyer whiche Rauff and Edith had yssue two sonnes John Pexsall decessed and Richard Pexsall yete levyng soole heire to ye seid Edith whiche Rauff caused ys remembraunce to be made at his coste whose soule Jhu p̃do.'

On a floor slab is the brass figure of a man in armour wearing a surcoat which is charged with the quartered arms of Brocas and Roche quartering Sandys. He kneels before a large cross of which the indent only remains. In front of him is a shield with the above arms and surmounted by a mantled helmet crested with a Moor's head.

At the upper corners are two shields, the first quarterly as on the surcoat, the other the same coat impaling quarterly one and four a cheveron between three cinquefoils, two and three obliterated. Below is a skeleton in its shroud. The inscription around the slab is:—

*'Pondere marm[oreo] tenebroso subtus in] antro
Bernard⁹ Brokas jacet armig̃ arma reliquēs
Humān multu fuerat reddūt decoratū
Mores dapsilitas illū amplectēda q̃ honestas
[Occubuit Maii terna . . . denaque luce
Anno] sed D̃ñi centenis multiplicatis
Bis septenario septenarius duodeno
Quatuor hiis addo numerū tibi p̃ficiēdo.' 178*

This slab was replaced in 1886 at the restoration of the church; only half of the stone could be found and the rest was finished with cement; a portion was also found in which is the indent of a figure to match the skeleton at the other end of the stone.

Other slabs are to Mary Wingfield, daughter of Thomas Brocas, died 1705; Thomas Brocas and his wife Mary, died 1715 and 1708 respectively; Ann daughter of Thomas Brocas, died 1711; Mary daughter of Philip Catelyn, formerly wife of Thomas Brocas, died 1693.

On the east wall is a fine alabaster monument with the bust of a man in a wreath of Renaissance design; the inscription is to Richard Atkins of Tuffely in the county of Gloucester, died 1635. On the south wall of the nave is a large classic monument to George Beverley son of Sir George Beverley of the house and family of the Beverleys in Cheshire, died 1643; also of Margaret his wife, died 1660. Also slabs to John Fielding, died 1607, Ezekiel Lyon, a former vicar, died 1730. Isabella daughter of Francis and Anne Martelli, died 1762.

There is also the brass inscription like those in Monk Sherborne, Pamber Priory, &c., recording John Sympton's legacy of £15 yearly for charities of six parishes—published 1674.

On the north wall of the Brocas chapel are some <sup>178</sup> Extract from John Nichols' Topographica (1843), viii, 398. The parts between the brackets are lost. See Montagu Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 164.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

pretty fragments of 16th-century ornaments of stone, chiefly running rose patterns. In its east window are some remains of the 16th and 17th-century glass; the central subject is the derision of our Lord by the Roman soldiers, that to the north is Ezekiel and the Angel and the third Dragon before the Ark; the other fragments are jumbled together. There are bits of a black letter inscription, a figure of St. Laurence dated 1638, the word 'Beth,' the Pexall arms, &c.

There are five bells: the treble was by Joseph Carter, 1602; the second by the same founder, 1587; the third has the inscription 'Ave Maria' in crowned Lombardic capitals; the fourth by Joseph Carter, 1587, and the tenor by Henry Knight, 1618.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1669, a silver paten of 1806 given by W. L. Wiggett Chute in 1846, a silver flagon of 1708 given in that year by Mrs. Mary Brocas, and a brass alms dish given by G. H. Wiggett in 1886.

The registers date from 1652, the first book containing baptisms from 1663 to 1741, marriages 1653 to 1738, and burials 1652 to 1741 (the burials between 1706 and 1736 are lost). The second book has baptisms 1741 to 1807, marriages 1741 to 1752, and burials 1741 to 1807; the third contains marriages from 1754 to 1807, the fourth continues them to 1812, and the fifth has baptisms and burials 1807 to 1812. A curious feature is the large number of marriages made by the then minister between 1735 and 1750 of persons having no connexion whatever with the parish.

At the time of the Domesday ADVOWSON Survey a church with half a hide belonged to the manor.<sup>179</sup> The lords of the manor presented the rectors,<sup>180</sup> who at an early date were called decani or 'deans of Sherborne.'<sup>181</sup> Hence the alternative name of the parish—Sherborne Decani.<sup>182</sup> Vicars to serve the cure were appointed by the rectors,<sup>183</sup> and in 1535 the rectory was assessed at £9 7s. 11½d. and the vicarage at £7.<sup>184</sup> In the 17th century an agreement was made between Mr. Ravenscroft, vicar of Sherborne St. John, and William Lord Sandys, the rector, whereby £40 was to be paid quarterly in lieu of small tithes to the vicar, and the rector was to receive all tithes except those from the vicarage-house and churchyard.<sup>185</sup> The living continued to be a sinecure rectory in the gift of the lords of the manor until 7 June 1844,<sup>186</sup> when the vicarage was consolidated with it into a rectory.<sup>187</sup> It is now of the annual value of £325 and is in the gift of Mr. C. L. Chute.

Towards the end of the 12th century Robert the dean or parson of the church of St. Andrew, Sherborne, in return for a grant of 40 acres to the parish church, granted licence to William Fitz Adam, lord of Sherborne Coudray, to build a chapel on his demesne to serve for the use of himself, his wife and his household. The chaplain was to eat at William's table, but was to be appointed and paid by the dean, and William and his wife moreover agreed to worship and receive the communion at the parish church on Christmas Day, Easter Sunday, the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, Whit Sunday and St. Andrew's Day, and to pay all tithes, oblations and yearly offerings as before to the dean.<sup>188</sup> This deed was confirmed in 1202 by Godfrey de Lucy, Bishop of Winchester, and by Herbert who had succeeded Robert as dean or parson.<sup>189</sup> Sir Thomas de Coudray re-endowed the Chantry Chapel by a deed of 2 February 1337–8, granting to the chaplain and his successors 24 square perches and a rent of 13s. 4d. from land held of him by Richard atte Ostre in Sherborne St. John and a rent of 6 marks issuing from lands in Herriard and Ellisfield held by the Prioress of Hartley Wintney,<sup>190</sup> to have and to hold as long as they should perform divine service in the chapel 'on behalf of his good estate while he should live and of his soul when he should depart this life, and on behalf of Adam Orton, Bishop of Winchester, and his father Sir Peter de Coudray and his mother the Lady Agnes and his wife Juliana and William Attehurst.'<sup>191</sup> Sir Thomas gave to the chapel a missal, a gradual, a response-book, a lesson-book, an antiphonal, a Psalter, two cruets, a pair of vestments, a napkin or towel and two brass candlesticks, and at the same time it was provided that the duty of replacing the ornaments and finding bread and wine and lights should devolve on the chaplain, but that Sir Thomas and his heirs should repair the nave, chancel and altar when necessary. It was furthermore agreed that the patronage should belong first to Sir Thomas and his heirs as lords of the manor, secondly to the Prior of St. Swithun's, Winchester, and thirdly to the Bishop of Winchester, that Sir Thomas Coudray and his heirs would attend the parish church at the greater festivals, and that the rector of Sherborne St. John should continue his annual payment of a mark to the chaplain.<sup>192</sup> The chapel was licensed by William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, in 1449 for the marriage of any of the children of William Brocas after the banns had been duly proclaimed in the proper places.<sup>193</sup> The lords of the manor continued to present the chaplains until the reign of Edward VI,<sup>194</sup> when the chapel was disendowed by the sale of its lands, which were then of the annual value of £5 6s. 8d.<sup>195</sup>

The school was opened in 1850 and rebuilt in 1895 with accommodation for 181 children.

In 1674 Thomas Sympson by his CHARITIES will gave a sum of £2 10s. yearly for ever to be paid out of his land in Monk Sherborne and Baughurst for the benefit of the poor.

In 1774 John Chute by his will gave a sum of £300—now represented by £366 13s. 4d. consols

<sup>179</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479.

<sup>180</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 121; Egerton MSS. 2033, fol. 31; 2034, fol. 24 d., 59, 88, 103, 131, 171 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 38, 122, 177, 184, 200.

<sup>181</sup> Chute, op. cit. 12–13.

<sup>182</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 373; Inq. Non. (Rec. Com.), 120.

<sup>183</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 103; 2032, fol. 74; 2033, fol. 31; 2034, fol.

24 d., 88, 171 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 59.

<sup>184</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 13.

<sup>185</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants, 13 & 14 Chas. I, Hil. no. 23.

<sup>186</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>187</sup> Lond. Gaz. 7 June 1844, p. 1953.

<sup>188</sup> Chute, op. cit. 12–13.

<sup>189</sup> Ibid.

<sup>190</sup> Vide Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 14; pt. ii, m. 11.

<sup>191</sup> Chute, op. cit. 17–18.

<sup>192</sup> Ibid.

<sup>193</sup> Ibid. 31–2.

<sup>194</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 146; 2033, fol. 31; 2034, fol. 59, 91 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 58, 158, 218; Pat. 6 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 4, 5; Inq. p.m. 10 Ric. II, no. 17.

<sup>195</sup> Chant. Cert. Hants, 51, no. 13; 52, no. 9.

with 'The Official Trustees of Charitable Funds,' the income (£9 3s. 4d.) to be bestowed for the benefit of the poor.

There are certain lands in the parish called donation lands, consisting of about 10 acres; two-thirds of the income derived from them, being £5 per annum, is paid to the churchwardens for distribution amongst the poor.

The church estate is now represented by a sum of £95 2s. 5d. India 3 per cent. stock with the official trustees. The income (£2 17s. per annum) is applied towards the expenses of the church.

STEVENTON

Stivetune (xi cent.); Stivintona (xii cent.); Stiven-ton, Stiveton, Stivington, Stivelton (xiii cent.); Stubyngton (xiv cent.); Stevynton, Stephyngton (xv cent.); Stepington (xvii cent.).

Steventon is situated  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles south-south-west from Oakley station on the Salisbury and Exeter line of the London and South Western Railway, and 7 miles south-west from Basingstoke. The parish is on high ground, rising generally from north to south and ranging from 343 ft. above the ordnance datum at Street Farm in the north to 536 ft. above the ordnance datum at Misholt Copse on its south-eastern borders. St. Nicholas' Church is on the eastern boundary of the parish, and near it is Steventon Manor, the residence of Mr. Mills, standing in a well-wooded park of 170 acres and commanding pleasant views of the surrounding country. Among the woods on this fine estate is still to be found at a distance of a mile from the house one which goes by the name of Brocas Copse, thus preserving the memory of the family which held the manor so long. The rectory standing in very pretty and well-wooded grounds of 53 acres is some distance north of the church. The novelist Jane Austen lived at Steventon for the first twenty-five years of her life (1775–1800), her father, the Rev. George Austen, being rector of Steventon for over forty years, and it was here that she wrote Pride and Prejudice, 1796–7 and Northanger Abbey, 1798.<sup>1</sup> The rectory-house where she lived has been pulled down for more than fifty years, the present one being situated about 500 yards distant from where the old one used to stand. At present no vestige of it remains, but up to within the last twenty years garden flowers used to bloom every season in the meadow where it formerly stood.<sup>2</sup>

The Salisbury and Exeter line of the London and South Western Railway traverses the north of the parish. The area is 2,155 acres, of which 1,066½ acres are arable land, 426½ acres permanent grass and 271½ acres woods and plantations.<sup>3</sup> The soil is clay and gravel and the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats, turnips and sainfoin. Among place-names in Steventon mentioned in the 16th century are the following:—Cockley Land, Whyteland, Isvangers, Halefield, Cwenton field,<sup>4</sup> The Parsonage Piece, Graunge Haye and Oldberie Piece.<sup>5</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANOR there were two estates in STEVENTON

—one assessed at 3 hides and worth £4 and the other assessed at half a hide and worth 4s. The former, which had been held of Edward the Confessor by Elfelm, was the property of Alsi Berchenistre, while the owner of the latter was Godwine the Falconer, who had remained in possession for over twenty years.<sup>6</sup> The two estates subsequently coalesced, the owner of Steventon in 1167 being a certain Geoffrey,<sup>7</sup> possibly father of the Geoffrey de Luvers<sup>8</sup> who in 1231 was summoned to show by what warrant he held the manor of Steventon, which was alleged to be the escheat of the king of the lands of the Normans.<sup>9</sup> He apparently failed to make good his claim, as two years later Henry III granted the land which had belonged to Geoffrey de Luvers in Steventon to Geoffrey des Roches to support him in the king's service during the king's pleasure.<sup>10</sup> In 1234 Geoffrey des Roches obtained licence to lease the demesnes of his land in Steventon to the men of that vill or others at métayage or at farm as he preferred,<sup>11</sup> but in the same year the heirs of Geoffrey de Luvers—his sister Annora wife of Hugh de Wengham and his nephew Philip de Sandervill—paid the king a fine of £80 and recovered possession of the manor.<sup>12</sup> In 1249 Steventon was held jointly by Manser de Sandervill, probably son and heir of Philip de Sandervill, and Hugh de Wengham, the son and successor of Hugh and Annora.<sup>13</sup> The following year Hugh de Wengham guaranteed that after his death his property in Well in Long Sutton and Steventon should descend to his son Geoffrey, and promised that in the meantime he would provide sufficient food and clothing for him and his children and Egelina his wife.<sup>14</sup> Manser de Sandervill apparently sold his moiety of the estate to Martin des Roches, son and heir of Geoffrey des Roches,<sup>15</sup> who purchased the other moiety from Geoffrey and Egelina in 1260, at the same time promising that as long as Geoffrey and Egelina lived they might take yearly by view of

ROCHES. Sable two leopards argent.

<sup>1</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>2</sup> Hants N. and Q. i, 8–11.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> There is still a Quintan's Plantation a short distance north-west of the church.

<sup>5</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. Hil. 27 Eliz. rot. 1.

<sup>6</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 509a.

<sup>7</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 190.

<sup>8</sup> Possibly he may have been the same

Geoffrey, but if so he would have been a very old man in 1231. That he was old and infirm is suggested by the fact that he put in his stead his brother-in-law Hugh de Wengham and his nephew Hugh de Wengham to represent him in court of law.

<sup>9</sup> Close, 15 Hen. III, m. 17 d.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 17 Hen. III, m. 1.

<sup>11</sup> Pat. 18 Hen. III, m. 16.

<sup>12</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 261.

<sup>13</sup> In that year William son of Robert de Steventon obtained permission from Manser and Hugh to have reasonable estovers in their wood of Steventon (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III).

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. Trin. 34 Hen. III.

<sup>15</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 323.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

his forester twelve cartloads of wood in his wood of Steventon.<sup>16</sup> In 1275 Martin des Roches was holding Steventon of the king in chief for 2½ hides of land,<sup>17</sup> and two years later he died seised of a messuage and 2 carucates of land in Steventon, leaving as his heir his brother Hugh.<sup>18</sup> In 1285 Hugh granted the reversion of the manor on the death of Lucy widow of Martin to his son John,<sup>19</sup> who shortly before his death in 1312 settled Steventon in tail upon his son and namesake.<sup>20</sup> In 1337 the latter settled the manor upon himself and his wife Joan in tail-male with contingent remainder in fee-tail successively to his daughters Mary the wife of John de Boarhunt and Alice the wife of Henry Romyn,<sup>21</sup> and he had died before 1346, in which year his relict Joan was stated to be holding half a fee in Steventon.<sup>22</sup> On the death of Joan in 1361 Steventon Manor passed in accordance with the settlement of 1337 to her daughter Mary, by this time a widow,<sup>23</sup> who brought it into the Brocas family by her marriage with Sir Bernard Brocas the same year.<sup>24</sup> From this date Steventon followed the same descent as the manor of Beaurepaire in the parish of Sherborne St. John<sup>25</sup> (q.v.) until about 1584,<sup>26</sup> when, on the coming of age of Sir Pexall Brocas, there seems to have been some arrangement made whereby Lady Eleanor gave up the twelfth part of the manor which she and her husband Sir John Savage had purchased from John and Elizabeth Jobson<sup>27</sup> in return for a life interest in Beaurepaire.<sup>28</sup> Sir Pexall also apparently bought up Oliver and Margery Beckett's twelfth part, for he did fealty for the whole manor of Steventon at the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 14 January 1587,<sup>29</sup> and he lived, or rather was supposed to live, at Steventon—for he really resided chiefly in London—until he passed it over to his son and heir Thomas Brocas and shifted his country quarters to Little Brickhill.<sup>30</sup> Thomas Brocas mortgaged Steventon to Sir Thomas Jervoise of Herriard (co. Hants) and Sir Henry Browne of Writtle (co. Essex) in 1622,<sup>31</sup> and three years later conveyed the manor to Thomas Coteel of London.<sup>32</sup> Of this Thomas very little is known. At this date there were two Thomas Coteels living—father and son—London merchants of Dutch extraction—but the purchaser of Steventon was most probably the son, for he was high sheriff of Hampshire in 1630.<sup>33</sup> In 1626 Thomas, as lord of Steventon, made a loan of £20 to Charles I.<sup>34</sup> He was residing at Steventon in 1631,<sup>35</sup> and held a court there in 1632,<sup>36</sup> but the following year reconveyed the manor to Thomas Brocas, who in 1635 mortgaged it to Sir John Baker and Richard Parkhurst, trustees of George Mynne, lord of the manor of Epsom (co. Surre.).<sup>37</sup> George Mynne died in 1648, and in the following year his widow Anne finally purchased the manor from Thomas Brocas.<sup>38</sup> George Mynne, the only son of George and Anne, died without issue in 1651, and thereupon Steventon passed to his sisters and co-heirs Anne and Elizabeth,<sup>39</sup> the former of whom married (1) Sir John Lewkenor, K.B. of West Dean (co. Suss.) and (2) Sir William Morley of Halnaker (co. Suss.), while the latter became the wife of Richard Evelyn of Woodcote in the parish of Epsom, younger brother of the author, John Evelyn.<sup>40</sup> On the death of Elizabeth Evelyn without surviving issue in 1692<sup>41</sup> her moiety of the manor passed to her sister Anne, who died in 1704 and was succeeded by her son John Lewkenor of West Dean, M.P. for Midhurst in 1661 and 1681 to 1705, and knight of the shire in 1679.<sup>42</sup> John dying without issue in 1706 bequeathed Steventon to William Knight (heretofore called William Woodward) and Elizabeth his wife. William died in 1721 and four years later his widow Elizabeth re-married Bulstrode Peachey, who assumed the name of Knight.<sup>43</sup> Elizabeth by will left the manor to her second cousin Thomas May of Godmersham (co. Kent),<sup>44</sup> who changed his name to Knight on succeeding to the estate in 1738.<sup>45</sup> He died in 1781 and was followed by his son Thomas Knight, who died without issue in 1794, leaving his estates to his kinsman Edward Austen, the second son of the Rev. George Austen, rector of Steventon,<sup>46</sup> who changed his name to Knight in 1812.<sup>47</sup> From this date the manor remained in the Knight family until January 1855, when Edward Knight son of the last-named Edward sold it to Arthur Richard second Duke of

<sup>16</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 44 Hen. III.

<sup>17</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>18</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Edw. I, no. 12.

<sup>19</sup> Close, 14 Edw. I, m. 2 d.

<sup>20</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 92, no. 3.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. file 233, no. 2; Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 34; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 11 Edw. III.

<sup>22</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>23</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 49.

<sup>24</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 338, no. 12.

<sup>25</sup> Except that it was held in dower by Anne widow of John Brocas until her death in 1517 (Exch. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], file 961, no. 9; Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], xxxi, 16).

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 35 Edw. III; Chart. R. 37 Edw. III, m. 11; Inq. p.m. 19 Ric. II, no. 3; 22 Ric. II, no. 8; 1 Hen. IV, pt. i, no. 17; Close, 7 Hen. IV, m. 29; Feud. Aids, ii, 344–64; Pat. 17 Hen. VI, pt. i, m. 11; Inq. p.m. 34 Hen. VI, no. 9; 1 Ric. III, no. 23.

<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 18 Eliz.

<sup>28</sup> No trace of such an arrangement has been found, but the Savages did not leave Beaurepaire (q.v.) until the death of Lady Eleanor, although they were only entitled to the twelfth part which Sir John Savage and Lady Eleanor had purchased from the Jobsons.

<sup>29</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 350.

<sup>30</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 215.

<sup>31</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 20 Jas. I.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid. East. 1 Chas. I; Recov. R. East. 1 Chas. I, rot. 29; Close, 1 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 17.

<sup>33</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xv, 192.

<sup>34</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 399–400.

<sup>35</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1629–31, p. 533.

<sup>36</sup> MSS. penes Mr. Montagu G. Knight of Chawton.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid. <sup>38</sup> Ibid.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid.; Manning & Bray, Hist. of Surre. ii, 612; Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 1652; Trin. 15 Chas. II; Trin. 31 Chas. II.

<sup>40</sup> Manning & Bray, Hist. of Surre. ii, 612; Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 2), v, 209; Suss. Arch. Coll. xxxiv, 99.

<sup>41</sup> She had four sons, Mynn, George, Richard and Richard who died young, and one daughter Anne, who married William Montagu and died without issue at Woodcote in 1688 (Misc. Gen. et Her. [Ser. 2], v, 209).

<sup>42</sup> Suss. Arch. Coll. xxxiv, 99.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.; Dallaway, Hist. of Suss. i, 164;

Suss. Arch. Coll. xxxiv, 99; Berry, Suss. Gen. 130–1. William was the son of Edward Woodward of co. Surre. and Elizabeth was the daughter of Michael Martin of Eynsham (co. Oxon). They are described in the will of John Lewkenor as 'the surviving grandchildren of Sir Christopher Lewkenor and his next heirs.' Sir Christopher was younger brother of Richard Lewkenor of West Dean, grandfather of John Lewkenor himself (ex inform. Mr. Montagu G. Knight of Chawton).

<sup>44</sup> Dallaway, Hist. of Suss. i, 164. Thomas May was the grandson of Christopher May brother of Mary wife of Sir Christopher Lewkenor (Berry, Hants Gen. 46–7).

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. Edward Austen was the great-grandson of John Austen, who was the brother of a Jane Austen wife of Stephen Stringer and great-grandmother of Thomas Knight (Ibid.; Burke, Landed Gentry).

<sup>47</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry. It was at this time that the Digweed family farmed the whole of Steventon, and a Mr. Digweed and his sister were tenants of the property until it was bought by Mr. Harris in 1877.

STEVENTON : OLD MANOR HOUSE

Wellington.<sup>48</sup> From the latter it passed by sale in 1877 to Mr. Henry Harris, on whose death in 1898 it passed to his widow, Mrs. Harris, for her life and then to her son Henry, who this year (1910) sold it to Mr. Robert Mills.<sup>49</sup>

Steventon Manor House is a good red brick building by Waterhouse; the old hall, which Sir Richard Pexall was engaged in rebuilding when he died—a pretty flint and stone building with mullioned windows—stands to the south-west, and is now used as a stable. It contains no old fittings except a single fireplace now in the harness-room, but has at the north end a projecting two-story bay with large mullioned windows, and on the east side a small porch running up the full height; in its outer archway are spandrels containing blank shields. To the south is a part of the garden known as the nuns' walk, and in a fernery here are several fragments of 12th and 13th-century masonry found on the spot, while in the stable-yard is a large respond capital of c. 1130. In the wall of an outbuilding of the new house is part of a large cross shaft with interlacing patterns, probably of 10th-century date, also dug up here.

The church of ST. NICHOLAS CHURCH consists of a chancel 20 ft. 1 in. by 15 ft. 5 in. inside and a nave 44 ft. 3 in. by 20 ft. 2 in. with a small inclosed west tower.

The church has been little altered since its first

PLAN OF ST. NICHOLAS' CHURCH, STEVENTON building, c. 1200, and is a very interesting building, the stone being of excellent quality, and chiefly from Binstead in the Isle of Wight. The ashlar angle quoins of the nave are two and sometimes three stones wide, and show the original tooling. An unusual feature is the inclosed tower (little more than a bell turret) which stands partly on the west wall of the nave and partly on an inner wall pierced with three arches. These make a balance to the chancel arch and its flanking arched recesses for nave altars, but are of more equal spans. The chancel is slightly wider at the east end than the west, and its north and south walls are set with a regular outward inclination; the stone is inferior to that used in the nave, and has been retooled at a late date. The east wall and possibly both side walls have been rebuilt. The east window is a partly restored insertion of the 15th century of three cinquefoiled lights under a traceried two-centred head with a moulded label outside. In each side wall are two small lancet windows, chamfered and rebated outside and splayed inside. There is apparently a piscina in the south wall, but it has been covered by the plasterwork.

The chancel arch is original but partly of modern repair; its jambs are slightly chamfered and have chamfered abaci; the arch is two-centred and chamfered. The two arched recesses flanking the chancel arch are similar in detail but narrower and have no abaci at the springing. They are 10 in. deep and that on the south shows many traces of ancient colour decoration where the modern plaster has been broken away. On the jambs is a running pattern in red of 13th-century date, and on the back of the recess an arcade of five arches, that in the middle wider than the others, with a figure standing under each. The principal figure is that of a deacon, St. Laurence or St. Stephen, but the others are too faded or covered by plaster to be identified.

The nave is lighted by three windows on each side, the middle ones being original lancets; that on the south has a round head, but seems to have been altered. The other windows are square-headed, of two cinquefoiled lights, the eastern pair being 16th-century work and the western pair modern copies of them. There were probably north and south doorways where the modern windows now are, and the present west doorway has a sundial cut in its south jamb and was doubtless once in the south wall of the nave.

The wall below the window is recessed and contains the remains of a pointed piscina. The arcade of three bays across the west end, already mentioned, resembles in detail that at the east end of the nave; the two outer arches are now closed up by thin modern walls, and in the middle one is a modern doorway and partition. From the two piers cross walls run to the west wall of the nave, pierced at the ground level by chamfered pointed arches, and above by similar rebated arches; the space closed in on the north side is used as a store and also to take the ladder to the bells; the other inclosure on the south serves as a vestry.

The west (and only) entrance to the church has jambs and two-centred arch of two chamfered orders with moulded abaci and label; it is clearly an insertion, and its head cuts into the sill of an original lancet window, now blocked and only visible from the inside. Above it is a modern lancet, and on either side modern two-light windows; they are partly blocked inside by the springing of the pointed barrel vaults which form the ceiling of the side chambers; the bell turret stands above the nave roof and is lighted by modern lancet windows; the parapet is embattled, and from inside it rises an octagonal slated spire. The walls of the nave and tower are all cemented like those of the chancel.

The chancel has a modern plaster vault with wood ribs, and the nave has a plastered collar-beam ceiling with open trusses, and the beams cased in modern boarding.

In the south-east corner of the nave is a 17th-century pew with high sides, the upper part with very well-designed open tracery; it is of very light construction, the tracery cut out of thin oak boards. The font is a white marble one of 1868 and the other furniture is also modern.

<sup>48</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Montagu G. Knight of Chawton and Mr. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>49</sup> Ex inform. Mrs. Alder of Amoril House, Batheaston, Somerset.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

There is an ancient yew tree in the churchyard to the north-west of the church.

There are three bells; the treble has no mark or inscription, the second is by Henry Knight, 1670, and the third is mediæval, but bears only the stamp of the lion's face, groat and floral pattern found on the bells of Roger Landon.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1663, a paten of 1722 and a flagon of 1867 given by William F. Digweed in that year.

There are three books of registers, the first containing baptisms, burials and marriages from 1604 to 1725; the second contains baptisms and burials from 1738 to 1812 and marriages from 1738 to 1753; the third contains marriages from 1753 to 1812.

The first mention of a church at ADVOWSON Steventon is in 1238, in which year it was arranged that Hugh de Wengham and Annora his wife should present a clerk, and that on his death Philip de Sandervill or his heirs should present a clerk, and so on de clerico in clericum,<sup>50</sup>

Hugh and Annora, and Philip, and the heirs of Annora and Philip presenting in alternate turns. The advowson of the church followed the descent of the manor until about 1860,<sup>51</sup> when Arthur Richard second Duke of Wellington sold it to the Rev. Gilbert Alder, rector of Hurstbourne Tarrant. He gave it in 1868 to his son the Rev. Herbert Alder, who was rector of Steventon from 1875 to 1889.<sup>52</sup> The Rev. Edward Alder purchased the advowson from his brother in 1888, and was rector from 1889 until his death in 1901, when he left it by will to his widow Mrs. Alder, of Amoril House, Batheaston, Somerset, who is the present patron.<sup>53</sup>

The Elementary School, with accommodation for sixty children, and a teacher's residence were erected in 1895 at a cost of £1,200.

William Henry Digweed by his CHARITIES will proved at London on 22 July 1881 bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens the sum of £100 upon trust to apply the income for the benefit of the poor. This sum was invested in the purchase of £99 2s. 8d. consols in the name of the official trustees, producing yearly £2 9s. 4d., which is applied in the distribution of coal.

TUNWORTH

Tunworde (xi cent.); Tunewurda (xii cent.); Tunnesworth, Toneworthe, Thonewurth (xiii cent.).

Tunworth is a small parish covering an area of 1,105 acres,<sup>1</sup> and is situated about 4 miles south-east from Basingstoke. The village lies in the south of the parish, which here reaches a height of over 400 ft. above the ordnance datum. All Saints' Church stands just outside the eastern boundary of Herriard Park, and a little to the east is the rectory, which is occupied by Mr. E. Vansittart Frere, since the Rev. Arthur Kelly, M.A., the rector, resides at Winslade, to which parish he was presented in 1895 to hold in conjunction with Tunworth. The schools were built in 1857. Priest Wood, Gaston Copse and part of Herriard Park, all in the south, are responsible for the 97 acres of woods and plantations which the parish contains.<sup>2</sup> The soil is light loam and the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots.

The following place-names in Tunworth occur in a document of the early 17th century:—a messuage called 'Lamboldesholde' and a wood called 'Combe Wood.'<sup>3</sup>

The manor of TUNWORTH, which MANOR Alvred had held of Queen Edith, formed part of the vast possessions of Hugh de Port in 1086.<sup>4</sup> Hugh de Port held it in demesne, but the actual holder in the middle of the 12th century was Adam de St. Manuel,<sup>5</sup> although there is no evidence to show from whom he acquired the demesne lordship. The overlordship, however, continued with the de Ports and their descendants,<sup>6</sup> John Marquess of Winchester being returned as the overlord as late as 1633.<sup>7</sup> Reginald de Mohun of Dunster (co. Somers.) died seised of Tunworth at the beginning of the 13th

MOHUN of Dunster.
*Or a cross engrailed
sable.*

GREY of Codnor.
Barry argent and azure with three roundels gules in the chief.

century,<sup>8</sup> and in 1207 his son and heir Reginald assigned it in dower to his widow Hawise,<sup>9</sup> who had married William Paynel as her second husband.<sup>10</sup> On her death it reverted to Reginald and was by him granted in free marriage with his daughter Lucy<sup>11</sup> to John de Grey, lord of Codnor (co. Derby.), who died

<sup>50</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Hen. III.

<sup>51</sup> Egerton MSS. 2033, fol. 32; 2034, fol. 60 d., 172; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 75, 202, 219, 233, 245; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>52</sup> Ex inform. Mrs. Alder, of Amoril House, Batheaston, Somers.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid.

<sup>1</sup> Of this area 585½ acres are arable land and 191 acres permanent grass (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. 1905).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), d, 25.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 479b.

<sup>5</sup> Pipe R. 23 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 176.

<sup>6</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18; Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 964, no. 10.

<sup>7</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), d, 25.

<sup>8</sup> H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, Dunster and its Lords, 34.

<sup>9</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 9 John. Her name is usually given as Alice. She was one of the sisters and co-heirs of William Briwere the younger (Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 242).

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. i, 167.

<sup>11</sup> H. C. Maxwell-Lyte, Dunster and its Lords, 34.

seised in 1272.<sup>12</sup> He was succeeded by his son Henry, who in 1275 was returned as holding one knight's fee in Tunworth of John de St. John.<sup>13</sup> On the death of Henry in 1309 the manor passed to his son Richard,<sup>14</sup> who obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Tunworth from Edward III in 1335<sup>15</sup>—the year of his death. From him it passed through his son John Grey<sup>16</sup> to his great-grandson Richard Grey, who died in 1418. The manor was held in dower by Elizabeth widow of Richard until her death in 1451, when it passed to her grandson Henry Grey son of her son Henry,<sup>17</sup> who had died in 1441.<sup>18</sup> Tunworth passed with the manor of Upton Grey by sale from Sir Henry and Margaret his wife to Sir Richard Illingworth, baron of the Exchequer in 1467,<sup>19</sup> and continued in the Illingworth family for about a century and a half. Richard died in 1476, and Tunworth then passed in accordance with a previous settlement to his younger son Richard,<sup>20</sup> who settled at Mitcham (co. Surr.), his residence, which was pulled down about forty years ago, being situated to the south of the Cricket Green.<sup>21</sup> Richard died in 1511 and was succeeded by his son William,<sup>22</sup> whose will was proved in the archdeaconry of Surrey 27 May and 22 July 1538.<sup>23</sup> Ralph Illingworth, son of the latter,<sup>24</sup> as lord of Tunworth paid 2s. in 1561 for exemption from attendance at the manor and hundred courts of Basingstoke for that year.<sup>25</sup> He was buried at Mitcham on 3 July 1572, and was followed by Michael Illingworth, possibly his son, but more probably his brother,<sup>26</sup> who conveyed it to his son John in 1601 and died in 1618.<sup>27</sup> John Illingworth as lord of the manor presented to the church in 1611,<sup>28</sup> but soon afterwards parted with the estate, the purchaser most probably being John Hall of Basingstoke, who was the owner of the manor and advowson in 1630<sup>29</sup> and died in 1633.<sup>30</sup> Thomas Hall, twice Mayor of Basingstoke, the third and youngest son of John, apparently succeeded to the manor, for he resided at his seat in Tunworth after his retirement from the corporation of Basingstoke in the middle of the 17th century until his death in ILLINGWORTH of Mitcham. Argent a fesse sable flowered on both sides between three scallops sable.

HALL of Basingstoke. Argent a chevron engrailed gules between three talbot's heads raised sable with a star or upon the chevron.

1669.<sup>31</sup> Joan Hall widow presented to the living in 1699,<sup>32</sup> and 'Mrs. Hall of Mapledewell widow' is described as 'lady of the manor and patroness of the rectory' by a writer in 1703.<sup>33</sup> Joan Hall widow and William Hall dealt with the manor and advowson by fine and recovery in 1705,<sup>34</sup> and William Hall presented to the church in 1713 and again in 1728.<sup>35</sup> He apparently died soon afterwards, however, for Thomas Hall was the patron in 1732.<sup>36</sup> The manor and advowson continued in possession of Thomas Hall until 1760, in which year he sold them to Samuel Prince, clerk.<sup>37</sup> From the latter the estate passed by purchase three years later to Tristram Huddleston Jervoise of Herriard.<sup>38</sup> The manor has from this date followed the same descent as the manor of Herriard (q.v.), the present owner being Mr. Francis Henry Tristram Jervoise of Herriard Park.

JERVOISE of Herriard. Sable a chevron between three eagles close argent.

The church of ALL SAINTS consists of a chancel 15 ft. by 13 ft., nave 32 ft. 5 in. by 15 ft. 6 in. (inside measurements) and a south porch. The nave walls date from the 12th century and one original window still remains; the chancel and chancel arch are perhaps c. 1200, and appear to have been partly rebuilt at a later period, and the south porch, which is of no great age, was restored in 1908.

The chancel has a modern east window of three lights with geometrical tracery, and in the north wall is a very small pointed light rebated and chamfered outside and splayed inside, apparently of 13th-century date. The south wall is unpierced, and the chancel arch has square jambs with small angle chamfers stopped out above the floor and below the abaci.

The abaci are square chamfered beneath, the arch is two-centred and chamfered, the chamfers being stopped above the abaci. At the north-east of the nave is a small round-headed light of the 12th century with splayed inner jambs and arch set high in the wall, with chalk head and jambs and a modern Bath stone sill. Further west, on the site of the old north door, is a modern window of two trefoiled lights with tracery in a pointed head.

The south window is also modern, of four trefoiled lights under a square traceried head, and the south doorway dates from c. 1300 and has jambs and pointed head of two chamfered orders with a moulded label. The west window is a modern cinquefoiled light, and over the west end of the nave is a small modern wood bell-turret with boarded sides, capped

<sup>12</sup> Inq. p.m. 56 Hen. III, no. 34.

<sup>13</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>14</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iv, 96-8; Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>15</sup> Chart R. 8 Edw. III, no. 42.

<sup>16</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, 96-8; Feud. Aids, ii, 332; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18.

<sup>17</sup> Inq. p.m. 29 Hen. VI, no. 34.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid. 22 Hen. VI, no. 35.

<sup>19</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 383b.

<sup>20</sup> Inq. p.m. 16 Edw. IV, no. 38.

<sup>21</sup> Jewitt, Reliquary, xviii, 139.

<sup>22</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 964, no. 10.

<sup>23</sup> Jewitt, Reliquary, xviii, 140.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid.

<sup>25</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 345.

<sup>26</sup> Jewitt, Reliquary, xviii, 140.

<sup>27</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dclxxxv, 91.

<sup>28</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>29</sup> N. and Q. (Ser. 6), v, 269.

<sup>30</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), d, 25. His heir was his son John, aged thirty-three.

<sup>31</sup> Baigent & Millard, op. cit. 463.

<sup>32</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>33</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 94.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 4 Anne; Recov. R. Mich. 4 Anne, rot. 182.

<sup>35</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>36</sup> Ibid.

<sup>37</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Geo. II.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. Mich. 3 Geo. III.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

by a lead roof and an octagonal shingled spirelet. It contains one bell.

The roofs are open, the timbers are plain and some of them appear to be old. The altar, font and other furniture are modern.

The plate consists of a chalice of pre-Reformation pattern, a paten and a silver-mounted glass flagon, all of 1853.

The registers date from 1749, the first book containing baptisms and burials from that date to 1812 and the second marriages from 1754 to 1812.

The first recorded mention of a ADVOWSON church in the parish is in 1291, when it was assessed at £4 6s. 8d.<sup>39</sup> Joan Du Bois widow of Sir John Du Bois presented a rector between 1290 and 1295,<sup>40</sup> but after that date the lords of the manor have presented to the church till the present day with but few exceptions.<sup>41</sup> In 1388 Stephen Shirfelde engaged in a dispute with Sir John Grey as to his right to present, but in June of that year the king ordered the latter's presentee to be instituted, as he had been successful in establishing his claim to the advowson by process of law.<sup>42</sup> The living is at the present day a rectory of the net yearly value of £120, including 44 acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise.

Joseph Warton the critic, the elder brother of the historian of English poetry, was formerly rector here, being instituted in 1754.<sup>43</sup>

UP NATELY

Opnatelegh, Estropnateley, Natale, Natteleges Estrope (xiii cent.); Up Natele, Upnatelegthesethroth (xiv cent.).

Up Nately is situated 4 miles east from Basingstoke and 2½ miles south-west from Hook station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway. The parish contains 1,143 acres of land and 6 acres of land covered with water, and rises from 225 ft. above the ordnance datum in the north to 397 ft. above the ordnance datum on its southern boundary. The north-east of the parish is covered with copses, while the south is open down-country. Basingstoke Canal flows through Up Nately, entering it at Little Tunnel Bridge. The village is situated a little to the south of the canal, and from it roads run north over Brickkiln Bridge and west over Penny Bridge to join the main road from Basingstoke to London at Scures Hill and Hatch respectively. Eastrop Farm and Eastrop Bridge to the east of St. Stephen's Church commemorate the fact that the parish was sometimes known as Nately Eastrop<sup>1</sup> to distinguish it from Nately Scures. The soil is clay, chalk, loam and sand and the subsoil clay and chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley and roots. There are extensive brickfields no longer in use in the parish. The chief landowners are the Baroness Dorchester of Greywell Hill, Winchester College and Messrs. Herbert B. Thorp and William Palmer.

The extra-parochial district of Andwell situated north of the Basingstoke Canal contains 148 acres and consists of the Priory Farm with the lands attached, the interesting remains of the Benedictine Priory formerly occupied by a colony of monks from the abbey of Tyron and a water-mill worked by the River Lyde—all grouped together a short distance south of the main road from Basingstoke to London. The soil is clay, sand and gravel and the subsoil clay. The chief crops are wheat, barley and roots, and watercress is also cultivated. Up Nately and Andwell together contain 628 acres of arable land, 281 acres of permanent grass and 122 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>2</sup> Among place-names found in early records are Hangate<sup>3</sup> (xv cent.); Slades and Howpitts<sup>4</sup> (xvi cent.).

The whole of Andwell and the greater MANOR part of Up Nately were included in the great manor of Mapledewell (q.v.) until early in the 12th century, when Adam de Port, lord of Mapledewell, by charter granted £7 14s. worth of his land in Nately and various privileges<sup>5</sup> to the great Cistercian abbey of Tyron in France.<sup>6</sup> This charter was confirmed by Henry I.<sup>7</sup> Tyron forthwith sent a colony of monks to settle in this new estate, which was subsequently known as the manor of ANDWELL. Roger de Port, the eldest son and successor of Adam, much increased his father's benefactions by granting to the monks of St. Mary of Andwell lands at Winchester and Mapledewell, the mill and miller of Andwell and a virgate of land pertaining to the mill, and all the chattels and tithes of the mill once held by the Priory of Monk Sherborne,<sup>8</sup> and other gifts followed from the de Ports of Mapledewell.<sup>9</sup> Andwell met with the same fate as the other alien priories in England, being sequestered by Edward III on the ground of the allegiance it owed to his adversary of France.<sup>10</sup> In 1376 it was committed at a rent of fol. 35 d.; 2034, fol. 64, 91; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 7, 50, 92, 169. Lord Richard de Willoughby, described as the patron of the church for the term of his life, presented during the episcopacy of John Stratford (Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 80). John Say yeoman presented between 1531 and 1555 (Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 173 d.).

<sup>39</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212.

<sup>40</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 30. Sir John Du Bois died in 1290, dower being assigned to his widow Joan in that year (Close, 18 Edw. I, m. 14). Joan Du Bois was dead in 1295, for in that year the taxers and collectors of the tenth of the laity granted to the king in the county of Hampshire were ordered to acquit the executors of the will of Joan Du Bois from payment of the tenth that would have fallen upon her and her vassals if she had been still alive, as she died before the tenth was granted to the king (Close, 23 Edw. I, m. 10).

<sup>41</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 80; 2033,

<sup>42</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 596-7.

<sup>43</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.
<sup>1</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III; Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 294-5.

<sup>4</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 298, no. 17.

<sup>5</sup> Viz. that the demesne corn of the monks should be ground at Adam's mill in the same vill free from mulcture and other customs, and that the demesne pigs of the monks should graze in the wood of Mapledewell free from pannage and other payments.

<sup>6</sup> Arch. Journ. ix, 246-61.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid.

<sup>10</sup> Hants N. and Q. viii, 12-13.

£10 to Thomas Drifed, who guaranteed to find a monk to officiate in the church, to keep the priory, church and buildings in repair, and to pay the tenth as often as one was granted by the clergy.<sup>11</sup> He failed to keep the contract, however, for commissioners appointed after his death in 1386-7 assessed the dilapidations to the property at £68.<sup>12</sup> During the latter part of the reign of Richard II the parent monasteries of alien houses were permitted to sell them to other religious houses or to persons who desired to use them for founding charities, hospitals or other works of charity.<sup>13</sup> William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, availed himself of this privilege by buying Andwell from the abbey of Tyron in 1391, paying £20 to Thomas Thorpe, to whom its custody had been committed in 1387, for his interest therein.<sup>14</sup> The bishop bestowed the manor or priory of Andwell with all its possessions, then valued at £10 10s. a year, on his newly-founded College of Winchester,<sup>15</sup> in possession of which it has continued to the present day.<sup>16</sup>

The principal remains are those of the church and of a part of the western range, but the approximate

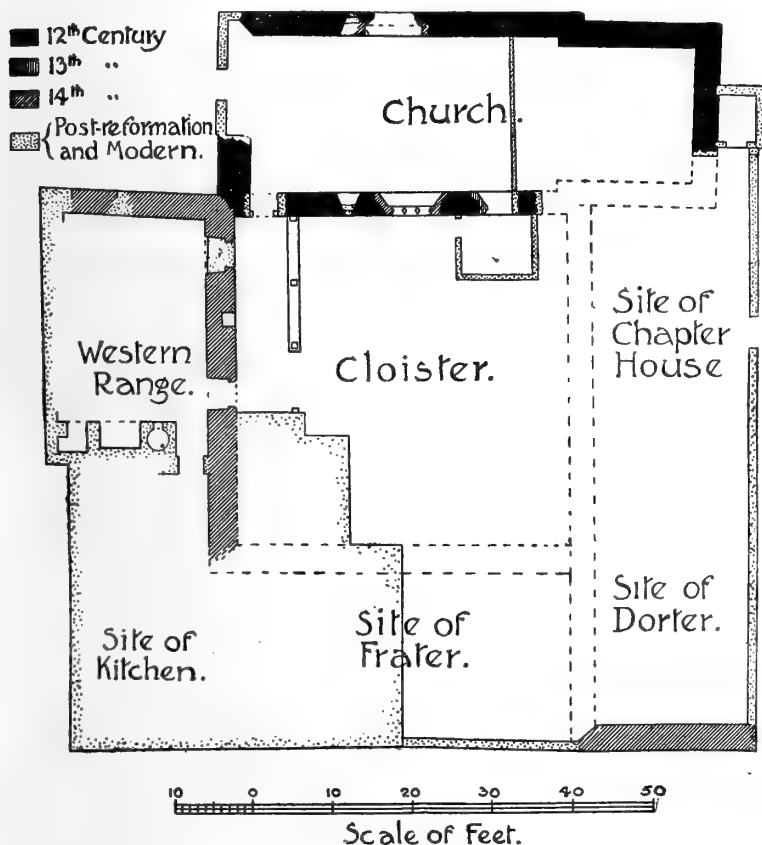

WINCHESTER COLLEGE.
*Argent two chevronels
sable between three roses gules, which are the arms of William of Wykeham.*

position of the other claustral buildings and the site and extent of the cloisters themselves may be deduced with some certainty. The church is on the north of the site, and consists of a small chancel 17 ft. by 16 ft. 6 in. and a nave 38 ft. by 19 ft. 6 in. Nearly the whole of the north and south walls of the nave remains complete with the windows, and probably not reduced in height to any appreciable extent. Of the west wall of the nave about two-thirds to the north has collapsed and is replaced in brick. No traces remain of a chancel arch. Of the chancel only the lower parts of the north and east walls remain now about 6 ft. in height, and probably partly rebuilt at that, for no traces of windows are left. The church is now used as a barn.

Almost the whole of the east and north walls of the western range remains, two doors being in situ in the former, which is built about in line with the west wall of the church. The western range thus projected west of the church by nearly its full width, the extent of which is now uncertain, for the west wall has disappeared and is replaced by a brick wall of comparatively recent date and possibly not on the old foundations. This part of the building now forms the kitchen of the farm-house which covers the rest of the site of this range, while a later wing dating from about the middle of the 19th century is built east and west and covers the western part of the frater range. Of the latter and of the dormer range, chapter house, &c., nothing is standing above ground except a piece of walling running east and west and apparently part of the south wall of the dormer. A small portion of freestone quoining in this suggests the inside south-west angle of the dormer and gives a line which if carried north intersects the church at about the east line of the nave. The dimensions of the cloisters thus obtained are 41 ft. 6 in. each way, which places the north wall of the modern house on the north line of the frater and conventual kitchen. The site of the cloister and of the destroyed buildings is now the farm-house yard, and the fragments of wall and the buildings are connected up by thin modern walls completing the square. In all cases the old walling is of flint rubble with freestone dressings. The earliest detail remaining is of early 12th-century date and may well be original. The next date of which there is evidence corresponds with the dedication of 1220,<sup>17</sup> a portion of a window of that time remaining. Finally in the first half of the 14th century the large window of the nave was inserted and the claustral build-

PLAN OF ANDWELL PRIORY, UP NATELY

<sup>11</sup> Hants N. and Q. viii, 12-13.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.

<sup>13</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 224-5.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.; Arch. Journ. ix, 252.

<sup>15</sup> Pat. 14 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 1.

<sup>16</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basing-

stoke, 294-5; Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bde. 98, no. 17.

<sup>17</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 223.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

ings largely reconstructed, if not rebuilt. By the end of the century, however, the place appears to have fallen into disrepair,<sup>18</sup> but no recognizable traces of the repairs of this time remain. The post-Reformation work which converted the buildings into a farm-house has no detail of any interest; they are of various dates and of the simplest character.

The north and east chancel walls, which are standing to about 6 ft. in height, have no detail of any sort. At the east of the nave is a dilapidated half-timber partition of 17th-century date, of which a good deal of the herring-bone brick nogging has fallen out. In the south wall are two complete windows and the western jamb of a third. The last, which is the 13th-century one already referred to, and has lost its eastern jamb, head and sill, is placed high up in the wall. The remaining jamb is chamfered and rebated for a glass frame. It has been made into a door, opening into the loft formed by inserting a floor at about two-thirds the height of the walls. The other jamb is roughly made up in 17th-century brickwork and rubble, and the stair or ladder to it which no longer remains was contained in the small half-timber structure of 17th-century date, which is built against the nave at this point and is now much dilapidated. West of this are a window of early 14th-century date and three uncusped lights with interlacing mullions. The sill of this window, unlike the other windows, is only about 4 ft. above the floor and must have cut into the cloister roof. The third window in this wall is one of the 12th century. It has a plain round external head and is possibly rebated, but is now blocked up and obscured by creepers. The splay is wide and the rear arch round-headed. Opposite this on the north is a similar window, also blocked up, which has lost its external head. At the west end of the north wall, high up, are the blocked remains of a wood-framed 17th-century light.

In the middle of the north wall is a tomb niche of late 14th-century date. The head is trefoiled and chamfered and has an ogee label. At the springing are plain moulded circular corbel caps.

The only remaining trace of the west door is a fragment of its abacus, a plain chamfered one of 12th-century date. The extra thickness of the west wall suggests that it was surmounted by a bell gable. The two doors of the western range are both of 14th-century date. Both have two-centred heads and are continuously chamfered, while the door to the south has a drop-arched head. Either of these doors may have opened into the outer parlour. In the north wall of the western range is a fragment of a window jamb but devoid of detail. Between the two doors noted above is a small recess now repaired in brick but apparently an old one.

Andwell Mill probably marks the site of one of the mills included in Mapledewell in 1086.<sup>19</sup> As stated above, it was granted to the monks of Andwell by Roger de Port, and there are various references to it in records relating to Andwell. In 1291 rents, meadow and a mill in Andwell belonging to the priory were valued at £3 a year,<sup>20</sup> and three years later the annual value of the water-mill is given as 20s.<sup>21</sup> In 1324 it was worth £2 a year,<sup>22</sup> and in 1387 dilapidations of the water corn-mill at Andwell were assessed at £6 13s. 4d.<sup>23</sup> At the view of frankpledge held at Basingstoke on 12 May 1470 John Baron the miller of Andwell was fined 12d. for taking excessive toll.<sup>24</sup> In 1294 there is mention of a fulling-mill at Andwell worth 12s. a year.<sup>25</sup> In 1324 this mill was farmed at 12d. a year.<sup>26</sup>

A portion of Up Nately continued to form part of the manor of Mapledewell even after the foundation of Andwell Priory. Thus in 1285 Ela widow of Philip Basset, who was then holding Mapledewell for life, obtained licence to alienate a messuage and half a virgate of her land in Up Nately to a chaplain celebrating divine service in the church of Up Nately.<sup>27</sup> Again, in 1535 the Hampshire possessions of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, to which William Frost had granted the manor of Mapledewell, included lands and tenements assessed at 35s. 10d. a year.<sup>28</sup>

Other portions of the parish were included in the neighbouring manors of Nately Scures and Greywell, and the Baroness Dorchester as lady of these manors is one of the principal landowners in the parish at the present day.

The church of ST. STEPHEN consists of a chancel 11 ft. 1 in. by 7 ft. 9 in. and a nave 36 ft. by 20 ft. 3 in. with a small west tower 6 ft. square and a north vestry.

The walls of the nave belong to the original late 12th-century building, but they have been entirely refaced, and later windows have been inserted.

The chancel, tower and vestry were built in 1844.

The east window of the chancel is modern and has three cinquefoiled lights under a four-centred head. The chancel arch, which is 4 ft. 1 in. in thickness, has square jambs and semicircular arch with a grooved and hollow-chamfered abacus at the springing. It is entirely of late 12th-century stonework.

The easternmost of the two windows of the nave is of 15th-century date and has two cinquefoiled lights each under a square head with a moulded label. The other three nave windows are modern copies set in old jambs.

The north doorway is near the west end of the north wall and is of late 12th-century date. The jambs and semicircular arch are of two chamfered orders with a grooved and hollow-chamfered abacus and a label enriched with dog-tooth ornament.

The vestry and the tower have each a plain two-light window under a square head.

The tower is built of brick and flint and has a plain two-light window in each face near the top. The walls of the nave are faced with flint and brick except the east wall, which is plastered flintwork. The vestry is of brick and the chancel flint and brick.

The tower contains two bells, the first bearing the initials R P 1716, and the second being merely dated 1715.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1681, a silver flagon of 1788, given in 1833 by James Blatch, vicar, and a silver alms plate of 1792, given also by James Blatch, vicar, in 1846.

<sup>18</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 224. <sup>19</sup> Ibid. i, 487.

<sup>20</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213.

<sup>21</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 283.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. 284.

<sup>23</sup> Hants N. and Q. viii, 12-13.

<sup>24</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 303.

<sup>25</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 283.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. 284.

<sup>27</sup> Inq. a.g.d. 13 Edw. I, no. 63, 136;

Pat. 13 Edw. I, m. 2.

<sup>28</sup> Woodward, op. cit. iii, 287.

The registers are kept with those of Basing. The first book contains all entries from 1695 to 1812 except the marriages, which stop at 1750. The second book contains marriages from 1756 to 1812. This is not a book of printed forms, but has simply ruled lines.

Up Nately has from the earliest ADVOWSONS times been a chapelry dependent on the parish church of Basing (q.v.), the living of which is a vicarage of the net yearly value of £350 in the gift of Magdalen College, Oxford.<sup>29</sup> The church of the priory of Andwell was dedicated between 1215 and 1238, as appears by an indulgence of forty days granted by John, Bishop of Ardfert (1215-24), who had officiated for Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester (1205-38), to all who having confessed and repented had come to the consecration of the church and offered alms, and an indulgence of ten days on like terms to those who had attended the dedication of the altars which had taken place on the Feast of the Holy Innocents.<sup>30</sup> The advowson of the church or chapel of Andwell was included in the grant of Andwell to Winchester College in 1391,<sup>31</sup> but it is doubtful whether a chaplain was ever appointed by the college.

WINSLADE

Winesflot (xi cent.); Wineslode (xiii cent.); Wynesflode, Wynesolde, Swynesflode (xiv cent.); Wynsslod (xv cent.); Winsfolde, Wyndessled, Wyndslade (xvi cent.).

The parish of Winslade lies 3 miles south-east from Basingstoke and covers an area of 712 acres,<sup>1</sup> generally rising from north to south and reaching a height of 557 ft. above the ordnance datum in the south-east. The village is prettily situated in the south-western extremity of the parish at the foot of a wooded hill on the main road from Basingstoke to Alton.

Hackwood Park extends into this parish, which altogether contains 89 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>2</sup> Kempshott, covering an area of 555 acres, was formerly a separate parish with a church of its own, but was united to Winslade in 1393.<sup>3</sup> It continued to form part of Winslade until 1876, when under the provisions of the Divided Parishes Act<sup>4</sup> it was added to the parish of Dummer.

The soil is clay with a subsoil of chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley and turnips.

The manor of WINSLADE was held MANORS by Walter of Hugh de Port in 1086.<sup>5</sup>

The overlordship continued with the descendants of Hugh de Port<sup>6</sup> for many centuries, the Marquess of Winchester being returned as the overlord as late as 1555.<sup>7</sup> In 1275 Winslade was held of John de St. John for half a knight's fee by Alan de Hagheman,<sup>8</sup> who purchased the manor of Eversley a year later.<sup>9</sup> In 1331 John de Knolle, who was the owner in 1316,<sup>10</sup> granted the reversion of the manor after his death to John de Tichborne.<sup>11</sup> The latter, apparently as lord of the manor, presented a rector during the episcopacy of Adam Orleton (1333-45).<sup>12</sup> Nevertheless Nicholas de Hagheman, a descendant of Alan de Hagheman,<sup>13</sup> was stated to be holding 1 hide of land in Winslade, formerly belonging to John de Knolle, in 1346,<sup>14</sup> while a rector was instituted at his presentation by William Edendon, Bishop of Winchester<sup>15</sup> (1346-66). However, Roger de Tichborne son of John de Tichborne was recognized as lord of the manor in 1349,<sup>16</sup> and from this date Winslade continued in the Tichborne family for over two centuries. John de Tichborne great-great-grandson of Roger<sup>17</sup> died seised of the manor in 1498, leaving as his heir his son William.<sup>18</sup> William died without issue soon afterwards, and Winslade then passed to his brother Nicholas, who was succeeded by his son of the same name.<sup>19</sup> The latter died in 1555 and was followed by his son Francis,<sup>20</sup> who as lord of Kempshott and Winslade was fined 4d. for non-attendance at the Basingstoke hundred court in 1560.<sup>21</sup> Two years later he sold Winslade to his overlord, William Marquess of Winchester,<sup>22</sup> with whose descendants it has continued ever since,<sup>23</sup> Lord Bolton being at the present day lord of the manor and the chief landowner in the parish.

The manor of KEMPSHOTT (Campessete, xi cent.; Campeshet, Kempeschete, xiii cent.; Kembeshete, xiv cent.; Kempshote, xv cent.), which had belonged to Aldret in the reign of Edward the Confessor, formed part of the possessions of Hugh de Port in 1086, being held of him by Walter.<sup>24</sup> The overlordship continued with the Ports and their successors<sup>25</sup> for a considerable period, Kempshott occurring in lists of the St. John knights' fees as late as 1349.<sup>26</sup> In 1498 the overlord was returned as Sir John Paulet, lord of Basing,<sup>27</sup> the descendant and one of the representatives of Isabel sister and eventually sole heir of Edmund de St. John, but later, viz. in 1555, Kempshott was said to be held of the heirs of Peter Coudray as of their manor of Herriard.<sup>28</sup> This latter statement can be explained by the fact that Kempshott like Herriard was held of the St. Johns

<sup>29</sup> MSS. penes Merton College, Oxf.; Magdalen College, Oxf.; Lond. Gaz. 3 Apr. 1866, p. 2210.

<sup>30</sup> Arch. Journ. ix, 251.

<sup>31</sup> Pat. 14 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 1.

<sup>1</sup> This area comprises 509½ acres of arable land and 193 acres of permanent grass (Statistics from Bd. of Agric. 1905).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 441-3.

<sup>4</sup> Stat. 39 & 40 Vict. cap. 61.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 480a.

<sup>6</sup> See Basing.

<sup>7</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cvi, 58.

<sup>8</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.

<sup>9</sup> See Eversley in the hundred of Holdshot.

<sup>10</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Edw. III.

<sup>12</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 151.

<sup>13</sup> See Eversley.

<sup>14</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>15</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 43 d.

<sup>16</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18.

<sup>17</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 28-31.

<sup>18</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xiii, 16.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. cvi, 58.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid.
<sup>21</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 343-4.

<sup>22</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 4 Eliz.

<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I; Hil. 7 Jas. I; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclviii, 102; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112; Mich. 28 Geo. II, rot. 383.

<sup>24</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 480a.

<sup>25</sup> See Basing.

<sup>26</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 180.

<sup>27</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xiii, 16.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid. cvi, 58. Again in 1611 it was stated to be held of Sir Richard Paulet as of his manor of Herriard (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], dclxxvii, 5).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

by Reginald Fitz Peter in the middle of the 13th century,<sup>29</sup> and by Matthew Fitz Herbert in the reign of Edward III.<sup>30</sup>

In 1256 it was returned that Hugh de Sifrewast had withdrawn his suit from the hundred court of Basingstoke for his land of Kempshott,<sup>31</sup> and it is probable that at this time he was demesne lord of the manor, holding it from Reginald Fitz Peter for half a knight's fee. Kempshott seems to have continued with the Sifrewasts for a considerable time, ultimately passing early in the 14th century to the family of Tichborne by the marriage of Margaret daughter and heir of Roger de Sifrewast with John de SIFREWAST. Azure two gimel bars and a chief or.

TICHBORNE. Vair a chief or.

Tichborne.<sup>32</sup> It formed part of the Hampshire possessions of the Tichbornes (q.v. supra) until 1578, when it was sold by Benjamin Tichborne, half-brother and eventually heir of Francis Tichborne,<sup>33</sup> who alienated Kempshott to Henry Pincke, a Hampshire yeoman, who had been living in the parish as early as 1571.<sup>34</sup> He died in 1611 and the manor then passed in accordance with a settlement of 1590 to his widow Elizabeth for life with remainder to Robert his eldest son by her in fee-tail.<sup>35</sup> Robert Pincke, D.D., who became warden of New College, Oxford, in 1617, was greatly esteemed by James I for his skill in argument. Charles I owed him a debt of gratitude for his loyal conduct during the Civil War in raising the University Militia and exhorting the backward citizens of Oxford to take up arms for their sovereign. Falling into the hands of the Roundheads, for a short time he suffered imprisonment for his devotion to his sovereign, but on 5 January 1643 was ordered to be released on bail. He died on 2 November 1647 and was buried in New College Chapel between the pulpit and the screen.<sup>36</sup> He never resided at Kempshott, but allowed his younger brother Walter to occupy the house,<sup>37</sup> and by will left the manor to Walter's eldest son Henry Pincke of North Waltham (co. Hants).<sup>38</sup> Henry Pincke died in 1672 and was buried at Winslade.<sup>39</sup> He was succeeded by his son Thomas Pincke, Mayor of Winchester 1689-90, who died in 1708, leaving as his heir his son the Rev. Henry Pincke, vicar of South Damerham<sup>40</sup> (co. Wilts). The latter resided at South Damerham until his death in 1723, when the manor passed to his son Henry, who died unmarried in 1770.<sup>41</sup> By will Henry left the estate to his niece Dorothy wife of John Lee of Woolley Firs, White Waltham (co. Berks.), and only child of his sister Dorothy by Thomas Hasker of Bramley (co. Hants) and afterwards of Arborfield (co. Berks.).<sup>42</sup> Philip Dehany of Farleigh Wallop (co. Hants) purchased Kempshott from Mr. and Mrs. Lee soon afterwards,<sup>43</sup> and pulled down the old manor-house, building a large brick mansion in its stead.<sup>44</sup> In 1787 he sold the estate to James Morley, an East India merchant,<sup>45</sup> whose wife died there the same year and was buried in Winchester Cathedral.<sup>46</sup> The next year Mr. Morley parted with the manor, selling it to J. C. Crook, of Stratton, in whose tenancy the Prince Regent made use of Kempshott as a hunting-box and in 1795 kept his honeymoon there.<sup>47</sup> In 1832 Edward Walter Blunt purchased the estate and quite transformed the appearance of the house by alterations of an Italian character. From Mr. Blunt Kempshott was purchased by the late Sir Nelson Rycroft, bart.,<sup>48</sup> and is now the property of his son Sir Richard Nelson Rycroft, bart. It is at present occupied by Mr. Henry Gourlay, J.P.

PINCKE. Argent a pale indented gules and a border azure with eight crosses formy fitchy or thereon.

RYCROFT, baronet. Party bendwise or and gules three griffons' heads razed and countercoloured and a chief ermine with a fleur de lis between two roses gules.

<sup>29</sup> Hund. R. (Rec. Com.), ii, 221.
<sup>30</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 18 d., 19.
<sup>31</sup> Assize R. Hil. 40 Hen. III.
<sup>32</sup> Betham, Baronetage of England, i, 204. John de Tichborne is given as the lord of Kempshott in 1316 (Feud. Aids, ii, 313).
<sup>33</sup> He died without issue in 1564 (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cxli, 12).
<sup>34</sup> Notes of F. Hants, Hil. 20 Eliz. In 1571 Joan widow of Francis Tichborne, who had married William Page as her second husband, gave up her right in the manor to Benjamin in return for an annuity of £20 (Feet of F. Hants Div. Co. Trin. 13 Eliz.). One of the conditions of the sale in 1578 was that the annuity should still be paid to her from the manor (Notes of F. Hants, Hil. 20 Eliz.). She had evidently died before 1600, in which year Benjamin Tichborne and Amphyllis his wife and Richard his son gave up their claim to it to Henry Pincke (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 42 Eliz.).

<sup>35</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dcxxvii, 5. His heir was William, aged thirty. He apparently was his only son by his first wife, who was buried at Basingstoke in 1567.
<sup>36</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.
<sup>37</sup> Thus in a list of those lending money to Charles I in 1626 occurs the name of Walter Pincke of Kempshott (Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 399-400).
<sup>38</sup> P.C.C. Will 19 Essex.
<sup>39</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 3), ii, 105-12.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid.
<sup>41</sup> Ibid.
<sup>42</sup> Ibid.
<sup>43</sup> Ibid. Philip Dehany is given as the owner in Sir Thomas Gatehouse's MS. Survey of Hants (dated 1778) penes Lord Swaythling.
<sup>44</sup> N. and Q. (Ser. 5), iii, 187.
<sup>45</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 27 Geo. III.
<sup>46</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 3), ii, 105-12.
<sup>47</sup> Ibid. The H.H. foxhounds were reformed in 1795, the year the prince left Kempshott. The hunt button then adopted is still in use. It is engraved with the letters H.H. surmounted by the Prince of Wales's plume (ex inform. Mr. John H. Cope).
<sup>48</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 3), ii, 105-12.

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN is a plain rectangular building, the chancel and nave combined measuring 45 ft. by 19 ft. 8 in. At the west end is a small tower with a vestry on the north side and a porch on the south.

Though the site is old, the church in its present form dates from 1816, and is a plain and rather unattractive building with a low-pitched slated roof, plastered walls and a gabled yellow brick tower.

All the windows have wooden frames, the east one having three cinquefoiled lights with perpendicular tracery. The north and south windows have two plain lights each under square heads. Above the doorway from the tower to the nave is an old window arch, partly blocked, through which the west window of the tower is seen.

On the north side of the east window is a rudely carved white marble wall tablet to William Pincke, 1694, second son of Henry Pincke of Kempshott. There are other gravestones of the Pincke family.

In the east window are a few fragments of mediaeval glass and six small white and gold quarries of Flemish glass, with the Crucifixion, the serpent in the wilderness, St. John Baptist (dated 1520), the meeting of Mary and Elizabeth, Susanna and the elders, and the healing of Lazarus.

Above this window is an almost obliterated wall painting of the Coronation of our Lady in an oval waved border. It formed perhaps the central part of a Doom. Near the pulpit is part of a 17th-century altar rail, and over the chancel step a pretty piece of early 18th-century scrolled wrought ironwork, gilt over. The font is modern with a small octagonal panelled bowl. The tower contains one bell by S K (Samuel Knight), 1695.

The church possesses a silver chalice, paten and alms dish, the chalice being engraved with the arms of the Bolton family, the paten and alms dish with the inscription 'The gift of the Right Honble. Lord Bolton to the Parish Church of Winslade 1815.'

The first book of registers contains entries of baptisms 1723 to 1812, marriages 1723 to 1754, burials from the same date to 1810. The second book contains marriages from 1755 to 1807, and the third continues them up to 1812. There is also a church rate book from 1775.

Winslade and Kempshott were ADVOWSONS distinct parishes—each with a parish church of its own<sup>49</sup>—until 1393, in which year the patron of the two churches, John de Tichborne, directed a petition to the Bishop of Winchester praying that by reason of their poverty the parishes might be united.<sup>50</sup> Neither of the parish churches was of itself sufficient, he said, for the support of one rector or curate, the church of Kempshott was utterly destroyed, and under these circumstances he petitioned that the church of Winslade, which was large enough for the parishioners of both churches, might be maintained in future with the rights of both churches and that the patronage might continue in the hands of him and his successors.<sup>51</sup> The official of the bishopric held an inquiry attended by rectors of neighbouring churches and made the following return:—that the annual value of Winslade was six marks and of Kempshott one mark, that the patron of both churches was John de Tichborne, that the distance between the two churches was only 1½ miles, that there was no river between the parishes, and that only three parishioners resided at Winslade and none at Kempshott. The bishop accordingly decreed the union of the churches on 26 August 1393.<sup>52</sup> The advowson has continued with the lords of the manor,<sup>53</sup> the living at the present time being a rectory of the net yearly value of £133 with 12 acres of glebe and residence in the gift of Lord Bolton. Joseph Warton the critic, the elder brother of Thomas Warton the historian of English poetry, was instituted rector here in 1748.<sup>54</sup> Another distinguished rector was John Wooll, afterwards head master of Rugby School—from 1807 to 1828—who was instituted in 1796, but soon afterwards exchanged the living for the rectory of Blackford (co. Somers).<sup>55</sup>

This parish participates in the CHARITIES Duke of Bolton's charity, founded by will of 9 April 1694 (see Basingstoke Municipal Charities). The sum of £7 9s. annually is distributed about Christmas in clothing to the poor.

<sup>49</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 375; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 88, 140, 151; 2033, fol. 43 d.; Pat. 22 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 22.

<sup>50</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 441-3.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. i, 221; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 92 d., 144, 176 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>54</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid.

THE HUNDRED OF MAINSBOROUGH

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

BROWN CANDOVER

CHILTON CANDOVER

WOODMANCOTT

The above list represents the extent of the hundred both in 1086<sup>1</sup> and in 1831.<sup>2</sup> Woodmancott was added to the hundred of Holdshot before 1841, so that Mainsborough now contains only Brown Candover and Chilton Candover. The hundred was assessed at 30 hides in the time of Edward the Confessor and at 23 hides and 2½ virgates in 1086.

In 1280 Robert Daundeley, when called upon to show by what warrant he had pillory and the assize of bread and ale in Chilton Candover, asserted that these liberties belonged to the hundred of Mainsborough, and stated that he was then holding that hundred by the annual payment of 5s. to the king.<sup>3</sup> From that date the hundred continued to descend with the manor of Chilton Candover<sup>4</sup> (q.v. infra). There are no endowed charities in this hundred.

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462b, 469a and b.

<sup>2</sup> Pop. Ret. of 1831.

<sup>3</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 765.

<sup>4</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 307; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 2 & 3 Eliz.; East. 4 Eliz.; East. 16 Jas. I; Recov. R. Mich. 36 Geo. III, rot. 142.

BROWN CANDOVER

Candefer (ix cent.) ; Candevre (xi cent.) ; Brunkardoure, Candevre Abbatis (xiii cent.) ; Candovere, Brunecandevere (xiv cent.).

Brown Candover parish lies 5 miles north from Alresford and contains 2,810 acres. The village lies along the main road from Winchester to Basingstoke in the valley of the Itchen, which intersects the parish from east to west. From the river-valley the ground rises steeply towards both the north and south, a height of 539 ft. above the ordnance datum being reached in the north. The modern church of St. Peter, standing on the right bank of the Itchen, was built in 1845, chiefly at the expense of the first Lord Ashburton, replacing a church destroyed by fire which had stood about half a mile distant on the left bank of the river. Candover House is situated nearly opposite the site of the old church in large grounds sloping down towards the river, and is now the residence of the Hon. Frederick Arthur Baring, the younger brother of the present Lord Ashburton. The Rectory House was on the opposite side of the stream and road and was entered through a small garden. The National school was built in 1850 and enlarged in 1854. The soil is chalky loam and gravel, the subsoil chalk and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, turnips and oats. The parish contains 1,226 acres of arable land, 734½ acres of permanent grass and 363 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> Part of Northington parish, with a population of 27, was transferred to this parish for civil purposes only in 1888.<sup>2</sup>

The manor of BROWN CANDOVER MANOR belonged to the Crown till the beginning of the 10th century,<sup>3</sup> when it was granted by Edward the Elder to the New Minster afterwards known as Hyde Abbey.<sup>4</sup> In 1086 it was farmed out at £10, although only worth £8.<sup>5</sup> The manor continued in possession of the abbey till the Dissolution,<sup>6</sup> when it came into the hands of Henry VIII, who granted it in 1539 to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John.<sup>7</sup> Sir William Paulet was created Marquess of Winchester in 1551, and twenty years later sold the property to Roger Corham and Mabel his wife.<sup>8</sup> This Corham leased the farm of Brown Candover to various tenants for an annual rent, and in 1587 an interesting case was heard concerning an annuity of £20 granted by the late Marquess of Winchester out of this estate, the claimant Robert Halliwall bringing an action for arrears of annuity against the then tenants (Knight, Fisher and Woodward), and they in turn demanding payment on the part of their landlord Roger Corham,<sup>9</sup> on the plea that 'he had got a good bargain of the property from the late Marquis.'<sup>10</sup> Roger Corham died in 1600 and was succeeded by his son William,<sup>11</sup> who forty years later, in conjunction with his son Roger, dealt with it by fine with Francis Fortescue and Thomas Travers.<sup>12</sup> Roger was in possession of the manor in 1641, conveying it in that year to Henry Sandys and others, probably in trust for John fifth Marquess of Winchester.<sup>13</sup> The marquess was a zealous loyalist and forfeited all his lands, the manor of Brown Candover being purchased from the Treason Trustees for Walter Strickland and four others.<sup>14</sup> However, on the accession of Charles II he was restored in his possessions,<sup>15</sup> and died seised of Brown Candover in 1675.<sup>16</sup> The manor then passed to his third, but second surviving son, Francis Paulet. Francis dealt with it by recovery in 1676 and 1685<sup>17</sup> and died in 1696.<sup>18</sup> By the beginning of the 18th century Brown Candover had passed into the possession of the Worsleys of Appuldurcombe and Chilton Candover. Sir Robert Worsley, bart., presented to the church as lord of the manor in 1709,<sup>19</sup> and from this date the descent of Brown Candover follows that of Chilton Candover (q.v. infra), the present owner being Francis Denzil fifth Lord Ashburton.

CORHAM. Argent a cross sable between four eagles gules.

WORSLEY, baronet. Argent a chevron between three falcons sable having their beaks, legs and bells or.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Loc. Govt. Bd. Order 24 Mar. 1888.

<sup>3</sup> Alfred the Great by his will (880-5) bequeathed the vill of Candover, which probably at this time comprised Brown and Chilton Candover, to his midmost daughter Ethelgiva, the Abbess of Shaftesbury (Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii, 115).

<sup>4</sup> Brown Candover is not the 'six hides at Kendefer' mentioned in the charter (c. 900) to the New Minster printed in the Liber de Hyda (pp. 85-96). These 6 hides, as was pointed out by the Rev. W. L. W. Eyre, rector of Swarraton and Northington, are clearly the 700 acres between Brown and Chilton Candover, formerly a detached portion of Northington parish. It starts on the west side from the 'burnstow', a pool and spring 300 yds. east of Brown Candover Church on the north side of the brook; goes north past the 'stan cystel' (Stanchester, an existing field name) and 'Bicanhyrst' (preserved in Beckett's Down and Bickhurst fields in the northern part of the 700 acres); and so round to 'urde dæl' and 'Tigelhangra' (Dell fields and Tegdown Copse on the south-east) to 'Bucganora' (now Bugmoor or Bogmoor Hill at the south-eastern corner of the parish and partly in Godsfield [q.v.]) and then to the 'micel dic,' a dyke at the south-western corner. The probability is that Brown Candover is represented by 'Candefer,' with 10 hides and a church which is named in the almost certainly spurious Golden Charter (903) of Edward the Elder to the New Minster, printed in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii, 144-5.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>6</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232b; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213; Feud. Aids, ii, 307; Pat. 15 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 3; 12 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 26.

<sup>7</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. v, m. 7.

<sup>8</sup> Vide Exch. L.T.R. Memo. R. East. 22 Eliz. m. 76.

<sup>9</sup> It was to this lord that Norden, after mentioning the depopulation of Chilton Candover, referred so bitterly in 1595: 'In like manner beginneth one Coreham to doe with Browne Candovre, hoc nocummentum, omnium pessimum' (Add. MS. 31853, fol. 26).

<sup>10</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 29 Eliz. no. 10; Exch. Spec. Com. 30 Eliz. no. 2036.

<sup>11</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxiii, 76. See also Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 39 Eliz.; Close, 39 Eliz. pt. xvii; 43 Eliz. pt. x.

<sup>12</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Chas. I.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. Hil. 17 Chas. I.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, iv, 2533.

<sup>15</sup> He dealt with it by fine in 1660-1 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 12 & 13 Chas. II).

<sup>16</sup> P.C.C. Will 29 Dycer.

<sup>17</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 28 Chas. II, rot. i; East. 1 Jas. II, rot. 170.

<sup>18</sup> P.C.C. Will 99 Bond.

<sup>19</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The Brunes of Rowner held land in the parish of Hyde Abbey during the 15th and 16th<sup>20</sup> and probably the two preceding centuries,<sup>21</sup> and the name 'Brown' Candover possibly still marks their connexion with the place.

In 1086 Hugh de Port was holding 2½ hides in Brown Candover of Hyde Abbey as of its manor of Brown Candover.<sup>22</sup> This estate had been in the possession of Airaf in the time of Edward the Confessor.<sup>23</sup> In 1207 Henry de Brayboef gave King John 1 mark to recover possession of half a knight's fee with appurtenances in Brown Candover which he claimed to hold from Adam de Port (great-grandson of the Domesday holder) but of which Ruald de Woodcott had deprived him.<sup>24</sup> The entry in the Testa de Nevill to the effect that Robert de Tregos was holding half a knight's fee in Brown Candover 'of the old feoffment of Henry de Brayboef and the same Henry of Robert de St. John, and the same Robert of the king,'<sup>25</sup> apparently refers to this holding. It further appears in a list of the St. John knights' fees in 1329,<sup>26</sup> but is omitted in a list of 1349,<sup>27</sup> and nothing further can be definitely ascertained concerning the history of the tenement, although the probability is that it ultimately came into the possession of Hyde Abbey.<sup>28</sup>

The church of ST. PETER, BROWN-CHURCH CUM - CHILTON CANDOVER, is modern and consists of chancel 19 ft. 10 in. by 17 ft. 10 in., nave 75 ft. 7 in. by 27 ft. 10 in., and a south tower 7 ft. 10 in. square, these dimensions being taken internally. The church is faced with squared flint with limestone dressings and the roofs covered with tiles, with a tower at the south-west, the lower stage of which serves as a porch, surmounted by an octagonal lead spire.

There is a curious brass on the north chancel wall of the figures of a civilian (c. 1520) and his wife with their arms locked in each other's, and their hands raised in prayer; it was restored to the church in 1889.

The panels below the oak altar rail are filled with elaborate carving of 18th-century date with cherubs, flowers and fruit.<sup>28a</sup> There are also three 17th-century oak chairs, one of which has a carving of Adam and Eve at the back. They came from the old Worsley mansion at Chilton Candover.

There are five bells, by G. Mears of London, 1844.

The plate consists of a pair of silver-gilt chalices and a silver-gilt flagon, said to have been given by Miss Mary Cholmondeley in 1854, and two silver-gilt patens and a silver-gilt alms dish, said to have been made at the same date out of the silver of a service given by Sir R. Worsley in 1675.

There are five register books. The first contains entries of baptisms, marriages and burials from 1695 to 1765, and also entries for the parish of Woodmancott from 1698 to 1708. The second, which also includes Woodmancott, contains mixed entries from 1612 to 1742. In the other three the entries are separated: baptisms, 1766 to 1812; marriages, 1768 to 1812; burials, 1706 to 1812.

A church in Candover is mentioned in the Golden Charter (903) to Hyde Abbey,<sup>29</sup> but there is no reference to one in Domesday Book.<sup>30</sup> In 1302 Edward I claimed the advowson from the Abbot and convent of Hyde on the ground that Henry III had presented a certain Philip Paytevyne to the church.<sup>31</sup> The abbot and convent proved that they had been the patrons of the living from time immemorial,<sup>32</sup> and recovered the advowson from the Crown in 1305 by payment of a fine of 40 marks.<sup>33</sup> Henceforward the advowson has followed the descent of the manor,<sup>34</sup> the living at the present time being a rectory with that of Chilton Candover annexed, of the net annual value of £330 with residence and 61 acres of glebe in the gift of Lord Ashburton.

CHILTON CANDOVER

Candevre (xi cent.); Candovere (xiii cent.); Chilton, Chilternecandevre (xiv cent.); Chylton Candevour (xvi cent.).

Chilton Candover is a parish of 1,451 acres. The country in the north consists of open down and the ground here reaches a height of 39 ft. above the ordnance datum. The village is situated on the main road from Basingstoke to Winchester, and consists of a few scattered houses built of brick and roofed with slate and tiles. To the north lies a churchyard inclosed by a flint stone wall, now abandoned and overgrown with weeds. The old church of St. Nicholas,<sup>1</sup> originally situated in it, having been pulled down in 1876, nothing now remains but the graves and tombstones. The bourne takes its rise here at some springs and ponds near the rectory and flows thence in a south-westerly direction to Brown Candover. Near the sources of this stream is a fine avenue of yew

<sup>20</sup> Close, 2 Edw. IV, m. 21; Cal. Pat. 1476-85, p. 420; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxvii, 79.

<sup>21</sup> They were probably the tenants of the abbey at the end of the 13th century. In 1296 the parish church is called the church of 'Brunkardoure' (Close, 24 Edw. I, m. 40).

<sup>22</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid.

<sup>24</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 413.

<sup>25</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230b.

<sup>26</sup> Cal. of Close, 1327-30, p. 506.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. 1349-54, pp. 20, 21.

<sup>28</sup> Perhaps it is identical with the message and lands in Brown Candover and Northington which John de Lavynton and Roger de Wyllesford alienated to the abbot and convent in 1341 (Cal. Pat. 1340-3, p. 198).

<sup>28a</sup> These panels have been very badly treated. They were removed from Northington to Brown Candover Church when the new church at Northington was built, but were formerly brought many years ago from Italy and were of a deep black colour. However, probably during the interregnum caused by the death of the builder of Northington Church during its erection, the clerk of the works, who had no interest in the old rich lacquer, placed the panels in an ammonia bath and then covered them with a sticky varnish which did not dry for months. The result was disastrous to the panels (ex inform. the Rev. W. L. W. Eyre).

<sup>29</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii, 144-5.

<sup>30</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>31</sup> Plac. Abbrev. (Rec. Com.), 248.

<sup>32</sup> Parl. R. (Rec. Com.), 167.

<sup>33</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 142; Pat. 33 Edw. I, pt. ii, m. 22.

<sup>34</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 105; Egerton MSS. 2031-4, passim; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> It is called the church of St. Mary the Virgin in 15th-century documents (Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III, no. 43; Pat. 3 Ric. III, m. 6).

trees, half a mile in length and of some antiquity, which leads south-east to the road to Preston Candover. Afterwards this avenue, though no longer shaded by yew, continues towards Juniper Hill.

At Stanchester Field, one of the few 'chesters' in Hampshire, foundations of a Roman villa have been discovered.<sup>2</sup>

The soil is chalky loam and gravel, the subsoil chalk and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, turnips and oats.

Among place-names occurring in an early 17th-century deed of sale are the following:—'The Breaches, Chilton Wood, Dundridge, Shilton Warren and South Downs.'<sup>3</sup> 'The Breaches' is preserved in Breach Farm and Breach Cottages, and Chilton Wood and Dundridge Copse still retain their old names.

In 1086 the manor of CHILTON MANOR CANDOVER was held of the Bishop of Winchester by Richer,<sup>4</sup> who is generally identified with Richer de Andely, ancestor of the family of Daundely whose name so long flourished in the parish.<sup>5</sup> In the middle of the 12th century Godfrey de Andely (Daundely) was holding three knights' fees of the bishop,<sup>6</sup> and he was succeeded by his son Walter, who was holding four fees in 1166.<sup>7</sup> It was probably this Walter who granted his land between the two 'Buggenores' to the Hospitallers, and his grant was confirmed by his son and successor of the same name. In 1280 Robert Daundely being summoned before the king to show by what warrant he claimed the return of royal writs and the right to pillory and the fines arising from the breaches of the assize of bread and ale in Chilton Candover, denied that he had ever exercised the first privilege, but asserted the other liberties belonging to the hundred of Mainsborough, which he held of the king by the rent of 5s., and the case was accordingly dismissed.<sup>8</sup> Robert was succeeded by John Daundely, who, as patron of the church, presented a rector between 1282 and 1304.<sup>9</sup> In 1316 the manor of Chilton Candover belonged to Roger Daundely.<sup>10</sup> In 1346 Philip Daundely held one fee in Chilton Candover, which formerly belonged to John Daundely,<sup>11</sup> and this same Philip was knight of the shire some nine years later.<sup>12</sup> In 1372 the manor of Chilton Candover was settled on Nicholas Bayntun, lord of Falstone (co. Wilts.) and Joan his wife in fee-tail,<sup>13</sup> and from the fact that in default of heirs of Nicholas and Joan the property was to pass to the right heirs of Joan it seems probable that Joan was the heiress of the Daundely family. In 1401, on the marriage of their son Nicholas, the manor with Week (Daundely) in St. Mary Bourne was settled on him with remainder to his heirs.<sup>14</sup> He died in 1421, and John his son and heir succeeded;<sup>15</sup> the latter, however, in 1429, conveyed the manor to his mother Joan for life on her second marriage with William Whapplede of Chalfont<sup>16</sup> (co. Bucks.). Sir John Bayntun the grandson of Joan<sup>17</sup> died seized of the manor in 1465, leaving as his heir a son Robert,<sup>18</sup> who, having taken up arms for Henry VI, was taken prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury and attainted.<sup>19</sup> Chilton Candover consequently escheated to Edward IV, who granted it in tail-male to John Cheyne in 1475.<sup>20</sup> Ten years later George Nevill for his good services against the rebels obtained a similar grant from Richard III.<sup>21</sup> The manor, however, was subsequently recovered by the Bayntun family, John Bayntun the son and heir of Robert obtaining a reversal of his father's attainder by Act of Parliament in 1504.<sup>22</sup> This John succeeded to Bromham (co. Wilts.) as kinsman and heir of Richard Beauchamp Lord St. Amand in 1508,<sup>23</sup> and died in 1516 and was buried in Bromham Church.<sup>24</sup> He was succeeded by his son Sir Edward Bayntun, who rose in favour at the court of Henry VIII and was vice-chamberlain to three of his queens.<sup>25</sup> Sir Edward married as his second wife a certain Isabel,<sup>26</sup> and in 1540 Chilton Candover was settled upon them for life with remainder to their eldest son Henry Bayntun in tail-male. Isabel survived her husband, who died in 1544,<sup>27</sup> and it would seem married afterwards Sir James Stumpe, for in 1562 Sir James Stumpe and Isabel his wife sold the manor to John Fysshier in return for an annuity of £12 to Isabel;<sup>28</sup> Henry Bayntun and his younger brother Francis having two years previously surrendered their reversionary right for the sum of £200.<sup>29</sup> The desolation<sup>30</sup> of Chilton Candover apparently dates from this time. Norden, writing in 1595, declared that 'One Fisher, deceased, depopulated this place, extirping the inhabitants pulling downe the howses, onlie remaineth the churche and a ferme.' On the death of John Fysshier in 1591, his son William succeeded to the manor<sup>31</sup> in accordance with a settlement of 1567,<sup>32</sup> and continued in possession until 1618,<sup>33</sup> when he sold it to Sir Edward Villiers.<sup>34</sup> In 1620 William Rolfe purchased the estate from Sir Edward Villiers,<sup>35</sup> but sold it eleven years later to Edmund Clarke,<sup>36</sup> who died in 1633, leaving a son and heir Edmund.<sup>37</sup> There is a blank in the history of the manor from this date till 1662, when Sir Henry Worsley, bart.,

BAYNTUN. Sable a bend indented argent.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 306.

<sup>3</sup> Close, 16 Jas. I, pt. ii, no. 36.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462.

<sup>5</sup> Stevens, Hist. of St. Mary Bourne, 97-8.

<sup>6</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. 205-6.

<sup>7</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 80.

<sup>8</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 765.

<sup>9</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 8.

<sup>10</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 307.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 329.

<sup>12</sup> Close, 29 Edw. III, m. 3 d.

<sup>13</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 46 Edw. III.

<sup>14</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), A 10413.

<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 Hen. V, no. 48.

<sup>16</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 7 Hen. VI; cf. Feud. Aids, ii, 364.

<sup>17</sup> Hoare, Hist. of Wilts. iii (4), 7.

<sup>18</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Edw. IV, no. 30.

<sup>19</sup> Hoare, Hist. of Wilts. iii (4), 5;

Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. IV, no. 43.

<sup>20</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 19.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. 3 Ric. III, m. 6.

<sup>22</sup> Stat. at Large, iv.

<sup>23</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, i, 1905.

<sup>24</sup> Kite, Monumental Brasses of Wilts.

46.

<sup>25</sup> Burke, Commoners, iv, 685.

<sup>26</sup> She is described in one pedigree as the sister of Sir John Alley of Stockwell (Burke, Commoners, iv, 685), in another as daughter of Sir John Leigh (Hoare, Hist. of Wilts. iii (4), 7).

<sup>27</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xv, 498; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxii, 93.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 4 Eliz.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid. Mich. 2 & 3 Eliz.

<sup>30</sup> Add. MS. 31853, fol. 26.

<sup>31</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Eliz. pt. i, no. 52.

<sup>32</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 9 Eliz. m. 18 d.

<sup>33</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 35 Eliz.; East. 9 Jas. I; Hil. 14 Jas. I.

<sup>34</sup> Close, 16 Jas. I, pt. ii, no. 36; Feet of F. Hants, East. 16 Jas. I.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. Mich. 18 Jas. I.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. Mich. 7 Chas. I.

<sup>37</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 9 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 182.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

presented to the church of Chilton Candover, as lord of the manor.<sup>38</sup> He died in 1666 and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert Worsley, bart.,<sup>39</sup> who died in 1676, having by his will dated 12 December 1675 directed that 'his charities to the poor of Chilton, where he then lived and in the Isle of Wight should be continued during his son's minority, meaning his constant weekly alms at his door which amounted to £50 yearly.'<sup>40</sup> This son, the last Sir Robert Worsley, bart., died without male issue in 1747,<sup>41</sup> and the manor then passed in accordance with his will, dated 4 June 1746, to his grandson Robert Lord Carteret, afterwards Earl Granville, son of his only surviving daughter Frances.<sup>42</sup> Earl Granville died without issue in 1776,<sup>43</sup> having left the manor by will dated 13 December 1771 to his nephew Henry Frederick Thynne,<sup>44</sup> who assumed the name of Carteret and was on 20 January 1784 created Lord Carteret of Hawnes (co. Beds.<sup>45</sup>). Lord Carteret dealt with Chilton Candover by recovery in 1795,<sup>46</sup> and died unmarried in 1816. It was acquired in 1818 by Alexander Baring, who was created Lord Ashburton in 1835, and it has remained in his family till the present day, Francis Denzil Edward Baring, Lord Ashburton, being the present lord of the manor.

The first mention of the church ADVOWSON of Chilton Candover is in 1291, when it was valued at £9 a year.<sup>47</sup> The lords of the manor presented the rectors until 1847,<sup>48</sup> when the living was annexed to that of Brown Candover.<sup>49</sup> The registers are kept at Brown Candover.

The first register book begins in 1695, and the entries for baptisms, marriages, and burials, which are all entered as they occurred without being tabulated, CARTERET, Earl Granville. Gules a fesse indented of four points argent.

BARING, Lord Ashburton. Azure a fesse or and a bear's head in the chief with a golden muzzle and ring.

finish in 1752. Another book for burials in woollen—1706 to 1741; a third book in which the entries are mixed as in the first, 1742 to 1759; and a fourth in which the entries are tabulated—baptisms, 1772 to 1810; marriages, 1681 to 1795; burials, 1677 to 1812.

WOODMANCOTT

Wodemancote (x cent.); Udemancote (xi cent.); Woodmancote (xiii cent.); Wodmancote, Wudemancote (xiv cent.).

The parish of Woodmancott consists of 1,404 acres of down and country, which rises here to considerable heights—in one spot near Popham Down Copse in the north 580 ft. above the ordnance datum being recorded.

The village is grouped round St. James's Church and the Manor Farm in the extreme west of the parish. A short distance to the north is College Wood, in which Roman remains have been found.<sup>1</sup>

The soil is clay, loam and chalk with a subsoil of chalk, and the Agricultural Returns for Hampshire (1905) reckon the arable land at 990 acres, permanent grass at 230 acres, and woods and plantations at 295 acres. The chief crops are wheat, oats and turnips. Copses called Westhurst, Esthurst, Downe, Highwood, Walters, Well, Thornbury and Bramleys are mentioned on a 16th-century Patent Roll.<sup>2</sup>

Ten hides at WOODMANCOTT were MANOR named in the almost certainly spurious charter of Edward the Elder to the New Minster.<sup>3</sup> In 1086 Woodmancott was assessed at 6 hides and 2½ virgates, and was then held of the abbey by Alsi the son of Brixi.<sup>4</sup> Its value, which was then £7, had risen to £7 16s. 1½d. in 1291.<sup>5</sup> The manor continued in possession of the abbey<sup>6</sup> till the Dissolution, when it became Crown property.<sup>7</sup> Henry VIII in 1544 granted it with its appurtenances to the warden and scholars of St. Mary's College, Winchester, in part exchange for the manor of Harmondsworth (co. Midd.) and other property.<sup>8</sup> Under this grant the warden and fellows of Winchester College still hold the WINCHESTER COLLEGE. Argent two chevrons sable between three roses gules.

<sup>38</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>39</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, i, 66.

<sup>40</sup> P.C.C. Will 27 Hale.

<sup>41</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, i, 66.

<sup>42</sup> P.C.C. Will 219 Potter.

<sup>43</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, iv, 84.

<sup>44</sup> P.C.C. Will 66 Bellas.

<sup>45</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, ii, 170.

<sup>46</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 36 Geo. III, m. 142.

<sup>47</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 211a.

<sup>48</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031-4, passim; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>49</sup> Sumner, Conspectus of Diocese of Winton.

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 306.

<sup>2</sup> Pat. 35 Hen. VIII, pt. viii, m. 6.

John Popham, lord of the neighbouring manor of Popham, who had common of pasture in the Hurst wood at Woodmancott, granted leave to the Abbot of Hyde in 1294 to make and maintain a copse in the wood for six years from Lady Day in that year, neither party having the right of grazing cattle there during that period (Hants N. and Q. ix, 20). This name has now been lost, but there are still an Upper Down Copse and a Lower Down Copse in the parish, while Walker's Copse probably represents the 16th-century Walter's Copse.

<sup>8</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii, 144-5.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 469.

<sup>5</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213.

<sup>6</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232b; Close, 3 Edw. II, m. 2 d.; Pat. 3 Edw. II, m. 3; Feud. Aids, ii, 307; Chart. R. 3 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 35; Inq. p.m. 12 Ric. II, no. 150; Exch. Mins. Accts. Hants, 30 & 31 Hen. VIII, rot. 135, m. 30 d.

<sup>7</sup> It was then leased to Richard Bethell for a term of ninety years at a rent of £11 12s. 8d., the term having commenced from 1536. On the transfer of the manor to St. Mary's College, Bethell obtained an additional grant empowering him to fell timber.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 35 Hen. VIII, pt. viii, m. 6.

MAINSBOROUGH HUNDRED    WOODMANCOTT

lordship of the manor and are the chief landowners in the parish.

The church of ST. JAMES was burnt CHURCH down on Easter Day, 1854, and the present building dates from the next year, and contains nothing of interest.

The plate consists of a plated chalice and paten and a very early pewter chalice, probably Jacobean, two pewter cups and four plates.

Woodmancott was a chapelry dependent on Brown Candover until 1838, when it was separated and constituted a separate benefice.<sup>9</sup> In 1854 Popham, which had hitherto been a chapelry of Micheldever, was annexed to it,<sup>10</sup> and the living is at the present day a vicarage of the net yearly value of £129, with 13 acres of glebe and residence, in the gift of Lord Ashburton.

<sup>9</sup> Sumner, Conspectus of Diocese of Winchester, 68.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 30.

THE HUNDRED OF BOUNTISBOROUGH

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

GODSFIELD (EXTRA-PAROCHIAL)
ITCHEN ABBAS

ITCHEN STOKE (WITH ABBOTSTONE)
SWARRATON<sup>1</sup>

In the Domesday Survey Bountisborough is found under the name of 'Mantesberge Hundred.'<sup>2</sup> At this time it included Itchen Abbas, Itchen Stoke, Abbotstone, Ovington, Wield and 'Stradfelle.'<sup>3</sup> Swarraton is not mentioned by name in the Domesday Survey, but 3 hides 3 virgates held by Hugh de Port of the Abbot of Hyde in the hundred of Micheldever<sup>4</sup> were at Swarraton<sup>5</sup> and continued to be included in the hundred of Micheldever<sup>6</sup> until comparatively modern times. There is no mention of Godsfeld in the Domesday Survey. The 'Stradfelle' mentioned is probably Stratfield Mortimer, in Berkshire, but is now difficult to identify.<sup>7</sup> Before 1316 Ovington and Wield had been included in Fawley Hundred.<sup>8</sup>

At the time of Edward the Confessor the whole hundred of Bountisborough was assessed at 35½ hides, and at the time of the Domesday Survey at 19½ hides.<sup>9</sup> In 1316 Bountisborough included the parishes of Abbotstone, Itchen Abbas, and Itchen Stoke and part of Swarraton,<sup>10</sup> and has not greatly changed since except that the extra-parochial district of Godsfeld has been included in the hundred. From the 14th century the whole of Bountisborough Hundred was Crown property.<sup>11</sup> During the Commonwealth the Parliamentary Commissioners took a survey of the hundred as part of the possessions of 'Charles Stuart, late king of England.'

This survey mentions that a court was held twice yearly at the usual place, but the name of this place is not stated.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Pop. Res. 1831.

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462. It is supposed by some writers that the scribes had mistaken the old English B for an M, and ought to have written 'Bantesberge.' Mr. Round has pointed out a clear instance of this confusion in Bucks where the scribe has written 'Molebec' for the Norman name 'Bolebec.'

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462b, 463a, 474a, 474b, 491a, 496a.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 470.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 418.

<sup>6</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306, 329, 348.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 491.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. 320.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462b, 463a, 474a, 474b, 491a, 496a.

<sup>10</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid.

<sup>12</sup> Parl. Surv. Hants, 1652, no. 8.

GODSFIELD

Godesfeld, Godefild (xii cent.).

The parish of Godsfeld lies 3 miles north-east of New Alresford. It was formerly extra-parochial, but is now a parish in Alresford union, and adjoins Armsworth, which lies on the east.

Godsfeld Farm, and the remains of the chapel of the Hospitallers, now in disuse, are in the south-east of the parish. The ground is fairly high, rising in some places to over 520 ft. above the ordnance datum. The north of the parish is occupied by a large copse and plantations. There are several old chalk-pits scattered throughout the parish.

Duthy, writing about 1830, states that there was only one house in Godsfeld, which was occupied by the farmer and his family.<sup>1</sup> A few cottages have been added since then, but in 1903 the number of inhabitants was only 13.

The area of the parish is 509 acres, of which 164 acres are arable land, 225 acres permanent grass and 103 acres woods and plantations.<sup>2</sup>

Constant reference is made in Godsfeld and Swarraton charters to the wood of 'Buggenore' and to a well-known landmark at one of its corners known as Buggenores thorn.<sup>3</sup> The name may be retained at the present day in 'Bogmoor Hill' in Godsfeld. This wood also extended into the adjacent parishes, into Brown Candover (q.v.) and into Wield, for in a conveyance<sup>4</sup> of 1598 we hear of 'Behunger Coppice' and 'Bugner Coppice' situate in the parish of Wield.

The Hospitallers' manor of GODS-MANOR FIELD was formed by the consolidation of certain lands, the most important of which were granted them in the 12th and 13th centuries by the Daundelys, lords of Chilton Candover, and by Adam de Port.

The first<sup>5</sup> of these grants was made not later than the year 1171 by Walter de Andely (Daundely) and comprised all his land 'between the two Bogenores which belonged to Candover' (vide Chilton Candover) as well as pasture for 12 oxen and 200 sheep among his own herds. For this a rent of 5s. a year was to be paid.<sup>6</sup> As the grantor was a knight holding under the Bishops of Winchester this conveyance was effected in the episcopal court in the actual presence of Henry of Blois, who thus witnessed and allowed it.<sup>7</sup> Other grants in the neighbourhood followed, and of these one of the most noteworthy was the gift<sup>8</sup> to the Hospitallers in frankalmoign by Adam de Port the lord of Abbotstone of the whole of his land in Godsfeld 'between the new ditch as it extends from the bishop's grove as far as the boundaries of Swarraton.' Again in 1267 the knights exchanged the right of pasture for 12 oxen<sup>9</sup> against 18 acres in Chilton Candover, and three years later their still more valuable right of sheep pasture<sup>10</sup> against 50 acres near 'Buggenore.' These gifts were the chief constituents of the manor of Godsfeld proper. But in addition, possibly as early as the reign of John, we hear of William of St. Martin and Erenburgia his wife granting<sup>11</sup> to the Hospitallers an extensive tract of land and pasture in Swarraton, the boundary of which is traced 'from the corner of the wood of Buggenora,' at an annual rent of 20s.<sup>12</sup> Hugh son of William confirmed his father's grant but remitted the rent.

Again, Hugh de St. Martin, possibly a later tenant of the same family, granted to the knights his manor of Swarraton, as we learn from a release by Roger de Mortimer of his right therein,<sup>13</sup> and from this circumstance the estate of the Hospitallers was sometimes called the manor of Godsfeld and Swarraton (q.v.). The Hospitallers established a preceptory at Godsfeld which appears to have been the principal of the three estates of the order in Hampshire, namely, Godsfeld, Baddesley and Rownhams, the last two being described as members of Godsfeld. The report made on the property of the order in 1338 as regards Godsfeld is as follows:—'At Gods field is one messuage in bad repair, with garden worth 3s. 4d. At the same place there are 300 acres of arable land, 100 acres of which are worth 4d., 100 acres worth 2d., and 100 acres uncultivated worth 1d. an acre per annum.'<sup>14</sup> After the Dissolution the manor of Godsfeld was for some time in the possession of Sir Thomas Seymour, and was probably granted to him at the same time as North Baddesley (q.v.).<sup>15</sup> After his attainder in 1549, all his estates, including the manor of Godsfeld, were given to Sir William Paulet Earl of Wiltshire,<sup>16</sup> afterwards Marquess of Winchester, who in 1570 obtained licence to alienate the manor,<sup>17</sup> and sold it in the following year to Richard Knight for £361 9s. 2d.<sup>18</sup> The manor remained in the Knight family<sup>19</sup> until 1584, when Robert son of Richard Knight sold it to Richard Beaconsshaw.<sup>20</sup> Of the purchase money (£1,000) £600 was forfeited to the queen by reason of the recusancy of the said Robert Knight.<sup>21</sup>

In 1595 Richard Beaconsshaw died seised of the manor of Godsfeld and Swarraton, which descended to his son William.<sup>22</sup> Three years later William Beaconsshaw conveyed it to William Petre and other

THE HOSPITALLERS.
Gules a cross argent.

<sup>1</sup> Duthy, Sketches of Hants, 129.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 80 d. et seq.

<sup>4</sup> Close, 40 Eliz. pt. vii, no. 12.

<sup>5</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 80 d.

<sup>6</sup> As late as 1338 we find it paid to Roger Daundely, Walter's descendant (Knights Hospitallers in Engl. [Camd. Soc. lxx]).

<sup>7</sup> This accounts for John's confirmation of this grant in 1199 as the gift of Henry Bp. of Winchester, in Godsfeld (Chart. R.

1 John, pt. i, m. 17).

<sup>8</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 79 d. et seq.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. fol. 82, 84.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. fol. 83 d.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. fol. 85.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. fol. 86, 86 d.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. fol. 73.

<sup>14</sup> Knights Hospitallers in Engl. (Camd.

Soc.), 21.

<sup>15</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (i), 403.

<sup>16</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. VI, pt. v, m. 22; and

4 Edw. VI, pt. ii, m. 25.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 13 Eliz. pt. xi, m. 6.

<sup>18</sup> Close, 14 Eliz. pt. xlix, m. 5.

<sup>19</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. Mich. 16 Eliz. m.

38; Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), clxxxiii, 49.

<sup>20</sup> Close, 26 Eliz. pt. ix, no. 9; Feet of

F. Hants, Mich. 26 & 27 Eliz.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxlii, 61.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

trustees,<sup>23</sup> who in 1607 conveyed it to John Wilmot and William Latton to the use of Charles Wilmot of Culham (co. Oxon.).<sup>24</sup> The latter was created Viscount Wilmot of Athlone on 4 June 1621,<sup>25</sup> and remained in possession<sup>26</sup> of the whole estate until 1634, in which year he sold 'the mansion or manor-house of Godsfield, and the site and demesne of the manor and all the arable land, meadow, pasture and feedings now used, occupied and enjoyed by Robert Goudge tenant,' to Dame Constance Lucy and Sir Richard Lucy, bart., respectively widow and son of Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote (co. Warw.).<sup>27</sup> This family continued to hold the property generally called the manor of Godsfield until about 1747, when it was sold by Sir Berkeley Lucy, bart., the last male heir of his family.<sup>28</sup> It is uncertain who purchased it, but shortly afterwards it came into the possession of George Rodney Brydges, who was descended from a younger branch of the family of Sir Giles Bruges.<sup>29</sup> In 1751 he was found drowned in the canal of his garden at Avington, in the seventy-second year of his age; as he left no issue, the greater part of his estates reverted to the Chandos branch of the family, but he devised his property of Godsfield to George Brydges Rodney, afterwards the great Admiral Rodney, who had been brought up by him.<sup>30</sup>

In 1845 Godsfield was sold to John Houghton of Armsworth House, father of the present owner,<sup>31</sup> Mr. Thomas A. Houghton.

At some distance to the west of the CHURCH house is the site of the preceptory of the Hospitallers known as Godsfield, of 12th-century foundation. A chapel with living-rooms at the west still stands here, in very good preservation except for the loss of the glazing of the windows, and carefully protected by its present owner.

GODSFIELD CHAPEL

FIRST FLOOR PLAN

GROUND PLAN

LUCY, of Charlecote. Gules crusilly argent with three lucas argent.

Its arrangements may be seen on the annexed plan. It is all of one date, about 1360-70, built of flint walling with large ashlar dressings, having the chapel, 26 ft. by 13 ft. to the east, and the living-rooms to the west. The east window of the chapel is blocked, but was evidently of three lights, and there are three single cinquefoiled windows on the south, retaining their iron stanchions. In the north wall near the east end is a small opening splayed outward, evidently to give a view of the altar from some building adjoining the chapel on the north, all traces of which have disappeared, and the entrance to the chapel is by a plain pointed doorway at the north-west. Three couples of the original roof remain at the west end, the rest of the roof being modern, as is the wooden floor, which is raised above the level of the old. The position of the altar is marked, and to the north of it is a corbel for an image.

The lower living-room is entered from the north-east, and has a fireplace in its west wall, with a square-headed window close to it on the south, and another in the south wall. On the north side is a projecting block containing a stone stair to the upper room, and beneath the stair a small barrel-vaulted chamber with a window in its north wall, and entered from the living-room; it doubtless served as a store-room. The upper room has a fireplace with an arched head in the east wall, and close to it on the south a small opening commanding a view of the chapel. In the south wall is a cinquefoiled window, and in the north-west angle a garderobe, close to the door from the stairhead. A recess at the stairhead, corbelled over above, may have contained a press or chest, and the western gable is crowned by an embattled chimney shaft. The wooden joists carrying the floor of the upper chamber are all ancient but one.

Close to the chapel on the north is a modern farmhouse, and to the north-west the broken lines of the ground suggest the existence of remains of ruined buildings beneath the surface.

In a 16th-century survey<sup>32</sup> of Godsfield the 'faire chappell' was described as adjoining 'a convenient dwelling house for a gentleman builded of tymbre with viij or nyne good lodging chambers . . . watered with a well of excellent good water with garden, orchard, barnes, stables and all other outhousing of all sortes sufficient.'

There was a chapel at Godsfield as early as 1338, and for its service the Hospitallers provided a chaplain at the yearly stipend of 4 marks without commons.<sup>33</sup> He would seem to have been distinct from the professed chaplain John Couffen, who was at this time in residence with the preceptor William de Multon.

<sup>23</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz. See also Close R. 39 Eliz. pt. ix, m. 9.

<sup>24</sup> Pat. 5 Jas. I, pt. iii, no. 23.

<sup>25</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, viii, 160.

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Jas. I; Recov. R. Mich. 9 Chas. I, rot. 22.

<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 10 Chas. I; Close, 10 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 1.

<sup>28</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 5 Will. and Mary, rot. 97; and Mich. 21 Geo. II, rot. 348.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid. Trin. 18 Geo. III, rot. 275.

<sup>30</sup> Burke, Dormant and Extinct Peerage, 83; Collins, Peerage, vii, 560.

<sup>31</sup> Hants N. and Q. vii, 111.

<sup>32</sup> Rentals and Surv. (P.R.O.), portf. 30, no. 33.

<sup>33</sup> Knights Hospitallers in Engl. (Camd. Soc. lxxv), 23.

GODSFIELD CHAPEL FROM THE SOUTH-WEST

ITCHEN ABBAS

Iceene (xi cent.) ; Ichene (xiii cent.) ; Ichyn, Ichin Abbas (xv cent.).

The parish of Itchen Abbas is situated 6½ miles from London, 3½ miles west of Alresford, and 4 miles from Winchester. It is bounded on the south by the River Itchen. The village stretches from west to east along the north bank of the river, and is on low ground gradually rising to over 400 ft. above the ordnance datum towards the north. The manor farm is situated at the west end of the village. The Mid-Hants line of the London and South Western Railway crosses the parish from west to east and has a station near the village. The principal landowners are Lord Ashburton and Sir John Courtown Edward Shelley, bart., J.P., of Avington Park, who is the lord of the manor.

There are several old chalk-pits in the parish, especially in the north. Duthy records the discovery of two curious chalk coffins containing skeletons.<sup>1</sup> On the high ground north-west of the railway station is the site of a Roman villa. This was opened up, but the site was covered again, and no details of the find were preserved beyond the fact that a pavement was discovered.<sup>2</sup>

The soil is loam and chalk, the subsoil chalk. Turnips and most kinds of grain grow well. The parish covers an area of 1,951 acres, 8 of which are covered by water. About 1,200 acres are occupied by arable land, about 500 by permanent grass and 200 by woods and plantations; <sup>3</sup> common lands in the parish were inclosed by 1811.<sup>4</sup>

From the Domesday Survey it appears MANOR that the manor of ITCHEN ABBAS was in the time of Edward the Confessor held by the abbey of St. Mary, Winchester. It was subsequently granted to Hugh the son of Baldri, but was restored to the abbey by William I in consequence of a suit made by the abbess.<sup>5</sup> In 1205 a lease of the manor was granted to Emma de Stanton,<sup>6</sup> and was confirmed by the king.<sup>7</sup> At the expiration of this lease the manor reverted to the abbess and convent and remained in their possession till the Dissolution.<sup>8</sup> In an inquisition taken in 1384<sup>9</sup> on the death of Alice de le Mare, Abbess of St. Mary, Winchester, the manor of Itchen Abbas is mentioned as being held by the abbey of the king in chief in free alms as of the ancient foundation. The manor was then valued at £10 yearly beyond reprises.<sup>10</sup>

After the dissolution of the abbey the manor was granted in 1539 to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John,<sup>11</sup> who was afterwards created Marquess of Winchester. The manor remained in the hands of the Marquesses of Winchester and their descendants<sup>12</sup> until

1820, in which year William Paulet, second Lord Bolton,<sup>13</sup> sold it to Richard Plantagenet, second Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.<sup>14</sup>

On account of the declining fortunes of the family of the Dukes of Buckingham, the manors of Itchen Stoke and Avington were sold in 1848 and passed to John Shelley of Avington House.<sup>15</sup> Since that date the history of Itchen Abbas Manor is identical with that of Avington (q.v.), the present owner being Sir John Courtown Edward Shelley, bart.

There was a water-mill within the manor at the time of the Domesday Survey, when it was valued at 25s., now represented probably by a mill on the Itchen.<sup>16</sup>

The church of ST. JOHN, standing CHURCH on low ground on the north bank of the River Itchen, consists of chancel 16 ft. by 12 ft. 4 in., nave 44 ft. 3 in. by 18 ft. 6 in., north and south transepts each 15 ft. 7 in. by 14 ft., and small porch at the east of the north transept.

The whole church was rebuilt in 1867 in 12th-century style in flint and Bath stone, the old chancel arch being re-used and some stones of the north doorway.

The roofs are covered with red tiles and on the west gable there is a small bell-cot containing three small bells, dating from the rebuilding of the church.

Internally the walls of the church are plastered, with single round-headed windows in the nave, transepts and chancel and a double-light east window. The nave floor is paved with coloured tiles about 6 in. square, and the chancel with large squares of black and white marble. The chancel arch is semicircular with a heavy roll and a square inner order and a label, with a double line of round billet ornament. The outer order has jamb-shafts with capitals and bases of early 12th-century character; the north capital has a plain leaf pattern and the south one is cushion-shaped. The width of the arch is 7 ft. 5 in. and the height to the springing from the nave floor 6 ft. 8 in.

The north-east doorway is of very similar detail to the chancel arch but retains very little old stonework: it is evident that the church of which they formed part was built early in the 12th century, probably between 1110 and 1120.

The font is of a poor design with a shallow bowl

SHELLEY, baronet.
Sable a fesse engrailed between three shells or.

<sup>1</sup> Duthy, Sketches of Hants, 232.

<sup>2</sup> Ex inform. Rev. William L. W. Eyre, rector of Swarraton.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> Stat. 52 Geo. III, cap. 133.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 496.

<sup>6</sup> Cal. Rot. Chart. (Rec. Com.), 155.

<sup>7</sup> Rot. de Oblat. et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 295.

<sup>8</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>9</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 Ric. II, no. 56.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid.

<sup>11</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906 (1).

<sup>12</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclviii, 102.

<sup>13</sup> Charles sixth Marquess of Winchester was created Duke of Bolton on 9 Apr. 1689. On the death of Harry sixth Duke of Bolton the greatest part of his estates passed in accordance with a previous settlement to Jean Mary only daughter of Charles fifth Duke of Bolton

(vide Basing). Her husband Thomas Orde assumed by sign-manual the additional surname and arms of Powlett and was elevated to the peerage as Lord Bolton of Bolton Castle (co. Yorks.) on 20 Oct. 1797. He was succeeded in 1807 by his elder son William second Lord Bolton (Burke, Peerage).

<sup>14</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 7 & 8 Geo. IV.

<sup>15</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 308.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. i, 496.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

on a tall stem, of early 19th-century date, and in the churchyard is a disused modern Norman font.

The church is at the west side of the churchyard, which is inclosed by a flint wall, and stands but little higher than the bank of the river which runs close by. There is a fine yew tree at the east boundary of the churchyard.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten and flagon of 1861, presented at the consecration of the new church in 1862. A set of pewter vessels which cannot be traced was used in the church up to that time. There is also a Sheffield plated alms dish.

The first three books of registers contain :—(1) baptisms, 1586 to 1701; marriages, 1586 to 1699; burials, 1586 to 1600. (2) marriages, 1754 to 1812. (3) baptisms, 1702 to 1810; marriages, 1708 to 1754; burials, 1709 to 1812.

The earliest known mention of the church of Itchen Abbas occurs in 1280, when John of Lexford, parson of Itchen, made suit for a virgate of land which the Abbess of St. Mary of Winchester gave to this church.<sup>17</sup> The living, which was under the patronage of the abbess and convent, was a rectory, and to it was attached a prebendal stall in the abbey.

At the Dissolution the advowson, together with the manor, was given to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John.<sup>18</sup> Although it appears that the advowson did not continue without interruption in the possession of his descendants,<sup>19</sup> we find that family again presenting to the living in the episcopacy of Stephen Gardiner (1531–55),<sup>20</sup> and William fifth Marquess of Winchester died seized of it in 1630.<sup>21</sup> From the evidence of the institution books it appears to have continued in the possession of the Dukes of Bolton<sup>22</sup> and their successors the Lords Bolton until 1820.<sup>23</sup>

Duthy states that the advowson of the church was given by Charles third Duke of Bolton as a provision for one of his children by Lavinia Fenton, afterwards Duchess of Bolton, and that the advowson was sold by her descendants to the Rev. Robert Wright. This statement is borne out by the fact that the Rev. Robert Wright was dealing with the advowson by fine in 1825<sup>24</sup> and again in 1830.<sup>25</sup>

In 1870 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners authorized the sale of property formerly belonging to the prebend of Itchen Abbas, and the living is now a rectory<sup>26</sup> in the gift of the rector, the Rev. J. Mugliston.<sup>27</sup>

The Parliamentary Returns of CHARITIES 1786 mention that Jane Clark by will, 1696, gave to the poor of this parish £10, now represented by £10 11s. 2d. consols.

In 1874 the Rev. William Webb Spicer by deed settled a sum of money, now represented by £21 6s. 3d. consols, with the official trustees, the dividends to be distributed among the poor. These two charities are administered together by the churchwardens, the dividends of 15s. 8d. a year being from time to time applied in bread.

In 1823 Nathaniel Bailey by will, dated 5 June proved in the P.C.C., left £10 a year to be applied in employing a schoolmistress for teaching six poor boys and six poor girls. The trust fund consists of £344 10s. consols, with the official trustees, producing yearly £8 12s., which is paid to the Elementary School.

ITCHEN STOKE

Ytinstoce (x cent.); Stocche (xi cent.); Ichenstok, Echenstok (xiii cent.).

The parish of Itchen Stoke lies partly in and along the valley of the River Itchen, which at Kingsworthy turns nearly at right angles and runs south after a westerly course of some 5 miles or more. The parish also runs in a northerly direction up to Itchen Common, the ground rising rather sharply. The whole parish both low and high is well wooded, and along the river banks is very picturesque. The village, a small one, lies near the river, which here widens considerably and is crossed by a ford. It contains a number of pretty brick and half-timber cottages, many of which are thatched. None, however, present any special features of interest or are apparently of an earlier date than the 17th century. The present church stands on the north side of the road, and the churchyard is fringed with trees and contains one or two Scotch firs. The site of the old church is some 200 yds. south of the present church on the banks of the river, the old churchyard remaining.

The hamlet of Abbotstone, which was formerly an important parish, lies about 1½ miles north-east of Itchen Stoke, and at a considerably higher level, the ground rising in some places to a height of 468 ft. above the ordnance datum. The greater part of Abbotstone is thickly wooded, and there are several old gravel-pits.

Pavey, writing in 1719, describes<sup>1</sup> the then existing house at Abbotstone as 'a large noble brick house edged with stone built by the Duke of Bolton for a convenient hawking seat of which spot he was a great admirer, in allusion whereof he caused two vast large hawkes to be fix'd on the top of two banquetting houses just before the entrance into the house.' He further states that it was 'built after the Italian manner opening a vista from one end of the house

<sup>17</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 763.

<sup>18</sup> Egerton MSS. 2034, fol. 79, 128; 2033, fol. 18.

<sup>19</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906 (1). In spite of the grant it appears that five years later the advowson was granted to Nicholas Bacon with licence to alienate it to Lord Chancellor Wriothesley, and it is included among the list of the possessions given in the inquisition taken after the death of Henry third Earl of Southampton and grandson of the above (Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvii; L. and P. Hen. VIII, xix [1], g. 116).

<sup>20</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 166; W. and L. Inq. p.m. lxxi, 120.

<sup>21</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclviii, 102.

<sup>22</sup> The Marquess of Winchester was created Duke of Bolton in 1689. (See n. 13.)

<sup>23</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.); Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 59 Geo. III.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. Hil. 5 & 6 Geo. IV.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. East. 11 Geo. IV; Duthy, Sketches of Hants, 233.

<sup>26</sup> Lond. Gaz. 1 Apr. 1870, p. 1997.

<sup>27</sup> Clergy List (1907).

<sup>1</sup> B.M. Add. MS. 14296, fol. 62.

to the other. The wings are rather of the largest, darkening the body too much . . . there are above 100 rooms in the house in one of which adorned with curious fretwork the Duke of Bolton had the honour to entertain Queen Anne; in the ceilings are figured several keys in memory of his being Lord Chamberlain (July 1715–April 1717) when he built it.<sup>1a</sup> This house, however, was left unfinished, and was finally supplanted by Hackwood as the chief seat of the family.

A knoll on the south-east of the site of the old house is shown as the place where the church of Abbotstone formerly stood. The date at which the church and house were destroyed seems to be unknown.<sup>2</sup>

At Ibsden, near a farm-house now just outside the parish, Oliver Cromwell is said on very questionable authority to have encamped, and certainly a place in Abbotstone is now called Oliver's Battery, but this is no rare thing in Hampshire.<sup>3</sup>

In Abbotstone there exists at the present time an oval-shaped earthwork, with the outlines complete, but the ditches much filled up and the banks levelled.<sup>4</sup> It stands on the Downs at a height of 445 ft. above the ordnance datum. Some tumuli also exist.

Itchen Stoke, including Abbotstone, covers an area of 2,717 acres, of which about 1,144 acres are arable land, 475 acres permanent grass and 280 woods and plantations.<sup>5</sup> Under Itchen Stoke the place-names Ryplinges and Southcotes occur in the 16th century.<sup>6</sup>

Mention of ITCHEN STOKE occurs MANORS in 960, when King Edgar granted to his kinsman Brihtelm, Bishop of Winchester, land in 'Ytinstoce' on the River Itchen.<sup>7</sup> This land was to be held by Brihtelm for life, and after his death was to revert to the Old Minster of St. Peter,<sup>8</sup> Winchester, afterwards called the Priory of St. Swithun.

In the Domesday Survey mention of the manor occurs under the name of 'Stoche,' and it is stated that 'Stoche' was then held and always had been by the abbey of Romsey.<sup>9</sup> It may be inferred from this that the manor had come into the hands of the latter abbey before the time of Edward the Confessor. It was then assessed at 8 hides, and in the time of William I at 6 hides.<sup>10</sup> There is ample evidence that the manor continued in the hands of the abbey of Romsey until 1539.<sup>11</sup>

In a report as to the state of the abbey sent to Sir Thomas Seymour in 1538 the annual value of the manor of Itchen Stoke is given as £28 9s. 0½d.<sup>12</sup> In 1539 the manor was granted to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John, who was created Marquess of Winchester in 1551.<sup>13</sup> The manor remained in the hands of successive Marquesses of Winchester until the Commonwealth.<sup>14</sup>

In 1650 a large part of the property of the fifth Marquess of Winchester fell into the hands of the Parliamentarians, and it is recorded that in that year the manor of Itchen Stoke was bought for Walter Strickland, afterwards a member of Cromwell's House of Lords, and four others.<sup>15</sup>

The fifth marquess lived, however, to receive back his property at the Restoration, and was succeeded by his son who was created Duke of Bolton in 1689.<sup>16</sup> The manor remained a part of the property of the Dukes of Bolton and their successors<sup>17</sup> until about 1818, when it was sold to Alexander Baring, who was created Lord Ashburton in 1835.

The later history of Itchen Stoke is given under Northington,<sup>18</sup> the present owner being Francis Denzil Edward Baring fifth Lord Ashburton. At the time of the Domesday Survey there was a mill within the manor worth 22s. 6d. and a mill still exists.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Hugh de Port held ABBOTSTONE<sup>19</sup> (Abedestune, xi cent.; Abbotson, Abbodeston, xiii cent.; Abbodestone, xiv cent.; Alberston, Abbotston, xvi cent.). It was then assessed at 9 hides. It is remarkable that for over 700 years, dating from the Domesday Survey, Abbotstone remained in the hands of a descendant of the same Hugh de Port, not passing from that family until about 1818, in which year it was sold by William second Lord Bolton.<sup>20</sup>

In 1240 it was held by Robert St. John,<sup>21</sup> and passed from him to his son John, who in 1285 granted it, probably in settlement on mortgage, to Thomas Paynel and his issue at a rent of a sparrow hawk.<sup>22</sup> This grant was confirmed to Thomas in 1311.<sup>23</sup> John de St. John is returned in 1316 as the owner of Abbotstone.<sup>24</sup> In 1317 John obtained licence to lease the manor for twelve years to John Beauchamp of Somerset,<sup>25</sup> but six years later John granted it to William de St. John and Eleanor his wife in fee-tail, with contingent remainder to himself and his heirs.<sup>26</sup> William and Eleanor apparently died without issue, or the grant may have been for the purpose of a mortgage, for the manor was among the possessions of which Edmund de St. John, grandson of John, died seised in 1347.<sup>27</sup>

In 1361, on the death of Edmund's widow Elizabeth, to whom the manor had been assigned in dower, Abbotstone fell to Isabel wife of Sir Luke de Poynings, sole surviving sister of Edmund de St. John.<sup>28</sup> On her death in 1393<sup>29</sup> the manor passed to her son Sir Thomas de Poynings, who died seised of it in 1429, when it was divided among his three granddaughters, Joan, Alice and Constance, the last named of whom married Sir John Paulet.<sup>30</sup> John Paulet the son and heir of Sir John Paulet and Constance bought the other two-thirds of the manor from the descendants of

<sup>1a</sup> This is not accurate: the key and wreath are a Paulet badge and occur on a 15th-century seal of the family.

<sup>2</sup> Hants N. and Q. i, 1. <sup>3</sup> Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. i, 23.

<sup>5</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>6</sup> Exch. Mins. Accts. Hants, 30 & 31 Hen. VIII, no. 135.

<sup>7</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. iii, 273.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 474.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid.

<sup>11</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 30, no. 10; Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>12</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiii (2), 1115.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. xiv, g. 906 (1).

<sup>14</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 33, no. 51; Com. Pleas Recov. R. 43 Eliz. m. 15; Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclviii, 102.

<sup>15</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, iv, 2533.

<sup>16</sup> Burke, Peerage.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 26 Geo. II.

<sup>18</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 395.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. i, 462.

<sup>20</sup> For the descent of the Dukes of Bolton, a pedigree of the Ports, St. Johns and Paulets, see under Basing, Itchen Abbas, &c.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 25 Hen. III.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. Trin. 13 Edw. I.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. Mich. 5 Edw. II.

<sup>24</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>25</sup> Cal. Pat. 1313–17, p. 642.

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 16 Edw. II.

<sup>27</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 57.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid. 36 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 46.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid. 17 Ric. II, no. 45.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. 7 Hen. VI, no. 69; 17 Hen. VI, no. 22; 21 Hen. VI, no. 22; 35 Hen. VI, no. 4. See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 9.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Joan and Alice,<sup>31</sup> and died seised of the whole in 1492,<sup>32</sup> leaving a son John.

On the death of this John Abbotstone passed to his son, created Marquess of Winchester in 1551, and from this date followed the same descent as the manor of Itchen Stoke (q.v.).

There was a mill in Abbotstone at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>33</sup> and one still exists there on the Candover stream. Mention of a fishery occurs in several records.<sup>34</sup>

The first mention of BROME Manor (Brome, xv cent.; Brome Court, Brome Place, xvii cent.) occurs in 1457, when it is included among the possessions of Richard Holt, who died in that year.<sup>35</sup> It was then said to be held of the Prior of Southwick, for services not known, but this seems to be an error, for in 1495<sup>36</sup> the overlord is given as the Prior of St. Swithun, Winchester.<sup>37</sup>

Richard Holt left the manor to his wife Joan for life, and after her death to his daughters Christine and Elizabeth.<sup>38</sup> Christine died before her mother, leaving a daughter Lora, and on the death of Joan in 1495 the manor was divided between Elizabeth the wife of John Pound and Lora who had married the seventh Earl of Ormonde.<sup>39</sup>

In 1547 William Unwyn died seised of the manor of Brome, and a house and two water-mills in the parish of Itchen Stoke, the reversion of which had been settled on him after the death of his maternal uncle William Frost and Juliana his wife.<sup>40</sup>

William Unwyn was succeeded by his nephew John, who died in 1619,<sup>41</sup> leaving Brome Manor to his son and heir Simon Unwyn,<sup>42</sup> who died in 1625. In 1640 John Unwyn dealt by recovery with a messuage called Bromehouse and a mill called Brome Place Mill in Itchen Stoke,<sup>43</sup> but some time afterwards, being a Royalist, his lands were forfeited to the Commonwealth,<sup>44</sup> and in 1654 were sold to Edward Keats of Horton (co. Wilts.)<sup>45</sup> by the description of 'a Close of pasture ground called Broomes, containing 30 acres; a Close called Broomefield, and a water corn mill in the parish of Itchenstoke.'<sup>46</sup> The later descent of the manor cannot at present be traced.

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN consists of an apsidal chancel with a small north vestry, a moderate-sized nave and a west porch extending across the whole width of the church. The whole structure was built in 1864 and is of mid-13th-century French design. The apse is semi-octagonal in form and lit by five two-light lancets with circular tracery. The roof is vaulted in stone with moulded ribs and wall columns. Over the chancel arch externally is a bell-gable containing two modern bells. The nave is divided into four bays by wall columns with foliated capitals which carry the trussed rafters of the elaborately painted open timber roof. In each bay are three tall lancets on each side with moulded jambs and rear arches. Below these the wall is ornamented with a diaper in plaster. The west wall contains the only entrance, and on each side of it is wall arcading in two stages. Above this is a large traceried rose window. The west porch is a lean-to structure with a vaulted roof and extends completely across the west end of the church. The entrance to it and the west door are shafted.

The seating, fittings, pulpit, font, &c., are all quite modern. Though the materials used are not in all cases of the best, the general effect is extremely good, and an appearance of richness has been obtained with considerable skill. Though of course somewhat out of place in an English country parish the church is very well designed, especially when the date of its erection is considered.

The old church was situated a short distance to the south of the present one on the banks of the River Itchen, but was completely destroyed when the new church was built. The only thing remaining is a brass, now on the west wall of the new church, with the figure of a woman in a long simple robe with moderately full sleeves, tight at the wrist, and with turned-back linen or lawn cuffs. The dress is cut square at the throat and is caught in by a girdle with a long hanging end. A rather ample head veil is worn. Beneath is an inscription running: 'Of yo' charite pray for the soule of Johan || Batmanson late wife of master John || Batmanson Docto' of Seveff which Johan || decessed the xij day of may the yer' of o' Lord || m<sup>v</sup>c<sup>xvii</sup> on whose soule Ihu have mercy. ||'

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten of 1849, a plated chalice and flagon and two alms plates of old Sheffield plate.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms from 1719 to 1737, marriages from 1721 to 1732, and burials from 1721 to 1731. The second contains baptisms from 1736 to 1747, marriages from 1743 to 1758, and burials from 1736 to 1752. The third contains baptisms and burials from 1750 to 1780 and marriages from 1788 to 1805, all entered with a good deal of irregularity, and possibly not quite complete. A fourth book contains duplicate entries of marriages from 1764 to 1780. The fifth contains baptisms and burials from 1783 to 1792 and 1793 respectively. The sixth contains baptisms from 1806, marriages from 1807 and burials from 1808, all running to 1812.

There is no mention of a church ADVOWSONS in Itchen Stoke earlier than the end of the 13th century, at which time the advowson was stated to be in the hands of the UNWYN. Azure three fleurs de lis or with three heads of bills issuing from the chief argent.

<sup>31</sup> Constance died in 1442 seised of one-third of the manor only. Alice, who married Thomas Kyngeston, had died seised of one-third in 1439, and her trustee Thomas Batell died seised of a third in 1456. Between these dates and 1492 the two-thirds had evidently been bought by John Paulet.

<sup>32</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), viii, 74.

<sup>33</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 462.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 1 Jas. I; Hil. 7 Jas. I.

<sup>35</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Hen. VI, no. 32.

<sup>36</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 121.

<sup>37</sup> 'Broombridge,' on the Itchen, occurs as a boundary of Chilcomb Manor in the charter to the church at Winchester by Edward in 908 (Dugdale, Mon. i, 208).

<sup>38</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Hen. VI, no. 32.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), xi, 121.

<sup>40</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), iii, 30.

<sup>41</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dclxxxv, 89.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), cccxxviii, 47.

<sup>43</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. East. 16 Chas. I, m. 16.

<sup>44</sup> Cal. of Com. for Compounding, iv, 2728.

<sup>45</sup> Close, 1655, pt. xxii, no. 35. <sup>46</sup> Ibid.

SWARRATON CROSS IN THE OLD CHURCHYARD

Abess and convent of Romsey.<sup>47</sup> In 1291<sup>48</sup> the church was assessed at 15 marks and in 1318<sup>49</sup> at the same amount. In 1317 the Abbess and nuns of Romsey obtained licence to appropriate the rectory of Itchen Stoke,<sup>50</sup> and from that date until the Dissolution the advowson was held by the abbey, as a vicarage.<sup>51</sup>

The advowson was granted with the manor after the Dissolution to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John,<sup>52</sup> and has followed the descent of the manor up to the present time,<sup>53</sup> the patron being now Lord Ashburton. The living is still a vicarage, forming a benefice with the rectory of Abbotstone annexed.

The church at Abbotstone was dedicated to the honour of St. Peter. It is stated at the end of the 15th century that it was valued at 10 marks.<sup>54</sup> The advowson followed the descent of the manor<sup>55</sup> (q.v.).

The living is now annexed to that of Itchen Stoke, and there is no church at Abbotstone.

Poor's Money.—The principal CHARITIES sum of £10 given by a donor unknown is stated to have been distributed amongst the poor many years ago.

SWARRATON

Swerweton (xi cent.); Sereweton, Swarneton (xiii cent.); Sarweton, Serveton, Swareweton, Swarhtone (xiv cent.); Swarveton (xv cent.); Swerverton, Swarrouhtone, Swallowtone (xvi cent.); Swarrotton, Swarreton (xvii cent.).

The parish of Swarraton, covering an area of 755 acres, lies 57 miles from London, 9 miles north-east of Winchester, and 3½ miles north by east from Alresford station, on the Mid-Hants section of the London and South Western Railway.

The Candover branch of the River Itchen forms the western boundary of the parish. The land rises slightly from the river towards the east to a height of about 400 ft. above the ordnance datum. The Grange Park, only a part of which lies in the parish, occupies the south-eastern portion. Swarraton farmhouse is in the centre of the parish, and Spyre Bush Plantation forms the eastern boundary, separating it from Godsfield. This plantation was planted about 1830, and is said to have taken its name from a large white thorn bush<sup>1</sup> which formerly stood there, and on which a watchman used to be posted to spy upon smugglers.<sup>2</sup> 'The great ditch' lies within the northern end of Spyre Bush Plantation and is referred to in a grant of Edward the Elder in 902 concerning the boundaries of Candover.<sup>3</sup>

On the site of the old church, which stood in the meadows close to the river, and which was pulled down in 1849, a stone cross has been erected. The old rectory, which was pulled down in 1820, stood north of the churchyard, the site being now covered by water meadows.

There are 535 acres of arable land, 265 acres of permanent grass and 95 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>4</sup>

As early as the 14th century at least there was a common pasture at Swarraton known as 'le Doune.'<sup>5</sup> An Elizabethan surveyor<sup>6</sup> estimated the extent of the common cow-pasture at 60 acres and the common sheep-down at 300. The sheep-down<sup>7</sup> had in 1662 been 'lately inclosed' and divided by mutual consent among the tenants in the ratio of 6 acres to one yardland. About the rector's portion however some dispute arose. His original share was fixed at 3 acres, but he held less than half a yardland and a proposal was afterwards made that one of his 3 acres should be allotted to the repair of the parish church. To this, as certain of the tenants deposed, the rector agreed, but litigation soon followed. The Sheep's Down as a locality is now lost.<sup>8</sup>

SWARRATON, with 3 hides and MANORS 1½ virgates, was granted in 903 by Edward the Elder to the New Minster or Hyde Abbey.<sup>9</sup>

Although Swarraton is not mentioned in Domesday Book by name, it has been identified with 3 hides and 3 virgates which Hugh de Port held of Hyde Abbey as parcel of the manor of Micheldever.<sup>10</sup> This theory is supported by the fact that Robert de St. John, the descendant of Hugh de Port, is returned in the Testa de Nevill as holding half a knight's fee in Swarraton of the Abbot of Hyde,<sup>11</sup> and that Swarraton occurs in lists of the St. John knights' fees as late as 1394.<sup>12</sup> From another entry in the Testa de Nevill it is clear that at an early date the De Ports had enfeoffed the Brayboefs of the manor.<sup>13</sup> The tenant under the Brayboefs in the early part of the 12th century was Robert de Venuz or Venoiz, probably son of Geoffrey de Venuz, the king's marshal.<sup>13a</sup> He granted it by the name of the grange of Swarraton to the abbey of Waverley,<sup>14</sup> and his grant was afterwards confirmed by Richard I,

<sup>47</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 38.

<sup>48</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 211.

<sup>49</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, ii, 182.

<sup>50</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 243; Cal. Pat. 1313-17, p. 642.

<sup>51</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 79, 91, 166.

<sup>52</sup> L. & P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906 (1).

<sup>53</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 40 Eliz.; Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccccxlvi, 102; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>54</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 370.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. 243; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Edw. I; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 9; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> In the 13th and 14th-century charters we hear of 'Buggenoresthorn' and the 'Threthorns' as landmarks (Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 85, 88).

<sup>2</sup> Eyre, Hist. of Swarraton and Northington.

<sup>3</sup> Ex inform. Rev. William L. W. Eyre rector of Swarraton.

<sup>4</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>5</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 87 d., 88.

<sup>6</sup> P.R.O. Rentals and Surv. portf. 30, no. 33.

<sup>7</sup> Exch. Dep. Trin. 14 Chas. II, no. 10, Hants.

<sup>8</sup> Ex inform. Rev. William L. W. Eyre, rector of Swarraton.

<sup>9</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii, 145, no. 336; Harl. MS. 1761, fol. 47.

<sup>10</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 418, 470.

<sup>11</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 239.

<sup>12</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17.

<sup>13</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232. See also Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. I, file 387, no. 6.

<sup>13a</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, ii, 518, and iii, 370.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Pat. 1340-3, p. 294; Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Stephen, John and Edward II.<sup>15</sup> In 1284 the abbey of Waverley was stated to be holding half a knight's fee in Swarraton in free alms of William de Brayboef,<sup>16</sup> and it continued in the possession of the abbey until the Dissolution.<sup>17</sup>

In 1536 Henry VIII granted the manor to Sir William Fitzwilliam,<sup>18</sup> who was created Earl of Southampton in 1537.

In 1538 the earl settled it in fee-tail upon himself and his wife Mabel, with contingent remainder to his half-brother Sir Anthony Browne, but died without issue four years later.<sup>19</sup> Sir Anthony Browne died in 1548, and as Mabel, widow of the earl, was still living, the reversion of the manor went to his son Anthony, who was created Viscount Montagu in 1554.<sup>20</sup> In 1556 Anthony Browne Viscount Montagu, in whose possession the manor had come on the death of Mabel in 1550, obtained licence to convey Swarraton in trust to William Denton and Henry Hughes, and eleven years afterwards he sold it to Thomas Cobb.<sup>21</sup> Michael Cobb, son and heir of Thomas, died seised of the Grange Manor and the lordship of Swarraton in 1598, and was succeeded by his son Thomas, who died seised in 1638.<sup>22</sup> The estate went to his eldest son Michael, who shortly afterwards joined with his brother Richard in selling the property to Sir Henry Paulet, third son of William fourth Marquess of Winchester.<sup>23</sup>

In 1662 Sir Henry Paulet sold the Grange Manor and lordship of Swarraton to Robert Henley, who in the following year was knighted.<sup>24</sup> Soon afterwards Sir Robert Henley purchased Northington Grange, and added it to his property at Swarraton. The later history of The Grange, as the whole estate is now called, has been given under Northington,<sup>25</sup> the present owner being Francis Denzil Edward Baring fifth Lord Ashburton.

By a grant dated 1228 King Henry III conveyed to Ingram of St. Martin land which Hugh his brother had held in SWARRATON, to hold during the king's pleasure.<sup>26</sup> It seems probable that this land was the same as the manor of Swarraton, which one Hugh of St. Martin granted at a later date to the Knights Hospitallers, and it became merged in their manor of Godsfield<sup>27</sup> (q.v.). From this time we find repeated mention of the manor of Godsfield and Swarraton, and the lands seem to have descended as one manor for several centuries.<sup>28</sup>

A separation of the lands seems to have taken place in 1634, when the Godsfield portion was sold to the family of Lucy<sup>29</sup> (q.v. supra) and the Swarraton portion was conveyed to Edward Wilmot of Wield.<sup>29a</sup> There is evidence that in 1671 the latter estate, which was still sometimes called the 'manor of Godsfield and Swarraton,' was held by Edward Hughes and Joan his wife, who sold it to George Pike.<sup>30</sup>

In 1677 George Pike and Anne his wife sold this portion to Sir Robert Henley,<sup>31</sup> who added it to his other lands in Swarraton.

There is no mention of a church ADVOWSON in Swarraton until the end of the 13th century.<sup>32</sup> The advowson belonged to the Priors of the Hospital of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem in England, and followed the descent of their manor of Godsfield and Swarraton<sup>33</sup> until 1634,<sup>34</sup> in which year Charles Viscount Wilmot made a separation of his property, selling the Godsfield portion to the Lucy family and conveying the Swarraton portion, together with the advowson, to Edward Wilmot, apparently his cousin.<sup>35</sup> From this date the advowson went with this property in Swarraton until 1677, in which year it was purchased by Sir Robert Henley from George Pike and Anne his wife.<sup>36</sup>

The living has from this time continued to follow the descent of Swarraton Grange (q.v.) and is at the present day a rectory, with the chapel of Northington annexed, in the gift of Lord Ashburton.

The joint net income is £200 with a residence and 10 acres of glebe land.

The church is in Northington parish, there having been no church in Swarraton since the old one was pulled down in 1849. The key of Old Swarraton Church is preserved in Northington Church (q.v.).

The present rectory building, part of which consists of a thatched cottage of much earlier date, together with the parish rooms, is in Swarraton parish.

In 1879 George Harding by will CHARITIES proved at London 1 February bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens of Swarraton and Northington the sum of £200, the income to be applied yearly for ever in bread for the poor on the anniversary of the donor's burial day (28 December 1878).

The trust fund now consists of £205 7s. 10d. consols, producing yearly £5 2s. 8d., which is duly applied.

<sup>15</sup> Cal. of Pat. 1340-3, p. 294. In the Testa de Nevill Walter Mantel, who was admitted to a corrody in the abbey at the mandate of King Edward II, is mentioned as the holder and not the Abbot of Waverley (Testa de Nevill [Rec. Com.], 232; Pat. 15 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 6).

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. I, file 38, no. 6.

<sup>17</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 348.

<sup>18</sup> Pat. 28 Hen. VIII, pt. ii, m. 9, 10.

<sup>19</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxx, 56.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. lxxxix, 132; Burke, Extinct Peerage, 83.

<sup>21</sup> Pat. 3 & 4 Phil. and Mary, pt. ii, m. 20; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 3 & 4 Phil. and Mary. See also L.T.R. Memo. R. East. 4 Eliz. rot. 32.

<sup>22</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. xciii, 110.

<sup>23</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 14 Chas. I.

<sup>24</sup> Close, 14 Chas. II, pt. iii, no. 10.

See Eyre, Hist. of Swarraton and Northington, 23.

<sup>25</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 395.

<sup>26</sup> Close, 12 Hen. III, m. 2.

<sup>27</sup> Harl. MS. 6603, fol. 73. This grant was confirmed by Roger de Mortimer (ibid.).

<sup>28</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306, 329, 356; Pat. 3 Edw. VI, pt. v, m. 32; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), clxxxiii, 49; cxlii, 61; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz.; Recov. R. Mich. 9 Chas. I, rot. 22.

<sup>29</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 10 Chas. I; Close, Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 1.

<sup>29a</sup> See V.C.H. Hants, iii, 346. This Edward Wilmot was possibly a son of John (ob. 1614), fifth son of Edward Wilmot of Witney. This John and his brother Arthur (the sixth son, who became baronet in 1621) both settled in Hampshire at Wield (The Ancestor, xi, 1-3). Arthur died s.p. legit. in 1628-9, leaving only a natural daughter, and as his paternity is thus impossible it seems not unreasonable to conclude that Edward was the son of John. Since (according to G.E.C. Baronetage, i, 229) Charles first Viscount Wilmot of Athlone was son of Edward an elder brother of Arthur Wilmot, bart., it would seem that he and the above-mentioned Edward Wilmot of Wield were cousins.

<sup>30</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 12 & 13 Chas. I.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. Mich. 29 Chas. II.

<sup>32</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 211.

<sup>33</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 107; 2032, fol. 73; 2033, fol. 35, 110; 2034, fol. 173; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 184, 243; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>34</sup> Close, 10 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 1.

<sup>35</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 29 Chas. II.

SWARRATON CHURCH PULLED DOWN IN 1849
(From an old painting at Swarraton Rectory)

SWARRATON RECTORY

THE HUNDRED OF OVERTON

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

ASHE
BRADLEY

DEANE
LAVERSTOKE

OVERTON
TADLEY NORTH WALTHAM

The above list represents the extent of the hundred of Overton at the time of the Population Returns of 1831. The parish of Steventon was transferred from Basingstoke Hundred before 1841, and at the same time the parishes of Bradley and North Waltham were moved to the hundreds of Bermondspit and Holdshot respectively.<sup>1</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred included Ashe, Bradley, Laverstoke, Tadley and North Waltham and the greater part of the parish of Overton.<sup>2</sup> Deane was then reckoned in Chuteley Hundred,<sup>3</sup> while Quidhampton, a tithing in the parish of Overton, appears as 'Polem'tune' under the heading of Droxford Hundred.<sup>4</sup> The land comprising the hundred was assessed in the time of Edward the Confessor at 62½ hides, and at the time of the Survey at about 53½ hides. By 1316 the hundred had practically assumed its modern proportions,<sup>5</sup> and from this time the hundred court was usually attended by tithingmen from the tithings of Ashe, Bradley, Deane, Laverstoke, Tadley, North Waltham, Overton, Polhampton, Quidhampton, Northington and Southington.<sup>6</sup> An inquiry was held at Whitchurch in 1598 to ascertain whether there was such a tithing as Hanyglode in the hundred of Overton—an inquiry which was rendered necessary by the custom of the collectors of fifteenths of demanding a sum of 17*s.* 4*d.* 'by the name of Haninglod' from William Cleer and Philip a Lee, inhabitants of the parish of Burghclere, and by the oaths of twenty-four jurors it was ascertained that there was no such tithing either in the hundred of Overton or elsewhere within the county.<sup>7</sup>

The hundred has followed the same descent as the manor of Overton (q.v.).

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Pop. Ret. 1831-41.

<sup>2</sup> The parishes are not all mentioned by name, the only entries under Overton Hundred being 'Ovretune' (V.C.H. Hants, i, 461*a*), 'Lavrochestoche' (ibid. 472*a*), 'Esse' (ibid. 491*a*) and 'Polemetune' (ibid. 491*b*), but, as is shown under the parishes, 'Ovretune' probably included, beside the greater part of the modern parish of Overton, the parishes of Bradley, Tadley and North Waltham. 'Lavrochestoche' is the modern Laverstoke, 'Esse' the modern Ashe, while 'Polemetune' represents Polhampton in the parish of Overton.

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491*b*.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 466*a*.

<sup>5</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>6</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. passim. Northington and Southington are both tithings in the parish of Overton.

<sup>7</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 40 Eliz. no. 2055.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

ASHE

Esse (xi cent.); Aisse (xii cent.); Asshe, Aysshe (xiii cent.); Esshemanners, Aisshe (xiv cent.); Ash (xvi cent.).

The parish of Ashe, stretching from Kingsdown in the north to Popham Beacons in the south, at each end reaches an altitude of 500 ft. above the ordnance datum, the middle of the parish being 200 ft. lower. It is situated in an undulating and well-wooded country  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles west of Basingstoke and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles east from Overton. From each end of the parish extensive views are to be had over Danebury, Quarley and Tangley and the Highclere Hills. The main road from London to Exeter runs through the parish, which is also crossed by the London and South Western Railway in two places. Kingsdown in the extreme north, formerly part of the manor of Wolverton, was purchased by Mr. Joseph Portal from Mr. George Garnyer in 1763.<sup>1</sup> Ashe Warren Farm, which was built about 1790, was sold with Kingsdown in 1885 to Mr. Henry Cripps by Col. Robert Portal, and sold again to the Hon. Henry Augustus Stanhope, J.P., in 1887.<sup>2</sup> The farm-house now called Ashe Warren House was remodelled and added to by Mr. Stanhope in 1887 for his own residence, and was sold by him in March 1906 to the present owner, Mr. Arthur Frederick Clifford.<sup>3</sup> North of the main road is the old rectory, now called Ashe House, which was sold by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in 1907<sup>4</sup> to Admiral the Hon. Walter G. Stopford, R.N., who now occupies it. The house dates from the reign of James I, and Jane Austen often stayed there as a guest of the Lefroys. It was improved by Mr. M. G. Thoyts when he bought the advowson. Further north is the church of the Holy Trinity and St. Andrew with the new rectory recently built from the proceeds of the sale of the old rectory<sup>4a</sup> by the rector, the Rev. Leighton Brooke Barnett, B.A. The schools were erected in 1872-3 and enlarged in 1888. Near the rectory is the source of the River Test, which flows west to Overton. Ashe Park, the seat of Mr. Percy Mortimer, lies to the south of the London road and is approached from it by a long avenue. The parklands cover an area of 50 acres and are planted with oak, ash and elm.

South Litchfield, a hamlet lying about  $2\frac{1}{4}$  miles south of the village, is the property of Mr. Robert Mills. Pilgrim's Copse and Beggar's Clump suggest the existence of an early thoroughfare. At the close of 1883 it was proposed to build a mission-room here, and the then owner, Mr. Alexander Cunningham, gave his consent. When, however, it was put up it was discovered that it had been built upon land which had been bought by the London and South Western Railway for a cutting. The cutting was thereupon altered to a tunnel, and the railway company granted a lease of the land at a rent of 1s. a year.<sup>5</sup>

The soil is light, the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. In this parish there are  $1,247\frac{1}{2}$  acres of arable land,  $684\frac{1}{2}$  acres of permanent grass and  $302\frac{1}{2}$  acres of woods and plantations.<sup>6</sup> The following place-names occur in documents: Ashwood<sup>7</sup> (xvii cent.); Levers and Crooks Freehold<sup>8</sup> (xviii cent.).

The manor of ASHE, which had MANOR been held of Earl Harold by Ælwacre, at the time of the Domesday Survey was held directly of the king by Eudo the son of Hubert de Ryes.<sup>9</sup> One Richard held it in 1167.<sup>10</sup> Later it passed to the great Hubert de Burgh afterwards Earl of Kent, no doubt by the grant of King John. The exact date of the grant is uncertain, but in 1201 Hubert was seised of four and a quarter knights' fees in Hampshire,<sup>11</sup> and it seems likely that the manor of Ashe was included in these. On the death of Hubert in 1243 Ashe passed to his son John de Burgh the elder,<sup>12</sup> who held it for a considerable period. During Simon de Montfort's rebellion, however, for some reason it was taken into the sheriff's hands, and while in his care it was seized and plundered, not being restored to John de Burgh until 1265, in which year the king ordered the sheriff to reinstate him, as well as to give him the full value of all goods and chattels which had been taken from the manor.<sup>13</sup> From this date the de Burghs had little or no interest in the manor. Thus in an assize roll of 1280 it is stated that John de Manners, who had formerly held the manor of John de Burgh, then held it of the king in chief by the service of the fourth part of one knight's fee.<sup>14</sup> On the other hand in 1354 the manor was said to be held of the Countess of Kent, as of her honour of Camel by the service of the fourth part of a knight's fee,<sup>15</sup> showing that the former connexion of Hubert de Burgh Earl of Kent, lord of the manor of Camel Regis,<sup>16</sup> with Ashe was still remembered. However, seven years later it was returned as held of Princess Isabel as of her manor of Hampstead Marshall, as of the fee of the Earl Marshal,<sup>17</sup> while in the 15th century the Bishop of Winchester, the owner of the neighbouring liberty of Overton, was said to be the overlord.<sup>18</sup>

The exact date of the subinfeudation of the manor is uncertain. If Nutshelt still formed part of Ashe at the time of Robert de Manners' grant to Waverley Abbey (q.v. infra) he must already have been holding the whole manor as a tenant in the first half of the 12th century.<sup>19</sup> This was not likely, however, for <sup>1</sup> F. W. Thoyts, Hist. of Esse or Ashe, 9.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Ex inform. Mr. A. F. Clifford.

<sup>4</sup> Ex inform. Admiral the Hon. Walter G. Stopford, R.N.

<sup>4a</sup> The balance was invested for the increase of the living (ex inform. Mr. J. H. Cope).

<sup>5</sup> F. W. Thoyts, op. cit. 3.

<sup>6</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>7</sup> Fine R. 43 Eliz. pt. i, no. 19.

<sup>8</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Trin. 9 Geo. III, rot. 237.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491a.

<sup>10</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 190.

<sup>11</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 148.

<sup>12</sup> Herald and Genealogist, iv, 338.

<sup>13</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 157.

<sup>14</sup> Assize R. no. 789, m. 3. In 1228 Hubert de Burgh had given up to the Crown the manor of Camel of which Ashe was afterwards held (Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 82).

<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. III, no. 58.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. file 11, no. 2.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 57. <sup>18</sup> Ibid. 17 Edw. IV, no. 45.

<sup>19</sup> Pope Eugenius III confirmed the grant of Nutshelt to Waverley Abbey in 1147 (Lansd. Chart. 27).

John de Burgh seems to have been the actual holder in the reign of Henry III, and it therefore appears more probable that it was just after its restoration that he granted it to Robert de Manners, apparently a descendant of the benefactor of the abbey, to hold of him and his heirs. Robert de Manners before 1276 had been succeeded by his son John de Manners,<sup>30</sup> who while lord of Ashe, or ASHE MANNERS as it was sometimes called, granted for life to Henry de la Lyegh, rector of Ashe, common of pasture in all his demesne lands for fifty ewes, fifty sheep, three bullocks, two cows and twenty hogs.<sup>31</sup> In 1297 John obtained licence to make an exchange of property with John Randolph and Joan his wife, giving up to them his manor of Ashe and receiving in return their manor of Chaddenwick (co. Wilts.).<sup>32</sup> This transaction must have been completed before 1301, for in that year a commission of oyer and terminer was granted to William de Bereford and Philip de Hoyville to try persons accused of trespassing upon John Randolph's manor of Ashe by Overton.<sup>33</sup> Four years later John Randolph and Joan granted the reversion of the manor to John de Drokensford, afterwards Bishop of Bath and Wells (1309–29), and his heirs,<sup>34</sup> but they were not much longer allowed to stay in peaceful possession of the manor, since Robert de Manners, son and heir of John de Manners, claimed it in 1309 on the ground that Reginald FitzPeter had given it to his father in free marriage with Alice daughter of Reginald, and that therefore it ought to have descended to him in accordance with the form of the donation.<sup>35</sup> The case was adjourned several times, but finally in 1318 judgement was given in favour of John Randolph on the ground that John de Manners had succeeded to Ashe on the death of his father Robert, and held nothing in it of the gift of Reginald FitzPeter.<sup>36</sup> In 1330 Philip de Drokensford, brother and heir of John de Drokensford, granted the reversion of the manor after the deaths of John Randolph and Joan to John de Stonore,<sup>37</sup> upon whom it was settled in fee-tail in 1334.<sup>38</sup> John Randolph predeceased his wife,<sup>39</sup> but the exact dates of their deaths are unknown. John de Stonore had, however, succeeded to the manor by 1346, in which year he obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Ashe.<sup>40</sup> Eight years later he died seised of the manor, leaving a son and heir John de Stonore,<sup>41</sup> who died in 1361.<sup>42</sup> His heir was his son Edmund, who as soon as he came of age sold the manor to William of Wykeham, MANNERS. Or two bars azure and a chief gules.

Bishop of Winchester (1367–98) for an annuity of £20.<sup>43</sup> In 1392 the manor was settled by fine on William of Wykeham for his life, with remainder to William Perot and Alice his wife, the niece of the bishop, for life, with remainder to their son William of Wykeham in tail-male with contingent remainder to William's brother Thomas.<sup>44</sup> The manor consequently passed to Thomas, who in 1402 obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Ashe.<sup>45</sup> On his death the manor passed to his son and heir William, who settled the reversion in 1448 on William Fiennes,<sup>46</sup> son and heir of James Fiennes, Lord Saye and Sele, and husband of his only daughter and heir Margaret.<sup>47</sup> William succeeded to the peerage on 4 July 1451. Twenty years later he was slain at the battle of Barnet, leaving a son and heir Henry, a minor,<sup>48</sup> on whom the manor was settled in 1474 on the occasion of his marriage with Anne daughter of Sir Richard Harcourt.<sup>49</sup>

FIENNES. Azure three lions or.

A year later Henry Fiennes granted the manor to Richard Duke of Gloucester and Morgan Kidwelly,<sup>50</sup> while in 1476 he released an annuity which he had been receiving from it to trustees for the use of Morgan.<sup>51</sup> Twenty years later by fine Morgan Kidwelly and his wife Joan granted the reversion of the manor to Richard Fiennes, son and heir of Henry who had died in 1476,<sup>52</sup> and Elizabeth his wife.<sup>53</sup> Morgan died at Ospringe (co. Kent) in 1505.<sup>54</sup> Shortly after his death it was ascertained by inquisition that he had held the manor to the use of Richard III, and that it ought therefore to have escheated to Henry VII in 1485 on the attainder of Richard III,<sup>55</sup> but the following year the king, taking pity on Morgan's widow Joan, pardoned her all offences and intrusions into the manor of Ashe next Basingstoke, and granted it to her with all revenues for life.<sup>56</sup> She died at Buckland (co. Somers.) in 1524,<sup>57</sup> and about a month later the king granted the manor to his serjeant-at-arms Henry Thornton to hold for twenty-one years at a rent of £21.<sup>58</sup> Richard Fiennes had died in 1501,<sup>59</sup> but his widow Elizabeth, who had married as her second husband William West, was still alive, and, thinking herself entitled to the manor by the settlement of 1497, petitioned the king to restore the manor to her, alleging that the inquisition taken after the death of Morgan Kidwelly was untrue, and swearing that he had never been seised of the manor to the use of Richard III.<sup>60</sup> By the king's orders another inquisition was taken at Winchester on 24 January 1533 to

<sup>30</sup> Coram Rege R. 4 Edw. I, m. 4.

<sup>31</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), C 3101.

<sup>32</sup> Inq. a.q.d. 25 Edw. I, no. 57.

<sup>33</sup> Pat. 29 Edw. I, m. 30d.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 33 Edw. I.

<sup>35</sup> De Banc. R. Trin. 2 Edw. II, m. 121.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. Mich. 9 Edw. II, m. 410d.

<sup>37</sup> Coram Rege R. Hil. 4 Edw. III, m. 12d.

<sup>38</sup> Harl. R. G 17.

<sup>39</sup> Vide Inq. Nonarum (Rec. Com.), 121.

<sup>40</sup> Chart. R. 20 Edw. III, m. 14.

<sup>31</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. III, no. 58.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid. 35 Edw. III, pt. ii (1st nos.), no. 57.

<sup>33</sup> Close, 44 Edw. III, m. 6 and 4.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 16 Ric. II.

<sup>35</sup> Chart. R. 3 & 4 Hen. IV, no. 2.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 26 Hen. VI.

<sup>37</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 65.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid.

<sup>39</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 14 Edw. IV.

<sup>40</sup> Close, 16 Edw. IV, m. 1, 18.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid.

<sup>42</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 66.

<sup>43</sup> De Banc. R. Hil. 12 Hen. VII, m. 21; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 12 Hen. VII.

<sup>44</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlv, 50.

<sup>45</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. file 961, no. 17.

<sup>46</sup> Pat. 21 Hen. VII, pt. iii, m. 22.

<sup>47</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlv, 50.

<sup>48</sup> Pat. 16 Hen. VIII, pt. ii, m. 8.

<sup>49</sup> Vide Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlv, 50.

<sup>50</sup> Pat. 18 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 1.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

ascertain the truth of her statements.<sup>51</sup> The testimony of the jurors bore out her story, but notwithstanding this the manor remained the property of the Crown until 1553,<sup>52</sup> in which year Edward VI made full restitution to Richard Fiennes,<sup>53</sup> the grandson of the Richard who had died in 1501.<sup>54</sup> On his death in 1573 it passed to his son and heir Richard, who in 1590 sold it to James Deane, a wealthy London draper,<sup>55</sup> afterwards knighted, who died in 1608.<sup>56</sup> By his will dated 19 August 1607 he endowed the almshouses called The Hospital, which he founded in Basingstoke for six poor old men and women of the town of Basingstoke and two from the parishes of Ashe and Deane with an annual rent-charge of £55 from the manor of Ashe, which was in addition burdened by an annual payment of £21 for 'the maintenance of a good and learned preacher a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge in the town of Basingstoke and for the better keeping of a good and learned man to instruct the children and youth of Basingstoke (the present pension allotted to the schoolmaster being too small),' by an annuity of £5 4s. to the poor of the parish of St. Katharine Coleman, and by a like annuity to the poor of the parish of St. Olave's, Hart Street, the total sum issuing out of the manor to charitable uses being £86 8s.<sup>57</sup> The manor he bequeathed in fee-tail to his nephew Andrew Holdip the son of his sister Alice Holdip, with contingent remainder in fee-tail successively to his nephews John Chamberleyn son of Margery Chamberleyn, and Michael Shrimpton son of Margaret Shrimpton, and his cousin John Deane.<sup>58</sup> In 1618 Andrew sold the manor to Thomas Willis, clerk of the Crown in Chancery,<sup>59</sup> from whom it passed by sale in 1649 to John Trott.<sup>60</sup> John Trott son and heir of the latter was created a baronet in 1660 and died without male issue in 1672, when the manor passed to his only daughter and heir Catherine the wife of Sir Hugh Stewkley, bart., of Hinton Ampner.<sup>61</sup> Catherine the eldest daughter of Catherine and Hugh brought the manor in marriage to her husband Sir Charles Shuckburgh, bart., of Shuckburgh (co. Warw.), from whom it passed in 1705 to his son and heir Sir John Shuckburgh, bart.<sup>62</sup> Robert Reynolds 'by God's blessing on his industry purchased and acquired' <sup>63</sup> the manor from Sir John in 1707,<sup>64</sup> and on his death in 1721 it went to his daughter Elizabeth, who two years before married the Rev. Reginald Jones, the rector of Brighstone <sup>65</sup> (I.W.). On her death in 1763 Ashe passed to Joseph Portal, to whom she had bequeathed it by will.<sup>66</sup> The manor remained with the Portal family until 1894, being held successively by William Portal son of Joseph Portal from 1793 to 1846, John Portal brother of William Portal from 1846 to 1848, Colonel Robert Portal son of John Portal from 1848 to 1888, and Melville Portal brother of Colonel Robert Portal from 1888 to 1894. The present owner is Mr. Percy Mortimer, who purchased the estate in 1894.<sup>67</sup>

Ashe Park is mentioned in a terrier of the PARK glebe of about 1580<sup>68</sup> whereby Richard Fiennes, Lord Saye and Sele exchanged land with the then rector Mr. Harris to enlarge his park, and is also included in the sale of the manor to Thomas Willis in 1618.<sup>69</sup> The mansion called Ashe Park, the seat of Mr. Percy Mortimer, the lord of the manor, is situated on ground which was formerly part of the old park, and was rebuilt in 1865 by the late Colonel Robert Portal.

LITCHFIELD GRANGE (Nutescheolva, Nutesself, Nutshelve, xii cent.; Nyteshull, xiv cent.; Nutsell, Newetsell, Nuthilve, xvii cent.), together probably with the whole district of South Litchfield, was, as has been mentioned above, granted by Robert de Manners to Waverley Abbey at some date previous to 1147, in which year the gift was confirmed by Pope Eugenius III.<sup>70</sup> The abbey obtained further grants of confirmation from Richard I,<sup>71</sup> John, Edward II and Edward III,<sup>72</sup> and remained in possession of the grange, which in 1291 was valued at £5,<sup>73</sup> until the Dissolution, when it was granted with the other possessions of the abbey to Sir William Fitzwilliam,<sup>74</sup> who was raised to the peerage as Earl of Southampton in 1537. On his death without issue in 1542 it passed with the greater part of his estates to his half-brother Anthony Browne, who died six years later and was succeeded by his eldest son Anthony, created Viscount Montagu in 1554. In 1567 Anthony Viscount Montagu and Magdalen his wife obtained licence to alienate one messuage, one garden, one orchard, 200 acres of land, 80 acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture and 100 acres of wood in Steventon, Overton, Ashe and Quidhampton, no doubt representing the grange and its appurtenances, to Roger Hunt.<sup>75</sup> On the death of the latter in 1601 it passed to his son and heir John,<sup>76</sup> who must have parted with it before 1628, in which year Richard Hale and Edward Hayes sold it for £1,400 to Thomas Cotelee.<sup>77</sup> In 1646 a Royalist, Piers Edgcumbe of Mount Edgcumbe (co. Devon.), was the owner, and in that year being seised of the farm and demesne of Nuthilve or Litchfield and other property in Overton was admitted to composition.<sup>78</sup> It remained in the PORTAL. Argent a lion sable and a chief azure with six molets or therein.

<sup>51</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlii, 50.

<sup>52</sup> Mins. Accts. Hants, 27 & 28 Hen. VIII, no. 17, m. 2.

<sup>53</sup> Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. vi, 469b.

<sup>54</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vii, 66.

<sup>55</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 32 Eliz.; Recov. R. East. 32 Eliz. m. 11.

<sup>56</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 13, no. 47.

<sup>57</sup> P.C.C. Will 55 Windebanck. In 1885, when the Ashe Warren Farm was sold by Col. Portal to Mr. H. L. Cripps, the charities were redeemed by a money payment, thus rendering the manor free of charge. Vide Basingstoke under Charities.

<sup>58</sup> Ibid.

<sup>59</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Jas. I.

<sup>60</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xxiii, no. 9.

<sup>61</sup> Burke, Extinct Baronetcies, 533.

<sup>62</sup> Misc. Gen. et Her. (Ser. 2), iii, 354.

<sup>63</sup> On his memorial stone in the parish church of Ashe.

<sup>64</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Anne.

<sup>65</sup> Ashe par. reg.

<sup>66</sup> On her memorial stone in the parish church of Ashe.

<sup>67</sup> Information supplied by Mr. Percy Mortimer.

<sup>68</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 37.

<sup>69</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 16 Jas. I.

<sup>70</sup> Lansd. Chart. 27.

<sup>71</sup> Cart. Antiq. S. no. 20.

<sup>72</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 6.

<sup>73</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215.

<sup>74</sup> Pat. 28 Hen. VIII, pt. ii, m. 9, 10.

<sup>75</sup> Ibid. 9 Eliz. pt. iv, m. 33.

<sup>76</sup> Fine R. 43 Eliz. pt. i, no. 19.

<sup>77</sup> Close, 4 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 21.

<sup>78</sup> S.P. Dom. Commonw. g. 214, fol. 549-50.

Edgcumbe family until about 1760,<sup>79</sup> when Richard Lord Edgcumbe sold it and other property to Robert Mackreth of Ewhurst, from whom the estate passed by sale in 1769 to Thomas Benet of Tisbury (co. Wilts.).<sup>80</sup> During the 19th century the property seems to have changed hands frequently.<sup>81</sup> From Mr. Alexander Cunningham, who purchased it in 1880, the estate has recently passed by sale to the present owner, Mr. Robert Mills of Shefford Park, Newbury.

EDGCUMBE. Gules a bend erminees between cotises or with three boars' heads argent on the bend.

CHURCH the HOLY TRINITY AND ST. ANDREW

was built in 1877-8 on an old site and consists of a chancel 23 ft. 4 in. by 19 ft. with a vestry and organ chamber on the north side, and a nave 48 ft. 6 in. by 19 ft., with a south porch and a west bell-turret.

The destruction of the original church was so complete that there are only a few details of it left. One of these is the basin and jambs of the 14th-century piscina in the south wall of the chancel, and in the vestry is a 12th-century pillar piscina which was found built up in the wall. It is a good and early specimen, c. 1120, with a plain foliate capital and moulded base.

The east window of the chancel is of 14th-century style, of three lights with tracery, and in the south wall is a window of two trefoiled lights with a square head, and another of a single trefoiled light. All the nave windows are of two trefoiled lights with square heads.

The tall and well-proportioned oak screen between the chancel and nave is a careful reproduction of a fine piece of 15th-century woodwork, of which enough remained in the west gallery of the old nave to make a certain restoration possible. Parts of the mullions and cornice are old, but the tracery on the heads of the lights and the cresting is modern. In the south wall just west of the screen is a small square hole closed with a little iron door, in which is kept the carving of a bird sitting on its nest. This is a record of the building of a nest by a robin during the restoration of the church, on the top of the screen, with the shavings left by the carpenters.

There is an old chair in the vestry cut out of four pieces of wood with a tapering seat. On the back are carved the initials T R.

There is only one bell in the turret, made by John Warner in 1860.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1671, also a plated flagon and a salver used as a credence plate and a glass water cruet mounted in electro-plate.

All the registers are contained in one book, and it begins with baptisms, marriages and burials mixed from 1619 to 1729, after which they were entered separately as follows:—baptisms 1729 to 1812, burials 1730 to 1812, and marriages 1730 to 1753. At the other end of the same book are some more marriages from 1757 to 1810.

On one page is a rough 18th-century seating plan of the church showing a chancel with a window in the east, north and south walls, and a nave of the same width with one north and one south window and a west doorway.

There was a church in the parish at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>82</sup>

The advowson followed the descent of the manor until 1608,<sup>83</sup> when it passed to Simon Holdip in accordance with the will of Sir James Deane dated 19 August 1607.<sup>84</sup> In 1660 Andrew Holdip the son of Simon sold the advowson for £360 to George Wither of Hall,<sup>85</sup> now Oakley Hall, in the parish of Deane, and from that date it followed the descent of that property, passing on the death of Charles Wither to his daughter Henrietta Maria, who married Edmund Bramston of Boreham (co. Essex) in 1748. In 1755 Edmund Bramston and Henrietta Maria sold three presentations to the rectory to Benjamin Langlois,<sup>86</sup> who in 1783 presented his nephew Isaac Peter George Lefroy.<sup>87</sup> On 3 March 1806 John Henry George Lefroy, son of Isaac Peter George Lefroy, was instituted on the presentation of the executors of his father's will to whom the advowson had descended on the death of his uncle Benjamin Langlois, and on 4 November 1823 Benjamin Lefroy, brother of John Henry George Lefroy, was instituted on the presentation of the executors of his brother's will.<sup>88</sup> At his death in 1829 the presentation reverted to Wither Bramston of Oakley Hall, the son of Edmund Bramston and Henrietta Maria.<sup>89</sup> It passed with Oakley Hall (q.v.) to the Beaches, with whom it remained until 1867, in which year it was purchased from William Wither Bramston Beach by Mortimer George Thoyts of Sulhamstead (co. Berks.).<sup>90</sup> The patron at the present day is the Rev. Francis Walter Thoyts, M.A., of Woodspeen Grange, Newbury, to whom it was conveyed in fee by his father, Mortimer George Thoyts, in 1873.<sup>91</sup>

On 10 April 1592 the churches of Ashe and Deane were united by letters patent of Queen Elizabeth with the consent of Thomas Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, and the patron James Deane.<sup>92</sup> After a union of only twenty-seven years they were again divided by a Private Act of 1609-10 entitled 'An Act for the disuniting of the parsonages of Ashe and Deane being presentative and with cure of souls,'<sup>93</sup> and from this

<sup>79</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 32 Geo. II, m. 278.

<sup>80</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Trin. 9 Geo. III, m. 237; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 18 Geo. III. The property is thus described in the deed of sale:—'The manor or lordship of Overton, the farm or grange of Nuteselve or Nutesell and Levers or Crooks Freehold commonly called Litchfield in the several parishes and hamlets of Ashe, Southington, Stevenon, and Quidhampton.'

<sup>81</sup> The Rev. F. W. Thoyts in his Hist.

of Esse or Ashe (pp. 4, 5) gives the following list of owners and occupiers between 1770 and 1880:—1770, Mr. Benet; 1775, Mr. Lewis; 1785, Richard Waterman; 1796, Mr. White; 1809, Mr. Thomas Trueman Villebois; 1838, Mr. Stephens; 1857, George Whistler; 1873, John Dollar.

<sup>82</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491a.

<sup>83</sup> De Banc. R. East. 4 Edw. II, m. 31, 159 d.; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 2 d.; 2033, fol. 3 d.; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 119; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 78; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 32 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>84</sup> P.C.C. Will 55 Windebanck.

<sup>85</sup> F. W. Thoyts, op. cit. 57. <sup>86</sup> Ibid. 58.

<sup>87</sup> Ibid.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>88</sup> F. W. Thoyts, op. cit. 58.

<sup>89</sup> Ibid.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>90</sup> F. W. Thoyts, op. cit. 59. <sup>91</sup> Ibid.

<sup>92</sup> Pat. 34 Eliz. pt. iii, m. 49, 50.

<sup>93</sup> Statutes of the Realm (Rec. Com.), iv (2), 1155.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

date the rectories have remained separate, although from time to time they have been held by the same incumbent.

On 28 July 1332 the bishop absolved Richard de Havenage from the sentence of the greater excommunication which he had incurred by his presence at a conflict which had then recently taken place near the church of Ashe, on which occasion the church was polluted by the shedding of blood.<sup>94</sup> In the following year Richard de Chaddesle, chancellor and vicar-general, granted permission to Brother Benedict, Bishop of Cardica, to purge the church with holy water in the prescribed form so that divine service might not be suspended.<sup>96</sup>

BRADLEY

Bradaneleag (x cent.) ; Bradelie (xi cent.) ; Bradelega (xii cent.) ; Bradelegh (xiii cent.).

The small parish of Bradley is situated 2½ miles from Herriard and Lasham, and contains 975 acres of hill country which reaches its greatest height of 560 ft. above the ordnance datum in the north. The parish is well wooded, containing 149 acres of woods and plantations as compared with only 3½ acres of arable land and 9 acres of permanent grass.<sup>1</sup> All Saints' Church with the rectory and the little group of houses comprising the village is situated in the south. According to tradition Bradley Wood in the south-eastern corner of the parish contains the site of a castle called Hurst Castle. The soil is light and the subsoil chalk and gravel.

Among early place-names may be mentioned Downewood, Brickhill Coppice,<sup>2</sup> Stutbins and The Lame (xvii cent.).<sup>3</sup>

By a charter of 909 King Edward the MANOR Elder confirmed Frithstan, Bishop of Winchester, in his possession of 5 hides at BRADLEY,<sup>4</sup> the nucleus of the later manor of Bradley. At this time the 5 hides evidently formed part of the manor of Overton, and they continued to do so in the 11th century, as may be seen from the entry under Overton in Domesday Book :—that of the land of the manor of Overton Geoffrey was holding 5 hides in Bradley, and that his predecessor Alric had held the same 5 hides of the bishop.<sup>5</sup> In 1167 a certain Henry was holding Bradley as a separate manor,<sup>6</sup> quite distinct from the manor of Overton, and from this date the overlordship alone continued with the Bishops of Winchester.<sup>7</sup> In 1242 Henry de Bradley, probably a descendant of the Henry of 1167, exchanged 3 virgates of land in Bradley for 41 acres of land in Ellisfield with Geoffrey des Roches,<sup>8</sup> nephew of the famous Peter des Roches, Bishop of Winchester. Geoffrey died some ten years later,<sup>9</sup> but his wife Emma, the daughter of William Fitz Roger, survived him, and in 1260 one messuage and 1½ virgates of land in Bradley were settled upon her by Roger Fitz Roger, probably her uncle.<sup>10</sup> Martin des Roches, the son and heir of Geoffrey and Emma, died seised of the manor of Bradley in 1277, leaving as his heir his brother Hugh,<sup>11</sup> whose son and heir John was seised of the manor at his death in 1311.<sup>12</sup> He was succeeded by his son and heir Sir John des Roches,<sup>13</sup> who in 1338 settled the manor upon himself and his wife Joan in tail-male, with contingent remainder in tail-male successively to his daughters Alice the wife of Henry Romyn and Mary the wife of John de Borhunte.<sup>14</sup> Alice and Henry died without issue while Joan des Roches, who outlived her husband,<sup>15</sup> was holding the manor, and thus on her death in 1361 it passed to her daughter Mary the widow of John de Borhunte,<sup>16</sup> who almost immediately afterwards married Sir Bernard Brocas.<sup>17</sup> Sir Bernard obtained a grant of free warren in the demesne lands of his manor of Bradley in 1363,<sup>18</sup> and died in 1395 leaving a son and heir Sir Bernard.<sup>19</sup> The younger Sir Bernard was executed at Tyburn for treason at the accession of Henry IV, but by means of settlements in trust the greater part of his estates, including the manor of Bradley, escaped forfeiture. His widow Joan<sup>20</sup> held them until the lease expired in 1406, when trustees by a release conveyed them to his son and heir William.<sup>21</sup> William soon afterwards made over the manor in fee to his younger brother Bernard, generally called Bernard Brocas of Alton and Bradley,<sup>22</sup> who in 1428 was returned as holding half a knight's fee in Bradley which had belonged to Joan the wife of John des Roches.<sup>23</sup> On his death in 1432 Bradley passed, in accordance with a settlement made during his lifetime, to his younger son William Brocas of Alton, who then settled it on himself and Agnes his wife with remainder if they had no children to William Brocas of Beaurepaire, the great-grandson of William the son and heir of the attainted Sir

DES ROCHES. Sable two leopards argent.

BROCAS. Sable a leopard rampant or.

<sup>94</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. John de Stratford, fol. 74.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid. fol. 79.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 9 Chas. I, no. 2. At the present day there are a Down Wood and a Brickkiln Copse in the parish.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 29 Chas. II, no. 13.

<sup>4</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 297-300.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 461a.

<sup>6</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 186.

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Edw. I, no. 12 ; 5 Edw. II, no. 44 ; Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxxv, 126.

<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 26 Hen. III.

<sup>9</sup> Montagu Burrows, The Family of Brocas of Beaurepaire, 323.

<sup>10</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 44 Hen. III.

<sup>11</sup> Inq. p.m. 5 Edw. I, no. 12.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 5 Edw. II, no. 44.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. ; Feud. Aids, ii, 307.

<sup>14</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 12 Edw. III.

<sup>15</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 328.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III (pt. ii), no. 49.

<sup>17</sup> Vide Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 35 Edw. III.

<sup>18</sup> Chart. R. 37 Edw. III, m. 11.

<sup>19</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 22 Ric. II, no. 8.

<sup>20</sup> She died in 1429 at Holybourne.

<sup>21</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Hen. IV (pt. i.), no. 17.

<sup>22</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. III, no. 21.

<sup>23</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

Bernard.<sup>24</sup> William Brocas of Alton died without issue, and the manor passed in accordance with the settlement to his widow Agnes, who subsequently married Robert atte Moore and died in 1484.<sup>25</sup> At the inquisition taken after her death it was returned that William Brocas of Beaurepaire was lately dead, and the manor consequently passed to his son John,<sup>26</sup> thus returning to the old family stock whence it had been parted at the beginning of the 15th century. William Brocas the son and heir of John died seised of the manor in 1506, leaving two daughters Anne and Edith as his heirs.<sup>27</sup> The elder Anne married George Warham in 1514, but died without issue leaving her sister Edith wife of Ralph Pexall her sole heir.<sup>28</sup> Richard Pexall the son of Edith and Ralph died in 1571, having by will dated a day before his death left all his property to his second wife Dame Eleanor for thirteen years, until his grandson Pexall Brocas, the son of his eldest daughter Anne, should be of age.<sup>29</sup> The will, however, was declared void as regarded the third of the property, and this was consequently divided amongst his four daughters: (1) Anne the wife of Bernard Brocas; (2) Margery who married firstly Oliver Beckett and secondly Francis Cotton; (3) Elizabeth the wife of John Jobson; and (4) Barbara the wife of Anthony Brydges.<sup>30</sup> Shortly after their father's death Elizabeth Jobson and Barbara Brydges parted with their twelfths of the manor, the former to Dame Eleanor and her second husband Sir John Savage,<sup>31</sup> and the latter to Anne and Bernard Brocas.<sup>32</sup> Margery Cotton retained her portion and died in 1581 seised of one-twelfth of the manor, her heir being her son John Beckett, under age,<sup>33</sup> and her husband Francis Cotton was seised of a portion of the manor at his death some thirty years later.<sup>34</sup> Anne Brocas, who only survived her husband two years,<sup>35</sup> died seised of one-sixth of the manor in 1591, her heir being her son Pexall,<sup>36</sup> who had come of age in 1584, when he had succeeded to two-thirds of all the Brocas estates, Dame Eleanor's legal claim being thus reduced to the twelfth she and her husband had purchased from the Jobsons. Hence at the end of the 16th century, after the death of Sir John Savage, the manor of Bradley was thus divided: ten-twelfths were held by Sir Pexall Brocas, one-twelfth was in the hands of Edward Savage the son and heir of Sir John Savage, while the remaining twelfth was held by Francis Cotton.

Sir Pexall Brocas in 1621 granted a two hundred years' lease of his portion of the manor at a rent of £50 to Thomas Taylor,<sup>37</sup> who soon afterwards acquired one-twelfth of the manor from John Cotton,<sup>38</sup> to whom it had descended on the death of his father Francis.<sup>39</sup> Edward Savage had in the meantime conveyed his twelfth to Richard Burrell, and while Thomas Taylor, who was naturally anxious to complete his property, was deliberating on the purchase, Edward Savage, at the instance of a certain Thomas Lambert and his aunt Denise Knight, was outlawed for a debt of £600 to William Knight the deceased son of Denise.<sup>40</sup> Under some misapprehension the twelfth part of the manor of Bradley was included in the return of Edward Savage's property made in 1619, and was accordingly taken into the hands of the king, who forthwith demised it to Denise Knight,<sup>41</sup> who held it without disturbance for two years. In 1621 Thomas Taylor, who was still eager to acquire this portion of the manor, entered into the following agreement with Thomas Lambert on behalf of his aunt. Thomas Lambert was to cause the outlawry to be reversed under which Denise claimed her interest in the manor, thus enabling him to proceed with the purchase, and in return he promised to pay Thomas Lambert £10 immediately after the reversal of the outlawry and a further £100 in five instalments.<sup>42</sup> However, Thomas Lambert, once having the bonds for the payment of the sums in his possession, did nothing with regard to the reversal of the outlawry, and even threatened to sue Thomas Taylor for the payment of £110.<sup>43</sup> The case was brought into the Court of Exchequer, depositions of various witnesses were taken on 26 May 1623,<sup>44</sup> and after many delays<sup>45</sup> the court finally decided on 21 October 1624 that Thomas Taylor should pay £79 for all claims to Thomas Lambert as heir of Denise Knight, who had died shortly before, and that Thomas Lambert should in return give up all right to the twelfth of the manor.<sup>46</sup> From this date Thomas Taylor remained in quiet possession until 1629, in which year the manor was taken into the hands of the king for a debt of £1,001 1s., and by him leased to Sir Kenelm Digby as the king's farmer and Sir John Savage the son of Edward Savage.<sup>47</sup> But Thomas Taylor, in spite of an injunction out of the Court of Exchequer and a writ of assistance to the sheriff to execute this injunction, steadily refused to deliver up the manor to them, garrisoned the manor-house and sent down from London a body of soldiers and sailors to keep it from all attacks.<sup>48</sup> Two unsuccessful attempts to gain possession of the manor were made by the sheriff Sir Francis Dowse in the autumn of 1629.<sup>49</sup> On 2 January 1630 his successor Sir Henry Wallop sent thither the under-sheriff Nicholas Christmas, who thus describes his adventures: 'Hee this deponent went about the said house with such as hee had in his companye, beinge in number eight or nyne or thereabout, to see where he could find a place to make a breach for entrance, and that cominge neare the parler windowe there was a muskett presented against him and his said company by one in the said house, and that, as some of his said company told him, the party

<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. III, no. 21.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

<sup>27</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 961, no. 9.

<sup>28</sup> Montagu Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 208.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. 210; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil.

15 Eliz.; Recov. R. Trin. 15 Eliz. rot.

142; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 15 &

16 Eliz.; Trin. 18 Eliz.

<sup>32</sup> Montagu Burrows, op. cit. 212.

<sup>33</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cc, no. 54.

<sup>34</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no.

127.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. bdle. 56, no. 147.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. no. 123.

<sup>37</sup> Vide Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants, Jas. I, no. 333.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid.

<sup>39</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no.

127.

<sup>40</sup> Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants, Jas. I,

no. 319.

<sup>41</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 18 Jas. I, no. 4510.

<sup>42</sup> Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants, Jas. I, no. 319.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 21 Jas. I, no. 22.

<sup>45</sup> Exch. Dec. and Orders (Ser. 2), vol.

34, fol. 2, 60 d., 179 d., 322 d., 342; vol.

35, fol. 68, 219; (Ser. 4), vol. 2, fol.

274, 289 d.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 4), vol. 3, fol. 20.

<sup>47</sup> Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants, Chas.

I, no. 27.

<sup>48</sup> Exch. Dep. Hil. 6 & 7 Chas. I,

no. 7.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

was readie to give fire to the same.’<sup>50</sup> He seems to have withdrawn hurriedly, but six days later returned with Sir Richard Tichborne, one of the deputy-lieutenants of the county, Sir Walter Tichborne and Sir Benjamin Tichborne and ‘many other knights and gentlemen of quality to the number of four or five hundred.’ ‘They caused,’ he said, ‘three or foure musketts to bee shott at the said house to affright them. Nevertheless the said forcible deteynors maintained the said possession and kept offe the said deponent and his company with swords and gunnes thrustinge out theire swordes and offeringe gunnes at those which came neare the house,’ and ultimately the whole company withdrew, having seen that they could not get the possession of the house ‘without imminent danger of many menn’s lives.’<sup>51</sup> The sheriff then sent for the great guns from London, and on 23 January 1630 marched to Bradley with a band numbering about 200. Nicholas Christmas thus describes what follows: ‘And thereupon the said Sir Henry Wallop did command the ordinance to bee mounted and after conference with Mrs. Taylor did command a shott to bee made against one of the chymneys to see if hee could affright them, and immediately thereupon they in the house discharged diverse pieces at those that managed thordinance and came in ayd of the said sheriffe, whereby twoe or three of those which managed the said ordinance and other of the sheriff’s company received some light hurtes. The possession keepers continued shootinge with their pieces for the most part of that day, and towards night some of the sheriffe’s company approached the walles of the said house and attempted to breake the same, whereupon some in the said house shott at them and dangerously hurt twoe of the said sheriff’s companie, whereof one in short tyme after dyed, and they in the house in that manner by force and strength maintained the possession all that day, soe that the said sheriffe was forced to depart without the possession.’<sup>52</sup> It was not until the house was rendered completely uninhabitable that it was surrendered to Sir Kenelm Digby and Sir John Savage,<sup>53</sup> who kept possession for about two years—until at the instance of Thomas Taylor, who had often boasted that ‘the same parties who were a means to put him out of the possession should put him in again,’ the Court of Exchequer dissolved its injunction.<sup>54</sup> In 1634 Thomas Brocas, son and heir of Sir Pexall Brocas who had died in 1630,<sup>55</sup> and Thomas Taylor and Elizabeth his wife conveyed the manor to Thomas Westall, Thomas Sherman and Henry Fessant and the heirs of Thomas Sherman,<sup>56</sup> but whether in trust or not is unknown. The history of the manor for some time after this is uncertain, but according to conveyances co-heiresses sold it to J. B. Cockburne.<sup>56a</sup> Ultimately Bradley passed to Anthony son and heir of Sir Robert Henley, who presented to the rectory in 1696.<sup>57</sup> On his death in 1711 it passed to his eldest son Anthony, who died in 1745 and was succeeded by his brother Robert, who was raised to the title of Earl of Northington and Viscount Henley in 1764 and died in 1772.<sup>58</sup> His son Robert Earl of Northington died unmarried in 1786,<sup>59</sup> leaving as his heirs his sisters Lady Bridget Tollemache, Lady Jane Aston, Mary Dowager Countess Ligonier and Lady Elizabeth Eden, who conveyed the manor the following year to William Drewe,<sup>60</sup> probably in trust for John Blackburne, a merchant of London.<sup>61</sup> The latter by his will dated 1792 left Bradley to his son John, on whose death in debt about 1829 it was sold to Mr. Rumbold.<sup>62</sup> From Mr. Rumbold it passed by sale to Mr. H. King, who was succeeded by his son Mr. J. H. King.<sup>63</sup> The latter sold the estate in 1877 to Lord Templemore, from whom it was purchased by Mr. H. J. Hope in 1887. Mr. Hope died in 1905, and his widow is now lady of the manor.<sup>64</sup>

HENLEY. Azure a lion argent with a crown or in a border argent with eight roundels gules thereon.

The church of ALL SAINTS consists CHURCH of a chancel 20 ft. by 14 ft. 5 in. inside, nave 33 ft. 10 in. by 16 ft., south aisle 26 ft. 11 in. by 5 ft. 4 in. and south porch.

The church was entirely rebuilt in 1877, but some of the old work was re-used; from this it appears that the chancel dated from the first half of the 13th century. There is nothing to show the date of the nave, but the south arcade appears to be old work restored, and if so it proves the aisle to have been added early in the 14th century; all the other work is modern.

The east window of the chancel has modern tracery, but the inner quoins and two-centred drop rear arch are old; in the south wall are two 13th-century lancets; the first is rebated and chamfered outside, but the second has apparently been reset inside out, the rebate and chamfer being inside; both have two-centred drop rear arches. At the east end of the north window is another lancet window resembling that opposite it. In the south wall is a small piscina with a modern trefoiled head, but old jambstones and a shallow round basin.

The chancel arch is a modern one of two orders springing from corbel shafts. In the north wall of the nave are three modern trefoiled lancets. The arcade on the south side appears to be old work of about 1330; it has three bays with octagonal pillars having chamfered bases and moulded bell-capitals; the arches are of two chamfered orders dying on octagonal super columns above the capitals. The west wall of the nave is pierced by a single lancet. The aisle is lighted by a lancet in the east wall and a pair of lancets at the west end; the only piercing in the south wall is the entrance doorway which is

<sup>50</sup> Exch. Dep. Hil. 6 & 7 Chas. I, no. 7.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. <sup>53</sup> Ibid. Cal. S. P. Dom. 1629–31, p. 189. At the present day marks of the round shot are still shown in the kitchen ceiling of the old manor-house (ex inform. Lieut. J. F. R. Hope of Preston House, Basingstoke).

<sup>54</sup> Vide Exch. Dep. Mich. 9 Chas. I, no. 2; Exch. Dec. and Orders (Ser. 3), vol. 11, fol. 304 d.

<sup>55</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxxv, 126.

<sup>56</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 10 Chas. I.

<sup>56a</sup> Ex inform. Lieut. J. F. R. Hope.

<sup>57</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>58</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, vi, 79, 80.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid. 80.

<sup>60</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 27 Geo. III; Close, 27 Geo. III, pt. iii, no. 3.

<sup>61</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 40 Geo. III, rot. 33, 154.

<sup>62</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 373.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid.

<sup>64</sup> Ex inform. Lieut. J. F. R. Hope.

approached through an open wood porch. The roofs of the chancel and nave are gabled and tiled; the former is panelled below and the latter open-timbered; the aisle has a lean-to roof. Above the west end of the nave is a small open wood turret covered by an oak-shingled octagonal spire; it contains one bell. All the furniture is modern; there are no old monuments.

The plate consists of three chalices, a paten and a flagon, all plated.

The first book of the registers is a small one containing baptisms, marriages and burials from 1725 to 1753 and baptisms and burials thence to 1812; the second book is the usual printed book from 1754 to 1812.

The first mention of a church in ADVOWSON the parish is in 1291, in which year it was returned as of the annual value of £5.<sup>65</sup>

The advowson of the church followed the descent of the manor until early<sup>66</sup> in the 19th century. It was not included in the sale of the estate to Mr. H. King, but remained in the Rumbold family, the patron at the present time being Mr. Charles

Rumbold. The question of tithes was dealt with by the Court of Exchequer in 1677.<sup>67</sup>

The Rev. Charles John Gough CHARITIES Seare, a former rector, by will proved in the P.C.C. 1816, bequeathed £333 6s. 8d. consols, the dividends to be applied for the benefit of the poor in such manner as the rector should direct.

This charity was augmented by a sum of £333 6s. 8d. consols by will of the donor's sister, Mary Gough, proved in the P.C.C. 1817.

The sum of £666 13s. 4d. consols is held by the official trustees in trust for these charities, producing yearly £16 13s. 4d., which in 1906 was applied in payment of bonuses to the coal and clothing clubs, in Christmas gifts to children and in small weekly payments to widows.

Mary Lovel of Preston Candover by her will proved in 1749 gave yearly to each of such three poor house-keepers' children in the parish of Bradley as her executor or his heirs should think fit, for ever, a Bible with the Book of Common Prayer bound therewith, of 7s. or 8s. value. Edward Acton of Bentworth, clerk, was appointed her executor.<sup>68</sup>

DEANE

Dene (xi cent.); Dena (xii cent.); Den, Dene Maudit (xiii cent.); Dean (xiv cent.).

Deane is a parish situated 6 miles west from Basingstoke and containing 1,587 acres, of which 520½ acres are arable land, 256 acres permanent grass and 264½ acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> It lies on high ground, the highest altitudes being reached on its northern and southern boundaries, viz. 472 ft. above the ordnance datum on the northern borders of Great Deane Wood in the north, and about 500 ft. above the ordnance datum at Ganderdown in the south. The village, which is situated on the main road from Whitchurch to Basingstoke, in the extreme south-west of the parish, about half a mile east from Ashe village and 1½ miles south-west from Oakley, occupies the lowest ground in the parish—a little over 300 ft. above the ordnance datum. Deane House, which is situated in a well-wooded park of 70 acres near the church on the north-east, has some traces of antiquity; two of its rooms are panelled with 17th-century woodwork and have carved wood mantels with round-headed panels; the staircase has carved brackets in the string, and thin turned balusters. On the outside of the house no work earlier than the 18th century is to be seen. To the south are the rectory, standing in extensive grounds, and the schools, which were built for 56 children in 1879; while a short distance to the east of the village is Oakley Hall, the property of Major William Archibald Hicks Beach. The mansion was built in 1795 upon the site of the former house and altered in 1860, and stands in the midst of a well-wooded park, covering about 490 acres, which extends into Oakley parish. Deane is intersected by two branches of the London and South Western Railway—by the main line which traverses the south of Oakley Park and by the Andover and Salisbury branch which cuts through the north of the parish. The soil is gravel, but the high-lying land is stiff clay. The subsoil is chalk and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots. The following place-names in Deane occur in a 16th-century deed of sale:—Deane Heath, Noke Down, Ramsholte, Haule Heath and Haule Grove.<sup>2</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANORS DEANE (Deane Maudit, xiv cent.) which a certain Thoe had held of Edward the Confessor was held by William de Ow.<sup>3</sup> By the middle of the 12th century the manor had passed into the hands of Robert de la Mare,<sup>4</sup> the lord of Castle Holdgate (co. Salop), probably coming to him by his marriage with his wife Alice.<sup>5</sup> Robert died at Benevento in 1193 on his way back from the Crusades, leaving a daughter and heir Agnes, the widow of Robert Maudit of Warminster (co. Wilts.), chamberlain to King Henry II,<sup>6</sup> who soon afterwards made fine at the discretion of the Chancellor for the relief of the lands which had belonged to her father.<sup>7</sup> Agnes died before 1199 leaving a son and heir Thomas, who came of age in 1203, succeeding to large estates in Shropshire, Wiltshire and Hampshire.<sup>8</sup> In 1216

<sup>65</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 211.

<sup>66</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 53 d.; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 520; Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 6; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 15, 92, 109, 133, 154, 204, 236, 244; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 34 d., 73, 113 d., 123 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>67</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 29 Chas. II, no. 13.

<sup>68</sup> Ex inform. Lieut. J. F. R. Hope, of Preston House.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Close, 30 Eliz. pt. xvi, no. 1.

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491b.

<sup>4</sup> He was probably the Robert mentioned as holding Deane in the Pipe Roll of 1167:—'Dena Roberti reddit compotum de dimidio marce' (Pipe R. 13 Hen. II, rot. 13, m. 1 d.).

<sup>5</sup> Eyton, Antiq. of Shrops. iv, 56.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. 57.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. op. cit. iv, 62.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

he joined the barons' party against King John, and, as he did not return to his allegiance on the accession of King Henry III, on 16 March 1217 all his lands in Shropshire, Hampshire and other bailiwicks were given to Robert de Ferrars wherewith to support himself in the king's service and during the king's pleasure.<sup>9</sup> Under some misapprehension the manor of Deane, which was still held by Robert de la Mare's widow Alice, was included in the confiscation, but was not given back on 14 September 1217 when, having returned to his allegiance, Thomas was reinstated in his possessions.<sup>10</sup> Thus in 1218 a certain Thomas le Gastin was summoned to show by what warrant he held the vill of Deane, which William de Ferrars had held while he lived,<sup>11</sup> and again in 1224 Alice's nephew William de la Mare sought to recover for his aunt a carucate of land in Deane from whomsoever was then holding it.<sup>12</sup> The manor was no doubt restored to Alice, and on her death descended to her grandson Thomas, who on his death in 1244 was succeeded by his son and heir William.<sup>13</sup> William's successor was Thomas, who in August 1270, being about to accompany Prince Edward to Palestine, obtained licence from the king to put out at farm his demesnes of Warminster.<sup>14</sup> He died shortly afterwards, leaving a son and heir Warin under age,<sup>15</sup> and in 1274 Sir Alan de Plukenet granted the custody of the manors of Grateley and Deane which were of his inheritance to Sir John de St. Valery to hold from Thursday after the Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul 1274 until Michaelmas 1279.<sup>16</sup> Warin came of age in 1290 and obtained livery of all the lands which his father had held in chief.<sup>17</sup> Five years later he obtained licence to demise his manor of Deane for six years to Bevis de Knovill<sup>18</sup>—no doubt on his departure to the Holy Land with Edward I, by whom he was highly esteemed. He died, however, at the early age of thirty, circa 1299, leaving a son and heir Thomas under age,<sup>19</sup> whose marriage was granted in 1301 to Robert de Felton.<sup>20</sup> Thomas obtained a grant of free warren in all his demesne lands of Deane in 1318,<sup>21</sup> but some years later, siding with the other barons against the Despencers, he was taken prisoner at Boroughbridge and executed, and his estates confiscated.<sup>22</sup> His son and heir John, who was a minor at the time,<sup>23</sup> came of age in 1332, obtaining in that year livery of his estates,<sup>24</sup> and died in 1364 leaving as his heir his granddaughter Maud the only child of his son Thomas.<sup>25</sup> Five years later the manor was conveyed by trustees to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester,<sup>26</sup> and was settled on him in 1392 with remainder in tail-male successively to his great-nephews William and Thomas of Wykeham.<sup>27</sup> It passed to Sir William Fiennes, second Lord Saye and Sele, in the same way as Ashe (q.v.), but unlike Ashe was never held by Morgan Kidwelly either to his own use or to that of King Richard III. Thus it escaped confiscation on the accession of King Henry VII. Richard Fiennes, the son of Henry Fiennes who had granted a life interest in Ashe to Morgan Kidwelly and his wife, died seised of it in 1501, leaving an infant son and heir Edward.<sup>28</sup> Deane remained with the Fiennes family until 1590,<sup>29</sup> in which year Richard Fiennes, grandson of Edward, sold it with Ashe to James Deane, afterwards Sir James (vide Ashe),<sup>30</sup> who by his will dated 19 August 1607 left it to his 'servant' James Deane, subject to annuities to Richard Deane and James Deane sons of his cousin John Deane of Froyle, and an annual rent-charge of £10 8s. for the relief of the poor people of Basingstoke.<sup>31</sup> A James Deane, probably the legatee, was buried in the parish church of Deane in 1628,<sup>32</sup> and on his death the manor seems to have passed to a John Harwood with whom he was in some way connected.<sup>33</sup> From this date the manor remained in the Harwood family until 1864,<sup>34</sup> when it was purchased by the Right Hon. William Wither Bramston Beach, who at his death in 1901 was Father of the House of Commons.<sup>35</sup> His son Major William Archibald Hicks Beach is at the present time lord of the manor of Deane.

OAKLEY HALL, which until the 18th century was called merely HALL or HALL PLACE, in early times formed part of the manor of Deane, the names of Robert atte Hall and John atte Hall, holders of 1 carucate and 2 virgates respectively, occurring as free tenants of the manor in 1299.<sup>36</sup> In 1317 it was sold by John atte Hall of West Oakley to Robert de Bury by the description of 2 messuages, 2 carucates of land, pasture for 4 horses, 12 oxen, 26 pigs and 104 sheep, and the profits of 8 carucates of underwood to be taken yearly in West Oakley, Church Oakley and Deane,<sup>37</sup> and before 1346 the holding had passed into the hands of John Mauduit, lord of the manor of Deane, who in that year is returned as holding the fourth part of a fee in Deane, which had belonged to Robert de Bury.<sup>38</sup> From this date Hall followed the same descent as Deane (q.v.) until the end of the 16th BEACH. Vairy argent and gules a quarter azure with a pile or.

<sup>9</sup> Close, 1 Hen. III, m. 22.
<sup>10</sup> Ibid. m. 10.
<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 2 Hen. III, m. 3 d.
<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 7 Hen. III, m. 16 d.
<sup>13</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 418.
<sup>14</sup> Pat. 54 Hen. III, m. 10.
<sup>15</sup> Vide Pat. 1 Edw. I, m. 36.
<sup>16</sup> Close, 2 Edw. I, m. 8 d.
<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. I, m. 1.
<sup>18</sup> Pat. 24 Edw. I, m. 20.
<sup>19</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. I, no. 41.
<sup>20</sup> Pat. 29 Edw. I, m. 28.
<sup>21</sup> Chart. R. 11 Edw. II, m. 8.
<sup>22</sup> Hoare, Wills, iii (2), 5.
<sup>23</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 37.
<sup>24</sup> Close, 6 Edw. III, m. 22.
<sup>25</sup> Inq. p.m. 38 Edw. III, no. 28.

<sup>26</sup> Close, 43 Edw. III, m. 6; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 43 Edw. III. In spite of the care with which the conveyance was made, Ralph Grene, the son and heir of Sir Henry Grene and Maud his wife, granddaughter and heir of John Mauduit, in 1413 sued Sir Thomas Wykeham for the manor as his inheritance. He was not, however, successful in regaining the manor (De Banc. R. Trin. 1 Hen. V, m. 125), and two years later remitted all right he had in it to Thomas (Close, 3 Hen. V, m. 23).
<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 16 Ric. II.
<sup>28</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xv (2), 61.
<sup>29</sup> Chan. Enr. Decree, no. 1, 88; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 1 Edw. VI; ibid. Hants, Trin. 28 Eliz.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. East. 32 Eliz.; Recov. R. East. 32 Eliz. rot. 11.
<sup>31</sup> P.C.C. Will 52 Windebanck.
<sup>32</sup> Ashe par. reg.
<sup>33</sup> The name of one of John Harwood's sons—Deane (Ashe par. reg.)—makes it seem probable that he had married the daughter and heiress of James Deane.
<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 3 Anne; Recov. R. Hil. 3 Anne, m. 112; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 14 Geo. II; East. 27 Geo. III; Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 206.
<sup>35</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Ellice Hicks Beach.
<sup>36</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. I, no. 41.
<sup>37</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 11 Edw. II.
<sup>38</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 329.

century, when it passed by sale from Richard Fiennes to the yeoman family of Ayliffe. The Ayliffes only held the estate for a generation, selling it in 1620 to George Wither,<sup>39</sup> on whose death unmarried in 1666 it passed to his nephew Gilbert Wither, rector of Deane. Gilbert Wither died in 1676, leaving a son Charles Wither,<sup>40</sup> on whose death in 1697 it passed to his son and heir Charles. Charles died in 1731, his only son Charles having predeceased him, and the property consequently passed to his daughter Henrietta Maria, who had married Edmund Bramston of Boreham<sup>41</sup> (co. Essex). Wither Bramston, of Hall large single-pointed lights. The cornice is a heavy moulded one and the parapet is embattled with crocketed pinnacles at the corners. The ceilings of the nave and chancel are of pointed barrel shape in plaster.

The altar, pulpit, font, &c., are all modern. In the two small windows of the south porch are two figures in early 16th-century stained glass, that in the west window being St. Christopher, while the other is a saint holding a monstrance.

There are five bells, all by James Wells of Aldbourne, 1821.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1570; a silver flagon of 1694 given by Elizabeth widow first of Gilbert Wither of Hall and afterwards of Dr. Watson Dean of Battle in Sussex; two cruets and an alms plate and a silver tazza cup of 1551 inscribed 'ex dono Dorotheae Wither de Hall viduae 1698.'

The first book of the registers contains baptisms and marriages from 1659 to 1785 and marriages from 1679 to 1772; in this book is a note to the effect that from 2 July 1763 to 5 February 1764 there were seldom two dry days together in the seven months, and sometimes twenty days' rain together; the waters rose at Deane on 7 January and there was no passing for foot people until after Lady Day; it describes how the graves were filled with water, and wells rose, &c.

The second book has the printed marriages from 1761 to 1812, and the third baptisms from 1787 and burials from 1786 to 1812.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Deane followed the same descent as the manor until 1608,<sup>42</sup> when in accordance with Sir James Deane's will it passed to his cousin Simon Holdip, then parson of Ashe and Deane.<sup>43</sup> Andrew Holdip son of Simon sold the advowson to George Wither of Hall in 1660,<sup>44</sup> and from this date the owners of Hall or Oakley Hall have presented the rectors,<sup>45</sup> the patron at the present time being Major William Archibald Hicks Beach.

This parish is entitled to elect two CHARITIES poor widows to the almshouse established in Basingstoke by will of Sir James Deane, dated in 1607.

The Wither and Bramston Charity, regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 1 April 1884. (See under Oakley Church, hundred of Chuteley.)

In 1905 the sum of £5 4s. was paid to Deane Sunday School and £11 to the Deane Church Fund.

BRAMSTON. Or a fesse sable with three roundels argent thereon.

WITHER. Argent a cheveron gules between three crescents sable.

Place, son of Edmund and Henrietta Maria, died without issue in 1832, when the estate passed to William Hicks Beach, the son of his first cousin Henrietta Maria, the wife of Michael Hicks Beach, who by royal licence six years later dropped the name of Hicks and retained that of Beach only.<sup>42</sup> The present owner of Oakley Hall is his grandson Major William Archibald Hicks Beach son of the Right Hon. William Wither Bramston Beach.

The church of ALL SAINTS was CHURCH built in 1818 in the Gothic style of the period; the exterior is wholly covered with cement. It has a chancel 23 ft. 8 in. by 21 ft. 8 in.; nave 37 ft. 6 in. by 21 ft. 8 in.; south porch and west tower 11 ft. 4 in. square.

The east window of the chancel is a large pointed light with carved jambs and a large crocketed label inside, and in the south wall is a single light. On the north are two window-shaped panels and a blocked doorway, and a stone screen of three bays divides the chancel from the nave. The latter has two windows a side, each of two lights, and a doorway at the south-west. The tower, which is of three stages, has sham windows on the north and south in the two lowest stages and a west window like those of the nave; the bell-chamber walls are pierced by

<sup>39</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Ellice Hicks Beach.

<sup>40</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 76.

<sup>41</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 256-7.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid.

<sup>43</sup> Pat. 18 Edw. I, m. 21; Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 10; Pat. 31 Edw. I, m. 10; Inq. p.m. 32 Edw. I, no. 4; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 487; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 36;

Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 40, 125, 140; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>44</sup> P.C.C. Will 52 Windebanck.

<sup>45</sup> Thoyts, Hist. of Esse or Ashe, 56.

<sup>46</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

LAVERSTOKE

Lavrochestoche, Laverkestok (xii cent.); Laverstok (xiii cent.); Larchestoke (xvi cent.).

The parish of Laverstoke is a long narrow strip of land 6 miles long and not more than a mile in breadth stretching from the Port Way, leading from Silchester to Salisbury in the north, to the main road from Stockbridge to Basingstoke in the south, and bounded on the east by Overton and on the west by Whitchurch and Freefolk. Through the centre of the parish from east to west flows the River Test. Here the ground is low-lying, but it slopes up gradually towards the north and south, a height of 493 ft. above the ordnance datum being attained in Ridgeway Copse in the north.

Laverstoke House, standing in a park of 275 acres which slopes down to the right bank of the river, is a fine mansion built by Harry Portal in 1798 from the designs of the well-known architect Joseph Bonomi, A.R.A. The former Laverstoke House, which was then demolished, was a brick-built late Tudor edifice with gabled and mullioned windows. It stood on the lower ground in the Park near the south-western side of the old parish church of St. Mary.<sup>1</sup> Along the left bank of the Test, following closely the course of that river, runs the main road from Basingstoke to Andover. The soil is light, the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats and turnips. The area is 1,966 acres, comprising 145 acres of arable land and 201 acres of permanent grass.<sup>2</sup> Among place-names mentioned in early records are Brokforlong, Westhanstygh, La Slade and Prouesdell<sup>3</sup> (xiii cent.).

LAVERSTOKE from an early date MANOR formed part of the possessions of Hyde Abbey (the abbey of St. Peter by Winchester as it was then termed), and in the reign of Edward the Confessor was held of it by a certain Wulfifu surnamed Betteslau.<sup>4</sup> On her death, according to the entry in Domesday Book, William the Conqueror for the repose of his own soul and that of his wife restored the manor to the abbey.<sup>5</sup> This statement, however, is slightly erroneous. It was really Maud the wife of William the Conqueror who made the restitution, as is evident from a charter contained in a cartulary of the abbey, whereby Maud queen of the English restored the manor which 'Wluve bettes laf' held of the abbey for the term of her life to 'Rivallonus' the abbot, and the brethren of the New Minster for the health of the bodies and souls of herself, her husband and her children, and in order that Wulfifu might be deemed worthy of a place in the orisons of the brethren.<sup>6</sup> Free warren in their demesne lands in Laverstoke was granted to the abbey by Edward III, and the manor remained in the possession of the abbey until its dissolution. It then became the property of the Crown,<sup>7</sup> and in 1539 Henry VIII sold the manor and advowson for £389 19s. 2d. to Richard Andrewes of Freefolk,<sup>8</sup> reserving a rent of £2 2s. 5½d. Richard Andrewes died three years later, leaving three infant daughters, Katherine, Constance and Ursula.<sup>9</sup> In 1544 Laverstoke was assigned as dower to Katherine, Richard's widow, who married as her second husband William Fortescue. In 1562 Katherine and William made good their title to the manor,<sup>10</sup> and they were still living in 1570, in which year Richard Lambert and Constance his wife, the second daughter of Richard Andrewes, died seised of the reversion of the third part of the manor after the death of ANDREWES of Freefolk. Argent a chevron engrailed gules between three molets sable with three quatrefoils or on the chevron.

Katherine the wife of William Fortescue.<sup>11</sup> The heir of Richard and Constance was their son Thomas, a minor. The other daughters of Richard Andrewes, Katherine and Ursula, married respectively John Paulet of Herriard and Henry Norris.<sup>12</sup> Ursula died without issue, and in 1582, on the death of Katherine Fortescue, a partition of property was made between Katherine widow of John Paulet and Thomas Lambert as co-heirs of Richard Andrewes, the former taking the manors of Freefolk and Chalgrove subject to a rent-charge of £20 to Thomas Lambert and his heirs, and the latter Laverstoke.<sup>13</sup> Thomas obtained a grant of free warren in Laverstoke from James I in 1619,<sup>14</sup> and was shortly afterwards knighted. He died seised of the manor in 1621, leaving a son and heir Thomas, aged thirty-five,<sup>15</sup> who died four years later, his heir being his son Robert, aged eight.<sup>16</sup> In 1636 it became known that Robert intended to sell the manor immediately he attained his majority. Intending purchasers were numerous, Dr. Matthew Nicholas going so far as to survey the property for his brother Edward. An interesting description of the manor is contained in a letter which he wrote to his brother on the subject on 16 January 1636.<sup>17</sup> He describes the

<sup>1</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Cott. MS. Domit. xiv, fol. 134.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472a.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> Cott. MS. Domit. xiv, fol. 131; Harl. MS. 1761, fol. 152. Walkelin, Bishop of Winchester, and Hugh de Port witnessed this charter. This date is evidently between 1072 (in which year Rivallonus or Reivalan was consecrated abbot) and 1083 (in which year Queen Maud died). The statement that Queen

Maud, daughter of the King of Scotland and wife of King Henry I, gave Laverstoke, with 10 hides, to the abbey (Dugdale, Mon. ii, 436) is thus found to be incorrect. Possibly the grant quoted by Dugdale may merely indicate a confirmation charter.

<sup>7</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 239b; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 213; Pat. 3 Edw. II, m. 3; Close, 3 Edw. II, m. 2 d.; Feud. Aids, ii, 306; Chart. R. 3 Edw. III, m. 16; Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xiii, 16.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. iv, m. 24.

<sup>9</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 991, no. 12.

<sup>10</sup> Memo. R. L.T.R. Mich. 4 Eliz. m. 26.

<sup>11</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 1007, no. 4.

<sup>12</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 330.

<sup>13</sup> Woodward, Hist. of Hants, iii, 245.

<sup>14</sup> Pat. 16 Jas. I, pt. viii, no. 14.

<sup>15</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 32, no. 97.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 1 Chas. I, pt. ii, no. 75.

<sup>17</sup> S.P. Dom. Chas. I, cccliv, 21.

house as 'a very fayre brick built house not big, but as it seems of a good receipt seated harde by the water but so high from it that it is not nor can be any whit annoyed by it, besides that water is between the sunne and the house which makes it the healthier.' However, he laments the lack of stable accommodation, but praises the country as excellent for hawking and hunting, describes the River Test as but small but 'a cleare streame such as should seem to breed good trout,' and finally concludes that he does not know of 'a finer seat anywhere to the value after a few conveniences supplied at a little charge.' The obstacles in the way of completing the purchase were so numerous, however, that Dr. Matthew Nicholas in another letter to his brother writes: 'If there had not been a divine hand against you, I cannot think how you should not have been fitted ere this time.'<sup>18</sup> The manor was ultimately sold in 1637 to Thomas Hussey.<sup>19</sup> Thomas sold it about 1653 to Sir John Trott,<sup>20</sup> and for some time after this the manor followed the same descent as Ashe, passing from the Trotts to the Stewkleys and from the Stewkleys to the Shuckburghs. On the death of Sir John Shuckburgh in 1724 Laverstoke passed to his son and heir Sir Stewkley Shuckburgh,<sup>21</sup> who sold the property for £9,500 to James Dawkins in 1754.<sup>22</sup> In 1759 the latter sold the manor to Joseph Portal, and from this time it has remained in the Portal family. Joseph Portal died in 1793. He was succeeded by his son Harry, who died unmarried in 1801. Harry Portal's heir was his brother William of Ashe Park, who died in 1846, leaving an only daughter, and the estate consequently passed to his brother John of Freefolk Priors, who died two years later. John Portal's heir was his son Melville, who died in 1904 and was succeeded by his brother Sir Wyndham Spencer Portal, bart., of Malshanger, who died in 1905, leaving a son and heir Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart., who is the present owner.<sup>23</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two mills in Laverstoke<sup>24</sup>—both probably worked by the River Test. In course of time one of these fell into disuse, one water-mill only being included in the sale of Laverstoke Manor to Thomas Hussey in 1637.<sup>25</sup> Its site is marked by Laverstoke Mill which Henry Portal held on a ninety-nine years' lease from 1718 'at the yearly rent of £5 payable half-yearly to Sir Stewkley during his life and after his decease to Dame Abigail if she survived him

. . . and also one reame of fine foolscap paper neatly cut.' This mill was rebuilt in 1719, and in 1724 employed by Henry Portal for the manufacture of the paper for the Bank of England notes, to which purpose it has been continuously devoted to the present time.<sup>26</sup>

PORTAL, of Laverstoke, baronet. Party saltirewise azure and gules a castle argent and a chief ermine with a crescent azure between two molets gules therein.

The old parish church of ST. MARY THE VIRGIN consists of chancel 18 ft. 8 in. by 13 ft. 4 in. and a nave 28 ft. 10 in. by 19 ft. 3 in. It became a mortuary chapel for the Portal family in 1874–5 and stands in the grounds of Laverstoke House. At that date the east wall was rebuilt, the chancel floor was raised to allow headroom for a vault beneath and the remaining walls of the building were refaced. The eastern angles of the nave have quoins of very early character, probably pre-Conquest, and parts of the north and south walls of flint rubble are of the same date. The west end of the church has been rebuilt.

The chancel has a blocked 13th-century lancet in the north wall and a trefoiled lancet, also blocked, in the south wall. It is lighted by a small east window and a two-light window with trefoiled heads in the south wall, both being modern. The chancel arch is old and has one chamfered order which springs from the walls of the chancel and is without a base or label. It is perhaps of 13th-century date.

The nave has two north and two south windows, each being a modern single trefoiled lancet.

Between the two windows of the north wall in the rebuilt portion is a blocked doorway which has square jambs and a large irregular lintel on which is a mark which appears to be a sundial: it cannot of course in that case be in its original position. Opposite this in the south wall is another blocked doorway which has square jambs and a segmental head, all of old stonework. There is little evidence of its date, but it is, at any rate in its present condition, not very early. The west doorway is modern. The walls are of flint and stone, the new parts being full of old stones, moulded and plain built in. The roofs are tiled and at the west end of the nave is a wooden bell-turret with a small shingled spire. In the turret is one bell dated 1624. The roofs are of old timbers both in the chancel and nave.

In the chancel are several 17th-century monuments to the family of Trott, including one to Katherine wife of Sir Hugh Stewkley and daughter of Sir John Trott, who died in 1679. It has a very quaint inscription and a large white marble bust in a canopy. Another is to Sir John Trott, 1672, set up by his widow Elizabeth, afterwards wife of the Honourable James Russell. She died in 1693. There are also monuments to John Trott, 1658, and to his wife Katherine, 1661, and to John son of Sir John Trott, 1664, and Edmund his brother, 1667. All are very good examples in black and white marble.

The nave is full of the Portal monuments, two modern ones to Sir Gerald Portal, 1893, Melville Portal, 1904, and his wife Lady Charlotte Portal, 1899.

The modern church of ST. MARY THE VIRGIN is a well-proportioned structure built of flint and stone in 1896 to serve as the parish church for the combined parishes of Laverstoke and Freefolk. It is in the style of the 13th century and has a chancel 30 ft. by 18 ft. 6 in., nave 55 ft. by 20 ft. 3 in., north aisle 9 ft. 9 in. wide, south transept 12 ft. square, above and iv, 3219 (John Trott of Laverstoke).

<sup>18</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1636–7, p. 455.

<sup>19</sup> Feet of F. Hanta, Mich. 13 Chas. I.

<sup>20</sup> Cl. Cal. of Com. for Comp. iv, 3017 (Thomas Hussey, M.P., of Laverstoke)

<sup>21</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 12 Geo. II, m. 172.

<sup>22</sup> Close, 28 Geo. II, pt. xi, no. 12.

<sup>23</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

<sup>24</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472a.

<sup>25</sup> Feet of F. Hanta, Mich. 13 Chas. I.

<sup>26</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

which rises a tower, and south porch. The chancel has no east window; the side windows are pairs of lancets with quatrefoils over. An arcade of five bays divides the nave from the north aisle. The nave windows are generally lancets. The porch is an open one of wood. A tall spire rises from the tower and is covered with oak shingles. A stone and marble font is placed at the west end of the aisle; the pulpit is also of stone of 13th-century style. Two old monuments are placed in the church; they were brought from Freefolk Syfrewast Chapel in 1892; this is recorded by inscriptions near the monuments. The larger and older one in the transept is to Sir Richard Powlett, 1614, the full inscription reading: 'Death hath added to the Ornamt of this place ye blessed memorialls of the Right Noble and Worthy Knight Sir Richard Powlett of Heriard by bloud and ancestry descended from Richard Powlett second sonne to Sir John Powlett of Basing, brother to the first Marques of Winton. He married Anne daughter of Sir Henry Wallop of Farley Wallop of Co. of South<sup>n</sup> Knight Tresuror of Warrs in Ireland by whom he had issue only two dgts Lucy married to Sir Thomas Jervoise Kt. and Anne first married to Sir William Younge Kt. After to Richard Hutton Esq<sup>e</sup>, which Anne died without issue. Animam Redemptori reddidit A<sup>o</sup> Salutis 1614. vicesimo Septimo die Julii Anoque aetatis suae 56.' The tomb has a panelled base carrying a flat canopy with Corinthian columns, under which lies the armed effigy of Sir Richard, all the colouring on effigy and tomb being carefully renewed. The effigy is well executed, but in a very stiff posture, lying on its right side, with the right hand on a helm and the feet on gauntlets. In a niche between two panels in the base are the two kneeling figures of his daughters. At the back is the inscription with an hour-glass on one side and a death's head on the other in strapwork cartouches. The frieze above has various shields of arms. The soffit of the canopy is enriched with roses. Over it is a pediment with pinnacles, obelisks, &c., and a Paulet shield of 28 quarters in a strapwork border. There are nine other smaller shields on the monument, all repainted, and some of them have as usual been incorrectly coloured. Those on the base appear to be Wallop impaling Gifford, and Paulet between Young and Hutton, the latter referring to the second daughter's marriages.

The other monument is a wall tablet to Thomas Deane, who died in 1686, and Anne his wife, daughter of William Farr, who died in 1706.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten of 1669 with the arms of Sir John Trott and an inscription, 'Leverstoke June 10 . 70'; a pair of patens of 1738 given respectively by Miss Mordaunt and Miss Collins in that year; a circular cup of 1869 used as a chalice; a silver-gilt chalice of 1892; two silver-gilt patens of 1886 and 1891; a flagon of 1890; a pair of glass cruets with silver mounts of 1864; another pair with silver-gilt mounts of 1891, and a silver-gilt spoon of 1805. The silver-gilt service was given by the late C. Swinburne of Andover.

The registers are kept at Freefolk and are in three books, the first containing baptisms and burials from 1657 to 1812, and marriages 1657 to 1754, and also several briefs dating from 1709. The second book contains marriages from 1760 to 1804, and the third also marriages from 1808 to 1811.

A church existed in the parish at ADVOWSON the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>27</sup>

Its annual value was returned as £14 13s. 4d. in 1291,<sup>28</sup> £8 10s. in 1535,<sup>29</sup> and as 'not fourscore pounds' in 1636.<sup>30</sup>

The rectory was united with the vicarage or perpetual curacy of Freefolk Syfrewast in 1872, and from this time the benefice became the united benefice of Laverstoke-cum-Freefolk.<sup>31</sup>

On 15 November 1872, upon application of Melville Portal, the patron of the benefice, and with the unanimous consent of the vestry, a faculty was granted by Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Winchester, declaring that the church of Freefolk Syfrewast should from henceforth be the parish church of the benefice, and that the church of St. Mary Laverstoke should from henceforth be a mortuary chapel only. The conversion of the church into a mortuary chapel was completed in 1876 by Mr. Melville Portal under the direction of Mr. Woodyer as architect, at a cost of about £2,000.

The advowson has throughout followed the same descent as the manor, the patron at the present time being Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.<sup>32</sup>

The parsonage house and the schoolhouse were built in 1858 and 1860 respectively, by Mr. Melville Portal from the design of Mr. G. Street, R.A.

OVERTON

Uferantun (x cent.); Ovetune (xi cent.).

Overton is a large parish containing 6,762 acres and extending in length from the Port Way—the road from Salisbury to Silchester—on the north to the main road from Stockbridge to Basingstoke in the south. Through the centre of the parish and almost parallel with one another run the Basingstoke and Salisbury branch of the London and South Western railway, the River Test and the main road from Basingstoke to Andover. The principal part of the village is on and near the main road on the left bank of the river, but St. Mary's Church, the rectory, Court House and Court Farm lie together on the right bank. Overton station is about half a mile north of the village. To the south of the station is Quidhampton, where the River Test forms a large pond. The old farm-house here was originally the manor-house of Quidhampton. Further east by the river is Polhampton, originally 'Pool-hampton' Farm,<sup>1</sup> marking the site of the manor of Polhampton. Berry-

<sup>27</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 472a.

<sup>28</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212.

<sup>29</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 15.

<sup>30</sup> S.P. Dom. Chas. I, cccxlv, 21.

<sup>31</sup> London Gaz. 13 Aug. 1872, p. 3583.

<sup>32</sup> Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 31 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 82, 100, 187, 200, 204; Egerton MS. 2034, fol.

48, 80 d., 100 d., 140; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> The Test here widens out into a large pond in which watercress is cultivated.

DEANE CHURCH FROM THE SOUTH-EAST

LAVERSTOKE : OLD PARISH CHURCH, NOW MORTUARY CHAPEL OF THE PORTAL FAMILY

down Court near the eastern boundary of the parish is the residence of Mr. Edward Ernest Cooper. The hamlet of Southington with Southington House, the residence of Lieut.-Col. Bertram Percy Portal, D.S.O., is situated about a quarter of a mile west of the village on the main road, while the hamlet of Northington lies the other side of the river on the western borders of the parish. The ground is low-lying on the banks of the river, but quickly rises both towards the north and south, heights of 576 ft. and 484 ft. above the ordnance datum being registered in the north and south respectively. The subsoil is chalk. About two-thirds of the parish is arable land, about a sixth pasture and a sixth woodland.<sup>2</sup> The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. Among place-names mentioned in 15th-century records are Portewey, Goselane,<sup>3</sup> Mosedene, Ravenhill, Sappley Mede, Collesham, Cotelestrete, Foxdowne<sup>4</sup> and Kyrkebyesmede,<sup>5</sup> while among those given in 1649 are Southley Wood, West Harrow Field, East Harrow Field, Ramehill Field, Sheephouse Field, Winchester Field and Whitehill Close.<sup>6</sup>

The mesne borough of OVERTON BOROUGH first appears in the early years of Henry III, and the royal grant<sup>7</sup> to the Bishop of Winchester of a market in his manor of Overton (May 1218) may have been obtained at the time when burgage-tenure was introduced. At Michaelmas 1219 Richard the bishop's serjeant and Alured the reeve accounting for the manor acknowledged £3 os. 2d. received as the borough issues, and these are set out in detail on the roll<sup>8</sup> by the same serjeant and Edmund the borough reeve. In the first list of burgage rents 19 burgesses are named, but two of these held more than one burgage, Edmund Gel, who had three, and a certain Joseph, who had two. Among significant names of the remaining holders are those of Walter the merchant, Gilbert Parmenter, Herbert the Miller and a woman, Maud the daughter of Alured. The original rents were fixed at 2*s.* a year. Among other receipts in 1219 Richard of Waltham was charged 6*s. 8d.* 'pro fine vilenagii et pro burgagio habendo,' and other burgage fines of varying amount were paid both by the original burgesses and by newcomers.

In the next year<sup>9</sup> some of the original burgesses were adding to their holdings, but the smith paid 1*8d.* 'pro burgagio dimittendo.' Amercements for bad ale swelled the total receipt to £3 6*s.*, which was this year handed over to Denis, clerk of the bishop's treasury at Wolvesey. In 1221<sup>10</sup> the assized rent was £2 14*s.*, but the increment added nearly 17*s.* more, and besides the payments for burgages and half-burgages we hear that Herbert the Miller gave 9*d.* 'for a small place in the marsh,' and Hugh de St. Philibert 3*s. 4½d.* 'for 4½ places in the same marsh.' The total receipt of £3 16*s. 4½d.* was this year paid to Andrew the manorial reeve, and a similar disposition of the issues seems to have prevailed during the remainder of the pontificate of Peter des Roches. By 1236 the Gable of Assizes<sup>11</sup> had risen to £3 19*s. 8½d.* and the net receipts to £4 8*s. 2½d.*

On 8 February 1246 the king not only confirmed<sup>12</sup> the weekly market with a change of day from Tuesday to Monday, but also granted a fair on the eve, feast and morrow of the Translation of St. Thomas of Canterbury (7 July). The effect of this grant is shown by the increased issues. By 1249 the net assized rent<sup>13</sup> and increment had risen to £7 15*s. 7d.* and we hear of a seld let for 16*s.* The 10*s.* farm derived from Freefolk was now included in the Overton budget, and this with the increased perquisites of court brought the total receipts to £10 12*s. 7d.*, which were all collected and paid to Sir Roger de Alynton at Wolvesey as well as 17*s. 5d.* arrears.

It is possible that Overton suffered directly or indirectly during the Barons' War, for an account<sup>14</sup> of uncertain date belonging to the episcopate of Bishop Gervais is burdened with arrears of over £9. The townsmen fell behind again in the time of his successor, as in the eleventh year<sup>15</sup> of Bishop Nicholas of Ely (? 1279), although the sum total of receipts should have reached £12 12*s. 1½d.* only £2 10*s.* was paid to Sir William de Cumbe at Wolvesey and the rest remained as debt, owing to the necessity of first satisfying the existing arrears. In the previous year<sup>16</sup> it had been found that a seld was ruinous and its repair had cost 4*s. 4d.* In spite of temporary difficulties from war, pestilence or disease Overton was sufficiently important in 1295 to send Baker (Pistor) and William Horn as members to Parliament.<sup>17</sup> About fifteen years later<sup>18</sup> we know that the assized rent of the town was estimated at £8 1*s. 9½d.* net, allowance being made for the reeve's remitted burgage, rent of 2*s.* and a trifling default. Sixteen selds and 38 stalls were let at 10*s. 8d.* and 17*s.* respectively, while the perquisites of the Martinmas and Hockday tourns and four other courts amounted to £2 13*s.* The sum total of the receipts, £12 os. 9½d., was paid in full to Sir Simon the treasurer at Wolvesey. From the Black Death the town suffered considerably. The account<sup>19</sup> made up at Michaelmas 1349 shows that four burgages at 'Langepoule' had come into the bishop's hands, as well as one burgage in the borough proper and half a burgage, apparently 2 acres of land in 'la Coumb juxta Garnor.' The seldage and stallage had also fallen off owing to the pestilence; but eight selds more let at 8*d.* a seld, and twenty 'stallagia' at 2*d.* a piece. Still more significant was the drop in the perquisites of the courts. The Martinmas tourn was not held at all, a court before the Hockday tourn produced nothing, the Hockday

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bble. 95, no. 159500½.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. bble. 96, no. 159500½. There are a Foxdown and a Sappley Farm in the parish at the present day.

<sup>5</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xvii, 28.

<sup>6</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xix, no. 30. Southley Cope marks the site of Southley Wood, and White Hill, Whitehill Cottages, and Upper Whitehill Farm that of Whitehill Close.

<sup>7</sup> Close, 2 Hen. III, m. 5.

<sup>8</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bble. 22, no. 159275.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. bble. 22, no. 159276.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. bble. 22, no. 159277.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. bble. 23, no. 159284.

<sup>12</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 312.

<sup>13</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bble. 24, no. 159290.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. bble. 55, no. 159458½.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. bble. 26, no. 159304.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. bble. 26, no. 159303.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Parl. Writs (Rec. Com.), i, p. lxxvi. Owing to the expense the borough was discharged from its parliamentary responsibilities after 1306.

<sup>18</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bble. 55, no. 1595458½ (7 Bishop H. [Woodlock]).

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. bble. 35, no. 159358. 'Langepoule' probably survives in the modern 'Lampole' between Overton village and Quidhampton (ex inform. the Rev. G. N. Stenning).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

court itself 10s. 7d., and a court held between that and Michaelmas only one penny. Nevertheless the treasury at Wolvesey received £6 16s. 8d., but £2 12s. 4½d. was left in arrear. The second pestilence of 1361 does not appear to have been so destructive in Overton borough as in some other districts of Hampshire, but the effects of the repeated plagues of the 14th century were lasting.

In the reign of Henry VI very many lands and tenements were still in the hands of the bishop through default of an heir.<sup>20</sup> However, under the Tudors the town recovered its prosperity to some extent, and the reeve was able to pay the bishop large arrears of rent.<sup>21</sup> A new fulling mill<sup>22</sup> was built, the art of fulling was revived and the place received a large increase in population,<sup>23</sup> while in 1519 Thomas Wolsey, Bishop of Winchester, obtained licence to hold an additional fair at Overton on the eve, the feast and the morrow of the Feast of St. George the Martyr<sup>24</sup> (22–4 April). With the increase in prosperity came a desire for greater power, the freeholders began to choose their own officers—port-reeve, constable, bailiffs, beer-tasters and leather-sealers—at the court leet of the borough,<sup>25</sup> and in the reign of Elizabeth made a determined stand for liberty of action, asserting that from time immemorial there had been a corporation in Overton consisting of a port-reeve or prepositus, two bailiffs and all the freeholders, and that the port-reeve chosen by this corporation, as chief officer of the borough, was empowered to direct the two annual fairs and the weekly market, to supervise the setting up of the coops and stalls, to collect the market dues, and to manage Port-reeve's Meadow and 1 carucate of land and a meadow in Freefolk, paying £8 a year in return to the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>26</sup> They chose Edward Boroughe to be their port-reeve, who in his turn farmed out the office to John Dowse and Thomas Sweetapple.<sup>27</sup> William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, on the other hand, in 1585 leased for twenty-one years at a rent of £12 2s. 0½d. the office of port-reeve and collector of the market dues, rents of assize, and rents from Port-reeve's Meadow and the lands in Freefolk (excepting and reserved to the bishop and his successors the fines and perquisites of court of the borough) to Richard Fisher, Robert Francis, Francis Palmes, William Jefferye, John Hall, William Hunt and Hugh Denbye.<sup>28</sup> The crisis came on the eve of St. George's Day, 1587, when a broil between the lessees under the Bishop of Winchester and Edward Boroughe's deputies was only averted by the prompt action of Sir William Kingsmill, Richard Fiennes and John Fisher, justices of peace for the county. The case was brought into the Court of Chancery, which, after a careful examination into the ancient books of accounts and records of the bishopric, decided that there was no corporation in Overton and that the port-reeve and freeholders of the borough had no right to the profits of the fairs and markets, and therefore gave its judgement in favour of the lessees under the bishop.<sup>29</sup> From this date the bishop received every year from the reeve, who for the time being held the borough on lease, certain sums for reliefs and perquisites of court and a fixed sum of £12 2s. 0½d. rents of assize, from which was deducted every year £2 for the poor of Overton in accordance with an indenture of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.<sup>30</sup> The lessee of the fair now pays £4 annually.

Overton is at the present day a prosperous place especially noted for its sheep and lamb fair held on 18 July, the average number of sheep penned being 30,000. During the 18th century two other fairs were held—on 4 May and 22 October respectively,<sup>31</sup> but these have since been discontinued. Overton had a local trade in silk manufacture in the 18th century,<sup>32</sup> a silk factory being marked in Faden's map of Hampshire (1791). This has now disappeared, but its site is still marked by a group of cottages called Silk Mill Cottages.

The manor of OVERTON belonged MANORS to the bishopric of Winchester from an early date, and was confirmed to Frithstan, Bishop of Winchester, by King Edward the Elder in 909.<sup>33</sup> The Domesday Survey states that 'the bishop himself holds Overton in demesne; it always belonged to the bishopric,' assessing it at 41 hides with a rateable value of £50.<sup>34</sup> The Bishops of Winchester continued to hold the manor among the other possessions of the see<sup>35</sup> until 1649, when, under the ordinances of 1646 for the sale of the bishops' property, it was sold to Thomas Andrew, a London merchant.<sup>36</sup> At the Restoration it was given back to the bishopric,<sup>37</sup> and from this time successive Bishops of Winchester retained their hold upon it until the Bishops' Resignation Act of 1869 vested all the lands, tithes, hereditaments and endowments there belonging to the bishopric of Winchester in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.<sup>38</sup> The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are still lords of the manor, although the whole of the parish, with the exception of a small quantity of land, belongs to Sir William

DIocese of WINCHESTER. Gules St. Peter's keys crossed with St. Paul's sword.

<sup>20</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 93, no. 159500½; bdle. 96, no. 159500½; bdle. 97, no. 159500½.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. <sup>22</sup> Called New Mill.

<sup>23</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 95, no. 159500½; bdle. 96, no. 159500½; bdle. 97, no. 159500½.

<sup>24</sup> Pat. 11 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 22.

<sup>25</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. bdle. 88, no. 4; bdle. 89, no. 1; bdle. 90, no. 3, 6; bdle. 91, no. 1, 2.

<sup>26</sup> That this was not so is clearly seen by the minister's account of Overton. Thus in 1572 the port-reeve paid the bishop £10 2s. 3½d., this sum including £8 5s. 2½d. rents of assize, 1s. 4d. new rents, 19s. seldage and profits of fairs, 2s. 2d. reliefs, and 6s. 11d. perquisites of court; while the sum accounted for two years later was £10 12s. 5½d. (Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 96, no. 159500½; bdle. 97, no. 159500½).

<sup>27</sup> Vide Chan. Enr. Dec. 67, no. 5.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid.

<sup>30</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 95, no. 159500½; bdle. 96, no. 159500½; bdle. 97, no. 159500½.

<sup>31</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 123; Warner, Hist. of Hants, ii, 81; Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 297–300.

<sup>34</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 461a.

<sup>35</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 190; Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 186; Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 248–9; Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 23 d.; Chart. R. 12 Edw. I, m. 5; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215; Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>36</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xix, no. 30.

<sup>37</sup> Thomas Andrew continued to hold the manor of the bishop under a lease for three lives (vide Chan. Enr. Dec. 1765, no. 2).

<sup>38</sup> Lond. Gaz. 1 Apr., 1870.

Wyndham Portal, bart., the owner of the adjoining estates of Freefolk and Laverstoke.

Among valuable appurtenances of the manor were a warren called Willesley Warren, a fishery in the Test, and various mills worked by that river. The warren together with 'The Logge' in the 15th century was let for £9 a year,<sup>39</sup> but in the next century the rent was raised to £10 and the annual payment of thirty-six couple of rabbits.<sup>40</sup> In 1585 the Bishop of Winchester leased the warren for forty years from Michaelmas 1602 to Queen Elizabeth, who transferred the lease six years later to Robert Mason.<sup>41</sup> In 1648, under the ordinance for the sale of the bishop's lands, the commissioners sold the 'warren and game of coneyes called Willesley Warren near Overton . . . and a little house called The Lodge formerly standing in the said warren but now demolished' to Thomas Hussey of Laverstoke,<sup>42</sup> but it was returned to the bishopric at the Restoration. In the course of the 18th century the payment in kind was commuted to an additional payment of 2s. 8d.<sup>43</sup> Willesley ceased to be a warren on 10 December 1751.<sup>44</sup>

Four mills of the annual value of £3 2s. 6d. belonged to the manor of Overton at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>45</sup> In 1446 the mills of the vill and La Lynch with a fishery were let to Walter Milleward and William Egerton for a rent of £9 6s. 8d.<sup>46</sup> There was also an empty plot called New Mill, but the mill itself had not yet been built.<sup>47</sup> This had been done at the beginning of the 16th century, the fulling mill called New Mill with a fishery being let at 8s. a year.<sup>48</sup> By the reign of Henry VIII £10 a year was paid for the farm of three mills, of which two were under one roof called Lynch Mills, £1 for the New Mill, while the fishery was let separately for 6s. 8d. a year and the payment of a dish of fishes, value 8d., to the bishop's officer at every tourn held at Overton.<sup>49</sup> In the deed of sale to Thomas Andrew in 1648 the mills appurtenant to the manor are thus described—'a mill called The Burrough Mill or Towne Mill consisting of two water corn-mills, a mill commonly called Lynch Mill, and a corn-mill formerly a fulling-mill.'<sup>50</sup> From the Bishop of Winchester's leasehold book for 1761 it appears that there were three mills belonging to the manor<sup>51</sup>—Overton or Town Mill, Lynch Mill and New Mill, let respectively to George Small, Henry Portal and Joseph Portal. At the present day there are three mills in the parish, Town Mill, Southington Mill or Lynch Mill and Quidhampton Mill or New Mill. The first-named, owned by Sir William Portal, bart., is connected with the Laverstoke paper mills, while the two latter are flour-mills.

Half a knight's fee in SOUTHINGTON (Suthampton, Southampton, xiv cent.) was held of the Bishop of Winchester by Edward Jardyns, and from him passed to John Jardyns, who was holding in 1346.<sup>52</sup> It was next held by William Sparks,<sup>53</sup> from whom for lack of an heir owing to the plague it escheated to the bishop as overlord.<sup>54</sup> From this date the bishop leased it out together with the rest of the demesne lands of the manor.

The manor of POLHAMPTON (Polhaematun, x cent.; Polemetune, xi cent.; Polhanton, xiii cent.; Pollampton, xvi cent.; Pollington, xvii cent.) as part of the ancient demesne of the Crown was granted by King Edmund to the religious woman Ætheldryth in 940,<sup>55</sup> and by King Edwy to his thegn Byrnric in 956.<sup>56</sup> It was held by Tosti in the reign of Edward the Confessor, and by William Bertram at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>57</sup> The manor continued in the Bertram family until the beginning of the 13th century, when, on the loss of Normandy, Robert Bertram,<sup>58</sup> forfeited his English lands, and Polhampton among them fell to the Crown. In 1205 King John granted 100 shillingsworth of land in Polhampton, which had belonged to Robert Bertram, to Baldwin de Betun Earl of Albemarle.<sup>59</sup> He seems subsequently to have granted the residue of Robert Bertram's property in Polhampton to William de Fay, who held it until 1225, in which year Henry III granted it to William de Fortibus Earl of Albemarle,<sup>60</sup> step-son of Baldwin. On the death of William in 1241 the manor passed to his son William de Fortibus Earl of Albemarle,<sup>61</sup> who died in 1256, leaving a son Thomas, aged four.<sup>62</sup> Thomas died unmarried before 1269, and Polhampton consequently went to his only surviving sister and sole heir Avelina, who married Edmund Plantagenet Earl of Lancaster on 6 April 1269, but died without issue five years later,<sup>63</sup> when the manor reverted to the Crown.<sup>64</sup> In 1280 Edward I granted it in dower together with other estates of the annual value of £1,065 16s. 7d. to his mother Queen Eleanor,<sup>65</sup> by whom it was granted for life to her sergeant Adam de Richemund. This grant was confirmed by Edward I in 1291,<sup>66</sup> but Adam must have died soon afterwards, for in 1296 John de Drokensford was holding it at farm of the king for a rent of £10 18s. 4d., out of which sum he was ordered to pay £7 10s. a year to Joan the widow of John de Wanton in recompense for dower which she claimed a cross patty vair.

DE FORTIBUS. Gules

<sup>39</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdl. 97, no. 1595003.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid. bdl. 96, no. 1595003. They were to be paid as follows—twelve pairs on Christmas Day, twelve pairs on Twelfth Night, and twelve pairs on the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and were to be delivered at the place where the household of the bishop and his successors should then be resident.

<sup>41</sup> Pat. 33 Eliz. pt. xiv, m. 8.

<sup>42</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 38.

<sup>43</sup> MS. penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 461a.

<sup>46</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdl. 97, no. 1595003.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid. bdl. 96, no. 1595003. In the reign of Henry VII also the Lynch or Lynch mills were rebuilt at a cost of £19 7s. 7d., the timber used coming from Sapley Wood and Willesley (ibid.).

<sup>49</sup> Ibid.

<sup>50</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xix, no. 30.

<sup>51</sup> MS. penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>52</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 329.

<sup>53</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdl. 96, no. 1595003.

<sup>54</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

<sup>55</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 491.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. iii, 163-4.

<sup>57</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491b.

<sup>58</sup> Probably identical with the Robert who was holding Polhampton in 1167 (Pipe R. 13 Hen. II [Pipe R. Soc.], 190).

<sup>59</sup> Close, 6 John, m. 9.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid. 9 Hen. III, m. 16.

<sup>61</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 56.

<sup>62</sup> Inq. p.m. 44 Hen. III, no. 26.

<sup>63</sup> G.E.C. Complete Peerage, i, 56.

<sup>64</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 3.

<sup>65</sup> Pat. 8 Edw. I, m. 10 d.; 9 Edw. I, m. 17; 14 Edw. I, m. 23.

<sup>66</sup> Ibid. 19 Edw. I, m. 5.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

from the free tenement that had belonged to her husband in the manor of Frant (co. Suss.).<sup>67</sup> In 1310 Edward II granted the manor for life to William de Horwode and Christine his wife at a rent of £10, but shortly afterwards, discovering that it was usually let at £10 18s. 4d., granted them the manor and the pasture called 'Kyngeslese' in the parish of Kingscler to hold by the rent of £12 18s. 4d.—£10 18s. 4d. for the manor and £2 for the pasture, at the same time excusing them the payment of the 18s. 4d.<sup>68</sup> In 1312 William de Horwode received six oaks fit for timber from the forest of Pamber and six beams of the timber felled in that forest in the time of Edward I to repair the houses of the manor,<sup>69</sup> and five years later, in consideration of his good service to the king and Queen Isabel, he was freed from all payment for the manor and pasture during his life, although it was settled that his wife should pay the rent for the premises should she survive him.<sup>70</sup> Yet, in spite of this grant, Edward III immediately after his accession granted the manor to Queen Isabel for life 'in consideration of her services in the matter of the treaty with France and in suppressing the rebellion of the Despensers,'<sup>71</sup> but nine months later, having in the meantime had the claims of the Horwodes brought to his notice, he settled the manor on William and Christine and their issue.<sup>72</sup> In 1328 William de Horwode obtained a grant of free warren in his demesnes of Polhampton,<sup>73</sup> and in 1341 the body of a fugitive serf Edmund son of Richard de Polhampton, who was born on the manor, was restored to him with all his goods.<sup>74</sup> William died seised of the manor in 1349, leaving as his heir his grandson William, son of his son Thomas.<sup>75</sup> On the death of William in 1422 the manor passed to his son and heir William,<sup>76</sup> who died twenty-five years later, leaving a son and heir John,<sup>77</sup> who made proof of his age in 1448.<sup>78</sup> John, the son and heir of the last named, died in 1479, leaving an infant daughter Eleanor as his heir, but six months later his widow Elizabeth gave birth to a posthumous son John, who consequently succeeded to the manor.<sup>79</sup> He died without issue in 1496, and the manor then passed to his uncle Hugh the brother of his father John,<sup>80</sup> who died seised in 1501, leaving as his heirs his four sisters:— (1) Joan wife of Richard Savage; (2) Katherine wife of John or Henry Frith; (3) Alice wife of Thomas Lende and (4) Christine wife of Ingelram Prior.<sup>81</sup> Alice Lende (3) died seised of two messuages, 6 virgates of land and 20s. rent in Polhampton in 1524, leaving as her heir her grandson William Somer, son of Hugh Somer her son by her first husband Stephen Somer,<sup>82</sup> and two years later Katherine Peeter (2) the remarried widow of John Frith died seised of two messuages, 6 virgates of land and 20s. rent in the same place, her heir being her son Henry, aged forty.<sup>83</sup> In 1528 John Prior son and heir of Christine (4) and Ingelram Prior sold his fourth part of the manor to the President and scholars of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.<sup>84</sup> Again, in 1553 William Somer died seised of a portion of the manor, leaving as his heirs Alice wife of Anthony More and daughter of Thomas Hill, son of Robert Hill and Christine his wife, the daughter of Richard Savage and Joan (1), Elizabeth wife of Henry Smith and sister of the last-named Alice, Robert Frith<sup>85</sup> son of Katherine Frith (2), and John Prior son of Christine Prior (4).<sup>86</sup> The manorial rights and the greater part of the manor however, to which was subsequently given the name of the manor of Polhampton, seem to have passed to Christine the daughter and heir of Richard Savage and Joan who married (1) Robert Hill and (2) Richard Vaus<sup>87</sup> She left issue by her first husband,<sup>88</sup> but she evidently settled the manor upon her second husband on her marriage with him,<sup>89</sup> and it consequently passed on his death to Nicholas Vaus, probably his son, who acquired the whole of Robert Frith's property in Polhampton and Overton in 1556.<sup>90</sup> Nicholas Vaus

<sup>67</sup> Council Proc. 24 Edw. I, no. 106 ; Close, 26 Edw. I, m. 6.

<sup>68</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 177, 185. In the grant nothing was said about the rent-charge of £7 10s. on the manor due to Joan de Wanton. She subsequently recovered £75 from William, who in consequence in 1329 owed the king £87 7s. 7½d. of the arrears of the ferm of the manor. On his petition in 1329 the £75 was allowed to him out of the £87 7s. 7½d. (Close, 3 Edw. III, m. 22).

<sup>69</sup> Ibid. 5 Edw. II, m. 7.

<sup>70</sup> Pat. 10 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 20, 21.

<sup>71</sup> Ibid. i Edw. III, pt. i,

<sup>72</sup> Ibid. pt. iii, m. 8; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 83.

<sup>73</sup> Chart. R. 2 Edw. III,

<sup>74</sup> Pat. 14 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 21 ;
5 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 16 d.

<sup>75</sup> Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 65.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid. 10 Hen. V. no. 11.

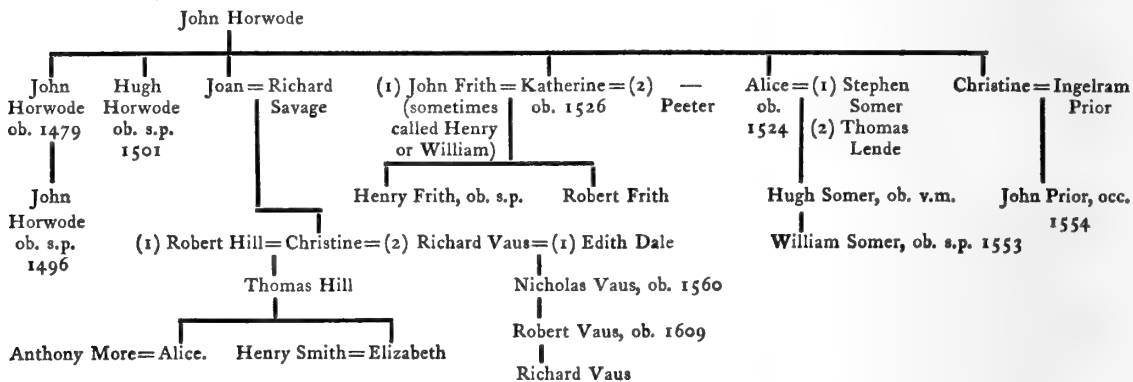

<sup>77</sup> Ibid. 25 Hen. VI, no. 7.

<sup>78</sup> Ibid. 26 Hen. VI, no. 37.

<sup>79</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 16 d.;
inq. p.m. 14 Edw. IV, no. 28.

<sup>80</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 60.

<sup>81</sup> Ibid. xiv, 129. The following chart-pedigree shows more clearly the descent of the manor at this period :—

<sup>82</sup> Ibid. xlv, 115.

<sup>83</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 981, no. 1.

84 Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 20 Hen.
VIII.

<sup>85</sup> By this time Robert had succeeded his brother Henry, who probably died without issue.

<sup>86</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ci, 113.

<sup>87</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ci, 113; Berry, Hants Gen. 291.

<sup>88</sup> Ibid.

<sup>89</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Hen. VIII; Memo. R. L.T.R. East. 32 Hen. VIII, m 46.

<sup>90</sup> Pat. 2 & 3 Phil. and Mary, pt. iv, m. 3.

LAVERSTOKE PARISH CHURCH : MONUMENT TO SIR RICHARD POWLETT

OVERTON CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING NORTH-EAST

died seised of the manor of Polhampton in 1560, leaving a son and heir Robert<sup>91</sup> to whom Henry Smith and Elizabeth his wife quitclaimed their portion of the manor in 1564.<sup>92</sup> Robert died in 1609, leaving a son and heir Richard, to whom some eighteen years before he had granted a ninety-nine years' lease of the manor in return for an annual payment of forty couple of rabbits between the months of September and March.<sup>93</sup> Richard Vaus dealt with the manor by fine in 1616,<sup>94</sup> and again in 1618,<sup>95</sup> but whether he was seised of it at his death is uncertain. If he was his three daughters and co-heirs<sup>96</sup> subsequently parted with the manor, as a John Palmer dealt with it by recovery in 1683.<sup>97</sup> It is now the property of Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

Corpus Christi College for some time continued in possession of various lands and tenements in Overton representing the fourth part of the manor of Polhampton purchased from John Prior in 1528,<sup>98</sup> but it no longer owns any property in the parish, having disposed of the last of its possessions in Overton in May 1882.<sup>99</sup>

The manor of QUIDHAMPTON (Quedhamton, xiii cent.; Quidhampton, xiv cent.), which until the middle of the 13th century was known by the name of the manor of POLHAMPTON, formed part of the manor of Overton from an early date, and in the reign of Edward the Confessor was one of the estates which had been allotted by the bishop for the support of the monks of St. Swithun.<sup>100</sup> At the time of the Domesday Survey it was held of the bishop by Ralf son of Seifrid,<sup>101</sup> and from this date the interest of the Prior and convent of St. Swithun in the manor was reduced merely to a right to the tithes coming from it, which were appropriated to the office of almoner of the convent (q.v. infra). It seems probable that Seifrid was the founder of the Syfrewast family, the later lords of Quidhampton, for at the time of the Domesday Survey Freefolk or Freefolk Syfrewast was likewise held by Ralf son of Seifrid.<sup>102</sup> As early as the beginning of the 12th century Richard de Syfrewast was holding the manor, and while lord thereof granted half a hide of land at Polhampton to the Abbot of Waverley<sup>103</sup>—a gift which was confirmed by Pope Eugenius III in 1147.<sup>104</sup> He was possibly succeeded by Robert de Syfrewast, whose son William de Syfrewast held two knights' fees, probably Freefolk and Quidhampton, in Hampshire of the Bishop of Winchester in 1166.<sup>105</sup> In 1203 Ralph son of Ralph de Syfrewast gave up all his right to half a knight's fee and

2 virgates of land in Polhampton to Richard de Syfrewast, receiving 1 virgate of land in Clewer (co. Berks.) which his father Ralph had held.<sup>106</sup> Forty years later Richard de Syfrewast granted the manor of Polhampton to Roger de Syfrewast, probably his son,<sup>107</sup> who in 1245 was returned as holding a knight's fee in Quidhampton without Overton of William de Syfrewast, who in his turn held of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>108</sup> Roger was succeeded by his son Richard, who died in 1275, leaving two sons under age, Richard and John, whose marriage was granted by Edward I to Geoffrey de Picheford.<sup>109</sup> Most of Richard's property, including the manor of Clewer, passed to the elder son Richard,<sup>110</sup> but Quidhampton seems to have been assigned to John, who in the beginning of the 14th century engaged in a dispute with the Abbot of Waverley about the right of the abbey to 50 acres of land and 100 acres of pasture in Quidhampton.<sup>111</sup> This dispute was finally concluded in the abbot's favour in 1312.<sup>112</sup> John de Syfrewast was returned as holding the vill of Quidhampton in 1316,<sup>113</sup> and remained seised of it until about 1340, when it was taken into the king's hands by the sheriff<sup>114</sup> for certain felonies and misdeeds committed by him and his sons Roger and William in Buckinghamshire in 1334.<sup>115</sup> He died soon afterwards, and was succeeded by his son Roger who was holding half a fee in Quidhampton in 1346.<sup>116</sup> From Roger the manor passed to his son Godfrey de Syfrewast, who in 1377 sold it to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester.<sup>117</sup> From this date the manor followed the same descent as Deane (q.v. supra) until 1584, in which year Richard Fiennes and Constance his wife sold it to Michael Renneger, Archdeacon of Winchester,<sup>118</sup> who died seised of a capital messuage, 44 acres of pasture, 12 acres of meadow, 160 acres of land and a pasture called Poultons in Overton, Quidhampton and Polhampton in 1609, leaving a son and heir Michael.<sup>119</sup> Michael soon afterwards made over all his right in the premises to Thomas Elye, who died seised of one-third of the manor of Quidhampton, and the reversion of the other two-thirds after the death of Margery Renneger widow of SYFREWAST. Azure two gimel bars and a chief or.

<sup>91</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 2 Eliz. pt. ii, no. 71. By some error Robert is made the son and heir of Richard in the pedigree given in Berry (Hants Gen. 291).

<sup>92</sup> Pat. 6 Eliz. pt. i, m. 22. Alice and Anthony More, on the other hand, kept their portion of the manor which descended to Richard More, who dealt with it by fine in 1625 (Feet of F. Hants, East. 1 Chas. I).

<sup>93</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxiii, 143.

<sup>94</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 14 Jas. I.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid. 16 Jas. I.

<sup>96</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 291.

<sup>97</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 35 & 36 Chas. II, m. 81.

<sup>98</sup> In 1646 Piers Edgcombe was holding lands and tenements in Overton on lease from the College (S.P. Dom. Commonw. g. 214, fol. 549-50).

<sup>99</sup> Ex inform. the Bursar of the College.

<sup>100</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 466a.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid.

<sup>102</sup> Ibid. 464b.

<sup>103</sup> Dugdale, Mon. v, 237.

<sup>104</sup> Lansd. Chart. 27.

<sup>105</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 205.

<sup>106</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 5 John.

<sup>107</sup> Ibid. Div. Co. 28 Hen. III, no. 69 ; 36 Hen. III, no. 47.

<sup>108</sup> Inq. p.m. 29 Hen. III, no. 41.

<sup>109</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. I, m. 29.

<sup>110</sup> Vide Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 269.

<sup>111</sup> Ibid. 231.

<sup>112</sup> Obedientiary R. of St. Swithun (Hants Rec. Soc.), 399.

<sup>113</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>114</sup> Enr. Accts. P, 14 Edw. III, no. 28 ; C, 14 Edw. III, no. 11.

<sup>115</sup> In that year he and his sons at the head of a large company drove away 40 horses, 60 oxen, 50 cows, 100 bullocks, 1,000 sheep and 200 swine belonging to Ralph de Wedon at Amersham and Chesham (co. Bucks.) (Pat. 8 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 10 d. ; 9 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 19 d.). They were committed to the Marshalsea, and while there so ingratiated themselves with the gaolers that they were permitted to wander at large, as appears from a Close Roll of 1342 ordering William Scott and his fellow-justices to punish the keepers of the prisons for their bad custody (Close, Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 16 d.).

<sup>116</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 329.

<sup>117</sup> Close, 1 Ric. II, m. 19 d.

<sup>118</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 26 Eliz.

<sup>119</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxiv, 160.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Michael Renneger, Archdeacon of Winchester, in 1615, leaving a son and heir John,<sup>120</sup> who died in 1630 and was buried at Overton.<sup>121</sup> The further history of the manor is somewhat uncertain. George Pitt of Stratfieldsaye, afterwards Lord Rivers, dealt with the manor by recovery in 1743 and 1773 respectively.<sup>122</sup> It next passed to Henry Ellis St. John, son of a cousin of Sir Henry Paulet St. John,<sup>123</sup> who sold it in 1813 to John Portal.<sup>124</sup> On the death of John Portal in 1848 it passed with Laverstoke to his son Melville Portal, and from this date it has followed the same descent as Laverstoke (q.v.), the present owner being Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two mills in the manor of Quidhampton.<sup>125</sup> One of them apparently soon fell into ruin, but in the 14th-century obediatory rolls of St. Swithun's there is frequent mention of the other, the tithes of which were confirmed to the almoner of St. Swithun's by John Syfrewast.<sup>126</sup> The site of this one is probably marked by the present Quidhampton Mill.

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN consists of a chancel 39 ft. 5 in. by 15 ft., north vestry, nave 56 ft. by 15 ft. 9 in., north aisle 8 ft. 8 in. and south aisle 8 ft. 7 in. wide, south porch and west tower, internal measurements.

About 1180 the church had a nave of three bays with narrow aisles and a chancel; it is probable that the building consisted originally of an aisleless nave and chancel. The chancel was entirely rebuilt and enlarged about 1250, being made equal in width to the nave; the aisles were perhaps widened at the same time, and again rebuilt in the 14th century, being lengthened eastward. Late in the 15th century a west tower was built outside the west end of the church, probably to the west of an earlier tower, which was then destroyed and the nave arcades and aisles carried westward to join the new tower. The chancel also was lengthened eastward, perhaps at this time; the eastern quoins are, however, of 13th-century masonry, and being numbered are clearly re-used work.

At an early date there was also another holding in QUIDHAMPTON sometimes called a manor. In 1281 Martin Senche granted a life-interest in the manor of Quidhampton and two messuages, 126½ acres of meadow and 7 acres of wood in Polhampton and Ashe to Robert de Ynmore and Joan his wife,<sup>127</sup> and ten years later recovered his seisin of common of pasture in Quidhampton belonging to his free tenement in that vill from Walter de Derneford and Joan his wife, William Cotenays, Walter Garlik and Roger de Sidemanton.<sup>128</sup> It seems likely that this tenement was subsequently purchased by the Syfrewasts and then followed the same descent as the manor of Quidhampton, for in 1346 Roger Syfrewast was returned as holding half a knight's fee in Quidhampton which had belonged to Walter de Derneford,<sup>129</sup> and it is probable either that Martin Senche had originally acquired the property from Walter de Derneford or that it subsequently passed to Walter from Martin.

This tower has been pulled down and rebuilt from the foundations in 1908. A 16th-century east window of the chancel was replaced by one of poor design in 1850, and those of the aisles were renewed, and in 1897 the east window of the chancel was again altered and the side windows of the aisles repaired.

The east window has three lights with tracery of late 14th-century character; the former east window (displaced in the 19th century) was of three plain lights with four-centred heads; it is shown in an old sketch hanging in the vestry. The north-west window dates from about 1250 and has two trefoiled lights with soffit cusps and over them a quatrefoil, it is now unglazed and looks into the organ chamber and vestry.

The north-east and south-east windows are of the same character but shorter; only their inner jambs are old, and they must have been moved eastward at the lengthening of the chancel: a window of two plain four-centred lights was formerly at the south-east. In the last restoration the old return stones of the former

<sup>120</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdl. 53, no. 3.

<sup>121</sup> Hants N. and Q. viii, 67.

<sup>122</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 16 & 17 Geo. II, m. 205; Mich. 13 Geo. III, m. 162.

<sup>123</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 230.

<sup>124</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 54 Geo. III.

<sup>125</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 466a.

<sup>126</sup> Obediatory R. of St. Swithun (Hants Rec. Soc.), 407, 466, 467.

<sup>127</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Edw. I.

<sup>128</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 68. <sup>129</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 329.

east end are said to have been found below the north-east window. On the edge of the window ledge is carved a black-letter inscription: 'Hic jacet do' Willm's savage quondā rector istius ecclesie cuius aīē ppicietur deus amen.' The south-west window is apparently early 14th-century work repaired and to the east of it is a priest's doorway with a pointed head showing little trace of age. To the west of the window is exposed a short length of rebated jamb stone; this from its position appears to be the remains of a low side window blocked when the aisle was lengthened eastwards.

The organ stands under a modern arch on the north of the chancel; the organ chamber being divided up to form a vestry is lighted by windows to the north and east. It has two west doorways, one from the north aisle and one from the churchyard.

The chancel arch is of modern stonework; it has chamfered jambs and an arch of two orders, the inner springing from corbels. The nave arcades are of four bays a side, the first three of late 12th-century date and the fourth a late 15th-century addition. The former have round columns and half-round responds with double-roll bases on square sub-bases and scalloped capitals; the abaci are grooved and hollow-chamfered; the capitals of the east responds are modern, others are partly restored; the arches are of a single chamfered order with a hollow-chamfered label, except that at the south-east which has been rebuilt and heightened, probably when a rood-loft with a stair on the south was set up. It has two chamfered orders stilted at the springing. The 12th-century work is of very late character, all tooling being vertical, and the section of the label being very advanced; it is little if at all earlier than 1200. The west bays of the arcades have jambs of two chamfered orders with moulded bases and capitals and two-centred arches of two hollow-chamfered orders.

The north aisle has an east window of two trefoiled lights with a quatrefoil of 13th-century style over the vestry door; the first three of the four north windows are modern outside but have old stonework inside; each is of two ogee trefoiled lights with half quatrefoils over, in a square head; the fourth window has old jambs only, the rest being modern; between the third and fourth windows is a late 15th-century blocked doorway with a four-centred head. The west window is modern with some re-used 13th-century masonry.

The east and three south windows of the south aisle are all modern; the former has two trefoiled lights with a quatrefoil above in a two-centred head; the latter have two ogee trefoiled lights and semi-quatrefoils above on square heads; the south entrance (to the west of the third window) has a modern doorway of 12th-century style. The wooden door is an ancient one in two leaves with old ironwork, probably of 15th-century workmanship. The aisle has been lengthened westward in 1908 to form a baptistery, and several bits of 12th, 13th, and 14th-century detail have been here fixed against the walls.

The new tower is of stone, a great deal of old detail of 13th and 15th-century dates being re-used. It is designed to carry a shingled spire. The former tower had a stone base and lower story, but the upper part was boarded and it had a timber spire. The south porch is of stone with a small window on either side and a pointed south archway, all of modern date.

The chancel roof is a very interesting piece of 13th-century woodwork, contemporary with its walls: it has two simple tie-beams with a boss of characteristic foliage in the middle of the soffit and a hollow-moulded plate stopped at the east ends with foliage. The rafters are trussed with collars and arched braces, and pairs of struts from the braces to the collars. The early work must have been copied at the lengthening of the chancel, and in the plates there is some evidence of this.

The nave roof also has old trussed rafters and tie-beams, but these are probably not older than the date of its west bay: the aisles have lean-to roofs which are modern.

The altar table, font and other furniture are modern, but part of what may have been a 12th-century font, with interlacing work on the bowl, is now in the baptistery. There are no old monuments in the church.

There are six bells, one added in 1908. Of the others the second is inscribed 'God be our guyd R. B. 1609'; the treble has the same inscription and date, but the latter has been reversed and reads '1909'; the third is by Henry Knight, 1663, the fourth by R. and W. Cor of Aldbourne, 1710, and the fifth by Henry Knight, 1692.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten of 1676; a silver flagon of 1762 inscribed 'The gift of the Rev. Richard White M.A. to this parish 1762,' and a silver alms plate given by Susannah Spier in 1764.

The registers begin in 1621, the earliest being entered upon loose sheets of vellum mounted on paper and now carefully bound; they contain baptisms from that date to 1680, marriages 1628 to 1675, and burials 1669 to 1677; but having been long unbound there are naturally several gaps from lost sheets. The second bound volume has baptisms from 1678 to 1765, marriages 1680 to 1748, and burials 1685 to 1791; the third has marriages from 1754 to 1812, and the fourth baptisms and burials 1766 to 1802.

At the time of the Domesday ADVOWSONS Survey there were two churches in Overton,<sup>130</sup> representing respectively the parish church of Overton and the dependent chapel of Tadley. The living from an early date was a sinecure, the Bishop of Winchester presenting the rector, and the rector in his turn presenting a vicar to serve the cure.<sup>131</sup> Owing to this circumstance there was a dispute about the advowson in 1657 between Thomas Andrew, the purchaser of the manor under the ordinances for the sale of the bishops' lands, and the Lord Protector.<sup>132</sup> Thomas Andrew, asserting that the rector of Overton had the cure of souls and that the vicar merely assisted him in the exercise of his spiritual functions, based his claim to the advowson on the Act of Parliament passed 20 April 1649, which enacted that the respective purchasers of the manors and lordships of the archbishops and bishops, their heirs and assigns, should be and were thereby made, constituted and adjudged lawful patrons

<sup>130</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 461a.

<sup>131</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 79; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 21 d., 152 d.;

Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>132</sup> Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants Com. no. 55.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

of the respective advowsons and benefices with cure within any of the manors and lordships by them purchased and which should thereafter be purchased. Thus on the death of the rector Michael Parkhurst he presented Thomas Kentish to the rectory, who in his turn presented his brother James Kentish to the vicarage.<sup>133</sup> The depositions of witnesses were taken at Overton on 8 April 1659 to decide whether the rectory was with or without cure, and from their evidence it is clearly apparent that it was without cure.<sup>134</sup> Thus one of the witnesses, referring to the time when there was a vicar of Overton 'whom they called Sir Roger who by reason of age and insufficiency could not preach,' stated that the rector even then did not serve the cure, and the other witnesses who deposed that the former rector Michael Parkhurst and his predecessor Lawrence Jackson sometimes preached, yet nevertheless gave it as their opinion that they did so of their own free will, 'in a conscientious way as receiving benefit from the place.'<sup>135</sup> The rectory continued to be a sinecure until 1896, in which year the Rev. George Covey Stenning was appointed the first rector, and was regularly inducted as rector and vicar.

The rector has in his possession three leases of the glebe and tithes made on lives dated respectively 17 March 1800, 10 January 1815 and 1 February 1838, which are interesting inasmuch as they all contain the proviso that the lessee should entertain for not more than two nights, and on not more than eight occasions in the year, the rector with his man and horses when he should come to take duty on Sunday.

A curious case of sanctuary is recorded in William of Wykeham's register in connexion with the church of Overton.<sup>136</sup> On a Sunday evening about Michaelmas 1390 a stranger John Bentley was in the church at evensong, and was asked by someone if he was a thief or a robber. He replied that he was neither, but had had the misfortune to kill a man, and went out into the churchyard. While talking with a certain Robert Dingle who was standing by the open south gate, a shoemaker of Overton, Geoffrey by name, suddenly pushed him from behind out of the churchyard into the highway. Bentley struggled to re-enter, but the villagers dragged him away, put him in the stocks, and afterwards took him to Winchester Gaol. The case was reported to the bishop, who issued a commission to his official, in conjunction with the Prior of St. Swithun's and the Abbot of Hyde, to punish the offenders and compel them to replace Bentley in sanctuary. At the same time the bishop petitioned the king for Bentley's discharge from gaol.<sup>137</sup> The outcome of the case is not to be gathered from the register.

Among distinguished rectors of Overton were Hugh Oldham, afterwards Bishop of Exeter, the founder of Manchester Grammar School, the divine and scholar John Claymond, Nicholas Claggett, afterwards Bishop of Exeter, and Dr. Richard Russell, the grandfather of Mary Russell Mitford. Robert Lowth, afterwards Bishop of London, and John Hoadley the youngest son of Benjamin Hoadley, Bishop of Winchester, were instituted vicars of Overton in 1735 and 1746 respectively.

There was a church in Polhampton in 1086,<sup>138</sup> but it no longer existed in the 13th century.<sup>139</sup> William de Horwode, however, lord of the manor of Polhampton, about 1340 built a chapel in East Polhampton in honour of the Virgin Mary to take its place, and in 1343 obtained licence from the king to alienate 3 virgates of land and pasture for 6 mares, 6 cows, 6 swine and 150 sheep in East Polhampton to the perpetual vicar of the church of St. Mary Overton, to find a chaplain to celebrate divine service there twice daily.<sup>140</sup> All trace of this chapel is now lost. There was also from a very early date a chapel at Quidhampton, the cost of which was defrayed by the almoner of St. Swithun's out of the tithes coming from Quidhampton. From the obediatory rolls of St. Swithun's we learn that the chaplain in the 14th century received sometimes £1 10s. 4d. a year, and at other times £1 4s. only.<sup>141</sup> The clerk received 3s. or 4s. a year,<sup>142</sup> while the expense of wax ranged from 1s. 1d. to 2s. 4d. a year.<sup>143</sup> The chapel books were bound at a cost of 5s. and a bell bought for 3d. in 1319,<sup>144</sup> 3s. 4d. was spent on the chancel in 1438,<sup>145</sup> while the total sum spent in repairing the chapel in 1515 was £6 16s. 4d.<sup>146</sup> By the 17th century it was desecrated, as appears from the following extract from a Parliamentary Survey: 'The aforesaid chappell of Quidhampton is altogether ruined, and noe minister hath officiated therein for many years past.'<sup>147</sup> It is now part of the farm buildings on the Manor Farm. Its east wall has gone, but the other three walls remain, built of flints set in herring-bone fashion, and having no wrought stonework at the angles, doorway or windows. It was doubtless plastered over within and without. The original doorway, now blocked, is in the south wall, a plain round-arched opening with a label of flints, and just to the east are the jambs of a little window, which was probably round-headed at first, but now ends square. In the north wall are traces of a similar window, and on the outer face of the west wall. The simplicity of the detail suggests though it does not prove an early date, but the chapel may belong to the end of the 11th century. After years of neglect it is now cared for and kept structurally sound. The tithes and glebe of Quidhampton on the dissolution of the abbey were granted to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester.<sup>148</sup> They were leased on lives from very ancient times, and the last lease is now fallen in.

St. Mary's Hall, erected in 1901 by the rector, is used for parish purposes and will hold 160 persons.

In 1662 Cornelius Dowse by will CHARITIES left 10s. a year for the repair of the church. The rent-charge has been redeemed by the transfer to the official trustees of £16 13s. 4d. consols producing 8s. 4d. a year.

<sup>133</sup> Exch. Bills and Answs. Hants Com. no. 55.

<sup>134</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 1659, no. 17.

<sup>135</sup> Ibid.

<sup>136</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 429.

<sup>137</sup> Ibid.

<sup>138</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 491b.

<sup>139</sup> There is no mention of it in the Taxation of Pope Nicholas.

<sup>140</sup> Pat. 17 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 28, 25.

<sup>141</sup> Obediatory R. of St. Swithun (Hants Rec. Soc.), 399, 403, 407.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid. 403, 407.

<sup>143</sup> Ibid. 403, 466.

<sup>144</sup> Ibid. 405.

<sup>145</sup> Ibid. 444.

<sup>146</sup> Ibid. 457.

<sup>147</sup> Hants N. and Q. viii, 66. Vide also Stowe MS. 845 (circa 1702), fol. 123. 'At Quidhampton is a chappell in which there is no service.'

<sup>148</sup> Winton Cath. Doc. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 73.

OVERTON CHURCH FROM THE SOUTH

OVERTON : QUIDHAMPTON CHAPEL

In 1811 Thomas Streatwells, by will proved in the P.C.C., left £100, the interest to be distributed among forty poor families resident in Overton and Southington in bread on the first Sunday in January.

In 1817 Mrs. Mary Streatwells, widow of the said Thomas Streatwells, by her will proved in the P.C.C., left £100 upon the like trusts for other forty poor families in the same places. The trust funds now consist of £195 8s. 7d. consols, producing yearly £4 17s. 8d., which is distributed in bread to about 110 people.

In 1848 John Jago by deed gave £600 consols, the dividends to be applied in the distribution of clothing to twenty poor men and twenty poor women in alternate years. The dividends, amounting to £15 a year, are duly applied.

The same donor gave £400 consols towards the endowment of the National School.

In 1869 George Lamb by deed gave £120 consols or prizes at the National School.

'Corrie's Trust,' founded by will of Mrs. Martha Corrie, proved 1877, consists of £188 14s. 7d. consols, the dividends, amounting to £4 14s. 4d., being applicable under scheme of 23 November 1877 for repairs of school and school-house.

In 1904 Charles Farmer by will, proved at London on 28 April, bequeathed his residuary estate to the minister and churchwardens of Overton to be disposed of by them for the benefit of aged widows and widowers of the parish. The net residue, amounting to £362 1s. 4d., was invested in the purchase of £411 7s. 7d. Guaranteed 2½ per cent. (Irish Land) Stock, producing yearly £11 6s. 2d., which, under the provisions of a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 12 June 1906, is applicable in the payment of a pension to an aged poor widow or widower of the parish.

The several sums of stocks are held by the official trustees.

TADLEY

Taddele, Tadeleye (xiii cent.) ; Tadelegh, Taddelegh (xiv cent.) ; Tadele (xv cent.).

Tadley is a parish in the north of Hampshire on the borders of Berkshire situated about 4 miles south from Aldermaston station on the Newbury and Devizes branch of the Great Western Railway and 6½ miles north-west from Basingstoke. St. Peter's Church stands about half a mile south-west from the principal village, which is situated on the main road from Basingstoke to Reading. In the extreme north near Tadley Common are the hamlets of Heath End with the modern church of St. Mary, New Town and Mount Pleasant. Bishop's Inclosure and Bishop's Wood Farm to the south of the common mark the connexion of the Bishop of Winchester with the parish, recalling the fact that his property in Tadley comprised a wood.<sup>1</sup> Near Bishop's Wood Farm Bishop's Wood Stream takes its rise and flows thence east, its name being changed to Silchester Brook when it enters Silchester. The parish is on the whole well populated, and there are several modern residences, among them being Hawley House about half a mile west of the village, and the Wilderness in the north on Tadley Common. Tadley Place Farm is situated on the Port Way, the ancient road from Old Sarum to Silchester which intersects the south of the parish. Wyford Farm with its old fishponds, the ancient seat of the Ludlows, is in the extreme south-east. Bricks are manufactured at Tadley Common. There are many copses scattered through the parish, the number of acres given up to woods and plantations being 234½<sup>2</sup> ; 453½ acres are devoted to permanent grass, and crops of wheat, barley and oats are grown on the 417 acres of arable land which it contains.<sup>3</sup> The total area is 2,079 acres. The soil is sand, gravel and clay, and the subsoil clay and sand. Part of the parish was assigned to the consolidated chapelry of Ramsdale<sup>4</sup> on 15 January 1869.

A large part of the parish of TADLEY MANORS was included from a very early date in the manor of Overton. Thus in the confirmation of the manor of Overton to Frithstan, Bishop of Winchester, by King Edward the Elder in 909 the wood at Tadley is mentioned as an appurtenance,<sup>5</sup> and there are very frequent references to Tadley in the court rolls and other documents relating to the manor of Overton.<sup>6</sup>

But from an early date there was an independent estate in the parish, called at first the manor of TADLEY and afterwards the manor of WITHFORD or WYFORD, which is probably represented by the half a knight's fee which William Hotot was holding in Hampshire in 1166.<sup>7</sup> William was succeeded by Robert Hotot, probably his son, who in 1205 granted half a knight's fee in Tadley to Henry de Soberton to hold of him and his heirs.<sup>8</sup> By 1286 the holding had passed to Reginald son of Peter, who died in that year seised of the manor of Tadley which he held of Andrew Hotot by the service of half a knight's fee.<sup>9</sup> His son and heir John seems to have parted with the manor soon afterwards, and in 1305 by fine between Richard de la More and Christine his wife, and Walter le Blunt and Joan his wife, two-thirds of a messuage, 2 carucates of land, 15 acres of wood and 8s. rent in Tadley were settled on Richard and Christine.<sup>10</sup> In 1337 the reversion of one messuage, 2 carucates of land, 3 acres of meadow, 10 acres of pasture, 10 acres of moor, 15s. 3d. and rent of 1 lb. of pepper and 1 lb. of cummin in Tadley was granted to William de la More after the death of his father and mother, Richard de la More and Beatrice his wife,<sup>11</sup> and he had succeeded to his inheritance by 1346, by which year he is returned as holding half a fee in Tadley which had belonged to John son of Reginald.<sup>12</sup> In 1428 John de la More, called John de la More of Wyford in 1475,<sup>13</sup> was holding the half fee,<sup>14</sup> and his <sup>1</sup> Plac. Abbrev. (Rec. Com.), 140 ; Winchester Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 249.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Lond. Gaz. 15 Jan. 1869, p. 219.

<sup>5</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 297-300.

<sup>6</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 1142, no. 8 ; Eccl.

Com. Var. bdle. 95, no. 159500½ ; bdle. 96, no. 159500½ ; bdle. 97, no. 159500½ ; Eccl. Com. Ct. R. of Overton passim ; Plac. Abbrev. (Rec. Com.), 140 ; Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>7</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. 206.

<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 6 John.

<sup>9</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. I, no. 18.

<sup>10</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 33 Edw. I.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. East. 11 Edw. III.

<sup>12</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 328.

<sup>13</sup> Pat. 15 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 16 d.

<sup>14</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

son William de la More died seised of the manor of Wyford and three messuages and 2 carucates of land in Tadley in 1481, leaving a son and heir Henry, aged forty.<sup>15</sup> Nicholas de la More the son of Henry died in 1496, leaving two infant daughters, Joan and Christine,<sup>16</sup> the former of whom afterwards married William Ludlow of Hill Deverill (co. Wilts.), while the latter became the wife of Sir John Dawtrey and died without issue.<sup>17</sup> Joan afterwards married Robert Temmes and died seised of four messuages, 200 acres of land, 100 acres of pasture, 2 acres of meadow and 40 acres of wood in Tadley and the manor of Wyford in 1563, leaving a son and heir George Ludlow, aged forty.<sup>18</sup> George died in 1580, and was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Edmund Ludlow,<sup>19</sup> who dealt with the manor of Wyford and the park of Wyford or Tadley Park by fine in 1601 on the occasion of the marriage of his son Henry with Lettice daughter of Thomas West, Lord De La Warr.<sup>20</sup> Sir Edmund obtained a grant of free warren in his manor of Wyford in 1617,<sup>21</sup> and died seised of the manor of Wyford and a capital messuage in the park of Wyford or Tadley Park in 1625, leaving a son and heir Henry, aged forty.<sup>22</sup> If a judgement is formed from the notices of Henry in the state papers his character does not appear in a very satisfactory light. He seems to have oppressed his tenants in Tadley in various ways, pulling down their houses, failing to give them their wages, and utterly refusing to pay all rates and taxes.<sup>23</sup> In 1639 he was ordered to redress the grievances of his tenants,<sup>24</sup> but died a month or two afterwards, being succeeded by his son and heir Edmund,<sup>25</sup> who conveyed the manor of Wyford or Tadley to Joseph Blagrove in 1641.<sup>26</sup> The later history of the manor is somewhat uncertain, but it had passed into the possession of the Withers of Hall Place, the modern Oakley Hall,<sup>27</sup> before the end of the 17th century, Charles Wither dying seised of it in 1697.<sup>28</sup> Wither Bramston of Oakley Hall dealt with the manor of Wyford by recovery in 1807,<sup>29</sup> while Tadley Place was purchased about fifty years ago by William Wither Bramston Beach after the death of Mr. Congreve of Aldermaston House (co. Berks.), who had purchased it from a Mr. Searle in whose family it had been for some years.<sup>30</sup> Tadley Place and Wyford Farm still form part of the Oakley Hall estate, the present owner being Major William Archibald Hicks Beach of Oakley Hall.

LUDLOW. Argent a chevron between three bears' heads rased sable.

The church of ST. PETER is a small CHURCH plain building consisting of a chancel 17 ft. by 13 ft. 2 in., a nave 33 ft. by 17 ft. 2 in., west tower 10 ft. 6 in. by 9 ft. 9 in., and a south porch.

It is impossible to say how old the nave of the building is, as it is completely covered with plaster inside and roughcast outside, but its present condition seems to date from the 17th century.

The low west tower of brick is perhaps late 18th-century work, and the chancel and porch, also of brick, are of no great age.

The chancel has a square-headed three-light east window with a wooden frame and a modern lancet in the north wall.

One of the north and both of the south windows of the nave are of two plain round-headed lights, the stonework being covered with stucco and plaster.

The other north window, near the west end, is a lancet light and perhaps is a 13th-century opening reworked. Between the two north windows is a plain round-headed blocked doorway with a heart-shaped panel in plaster over it, and opposite to it, in the south wall, is a doorway with plain chamfered jambs and three-centred head, offering nothing by which its date can be decided. The outer opening of the porch is fitted with an old wood moulded frame with a four-centred arch and a square head, probably late 15th-century work; the spandrels are filled with carved foliage. The foiled bargeboards of the porch are also old, and are much damaged. The tower arch is modern, 1877, and has a semicircular head.

The chancel has a plastered ceiling, while that of the nave is boarded with a plastered partition at the east carried on a beam. Below it is a modern beam carrying a cross. The roofs are tiled outside; the tower has a low pyramidal roof covered with wood.

The interior of the nave is very picturesque, with plain but good 17th-century seats, and in the north-east angle is a very good early 17th-century pulpit with a large panelled sounding-board.

Over the west end of the nave is a large 17th-century gallery with a balustraded front reached by stairs with solid steps and turned balusters in the tower.

On the north wall of the nave is a brass inscription setting forth the bequests of Thomas Sympson to the poor of six parishes of the neighbourhood; a similar brass is to be found in each of the other five parish churches which received legacies. It is dated 1674.

The small modern font has an octagonal bowl resting on an alabaster shaft with a foliate capital.

The tower contains three bells, the first of which is inscribed 'Henry Wright made me 1669'; the second is a modern casting by John Warner, and the tenor has an apparently meaningless inscription.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten of 1780, both inscribed 'The gift of W<sup>m</sup>. Dee Bust Curate 1780'; a glass cruet with plated mounts, and a modern plated service for use at St. Mary's Mission.

The registers are in four volumes. The first contains baptisms 1683 to 1769, burials 1695 to 1769 and marriages 1691 to 1754. The second has baptisms and burials 1770 to 1812; the third marriages 1754

<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. IV, no. 31.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), xi, 57.

<sup>17</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 192.

<sup>18</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 1002, no. 7.

<sup>19</sup> Hoare, Wilts. i (2), 15.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 43 Eliz.; Mich. 43 & 44 Eliz.

<sup>21</sup> Pat. 15 Jas. I, pt. xv, m. 14.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccclvi, 86.

<sup>23</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1634-5, pp. 291, 292; 1635, p. 305; 1635-6, p. 211; 1637-8, pp. 433, 443; 1639, pp. 339, 345.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. 1639, p. 366.

<sup>25</sup> Hoare, Wilts. i (2), 15.

<sup>26</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 17 Chas. I.

<sup>27</sup> For the pedigree of the Withers and their descendants the Bramstons and the Beaches see Oakley Hall in the parish of Deane.

<sup>28</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Ellice Hicks Beach.

<sup>29</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 47 Geo. III, m. 216.

<sup>30</sup> Trans. of Newbury District Field Club, iv, 155.

OVERTON HUNDRED

NORTH
WALTHAM

to 1811, and the fourth marriages 1811 to 1812. There are churchwardens' accounts from 1765.

Tadley was a chapelry dependent ADVOWSON upon the mother church of Overton until 1878,<sup>31</sup> when by an Order in Council it was severed from Overton parish and constituted a separate ecclesiastical parish and perpetual curacy in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>32</sup>

St. Mary's Church at Heath End was built in 1874 at the sole cost of the Rev. Dugald Campbell Gill, M.A. In 1897 this church became the property of the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty. It is served from St. Peter's Church.

An iron church capable of seating 130 was built near the rectory and licensed for divine service in 1888. There is also a church-room which is used for meetings and entertainments.

The Congregational chapel with 300 sittings has a burial-ground attached,<sup>33</sup> and was registered for the solemnization of marriages in 1864.<sup>34</sup>

The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel in Tadley.

The schools, with accommodation for 222 children of Tadley and Pamber, were erected in 1876 at a cost of £1,340.

CHARITIES In 1674 Thomas Sympson by will charged his lands with an annuity of £15 for the poor of six parishes, including Tadley. The annuity of 50s. for this parish is paid by Mrs. S. Kent as a charge on Buller's Farm, Baughurst, and applied in the distribution of blankets.

In 1739 William Mothe by deed gave to the poor certain tenements and land adjoining, containing about half an acre. The property now consists of four almshouses, and the rent of the land, £2 a year, is applied in keeping same in repair.

By an Inclosure Award, confirmed by the Inclosure Commissioners on 11 October 1851, an allotment of 6 acres was made for public quarries; 25 acres as Poor's Allotments, producing in 1906 £15 15s.; 4 acres as recreation ground, in respect of which £4 7s. 6d. was in 1906 received for letting of the herbage; 100 acres as Turbary Common. By an order of the Charity Commissioners of 8 November 1898 made under the Local Government Act 1894 the Turbary allotment was transferred to the Parish Council.

Land containing 10 acres was also allotted to the school.

NORTH WALTHAM

Wealtham (x cent.); Waltham (xii cent.); North-waltham, Waltham parva (xiii cent.); North Walton (xvii cent.).

North Waltham is a parish situated 3 miles south from Oakley station on the main line of the London and South Western Railway and 6½ miles south-west from Basingstoke. It contains 1,958 acres of down-country, which reaches its greatest height of 539 ft. above the ordnance datum in the north-east. The southern boundary of the parish is formed by the main road from Stockbridge, which at the Flower Pot Inn is joined by a road from Winchester, and then runs in a north-easterly direction to Basingstoke, forming in its course the eastern boundary of the parish. From the Wheat Sheaf Inn, a short distance north of the 'Flower Pot,' Popham Lane runs north-west towards Overton, and it is at the junction of this lane with other roads sent off west from the main road and a road running south from Steventon that the village is situated. St. Michael's Church and the Manor Farm lie to the south of the road to Overton, and near them is the rectory, standing in extensive grounds. The Primitive Methodist chapel is on the east of the road to Steventon, while a short distance to the west are the schools for 150 children, which were built in 1873 by subscription.

The soil is light, the subsoil chalk and clay in the lower portions of the parish. Crops of wheat, barley, oats and turnips are grown in the 1,222½ acres of arable land which it contains.<sup>1</sup> Only 371¼ acres are given up to permanent grass and 182¾ acres to woodland.<sup>2</sup> Major William Archibald Hicks Beach is the principal landowner in the parish.

The following are place-names occurring in records dealing with the parish:—'Berrydown'<sup>3</sup> (xvi cent.), Warren Combe Hill, Warren Field, and Waltham Marke<sup>4</sup> (xvii cent.).

The manor of NORTH WALTHAM MANOR from an early date belonged to the see of Winchester, King Edward the Elder confirming 15 hides at 'Wealtham' to Frithstan, Bishop of Winchester in 909.<sup>5</sup> There is no separate entry for North Waltham in Domesday Book, and it is probably included under the heading of Overton in the Survey. The manor continued in the hands of successive Bishops of Winchester until 1648,<sup>6</sup> when, in accordance with the ordinances for the sale of the bishops' lands, it was sold to George Wither the younger of London, and John Yate the younger, a London goldsmith, for a sum of £964 13s. 6d.<sup>7</sup> At the Restoration the manor was restored to the bishopric, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as representing the bishop are lords of the manor at the present day.

After the Restoration John Yate still continued to hold the manor-house and demesne lands on lease from the bishop, and they passed from him to George Yate, probably his son.<sup>8</sup> The leasehold estate passed from George to his daughter and heir Frances (died 1761), who married Sir Francis Mannock, bart. (died 1758) of Gifford's Hall<sup>9</sup> (co. Suff.), and from them to their son Sir William Mannock, bart., who died

<sup>31</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 461a (Tadley Church was probably one of the two churches included under Overton in the Domesday Survey); Chart. R. 12 Edw. I, m. 5; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 113, 144; 2034, fol. 152 d., 169 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>32</sup> Lond. Gaz. 30 Aug. 1878, p. 4925.

<sup>33</sup> Congregational Year Bk.

<sup>34</sup> Lond. Gaz. 25 Oct. 1864, p. 5008.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Close, 30 Eliz. pt. xvi, no. 1. There is still a Berrydown Copse in the north of the parish.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 24 Chas. I, pt. iii, m. 11.

<sup>5</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 297-300.

<sup>6</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II, rot. 12, m. 1 d.; Mins. Accts. bdle. 1142, no. 25; Chart. R. 12 Edw. I, m. 5; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215; Feud. Aids, ii, 306.

<sup>7</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iii, m. 11.

<sup>8</sup> Vide Recov. D. Enr. Trin. 4 Geo. III, m. 183.

<sup>9</sup> Burke, Extinct Baronetcies, 338.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

in 1764.<sup>10</sup> After his death his widow Lady Elizabeth Mannock surrendered the estate to the bishop,<sup>11</sup> by whom it was granted on a lease of three lives at a rent of £9 7s. 11d. to Peter Holford, one of the masters of the High Court of Chancery,<sup>12</sup> and by the latter conveyed for £4,000 in 1772 to John Batchelor of Potbottom Farm in the parish of Laverstoke.<sup>13</sup> John Batchelor was apparently succeeded by William Batchelor, who died in 1797.<sup>14</sup>

The church of ST. MICHAEL consists of a chancel 25 ft. 7 in. by 16 ft. 9 in. with a north vestry, nave 52 ft. 3 in. by 18 ft., and a north aisle 8 ft. 5 in. wide. There are also a south porch and a timber bell-turret over the west end of the nave.

The nave was completely rebuilt and lengthened in 1865, but the chancel was only repaired. Before 1865 there was a 12th-century arcade of two bays. All the windows are of early 14th-century style, of simple but very good detail. The labels are worked in the same stone with the outer order of the arch, and there is a bevelled sinking between the orders which is very effective. The chancel probably dates from c. 1300.

The east window of the chancel is entirely modern and has three trefoiled lights and a traceried head. The north window is of old stonework, and has two plain lights under a two-centred head with a pierced spandrel, the internal as well as the external stonework being old. To the west of this window is the modern doorway to the vestry, which has a small two-light north window and an outside doorway in the north wall.

The south-east window of the chancel has two trefoiled lights with a quatrefoiled circle over, with old stones in the jambs, and next to it is a single trefoiled light, half of the head and parts of the jambs being old. Between the two windows is a modern doorway. The piscina is a very pretty early 14th-century example with crocketed ogee head and a stone shelf.

The chancel arch is all modern, and has shafted jambs with moulded bases and foliated capitals and a two-centred arch of two orders encircled with cheverons and a diapered label.

The north arcade of the nave is of three bays with narrow arches at either end cut through the responds: the east respond is old with a double roll base and scalloped capital, while in the west respond only the base and a few other stones are old. The two columns are circular, the easternmost being old, with moulded base and scalloped capital, and a grooved and hollow-chamfered abacus, but the other column is entirely modern. All the arches are two-centred.

The two north windows of the aisle have each two trefoiled lights with quatrefoils over, all modern, and in the west wall is a small modern lancet.

The two south windows of the nave have two plain lights like the north window of the chancel, the easternmost being modern and the other old with restored internal splays. To the west of these windows is the modern south doorway, which has plain chamfered jambs and pointed arch. The porch has small trefoiled windows in the side walls.

In the west wall of the nave are two modern trefoiled lancets and a sixfoiled circular light over.

All the walls are of flint and stone and the roofs tiled. The bell-turret is shingled and is finished with an octagonal spire. It contains three bells, two recast in 1866 and the tenor of 1573.

The font has a 15th-century octagonal bowl; it came from the old church of Popham. Each side has a quatrefoiled panel with a square flower in the centre and is moulded beneath. The pedestal and base are modern.

On the north wall of the chancel is a brass plate bearing a Latin inscription to two brothers of the Pincke family; the elder, William, was a Master of Arts, fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, &c., and died in 1628, aged 27. The younger, John, died in 1629, aged 23.<sup>15</sup>

The plate consists of a silver-gilt chalice and paten cover of secular pattern inscribed 'Ecclesiae Parochiali de North Waltham Sacrum d.d.d. G. Yate 1599,' with a coat of arms, and a silver-gilt paten of 1681 inscribed as the chalice.

The registers are contained in three books, the first having baptisms, marriages and burials from 1654 to 1794, the marriages stopping at 1765. The second book contains baptisms and burials from 1794 to 1812. The third book is of the usual printed form for marriages from 1765 to 1811.

There is also an interesting account book which begins in 1596 and ends in 1708; amongst other entries are mentioned the casting of the church bell, 1657, and the carriage of the same bell from Reading and the hanging of the bell. There is also an item for repairing the three bells in 1674.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON North Waltham was confirmed to the Hospital of St. Cross near Winchester by Richard I in 1189,<sup>16a</sup> having probably been granted by its founder Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester. The advowson was however subsequently resumed by the bishopric, being included in the episcopal possessions quitclaimed by Edward I to John of Pontoise, Bishop of Winchester in 1284,<sup>16</sup> and the rectors have ever since been presented by the Bishops of Winchester.<sup>17</sup>

The charity of Walter Pincke for CHARITIES apprenticing, founded prior to 1707-8, consists of £200 consols with the official trustees, the dividends of which, amounting to £5 a year, are, in accordance with a scheme of 15 August 1899, applicable primarily in apprenticing or in providing outfits for children entering on a trade or occupation or into service. In 1906 five children received 30s. each.

In 1797 William Batchelor by will left £50 on trust that the interest thereof should be distributed among the poor. The trust fund now consists of £100 consols with the official trustees. In 1906 45½ cwt. of coal were distributed among fifteen poor persons.

<sup>10</sup> Burke, Extinct Baronetcies, 338. He dealt with it by fine in 1760 (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 33 & 34 Geo. II).

<sup>11</sup> Recov. D. Enr. 4 Geo. III, m. 183, 208.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.; Recov. R. Mich. 6 Geo. III, m. 58.

<sup>13</sup> Recov. D. Enr. 12 Geo. III, m. 2.

<sup>14</sup> See Charities.

<sup>15</sup> See Winslade in Basingstoke Hundred for the Pincke family.

<sup>16a</sup> Harl. Chart. 43, C 28.

<sup>16</sup> Chart. R. 12 Edw. I, m. 5.

<sup>17</sup> Pat. 8 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 3; pt. ii, m. 32; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 77, 87; Iust. Bks. (P.R.O.).

THE HUNDRED OF CHUTELEY

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

CHURCH OAKLEY

HANNINGTON

MONK SHERBORNE

WOOTTON ST. LAWRENCE

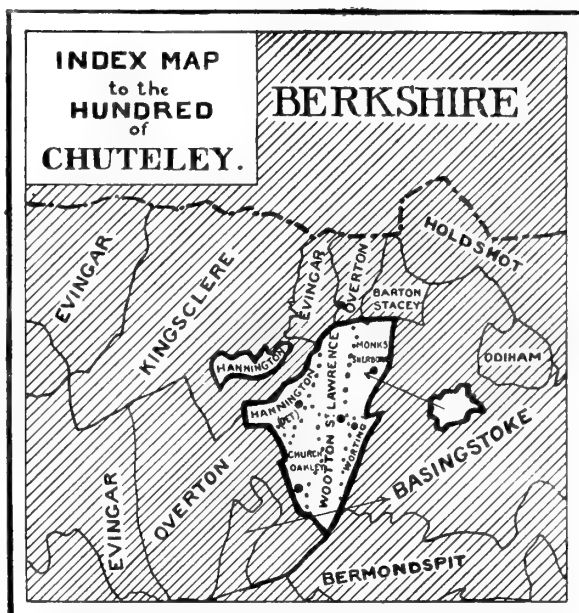

WORTING

The above list represents the extent of the hundred at the time of the Population Returns of 1831.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred contained the same parishes with the addition of Bighton and Deane,<sup>1</sup> which were transferred respectively to the hundreds of Bishop's Sutton and Overton before 1316.<sup>2</sup> 'Gerlei,' a district in Deane and Church Oakley, which seems to have comprised much of what is now the Malshanger estate,<sup>3</sup> was also included among the holdings in Chuteley Hundred at the time of the Survey.<sup>4</sup> The tithing of Chineham,<sup>5</sup> and probably also Woodgarston,<sup>6</sup> both in the parish of Monk Sherborne, were in Basingstoke Hundred in 1086. Both these tithings formed part of Basingstoke Hundred as long as the courts were held.

The total assessment before the Conquest was 81½ hides and half a virgate, which was reduced in 1086 to 61 hides and 1½ virgates.

The parishes of Monk Sherborne, Worting and Wootton St. Lawrence were added to the hundred of Basingstoke after 1831, and the hundred of Chuteley now contains only the parishes of Church Oakley and Hannington.

The hundred was one of the five 'out-hundreds,' which belonged in early times to the manor of Basingstoke, and were separated from it in 1228, when the king reserved them to himself.<sup>7</sup> Chuteley remained in the possession of the Crown until the Commonwealth,<sup>8</sup> when it came into the hands of the Tilney family,<sup>9</sup> by whom it was sold in March 1653 to William Wither of Manydown.<sup>10</sup>

The courts were 'kept under a certaine hedge at Malshanger at Michaelmas and Hocktide according to the ancient custom,' but they had been discontinued for some years before 1652.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 468, 470, 471, 482, 486, 488, 491, 496, 497.

<sup>2</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 364, 307.

<sup>3</sup> See in Church Oakley infra.

<sup>4</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 488, 491, 496, 497.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. i, 480.

<sup>6</sup> Woodgarston is not mentioned separately in the Survey, but it was included in Basingstoke Hundred as early as 1275 (Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, 178).

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 171, 176, 236, 364.

<sup>8</sup> Parl. Surv. Hants, no. 6.

<sup>9</sup> Bigg Wither, The Wither Family, 30.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid.

<sup>11</sup> Parl. Surv. Hants, no. 6.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

CHURCH OAKLEY

Aclei (xi cent.); Ocling, Ocle, Chircheocle (xiii cent.); Churchcokle, Chyrhocle (xiv cent.).

The parish of Church Oakley covers an area of 1,630 acres: it lies between the parishes of Wootton St. Lawrence and Deane.

The village stands so close to the eastern border of the parish that the neighbouring hamlet of East Oakley is in the parish of Wootton St. Lawrence. Near the cross roads at the western end of the village stands the church of St. Leonard. The rectory and Oakley Manor, the residence of Mrs. Beach, are close to it, and here too is the school. Further to the east is a reading-room for the use of the villagers.

Malshanger House stands in a well-wooded park to the west of the village, and commands an extensive and pleasant view of the surrounding country: it was built by Edward first Lord Thurlow<sup>1</sup> on the south side of the ancient house, of which a lofty octagonal tower is still standing. The parish of Church Oakley also includes parts of Oakley and Tangier parks and several coppices. In one of these, Bull's Bushes Copse, there are two tumuli, and at a little distance to the south in a small belt of trees near Bull's Bushes Farm is a third tumulus.

The soil is light loam, the subsoil chalk: the most northern and southern points of the parish are alike marked by an old chalk pit.

The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and roots. According to the returns of 1905 about two-thirds of the parish were arable land and about one-third pasture and woodland.<sup>2</sup>

Among place-names mentioned in extant local records the following occur:—La Mede<sup>3</sup> (xiv cent.); Marwelles, Hennodesferme<sup>4</sup> (xvi cent.).

The manor of MALSHANGER MANORS (Gerlei, xi cent.; Gerdelai, xii cent.; Gerdeleigh, Gerlega, Yardesleye, xiii cent.; Mayslanger in Yerdele, Mailleshangre, xiv cent.; Maleshanger, xv cent.; Malsanger Yereley and Dyngley, xvi cent.) probably represents the 3 hides in 'Gerlei' in Chuteley Hundred which were held as an alod by Ocsen of King Edward the Confessor and at the time of the Domesday Survey were in the possession of Walter the son of Other, governor of Windsor Castle and the ancestor of the baronial house of Windsor.<sup>5</sup>

In 1166 Robert de 'Yerlega' held a knight's fee of William de Windsor,<sup>5a</sup> and in 1167 he paid half a mark for 'Gerdelai,'<sup>6</sup> while at the beginning of the 13th century John de Gerdeleigh, probably his descendant, held a knight's fee in 'Gerdeleigh.' He died about 1219,<sup>7</sup> leaving two daughters and co-heirs, Sibyl, who married Adam de la Bere, and Alice the wife of Richard Chambers.<sup>8</sup> The fee was at first divided between them,<sup>9</sup> but in 1239 Alice quitclaimed her share to her sister.<sup>10</sup>

The manor was held by the de la Beres and their successors by knight's service of Richard de Windsor, rendering 6s. 8d. every twenty-four weeks.<sup>11</sup> This rent, called 'ward-silver,' which Richard paid for the ward of Windsor Castle, was held by the Windsors of the king in chief as parcel of the manor of Stanwell (co. Midd.).<sup>12</sup> The last mention of this overlordship occurs in 1502-3, when the manor of Malshanger was stated to be held of Robert Lytton as of the manor of Stanwell.<sup>13</sup>

Adam de la Bere was succeeded by his son John,<sup>14</sup> who died at a great age in 1360, and was followed by his son Thomas. The latter died childless in 1362, leaving as his heirs Maud Punchardoun, the grandchild of his sister Sibyl, and Joan and Christine Ernys, the grandchildren of his sister Katherine.<sup>15</sup>

These co-heiresses married respectively John atte Pole, Thomas Snel and Nicholas Seyntlowe, and in 1383 in conjunction with their husbands conveyed 120 acres of land, 80 acres of pasture, 12 acres of wood and 3s. 6d. rent in Malshanger and 'Yerdele' to John Cok and Margery his wife,<sup>16</sup> who four years later sold the same premises with the addition of lands and rent in Deane and Church Oakley to Robert de Dyneley and Margaret his wife.<sup>17</sup> Robert Dyneley the son of Robert de Dyneley and Margaret<sup>18</sup> was holding the manor of Malshanger of Miles Windsor in 1451.<sup>19</sup> He died in 1455 and was succeeded by his son William,<sup>20</sup> upon whose wife Anne the manor was settled for life, with remainder to Edward Dyneley, William's grandson, and Sanchea his wife.<sup>21</sup> She survived not only Edward and Sanchea<sup>22</sup> but their son Thomas,<sup>23</sup> and was still living in 1504,<sup>24</sup> when the manor was sold by the guardians of Eliza-

WINDSOR. Gules a saltire argent between twelve crosslets or.

<sup>1</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), C 2230.

<sup>4</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, m. 2.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 497b.

<sup>5a</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rolls Ser.), 315.

<sup>6</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191.

<sup>7</sup> Vide Feet of F. Hants, East. 3 Hen. III.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. Mich. 23 Hen. III.

<sup>9</sup> Vide Testa de Nevill, 233b, which returns Sibyl de la Bere as holding only half a knight's fee in 'Jerdelye' of the old enfeoffment of William de Windsor.

<sup>10</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 23 Hen. III.

<sup>11</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, 378.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.; Inq. p.m. 13 Ric. II, no. 32; 22 Ric. II, no. 52; 9 Hen. V, no. 45; 6 Hen. VI, no. 46; 30 Hen. VI, no. 11; 17 Hen. VI, no. 36.

<sup>13</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xvi, 123.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, 378.

<sup>15</sup> Inq. p.m. 36 Edw. III, file 166, no. 55.

<sup>16</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Ric. II.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. East. 10 Ric. II.

<sup>18</sup> See Wolverton in Kingsclere Hundred.

<sup>19</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Hen. VI, no. 11. According to the inquisitions taken on the deaths of Brian Windsor (Inq. p.m.

22 Ric. II, no. 52) and Richard Windsor (ibid. 6 Hen. VI, no. 46) the manor was held by William Hornby in 1399, and by Thomas Bromflete in 1428. It is known that William Hornby was a trustee of the Dyneley family (see Pat. 18 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 3; 19 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 25). Thus in 1400 he presented a rector to the living of Wolverton as 'lord of Wolverton' (Wykeham's Reg. [Hants Rec. Soc.], i, 226). It is probable that Thomas Bromflete was a trustee also.

<sup>20</sup> P.C.C. Will 8 Stockton.

<sup>21</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. Hen. VII, i, 411-12.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.

<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xvi, 123.

<sup>24</sup> De Banc. R. Hil. 19 Hen. VII, m. 503.

CHURCH OAKLEY : MALSHANGER HOUSE

both the infant daughter and heir of Thomas to William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury,<sup>25</sup> the most distinguished member of a family which had already been established for many years at Malshanger.

DYNELEY. Argent a fesse sable with a molet between two roundels sable in the chief.

WARHAM. Gules a fesse or with a goat's head razed argent having golden horns in the chief and three scallops argent in the foot.

Here the archbishop appears to have been brought up, and hence he was sent to Wykeham's colleges at Winchester and Oxford. He was afterwards a diligent student of the law and practised in the Court of Arches: he then became known to Archbishop Morton, who commended him to Henry VII. Both under this king and Henry VIII Warham filled high office, being successively Keeper of the Rolls, Ambassador to Burgundy, Bishop of London and Chancellor of England.<sup>26</sup> He was a reformer on a moderate scale who ruled over the English Church with gentleness and some pliability. He died in 1532,<sup>27</sup> and was succeeded at Malshanger by his nephew and namesake,<sup>28</sup> who was still living in 1560.<sup>29</sup> In June 1550 he seems to have been in trouble with the Privy Council, probably as a partisan of the Protector Somerset, for 'a recognisance was taken of him of cc<sup>li</sup>, the condicion tappare within xij monethes at any time that resonable warning shall be given him, and for the meane season to be a good and obedient subject.'<sup>30</sup> His only daughter Mary<sup>31</sup> married Richard Puttenham, the reputed author of The Arte of Poesie, the first real example of a philosophical criticism of English literature.<sup>32</sup> Their daughter Anne became the wife of Francis Morrys and succeeded to the Malshanger estate,<sup>33</sup> which she sold in 1571 by the description of 'the manor of Malshanger alias Malshanger Yereley alias Malshanger Dyngley' to Sir William Kingsmill and Wolstan Dixie,<sup>34</sup> Alderman and afterwards Lord Mayor of London. Dixie sold his moiety to Henry Middlemore,<sup>35</sup> from whom it was bought in 1587 by Sir Richard Fiennes,<sup>36</sup> who subsequently conveyed it to his father-in-law Sir William Kingsmill.<sup>37</sup> The further descent of the manor of Malshanger is identical with that of Tangley in Pastrow Hundred (q.v.) until 1806, when it was sold by the trustees of John Fisher to the Lord Chancellor, Edward first Lord Thurlow.<sup>38</sup> Maria the illegitimate daughter of Lord Thurlow had married in 1801 Sir David Cunynghame, bart., of Milncraig and Livingstone: she died in 1816, leaving an only son, afterwards Sir David Thurlow Cuninghame, bart., of Cosham,<sup>39</sup> who sold Malshanger about 1858 to Sir Wyndham Spencer Portal, bart.,<sup>40</sup> from whose son Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart., it was bought in 1908 by its present owner, Mr. Godfrey Walter.<sup>41</sup>

In 1086 Hugh the son of Baldri, the owner of Stratfieldsaye, was holding 1½ hides in OAKLEY which Bundi had held of Edward the Confessor.<sup>42</sup> The overlordship of this estate passed with that of Stratfieldsaye (q.v.) to the family of Stoteville, and early in the 13th century John de Gerdeleigh, Nicholas de Kipping and John the parson of Deane were holding one-fifth of a knight's fee of the old enfeoffment of Robert de Gray, who held of John de Stoteville.<sup>43</sup> This holding of John de Gerdeleigh passed to his daughter Alice the wife of Richard Chambers,<sup>44</sup> but its later history cannot be traced further with any certainty. Nicholas de Kipping's descendant acquired other property in the parish, and the history of the whole estate to which was afterwards given the name of Kippings is traced below. Nothing more is known about the holding of the parson of Deane in this parish.

STOTEVILLE. Burelly argent and gules.

There was another manor in Church Oakley in the reign of Edward the Confessor which was held by Alwin as an alod of that king<sup>45</sup>: it belonged at the time of the Survey to Hugh de Port,<sup>46</sup> of whose descendant Robert St. John it was afterwards held as two knights' fees by Geoffrey Arundel of Nicholas Rastall.<sup>47</sup> Geoffrey Arundel seems to have been succeeded by Robert, whose son and heir Roger<sup>48</sup> in the early years of the 14th century conveyed his fee to Nicholas Kipping,<sup>49</sup> already owner of property in the parish, John Rastall<sup>50</sup> and Nicholas atte Berton.<sup>51</sup> These three holdings afterwards came to be regarded as three separate manors.

The ATTE BERTONS' holding belonged in 1329 to James atte Berton,<sup>52</sup> who was probably the son and heir of Nicholas. He seems to have met a tragic death, for in 1345 an inquiry was held as to <sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>25</sup> De Banc. R. Trin. 19 Hen. VII, m. 413; Mich. 20 Hen. VII, m. 478 d.; De Banc. R. Chart. Enr. Hil. 20 Hen. VII, m. 2 d.; Mich. 20 Hen. VII, m. 1 d.; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 20 Hen. VII.

<sup>26</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 4 Edw. VI; Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, m. 2; Recov. R. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, rot. 156.

<sup>29</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 2 Eliz.

<sup>30</sup> Acts of the P.C. 1550-2, p. 46.

<sup>31</sup> She is also called 'Anne.'

<sup>32</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>33</sup> The reversion had been settled upon her by her grandfather in 1560 (Feet of F. Hants, East. 2 Eliz.).

<sup>34</sup> Ibid. Hil. 13 Eliz.

<sup>35</sup> Close, 29 Eliz. pt. xii.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid.

<sup>37</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. 17 Jas. I (Ser. 2), bdle. 28, no. 49.

<sup>38</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 47 Geo. III, m. 107.

<sup>39</sup> G.E.C. Baronetage, iv, 402.

<sup>40</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid.

<sup>42</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 496.

<sup>43</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234.

<sup>44</sup> Gray' ought perhaps to read 'Say,' for Robert de Say was lord of Stratfieldsaye at this date.

<sup>45</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 23 Hen. III.

<sup>46</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 482.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Testa de Nevill, 230.

<sup>49</sup> Vide Anct. D. (P.R.O.), C 2230.

<sup>50</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> There is some uncertainty as to this last, but Nicholas atte Berton seems to have acquired property in Oakley at this time (vide 'Farley Chamberlayne,' Feud. Aids, ii, 325, 352). James atte Berton certainly held half a knight's fee there of John de St. John in 1329. John Rastall and Nicholas Kipping held only half the Arundel fee between them.

<sup>53</sup> Cal. Close, 1327-30, p. 506.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

the sanity of John, his son and heir, and 'it was found that the said John was of sound mind from his infancy, having no hope of idiocy, but by the great grief and terror caused by the death of his father he lost much of his memory.'<sup>53</sup> He, however, afterwards regained his lands, which had been given into the custody of Thomas de Missenden for payment of a yearly rent to the king,<sup>54</sup> and sold them with the consent of Roger atte Berton to Robert de St. Manefeo in 1347.<sup>55</sup> Robert enlarged his holding in 1354 by an acquisition of land from Thomas Paynel,<sup>56</sup> but after this date the history of the property becomes very difficult to trace. It seems, however, to have passed to the Whiteheads,<sup>57</sup> and probably therefore became incorporated in the estate of Kippings.

KIPPINGS (Cuppyngs, xiv cent. ; Kyppynges, xvi cent.).

Nicholas Kipping held land in Church Oakley of the Stoteville fee at the beginning of the reign of Henry III<sup>58</sup> and was still living in 1241, in which year he acquired half a virgate of land from Agnes widow of Gerold de Redvers.<sup>59</sup> In 1346 his descendant, another Nicholas, shared with John Rastall half a knight's fee which they had acquired from Roger Arundel,<sup>60</sup> and another half-fee which had formerly belonged to Rastall only<sup>61</sup>; this property passed before 1428 to Robert Whitehead,<sup>62</sup> and subsequently followed the same descent as the manor of Norman Court in West Tytherley<sup>63</sup> (q.v.) until it was sold by Augustine Whitehead to William Warham.<sup>64</sup>

In 1552 William Warham settled the manor of Kippings on himself, Elizabeth his wife and their issue, with remainder to the right heirs of Elizabeth.<sup>65</sup> At this point the history of the estate becomes somewhat obscure, but it probably descended to Anne the wife of Francis Morrys, and was sold towards the end of the 16th century.

In 1587 John Hunte died seised of half the manor, leaving as his heir his only daughter Anne, then wife of Thomas Clerke,<sup>66</sup> who seems to have been the owner of the other moiety, for he settled the whole manor in the same year on himself, his wife and the heirs of his body.<sup>67</sup> On the marriage of their son Thomas to Alice the daughter of William Crosse of Norton Fitzwarren (co. Somers.) in 1625 the manor was, however, settled upon the young couple.<sup>68</sup>

In 1633 the estate was conveyed by Thomas Clerke the younger and his brother Henry to Adam Airye and James Martyn<sup>69</sup>: it subsequently passed to the Withers of Oakley Hall in the parish of Deane (q.v.).

In 1807 the manor of Kippings was in the possession of Augusta Bramston,<sup>70</sup> who died unmarried in 1819, when the estate passed to her brother Wither Bramston. Upon his death in 1832 Kippings became the property of his kinsman William Beach, whose grandson Major William Archibald Hicks Beach is the owner at the present day.

RASTALLS (Rastels, xv cent. ; Rascalls, Rastawells, xvi cent.).

The family of Rastall was connected with Church Oakley at least as early as 1211, for in that year Walter Rastall and Rose his wife unsuccessfully claimed against the Prior of Sherborne the advowson of the church.<sup>71</sup> In the reign of Henry III Nicholas Rastall, who was perhaps the son of Walter, held one knight's fee of the old enfeoffment of Robert de St. John,<sup>72</sup> which was subsequently held jointly by John Rastall of Nicholas Kipping.<sup>73</sup> This property remained in the possession of the same family until the close of the 15th century, but on the death of the last John Rastall at an advanced age in 1487 it passed to his great-nephew Richard Algar,<sup>74</sup> and subsequently came into the hands of William Warham.<sup>75</sup>

In 1552 William Warham settled it on himself and his heirs,<sup>76</sup> and in 1560 it formed part of the portion of his granddaughter Anne Puttenham, who married Francis Morrys.<sup>77</sup> By them it seems to have been sold to Richard Pile, who conveyed it in 1581 to Michael Reneger.<sup>78</sup>

'The messuage called Rastawells' was sold in 1587 by Sir Richard Fiennes to Gilbert Wither,<sup>79</sup> but the manor belonged in 1625 to Thomas Clerke the elder, and was settled on his son and namesake together with the manor of Kippings,<sup>80</sup> the descent of which it seems to have followed since that date.<sup>81</sup>

In 1305 John de Acton granted a messuage, a carucate of land and rent in Church Oakley to Sir John Randolph the lord of Ashe,<sup>82</sup> who settled the property in 1306 on himself and Joan his wife and his issue with contingent remainder to John de Drokensford and his heirs, a settlement to which John de la Bere, the owner of Malshanger, opposed his claim.<sup>83</sup> In 1308 Sir John Randolph acquired several other WHITEHEAD. Azure a fesse between fleurs de lis or.

<sup>53</sup> Cal. of Close, 1343-6, p. 623.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid.

<sup>55</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 20 Edw. III.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 27 Edw. III.

<sup>57</sup> The Whiteheads were seised of a manor of Oakley worth 40s., which they held of the Pauleys by fealty only (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], xi, 104; De Banc. R. Mich. 15 Hen. VII, m. 121; Hil. m. 21, m. 427).

<sup>58</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234.

<sup>59</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 25 Hen. III.

<sup>60</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid. 347.

<sup>63</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 104.

<sup>64</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, m. 2.

<sup>65</sup> Ibid.

<sup>66</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxii, 168.

<sup>67</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz.

<sup>68</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dcxxvii, 51.

<sup>69</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 8 Chas. I.

<sup>70</sup> Recov. R. Hants, Trin. 47 Geo. III, m. 218. She was the daughter of Edmund Bramston and Henrietta Maria his wife, daughter and heir of Charles Wither (Berry, Hants Gen. 256-7).

<sup>71</sup> Cur. Reg. R. Mich. 13 John, m. 2 d. Rose was the daughter and heir of Bartholomew de Oakley, one of the sons of Revelendus lord of Mattingley in the parish of Heckfield (q.v.), sometimes called Ralph de Portlandis of Mattingley (Red Bk. of Exch. i, 208). In 1204 she paid King John 100s. to have her reasonable share of the two knights' fees in Oakley and Mattingley formerly belonging to her father (Rot. de Oblatis et Fin. 218). In reality she only had a right to the fee in Oakley, for her father had given up the fee in Mattingley to his younger brother Stephen (vide Bigg-Wither, The Wither Family, 70).

<sup>72</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230.

<sup>73</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>74</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 82.

<sup>75</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, m. 2.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid.

<sup>77</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 2 Eliz.

<sup>78</sup> Close, 23 Eliz. pt. ix, m. 21.

<sup>79</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Ellice Hicks Beach.

<sup>80</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dcxxvii, 51.

<sup>81</sup> Vide Recov. R. Trin. 47 Geo. III, m. 218.

<sup>82</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 32 Edw. I.

<sup>83</sup> Ibid. Trin. 33 Edw. I.

small holdings in the parish,<sup>84</sup> and the estate which was afterwards known as the manor of CHURCH OAKLEY was said in 1354 to be held partly of John de la Bere and partly of John Rastall and Robert de St. Manefeo.<sup>85</sup> It passed with the manor of Ashe (q.v.) to the family of Fiennes in the middle of the 15th century and continued with that family until 1589,<sup>86</sup> when Sir Richard Fiennes sold it to Gilbert Wither.<sup>87</sup> George Wither the son of Gilbert Wither purchased the adjoining property of Oakley Hall in 1620,<sup>88</sup> and from this date the descent of the two estates has been identical, the present owner being Major William Archibald Hicks Beach.

Sir John Stonore, who was seised of the manor in 1346, received from Edward III a grant of free warren in his demesne lands in Church Oakley.<sup>89</sup>

Besides the manors belonging to Hugh de Port, Walter the son of Other, and Hugh the son of Baldri in 1086, there was an estate in Church Oakley containing 1½ hides which belonged to Robert son of Gerold. It had been formed by the union of two estates, one of which had been held of King Edward by Tovi and the other by Bolle. This latter holding lay in 'Gerlei,' and the jurors affirmed that it had never belonged to his manor.<sup>90</sup> The further history of this estate cannot be traced with certainty. There was yet another holding in 1086, i.e. half a virgate of land and 4 acres in 'Gerlei' belonging to William de Ow,<sup>90a</sup> but this had already been merged in the manor of Deane (q.v.) which William also held.

The church of ST. LEONARD has a CHURCH chancel 27 ft. 3 in. by 14 ft. 9 in., nave 32 ft. 4 in. by 16 ft. 4 in., north and south chapels 14 ft. 7 in. by 11 ft. 3 in., north and south aisles 10 ft. wide, and a west tower 11 ft. 3 in. square; all these measurements are internal.

There was a church here in the 12th century with a nave of the size of the present one and a chancel. To this nave about 1180-90 a south aisle was added, the west arch of the south arcade being of that date.

The tower seems to have been built by Archbishop Warham early in the 16th century, and the south aisle, or Malshanger Chapel, was rebuilt at the same time, including the first bay of the south arcade. The chancel has no old features and its history is not now to be traced; its width is probably that of the 12th-century chancel. A great deal of repair and rebuilding took place in 1840 and 1868-97; the north aisle was added at the former date, but in 1868 was replaced by the present one, and the whole of the chancel, except part of the north wall, the north and south chapels (the east window of the south aisle being re-used in the latter), and the greater part of the tower are of this date, the roofs and most of the fittings and furniture being also modern. Before 1868 the church had a north porch and doorway, above which was the curious 12th-century carving now on the west face of the tower; a very narrow north aisle, containing a single bench set east and west along the wall and a small chancel with no seats, partly used as a vestry. It was separated from the nave by a screen with cresting like that now at Baughurst Church, which is known as the Warham screen. The loft over it remained within living memory, and in it sat the village quire. The pulpit was at the south-east of the nave and the font at the south-west. At a later date the quire sat in a gallery under the tower, the rood-loft having been taken down. About this time the north door was closed, and the west door of the tower became the principal entrance.

The chancel has an east window of three lights with tracery, and a south window of a single cinquefoiled light. In the south wall is a trefoiled piscina and on the north side a credence recess, both of modern date. Arcades of two bays on either side separate the chancel and the chapels; these have pairs of marble shafts in the middle and on both responds with carved stone capitals, moulded bases, and two-centred moulded arches; the chancel arch, which is modern, is similar in design, but the marble shafts rest on moulded corbels carried by figures of angels.

The east window in the south chapel is of early 16th-century date, partly restored, and has three cinquefoiled ogee-headed lights with tracery above in a four-centred head. In the south wall are a modern doorway and a cross-shaped window. The north chapel has similar windows and a doorway near its west end. The arches dividing the chapels from the aisles are both modern; they have chamfered jambs and double-chamfered arches.

The north arcade of the nave has two bays with a round middle pier and half-round responds with moulded capitals and bases; the arches are pointed and of two chamfered orders. The first bay of the south arcade (c. 1500) has continuous chamfered jambs and a two-centred arch, the three internal faces of both jambs and arch being worked in long panels trefoiled at top and bottom; the second arch (c. 1190) has half-round responds with moulded and spurred bases; the capitals are cut with small scallops and have a hollow-chamfered abacus; the arch is pointed of two chamfered orders. The plaster edges round the arch are cut in scalloped and zigzag lines, but there is no evidence whether this reproduces the old treatment.

The south aisle, or Malshanger Chapel, has three early 16th-century south windows, each of two cinquefoiled four-centred lights, all much repaired, and the west window is a modern single light; the north aisle has two north windows and one in the west wall to match those of the south aisle.

The tower is of three stages; the arch opening to it from the nave is of two continuous hollow chamfers, the upper parts of the jambs and the arch being modern, while the rest is of early 16th-century work.

The west doorway has a four-centred arch in a square head, the spandrels are carved with foliage, showing Renaissance influence; in the northern is a goat's head, part of the Warham arms; in the southern a bent arm holding a sword, the Warham crest. The label is moulded with a hollow down the sides, but in the head the hollow is omitted and the words 'AVXILIV M EVM A DNO'—Archbishop <sup>84</sup> Anct. D. (P.R.O.), C 2230. Some of these lands were acquired from Roger de Arundel, and were probably, therefore, those which were afterwards said to be held of John Rastall and Robert de St. Manefeo.

<sup>85</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. III, no. 58.

<sup>86</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 16 Ric. II; Div. Co. East. 26 Hen. VI; Mich. 14 Edw. IV; Mich. 1 Edw. VI; Close, 18 Hen. VI, m. 9; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xv, 61; xlvii, 93; xlix, 4.

<sup>87</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Ellice Hicks Beach.

<sup>88</sup> Vide parish of Deane.

<sup>89</sup> Chart. R. 20 Edw. III, m. 4.

<sup>90</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 488a.

<sup>90a</sup> Ibid. 491b.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Warham's motto—are cut on its plain splay. Over the label are three shields; the northernmost is modern and bears the arms of the Province of Canterbury, the middle has Canterbury impaling Warham, the southern has Warham alone with a molet on the fesse. Over the doorway is a modern window of two cinquefoiled lights under a square head. Over this in the second stage is set the curious carving formerly over the north door of the nave; it is of good 12th-century style and represents in low relief a seated human figure with the head of a beast or bird; it is perhaps St. Mark or St. John; its right hand is raised and its left hand rests on its knee. The third stage (bell chamber) is modern; it is lighted by two-light traceried windows; the parapet is embattled and has pinnacles at the corners. A modern stair turret at the north-east angle of the tower stands up above the parapet in octagonal form.

All the furniture is modern except the bowl of the font, which was formerly used as a horse-trough in a farm near by (The Chestnuts) and was placed in the church in 1869. It looks like the base stone of a mediaeval cross and is octagonal above with large rounded stops at the corners, but there seems good foundation for the story of its having been taken from the church to the farmyard by a former churchwarden.

Two old tombs remain in the south chapel and south aisle respectively; the former has no inscription or date but dates from c. 1520, and probably commemorates the parents of the archbishop. A mid-18th-century note in the register states that £5 was left 'to clean the tombe in the isle,' but it is evident that the tomb was then supposed to be that of some later Warhams, 1569 and 1595.

The tomb is altar shaped with panelled sides and ends; on either side is an arched niche between a pair of cusped quatrefoils inclosing shields with the Warham arms, and at either end are similar quatrefoils. On the tomb are somewhat weathered alabaster effigies of a knight and lady; he wears plate armour over a mail hauberk, and around his neck is a slender chain; he has frilled cuffs at his wrists and rings on his fingers and wears square-toed sabatons; his sword is much broken away, but the pommel remains carved with an I.H.S. The lady has a kennel head-dress, a loose sash at the waist, a full-skirted gown and a long mantle fastened across the breast by cords; about her neck a chain with a cross pendant is thrice wound. The other tomb is below the easternmost window of the south aisle set in a recess; it has a panelled front with a plainly moulded top edge and plinth; in the top slab are two small brass figures of a man in civil dress and his wife, and the inscription below the figures reads:—'Orate p. aiabz Roberti Warham q' obiit p'mo die mē̄s Octobris anno dni m<sup>o</sup>ccccxxxvii<sup>o</sup> et Elizabeth uxore ei que eciā obiit eodē anno dñi xv<sup>o</sup> die Septēbris q'rm aiabus ppiciet' de<sup>o</sup> amē.' Below are their four sons and the indent of two daughters. The recess has a four-centred arch in a square head with cusped spandrels.

In the west window of this aisle is a little old glass.

It came from Wootton Church, and has been partly restored. It represents Archbishop Warham in processional vestments with mitre and cross; below are fragments of inscriptions: 'Warā et paniā [Orate pro] no statu Issabella (sic) que istā fenestrā fieri fecit.'

There are six bells, all by James Wells of Aldbourne, excepting the tenor and the third; the latter was recast by Mears & Stainbank in 1894 and the tenor added in the same year.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1569; a silver paten of 1617 inscribed with the name 'St. Coperthwait, 1617' (a rector of Oakley); and a silver flagon of 1792.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms, marriages and burials mixed from 1559 to 1754, and baptisms and burials to 1782; the second book has marriages 1754 to 1812, and the third baptisms and burials 1784 to 1812.

There was a church on Hugh de ADVOWSON Port's estate in Church Oakley at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>91</sup>

The right of presentation belonged in the 12th century to Revelendus lord of Mattingley, and was by him granted to the Prior and convent of Monk Sherborne with the consent of his son Bartholomew de Oakley father of Rose the wife of Walter Rastall.<sup>92</sup> It continued in the possession of the priory until the 14th century,<sup>93</sup> when it was taken into the king's hands on account of the war with France.<sup>94</sup> In 1462 it was granted by King Edward IV to the God's House at Southampton together with the manor of Monk Sherborne,<sup>95</sup> the descent of which it has followed since that date.<sup>96</sup> The present patrons are the Provost and fellows of Queen's College, Oxford.

The charities founded by will of CHARITIES George Wither, 12 January 1666, and by Gilbert Wither by deed 11 February 1667, and by the will of the said Gilbert Wither dated 20 June 1676, and by Wither Bramston by deed dated 28 January 1826, are regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 1 April 1884.

The endowments consist of annuities of £8 and £2 issuing out of a messuage in Tadley, now in the possession of Major Archibald William Hicks Beach and £2,548 os. 9d. consols, held by the official trustees, producing a yearly income of £63 14s., which together with the rents-charge of £10 was in 1905 applied in prizes of money and books at the Deane and Oakley School at a cost of £17 11s. 6d., and for the Deane and Oakley Sunday Schools £8 17s., £31 in clothing, £5 4s. in apprenticing, and £11 to the Bramston Church Fund, Deane.

By an order of the Charity Commissioners of 8 September 1903 made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, the sum of stock above mentioned was apportioned as to £1,445 5s. 7d. consols for the Wither Bramston Educational Charity, and as to £1,102 15s. 2d. consols for the Church and Poor Charity.

In 1790 Mrs. E. Bramston left £21, the interest to be applied in clothing and other articles in kind for the poor of Church Oakley and Deane.

<sup>91</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 482.

<sup>92</sup> Cur. Reg. R. Mich. 13 John, m.

2 d. Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 134.

<sup>94</sup> Cal. Pat. 1324-7, p. 297; Egerton MSS. 2033, fol. 9; 2034, fol. 8; Pat. 12 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 12.

<sup>95</sup> Ibid. 1 Edw. IV, pt. iv, m. 13.

<sup>96</sup> Ibid. 3 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 17; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 36; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

HANNINGTON

Hanitune (xi cent.) ; Hanyngton (xiv cent.).

The parish of Hannington covers an area of 2,045 acres, of which 1,312 acres are arable land, 290½ acres permanent grass and 174¾ acres woodland<sup>1</sup>: the main part of the parish lies to the south of Kingsclere, but there are several detached portions. Hannington village is in the south-west part of the parish. At its western end stands the church of All Saints, between Hannington Farm and the Manor Farm, where, it is said, the courts used to be held, 'but not within the memory of the oldest living inhabitants.'<sup>2</sup> Dicker's Farm, which still bears the name of its 17th-century tenants,<sup>3</sup> is a little further north. The rectory, which is almost a quarter of a mile away from the church, stands close to the Primitive Methodist chapel in the north of the parish. William Page, the celebrated Laudian divine, was rector here in 1642, but the living was sequestered in August 1646 on account of his delinquency.<sup>4</sup>

Dean's Wood and Gaston Copse lie to the east of Hannington village, and together stretch almost across the parish; for the great oak tree which marks the north-east corner is not far from the borders of Dean's Wood. To the south of Gaston Copse runs Ibworth Lane, which, with Folly Lane, connects the main part of the parish with the largest of the detached parts. This part of the parish lies to the south of Ewhurst Park, and contains the hamlet of Ibworth, of which the principal buildings are Ibworth Farm and Bailey Hall Farm. Here too is an old timbered cottage called Warhams, where, according to local tradition, Archbishop Warham was born: Malshanger, however, is also claimed as his birthplace, though the Warhams certainly had property in Hannington at least as early as 1463.<sup>5</sup> The cottage belongs to Sir William Portal, bart., the former owner of Malshanger.

About a quarter of a mile north-west of Shear Down Farm, and close to the Kingsclere road, is a tumulus.

The Roman road from Silchester to Salisbury runs through another detached part of Hannington, which lies to the north-east. On Cottington Hill, in Kingsclere parish, about half a mile north of the Roman road, is a barrow, from near which a fine view of the surrounding country may be obtained.

The soil is clay, the subsoil chalk; the chief crops are wheat, barley and oats.

Among place-names mentioned in local records the following occur:—Ibbeworthe, Shirdoune, Roghedowne, Splotlonde, Foxcote<sup>6</sup> (xiv cent.), Haselholt<sup>7</sup> (xvii cent.).

The manor of HANNINGTON was MANOR held at the time of the Domesday Survey by the Bishop of Winchester, and had belonged from very early times to the cathedral monastery.<sup>8</sup> In 1284 John of Pontoise, Bishop of Winchester, quitclaimed to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun all his right in the estate,<sup>9</sup> which subsequently followed the descent of the manor of Manydown in Wootton St. Lawrence (q.v.) and was granted by Henry VIII to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester.<sup>10</sup> The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are the lords of the manor at the present day.

The farm of Hannington was in the hands of Thomas Drewett in 1575,<sup>11</sup> and eighteen years later it was leased to Roland Drewett 'for and durement the natural lives of Sibyl, Thomas and Richard Druett, and the longest liver of them.'<sup>12</sup> In 1625 William Drewett was among those appointed 'to see what timber trees, and what wood and underwood have been felled, grubbed, and carried away by any tenaunt of this manor, and to certifie at the next audit the truth what has been done in this matter, and in the meantime . . . to appoint their tymes for herroeing of the waste upon peine of £5 evry one making default to meet at the times appointed.'<sup>13</sup> Thomas the son of Roland Drewett was the tenant of Hannington in 1649.<sup>14</sup>

The church of ALL SAINTS consists of a chancel 20 ft. 4 in. by 15 ft. 10 in., nave 41 ft. 2 in. by 16 ft. 9 in., south aisle 6 ft. 8 in. wide and north porch.

The north-east angle and doubtless much of the north and east walls of the nave are of pre-Conquest date, belonging to a building which had a nave about 28 ft. long by the present width (16 ft. 9 in.), and a small chancel probably some 12 to 14 ft. square. To this nave a narrow south aisle was added with an arcade of two bays about 1180-90, and the chancel arch was perhaps rebuilt at this time. In the 14th century the arches of the south arcade and the chancel arch were renewed and windows inserted in the south aisle. The chancel appears to date from the 15th century, but may not be the immediate successor of the early chancel.

A squint from nave to chancel was cut in the south jamb of the chancel arch after the chancel was widened. In modern times the church has been lengthened by some 13 ft. or more, an additional bay being built on to the arcade, and the bell-turret erected above the roof. The pressure of the roofs has forced the chancel walls outward, and the east wall has been rebuilt and a new roof put on, with several smaller repairs; the north porch is also modern.

The east window of the chancel is a modern one

DIocese of WINCHESTER. Gules St. Peter's keys crossed with St. Paul's sword.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Kitchin, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 78-9.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 'Court R. of 1661.'

<sup>4</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. The College of All Souls, of which he had been elected fellow in 1619, immediately presented him to the rectory of East Lockinge (co. Berks.), which benefice he held till his death in Feb. 1663.

<sup>5</sup> 'Sheredoune' and other lands were leased to Robert Warham in that year (Kitchin, op. cit. 79).

<sup>6</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 'Rental of Hannington, 1351.'

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 'Survey of Manydown, 1649.'

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 467.

<sup>9</sup> Cal. Chanc. R. 1257-1300, p. 288.

<sup>10</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix.

<sup>11</sup> Walter Money, A Perfect Boke, 34.

<sup>12</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 'Survey of Manydown, 1649.'

<sup>13</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 71.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 'Survey of Manydown, 1649.'

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

of three lights under a traceried head ; south of it in the east wall is a plain ogee-headed recess with ledges for a shelf. There are no sedilia or piscina. In each side wall are two wide single windows of 15th-century date with cinquefoiled lights and small cusped piercings over under square heads, with moulded labels. Between the southern pair is a blocked pointed doorway, the outer stonework of which has been renewed and set upright to buttress the great outward lean of the wall. The chancel arch has old square jambs which have been much mutilated and are now mostly of modern stone, with plain hollow-chamfered abaci ; these may be of late 12th-century date, while the arch is a pointed one of two chamfered orders ; it is thinner than the jambs, being probably of 14th-century rebuilding. In its south jamb is a squint with a round head.

The north-east angle of the nave has well-marked long and short quoins of pre-Conquest date, set out to stop the original external plastering, which has now been taken off. Both north windows of the nave are modern, that at the north-east being of three cinquefoiled lights under a square head of 14th-century style, while the other, west of the north door, is a modern lancet.

The north doorway has a pointed arch of a single chamfered order, with hollow-chamfered abaci and a chamfered label ; the stone has been retooled and altered, but may be of late 12th-century date.

The south arcade has three bays with round pillars and half-round responds ; they have base moulds with a small hollow between two rolls—on a square sub-base ; the capitals are square with fluted scallops of very late type, and the abaci are hollow-chamfered below. The arches are pointed and have small edge chamfers, the outer half order on the north side being cut back above the capitals, which are not wide enough to take it. The eastern respond and the first pillar are 12th-century work, the second pillar and the western respond are modern ; the first two arches are also old, probably 14th-century work, while the third arch is modern. In the west wall of the nave are two modern lancet windows.

The east window of the south aisle is of three lights with plain pointed heads and intersecting tracery ; it is probably of early 14th-century date ; the three south windows are all single lights, the first has moulded jambs and a trefoiled pointed arch in a square head and is of 15th-century date ; then comes a blocked 15th-century doorway ; the second window is of the 14th century and has a trefoiled ogee head, and the third is a modern copy of the second ; in the west wall is a modern lancet. The wall leans outward and has been strengthened by three buttresses and a massive south-eastern angle buttress. The modern north porch is lighted by a window on either side, and has an outer doorway of 14th-century style. The walling is of flint and stone rubble ; the old part of the south aisle and the south wall of the chancel are cement faced outside.

The eastern half of the nave roof is old and quite plain and of uncertain date, all its timbers being left rough. It has tie-beams with a king post and two struts, all tenoned into a collar, and there are two purlins with wind braces below the upper ones. The rest of the nave roof is modern, and over it is a bell-turret with square slated sides, above which is a lead roof, and arising from this is a shingled octagonal oak spire.

The altar, font, &c., are all of modern date, but the pulpit is a good piece of early 17th-century work, hexagonal, with two tiers of carved panels

There are three bells ; the first is inscribed ' Prayse ye the Lord 1624,' the second is by Henry Knight, 1619, and the third by the second Henry Knight, 1680.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, a paten cover of 1680 inscribed with the names of the rector, Thomas Webb, and the churchwardens, a silver paten of 1714 inscribed with the name of the rector, Abraham Ogden, and the churchwardens of that year, and a silver alms plate of 1844.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms, marriages and burials from 1771 to 1812, the second has marriages from 1768 to 1812 and some later.

At the time of the Domesday ADVOUSON Survey there was a church in Hannington, which was included in the holding of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>15</sup> The right of presentation remained in the possession of the bishop until 1852,<sup>16</sup> when it passed to the Bishop of Lichfield<sup>17</sup> : he transferred it in 1873 to the Lord Chancellor,<sup>18</sup> who is the patron at the present day.<sup>19</sup>

There is a Primitive Methodist chapel.

<sup>15</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 467.

<sup>16</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 77 ; 2034, fol. 176 ; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>17</sup> Lond. Gaz. 4 June 1852, p. 1578.

<sup>18</sup> Clergy List, 1874. <sup>19</sup> Ibid. 1910.

HANNINGTON CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING SOUTH-EAST

MONK SHERBORNE : PRIORY CHURCH : EFFIGY OF A KNIGHT

MONK SHERBORNE

Sireborne (xi cent.); Shireburn, Sherbourne, Sherborn Monks (xiv cent.); Westshirbourne (xv cent.).

The parish of Monk Sherborne lies to the north of Wootton St. Lawrence and west of Sherborne St. John: it covers an area of 2,045 acres. The road from Kingsclere runs through the southern part of the parish to Basingstoke, and the point at which it enters Monk Sherborne, near Piccadilly Hill, is marked on one side by a stone and on the other by an oak tree which stands a little to the south of the road.

The village of Monk Sherborne stands close to the Monk Sherborne Wood in the east of the parish at the crossing of Kiln Lane and Stokes Lane: the church of All Saints stands at the southern end of the village, and the Manor Farm is close to it. The parish pound was still standing in 1877.

The Priory, now the residence of Major-General Lukin, is at the northern extremity of the parish, close to Pamber, the inhabitants of which still use the Priory Church. The Priory Farm stands close by: it was once surrounded by a moat, the track of which is still to be seen.

The Chineham estate forms a detached portion of Monk Sherborne 3 miles to the south-east, and lies between the two parts of Basing parish. It is crossed by the main road from Basingstoke to Reading: the farm itself stands at a little distance from this road.

Woodgarston is also a tithing in Monk Sherborne, and is 2 miles south-west of the village. By a Local Government Board Order of 1879 six detached portions of the parish were in 1881 transferred to Wootton St. Lawrence.

Monk Sherborne common lands were inclosed in 1793 under the Act of the preceding year,<sup>1</sup> and other common lands in the parish, known as Great Woods, Privett Green, Salter's Heath, Stony Heath, and West Heath, were inclosed in 1832 under a Private Act of 1829.<sup>2</sup> The soil and subsoil are chalk and clay, and the chief crops are wheat, barley and roots.

According to the returns of 1905 about four-sevenths of the parish were arable land, about two-sevenths permanent grass and one-seventh woodland.<sup>3</sup>

The following place-names occur in local records:—La Firugeden, la Bene<sup>4</sup> (xiv cent.), Bulscroft, Shothanger Copse.<sup>4a</sup>

The manor of MONK SHERBORNE MANORS was held in the reign of Edward the Confessor as an alod of the king by Alnod Cild,<sup>5</sup> and belonged at the time of the Domesday Survey to Hugh de Port,<sup>6</sup> whose son Henry gave it to the priory which he founded there as a cell of St. Vigor at Cerisy in Normandy.<sup>7</sup>

Though subject to St. Vigor, the priory of Sherborne seems to have enjoyed a certain degree of independence, for the prior and convent were accepted by the Bishops of Winchester as patrons of the living of Church Oakley.<sup>8</sup> It was, however, regarded throughout as an alien priory by the civil authorities, and was taken into the king's hands in the 14th century on account of the war with France<sup>9</sup>; though the custody of the land was granted to the prior during the royal pleasure for the payment of a yearly ferm.

On the forfeiture of Monk Sherborne as an alien priory King Edward IV granted the manor in 1462 to the Hospital of St. Julian, commonly called God's House, at Southampton.<sup>10</sup> This house had been granted to Queen's College, Oxford, by King Edward III,<sup>11</sup> whose charter had subsequently been confirmed by Richard II,<sup>12</sup> and the lands and muniments of Monk Sherborne Priory consequently came into the hands of the Provost and fellows of that college.

In 1473 the estate was granted to Eton College by Edward IV,<sup>13</sup> but the deed seems to have been vacated by reason of the former grant, for Queen's College remained in possession, and its provost and fellows are the lords of the manor at the present day.

The manor of CHINEHAM (Chinham, xi cent.; Chynnam, Chynham, xiv cent.) was held of Hugh de Port in 1086 by Aghemund,<sup>14</sup> who had himself held it of King Edward the Confessor<sup>15</sup>. It was granted by Adam de Port and the Prior and convent of Sherborne to William, whose son and namesake obtained a confirmation of the grant from William St. John.<sup>16</sup>

In 1272 the lord of the manor was William de Chineham,<sup>17</sup> who died before 1316. He was succeeded by his son Richard,<sup>18</sup> who seems to have made enemies, for 'the houses and goods in his manor of Chineham' were burnt in 1317,<sup>19</sup> whereupon a commission of oyer and terminer touching the incendiaries was issued.

Richard de Chineham died before 1346,<sup>20</sup> for in that year the estate was held by his son John<sup>21</sup>: it subsequently passed to William Brocas, who was seised of it in 1428,<sup>22</sup> but conveyed it before 1431 to William Warblington of Sherfield-upon-Loddon.<sup>23</sup> In 1444 William settled it on himself and his wife

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD. Argent three eagles gules with a molet of six points or on the breast of the dexter eagle.

<sup>1</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>4</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 423.

<sup>4a</sup> In 1666 the trees in Shothanger Copse were marked in presence of the vicars of Monk Sherborne and Wootton St. Lawrence as a boundary between the two parishes (Par. Reg. Monk Sherborne; ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope).

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 486.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. ii, 226.

<sup>8</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 134; 2033, fol. 9; 2034, fol. 8.

<sup>9</sup> Cal. Close, 1327–30, p. 18; 1339–41, p. 240; V.C.H. Hants, ii, 226.

<sup>10</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. IV, pt. iv, m. 13.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 3 Edw. IV, pt. iii, m. 17.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 13 Edw. IV, pt. i, m. 10.

<sup>14</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 480.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid.

<sup>16</sup> Warner, Hants, i, 164.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. Hen. III, 285. Herbert

Pecche died seised of a piece of land held of William de Chineham in 1272. He left a son and heir Bartholomew. In 1356 this holding was granted by Sir John Pecche to Bernard Brocas and ultimately became reunited to the manor (Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 362).

<sup>18</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 313.

<sup>19</sup> Cal. Pat. 1313–17, p. 689.

<sup>20</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 332.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. 344.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. 364.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Margaret in tail with contingent remainder to Henry Puttenham, his first cousin.<sup>24</sup> He died in 1469,<sup>25</sup> but his widow survived until 1484, when she was succeeded by William, the son and heir of Henry Puttenham.<sup>26</sup>

Richard, the grandson of William Puttenham, was seised of the manor of Chineham in 1552,<sup>27</sup> in which year he settled it on himself and his wife Mary and their issue, with remainder to his own right heirs<sup>28</sup>; but after this date the history of the holding becomes obscure.<sup>29</sup>

In 1747 John Harwood, William Hunt, Simon Boulton and James King and their wives dealt with the manor, which they quitclaimed to Thomas Cowslad,<sup>30</sup> a member of a family which had long been established at Basingstoke.<sup>31</sup> The estate passed shortly afterwards to William Earl of Dartmouth, who with his wife Frances Catherine, the daughter and heiress of Sir Charles Gunter Nicholle, was vouchee in a recovery of 1755.<sup>32</sup> George Viscount Lewisham, the eldest son of the Earl of Dartmouth, was the vouchee in a recovery of 1786.<sup>33</sup> At the present day Chineham belongs to Lord Bolton, having been purchased about seventy years ago by the late Lord Bolton from Mrs. Hasker, whose husband had purchased it from Lord Dartmouth.<sup>34</sup>

The manor of WOODGARSTON (Wealagerstune, x cent.; Wudegarestone, Wodcastone, xii cent.; Wodegarstone, xiii cent.; Wodgaston, Woodcastle, xvi cent.) was probably included in the manor of Sherborne at the time of the Domesday Survey, but it was not among the lands granted to the priory. In 945 King Edmund had granted 24 'jugera' of land in the place called 'Wealagerstune' to Æthelnod his priest,<sup>34a</sup> and this probably represented the later manor.

In the reign of Henry I John de Port enfeoffed Matthew de Scures,<sup>35</sup> and towards the end of the 12th century another Matthew, who was perhaps the great-grandson of the first feoffee, settled Woodgarston with the consent of Roger his heir upon his younger son and namesake.<sup>36</sup> In 1226 James de Scures, the son of the last Matthew, was lord of the manor: in that year he obtained licence from the pope to have Mass celebrated three times a week in his chapel at Woodgarston by the Prior of Sherborne.<sup>37</sup> Richard de Scures, who was perhaps the grandson of James, was living in 1314,<sup>38</sup> but in 1331 Beatrice the daughter of Sir John de SCURES. Azure fretty or.

Scures was dealing with the manor, which she leased to Roger Fyfehide,<sup>39</sup> whose widow Edith obtained an extension of the lease in 1340.<sup>40</sup>

In 1336 John de Scures, who was afterwards knighted, settled the estate on himself, with remainder to Roger his son, and after Roger's death to his own children by his wife Sibyl.<sup>41</sup> Sir John was sheriff of Hants from 1321-38, and knight of the shire in three Parliaments<sup>42</sup>: he seems to have outlived his son Roger, for at his death in 1354 he was seised of Woodgarston Manor, which he left to his son John, then aged seventeen.<sup>43</sup> John de Scures died childless in 1381,<sup>44</sup> when he was succeeded by his sister Sibyl, the wife of John Uvedale,<sup>45</sup> who leased the estate in 1402 to Robert Gerard.<sup>46</sup> John Uvedale died before 1417<sup>47</sup>: his heir was his son William, sheriff of Surrey in 1429,<sup>48</sup> but Woodgarston appears to have been settled on his younger son John, who was seised of the manor in 1428.<sup>49</sup> This John Uvedale was four times sheriff of Hants, viz. in 1419, 1422, 1426 and 1433.<sup>50</sup> In 1417 he received a mandate on the occasion of making an array against the arms of Spain in expectation of an invasion.<sup>51</sup> On the death of his brother William he succeeded to the manor of Wickham<sup>52</sup> (q.v.), the descent of which Woodgarston followed until 1619, when it was sold to William Wither of Manydown in the parish of Wootton St. Lawrence.<sup>53</sup>

William Wither died seised of the manor in 1620<sup>54</sup>: his heir was his son and namesake, who left two children, a daughter Dorothy who married Lovelace Bigg of Chilton Foliat (co. Wilts.) in 1684,<sup>55</sup> and a son and heir William, whose wife was Mary the daughter and heiress of his kinsman George Wither.<sup>56</sup> The son and namesake of this William succeeded to Woodgarston and died in 1732.<sup>57</sup> His cousin, another William, who was his heir, died unmarried in 1789,<sup>58</sup> when the estate passed to Lovelace Bigg, the grandson of Dorothy, who thereon assumed the name of Wither.<sup>59</sup> Mr. Bigg-Wither was succeeded in 1813 by his second but eldest surviving son Harris,<sup>60</sup> whose son and heir, another Lovelace, sold the property in 1871 to Sir Edward Bates, bart.<sup>61</sup>

Sir Edward Bates died in 1896,<sup>62</sup> leaving as his heir his son Sir Edward Percy Bates, whose younger son, Mr. Sydney Eggers Bates, at the present day resides at Woodgarston.

WITHER. Argent a chevron gules between three crescents sable.

<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 2 Ric. III, no. 33.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. 8 Edw. IV, no. 44.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. 2 Ric. III, no. 33.

<sup>27</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 6 Edw. VI.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.

<sup>29</sup> In the list of the Brocas lands in 1585 the manor of Chineham is mentioned, but this seems to have been a mistake (Feet of F. Hants, East. 27 Eliz.).

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. Hil. 21 Geo. II.

<sup>31</sup> Baigent & Millard, Hist. of Basingstoke, passim.

<sup>32</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 28 Geo. II, rot. 56.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid. Trin. 26 Geo. III, m. 389.

<sup>34</sup> Ex inform. Mr. Hugh E. Raynbird of Basingstoke

<sup>34a</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 560-1.

<sup>35</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (3), 241.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. 245. The deed is undated, but Guy, Prior of Southwick (circa 1190-1217), was one of the witnesses.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid. 246-7.

<sup>38</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 77.

<sup>39</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (3), 249.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid. 250.

<sup>41</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 9 Edw. III.

<sup>42</sup> Burrows, op. cit. 327.

<sup>43</sup> Inq. p.m. 27 Edw. III (1st nos.), file 121, no. 12.

<sup>44</sup> Surrey Arch. Coll. iii, 83.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.

<sup>46</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (3), 251.

<sup>47</sup> Surrey Arch. Coll. iii, 85.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid. 86.

<sup>49</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 344.

<sup>50</sup> Surrey Arch. Coll. iii, 89.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid.

<sup>53</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 16 Jas. I.

<sup>54</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (3), 251.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid. iv (3), 252.

<sup>56</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry, 1874.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid.

<sup>58</sup> Ibid.

<sup>59</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. loc. cit.

<sup>60</sup> Burke, loc. cit.

<sup>61</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. loc. cit.

<sup>62</sup> Burke, Peerage.

In the 14th century the Atte Moure family owned land in Monk Sherborne,<sup>63</sup> which subsequently followed the same descent as their holdings in Pamber and Tadley<sup>64</sup> (q.v.), and has been known as the 'manor' of WEST SHERBORNE since the 17th century.

CHURCHES of ALL SAINTS

The church consists of a chancel 22 ft. by 17 ft., and a nave 60 ft. 2 in. by 22 ft. 6 in., with a south-east vestry built in 1852, and a north porch. The whole of the walling, with the exception of the east wall of the chancel, the west end of the nave and the small vestry, appears early, where it can be seen free of ivy or plaster, and is of flint in herring-bone courses. No ornamental detail in the church suggests a date earlier than the second quarter of the 12th century, but in the north wall of the nave are traces of a window just above and to the west of the north doorway, which must almost certainly have been cut into by the outer head of the doorway, and is therefore probably earlier than it. The doorway is of c. 1140-50, so the window and all the early walling may date from the beginning of the 12th century.

In the east wall of the chancel are the jambs of a wide blocked and nearly destroyed arch of c. 1140, the chancel arch being of the same date, and it seems that there was formerly a sanctuary, whether square or apsidal, east of the present chancel, the east wall of which is built up of pieces of shafts, arches, &c., of 12th-century date. The present east window, c. 1340, gives the possible date of its destruction. This sanctuary, with the chancel and a north doorway, seems to have been added about 1140, while of earlier work one north window of the chancel and parts of two in the nave are to be seen. The lengthening of the nave by a few feet perhaps dates from the 14th century, and the external north-west stair turret is doubtless an addition of this time. The north porch is also a fine specimen of 14th-century woodwork.

The east window of the chancel is of mid-14th-century date, of three trefoiled lights under a square head; the remains of the 12th-century arch on either side of it show an outer order of a single line of zigzag between two rolls, and a capital with palmette foliage and channelled abacus.

The early window in the middle of the north wall is round-headed with a small chamfer at the outer wall face and a wide internal splay. On either side of it are early 14th-century windows with two trefoiled lights and a trefoil over, but no inclosing arch. On the south side are like windows, and between them a blocked 13th-century lancet, but the history of this wall is complicated by the existence at its west end of the springing of an arch or perhaps the west splay of a low side window, which shows that some alterations have here taken place. At the east end the masonry bonding with the blocked 12th-century jamb in the east wall, and looking like the jamb of a contemporary arch opening southwards, suggests the former existence of a south chapel here, but if so it must have been destroyed before the 13th-century window was inserted. There are no sedilia or piscinae, but in the vestry a late 12th-century pillar piscina is to be seen, and in the east splays of the north-east and south-east windows of the chancel are blocks of stone which BATES, baronet.

Argent a fesse between two quatrefoils in the chief and a fleur de lis in the foot azure with a quatrefoil between two fleurs de lis argent on the fesse.

MONK SHERBORNE: ALL SAINTS' CHURCH FROM THE NORTH-EAST

<sup>63</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 289, no. 7; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 197.

<sup>64</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Edw. III (2nd nos.),

no. 36; 21 Edw. IV, no. 31; Cal. Inq. p.m. Hen. VII, i, 531-2; Feet of F. Hants, East. 1 Mary; Pat. 13 Jas. I, pt. iii; Close, 4 Chas. I, pt. iii, no. 5; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 17 Chas. I, &c.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

probably carried the ends of a wooden beam, forming part of a screen across the east end of the chancel, and cutting off a narrow strip for use as a vestry.

The chancel arch is semicircular and of two square orders to the west and one to the east. The jambs are similarly arranged and have half-round shafts to the inner order and smaller complete shafts to the outer. The capitals of the latter are enriched with volutes and palmettes like that remaining at the east of the chancel, while those of the former are scalloped and have in the middle a grotesque head, the teeth of which rest upon the necking. A channelled abacus also like that already noted runs round both orders.

Near the east end of the north wall of the nave is a window of two trefoiled lights. The jambs are chamfered and rebated and may be of 13th-century date. The heads, however, are clumsy trefoiled openings, widened by the insertion of a stone at their crowns, and are probably late insertions, as they do not fit the jamb section. West of this is a 15th-century window of two cinquefoiled lights with moulded head, jambs and mullion and a square-headed external label. Its west jamb cuts into the lines of an original window, high in the wall, whose west jamb may be seen inside the church. The north door is some 16 ft. west of the centre of the wall. It is of two orders, the outer having a zigzag on both planes, the inner a roll, inclosing a tympanum of plastered rubble which has had a masonry pattern of lozenges in red; the large cambered lintel below is plain, but bears traces of painted decoration, perhaps a scroll pattern with a central medallion. The jambs of the outer order have circular shafts with scalloped capitals of fully developed style. Over the doorway are remains of a stepped string ornamented with billets and resting on head corbels, an unusual detail. It is unfortunately much damaged by the roof of the pretty 14th-century wooden porch which now stands in front of the door. In the east jamb of the door, inside the church, is a hollow for the back of a holy water stone. Immediately west of the door is a single-light window with a four-centred head, probably 15th-century work, and partly over the lines of an original window, whose east jamb remains.

At the east end of the south wall is a round-headed modern archway of 12th-century design to the vestry, which is partly filled by a dwarf wall. The entrance to the vestry, which was built in 1852, is by a small doorway, apparently formerly opening to a road stair on the outer face of the wall. It seems of 15th-century date; in it is hung a modern door with two pieces of early 17th-century panels worked into it. West of this are two two-light windows. The first is of two ogee trefoiled lights rebated internally for shutters, and retaining parts of the hanging hooks, and probably of 14th-century date, while the second is of the same date and detail as the window immediately east of the north door, but lacks the external label. There is no trace of a south door to the nave. The whole of the west end of the nave is raised a couple of steps above the general level and is railed off as a ringing space by a good 17th-century balustrade. The west bell-turret over this bay of the nave has been rebuilt and rests on four new posts which stand on the floor of the church. On the north is a small doorway to the belfry stairs with a clumsy head of late date. In the west wall is a 15th-century window of three cinquefoiled lights with a square-headed external label. Below this is a door of the same date with a two-centred hollow-chamfered head.

The font stands near the north door of the nave; its bowl, which is the only old part, of c. 1230, is of rounded form standing on three small circular marble shafts, with plain capitals, and a large circular stem. Between the corner shafts on the lower edge of the bowl are three heads carved in high relief, one only of which is old. It was given a new base in 1887.

There is a good wooden screen across the chancel of 15th-century date but very much restored in 1887, when it was also lengthened. It is of very solid character, and consists of four traceried bays or panels on either side of an arched doorway with pierced trefoils in the spandrels. The cresting and nearly all the side bays are modern. The seating is in great part old work reframed and recut about 1852; its style suggests a 16th-century origin. There is also a bench front of early 17th-century date west of the north door of the nave, and the pulpit, which has panels of flat arabesque carving, was set up by William Dobson, rector, whose epitaph is given below. The ringing space at the west end of the nave is railed off by late 17th-century moulded rails with turned balusters. The roofs are modern (1887), that of the chancel panelled, that of the nave plain and of open timber construction. The bell-cot has been reconstructed in modern times, but incorporates some old materials. The fittings of the chancel are all modern, but of excellent character, the organ and case being particularly satisfactory in design and workmanship. The north door is largely old and has a pair of very fine wrought strap hinges of late 14th-century date worked into fleurs de lis.

On the north wall of the nave is a small brass plate with the inscription; 'Here lyes expecting y<sup>e</sup> second coming of our saviour y<sup>e</sup> body of William Dobson a painful servant of God and sometime rector of this parish who exchanged earth for Heaven the first of March anno domini 1653.' The arms given are a cheveron between three fleurs de lis impaling a voided lozenge between three roundels. Near it is another brass recording the bequests in 1674 by Thomas Symson of Sherborne St. John of 'fifteen pounds yearly, so long as the world shall endure,' to be divided between the poor of Sherborne St. John, Monk Sherborne, Wootton St. Lawrence, Bagehurst, Pamber and Tadley; the money to be derived from the testator's land in 'Monks Sherborn known as Hill House and . . . in Bagehurst late Edward Hillcup.'

The tower contains five bells, the treble, second and fourth cast by G. Mears & Co. in 1862 and the third by Henry Knight in 1595. The fifth bears the date 1653, but has no maker's mark or inscription.

The plate consists of an Elizabethan chalice, paten cover and alms plate, a silver-gilt chalice, paten and flagon and another chalice, paten and flagon.

The registers begin in 1618. The first book contains all entries from that date to 1708. It is arranged in alphabetical order, and the letter A is missing. The second book has baptisms and burials from 1713 to 1812 and marriages from 1713 to 1753, with a few briefs. The third book has marriages only from 1754 to 1812.

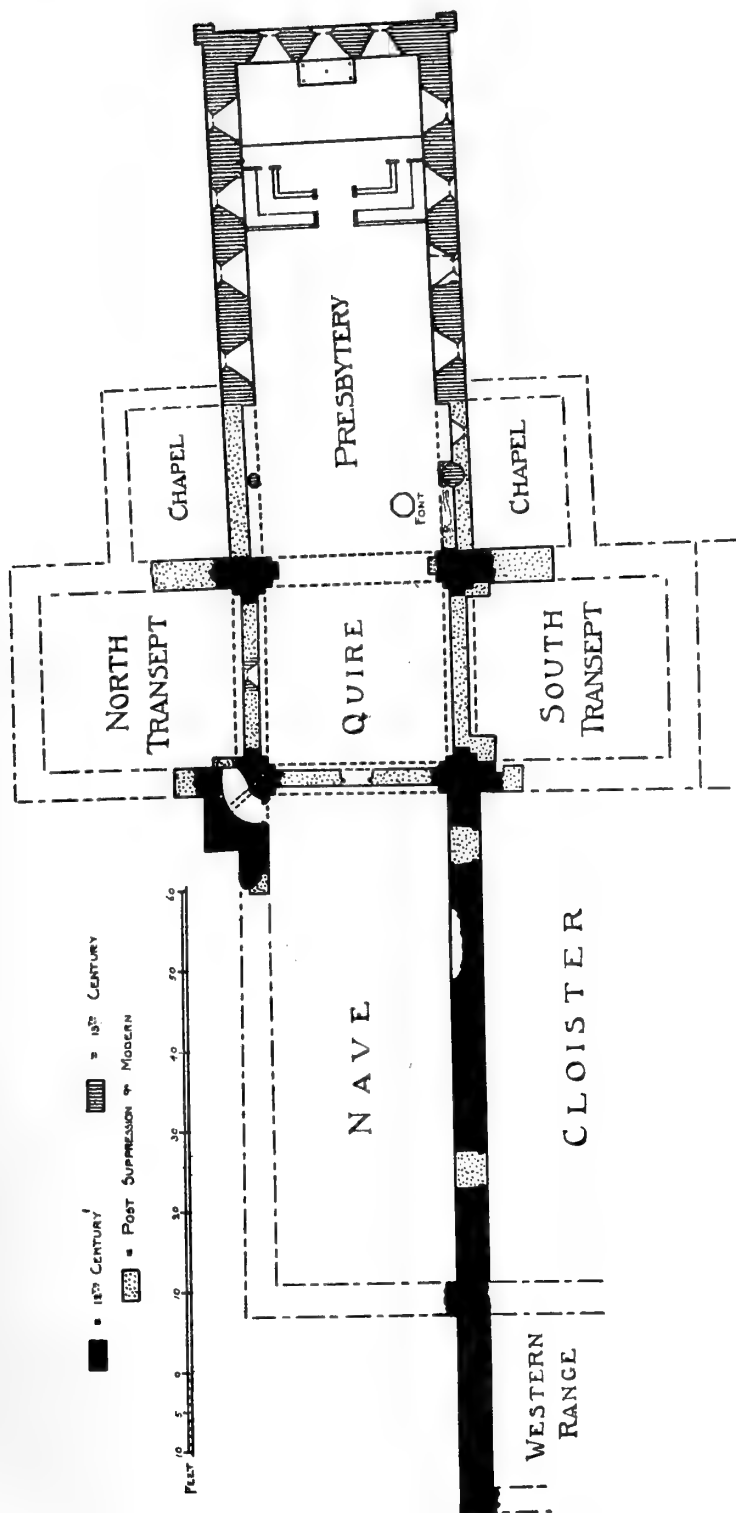

MONK SHERBORNE, ALL SAINTS' CHURCH : THE PORCH

MONK SHERBORNE, ALL SAINTS' CHURCH : THE NAVE LOOKING EAST

PLAN OF THE PRIORY CHURCH, MONK SHERBORNE (USED AS PAMBER PARISH CHURCH)

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The priory church of ST. MARY and ST. JOHN BAPTIST, known locally as Pamber Church, since it is used by the inhabitants of Pamber, was consecrated by William Giffard, who was Bishop of Winchester from 1107 to 1129.

Of the 12th-century church, which was cruciform, without aisles, the only parts now standing are the arches of the crossing or central tower and a portion of the south wall of the nave. The eastern arm was rebuilt and lengthened about 1220; this with the tower space forms the present chapel-of-ease to Monk Sherborne. The cloister was on the south side of the nave, but nothing is left of it except the doorways in the south wall of the ruined nave.

The dedication by Bishop Giffard can hardly have marked the completion of the first church; all the 12th-century detail remaining in the tower is obviously of later date.

The east arm or presbytery is a simple but finely proportioned building of flint masonry with ashlar dressings, and has at the east angles very slender and graceful clasping buttresses of three stages.

MONK SHERBORNE PRIORY CHURCH (USED AS PAMBER PARISH CHURCH)
FROM SOUTH-EAST

In the east wall are three lancet windows which are rebated and chamfered outside and splayed all round inside, with a label and a keeled edge-roll from small moulded bases but without capitals, the roll continuing round the head of the window. In either side wall are four similar but shorter lights, without labels.

A moulded string runs round the inside below the sloping window sills, stopping abruptly west of the westernmost windows. Below the first window on the south is a well-designed piscina, with a trefoiled head and engaged jamb shafts with moulded capitals and bases. At the back of the piscina is a narrow shelf.

Under the third south window is a small doorway, doubtless once old but now of modern stonework outside; it has a four-centred head of 15th-century character.

The angles between the chancel and transepts were formerly occupied by small chapels of two bays; these are gone, but the archways opening into them from the chancel remain; they are now blocked up. Each side has two bays, those on the south side appear to have been divided by a circular pillar, now for the greater part buried in a later pier; the jambs of the recesses are chamfered and have partly restored chamfered abaci; the arches are segmental, with keeled edge-rolls, the voussoirs being in many cases old worked stones re-used. The backs of the arches are closed up and form large recesses, which now contain a marble gravestone and the wooden effigy of a knight. In the back of the eastern recess is a small blocked square-headed window. The arches in the north wall have a filleted bowtel instead of the keeled roll, and they are separated by a free eight-sided shaft from which an arch sprang northwards; in other respects they resemble the southern pair, and are also closed up to form recesses for gravestones. High up in the wall above these arches, to clear the roofs of the former north and south chapels, are two small circular lights on either side.

The central tower stands on large round-headed arches, those to the nave and transepts being now blocked with masonry of fairly good character and probably dating from the suppression of the alien priory early in the 15th century. The jambs are of two square orders, those of the eastern arch being mostly of modern stonework; they have plain chamfered abaci and no capitals. The arches are also of two orders; the inner to the chancel arch is chamfered and the outer has an edge roll on the west face; the label is chamfered. The north transept arch is chamfered in its outer order, the inner is square. The opposite arch is square in both orders.

The western arch is slightly richer than the other three; its inner order is chamfered, the outer has a three-quarter edge roll on both faces and the label is moulded. In the filling of the north transept arch is a lancet window of 13th-century date brought from elsewhere. In the west filling is a doorway of 16th-century style but modern stonework, and over it a blocked window now without tracery. An old wood door now used in the village school and said to have been brought with other timbers from the priory was probably the former west door of the building. In the blocking to the north of the entrance doorway is a small blocked opening with a round head on the west; its sill is 5 ft. 10 in. above the floor, and it was evidently a doorway to the stair turret, which rises in the north-west angle of the tower, and is entered from the south by an outside doorway at almost the same level. The turret is patched with modern brick, but is of 12th-century date, and on the ground floor contains a curved passage from the north transept to the nave, to give access to the eastern parts of the church without passing through the quire, which was probably in the first instance under the tower. The upper part of the tower is open to the ground and lighted on each face by a pair of round-headed windows whose inner jambs have edge rolls with bases and capitals, above which the roll continues around the window head. Between each pair of the windows is an arched recess ranging with them and of like detail but having larger capitals. A string cornice runs round below the windows and above them is the floor to the bell chamber, which is contained in the pyramidal roof. The tower was probably intended to have a third stage, but there is nothing to show whether this was ever built.

The presbytery roof, though now mostly modern, preserves what is probably its original 13th-century design with semicircular braces under each rafter and has four unequally spaced tie-beams, moulded with a torus between two rolls, at the west end. The plate is also of 13th-century section, and parts of the old timbers are re-used.

Both transepts are ruined, but the marks of their roofs remain on the tower, and the bonding of the chapels to the chancel may still be seen. The lower part of the south wall of the nave remains overgrown with ivy. It retains the two procession doorways to the cloister, now blocked up, and the return of the west wall of the nave is marked by a masonry projection. The wall continues west of it in the same line and formed the north end of the western range of the claustral buildings. Against the north-west buttress of the tower are a few remains of cinquefoiled 15th-century lights.

The font is of 15th-century date, and stands on the south side of the church; it is octagonal with panelled sides to the bowl inclosing quatrefoils or floral ornament and has a moulded base. Opposite to it is a large mortar fitted with an 18th-century cover and set on a pedestal of broken gravestones, among which is a foliate 13th-century capital. Another smaller mortar, with carved heads at the four projections, is set in the blocking of the eastern arch of the south chapel.

The present chancel screen, set between the second and third windows of the presbytery, is a very solid piece of plain 15th-century character, containing a good deal of old work; it has a central doorway, and probably formed no part of the monastic fittings, and there are some good solid oak benches and poppy-head bench ends which belong to the same work.

There are a number of early gravestones in the church, but the most interesting monument is the wooden effigy of a knight which lies in the western recess in the south wall; he wears a long surcoat with short sleeves over his mail, the rings of which must have been shown by paint, and are not carved on the wood. His head rests on a diamond-shaped pillow, and is protected by a hood of mail. Of his shield the strap only remains, it was doubtless cut in a separate piece of wood, and he wears a sword in a belt on the left side; his legs are crossed and his feet rest on a lion. The work is very good and the details minutely worked where the decay of the wood has not damaged them; the figure rests on a wide plank cut out of the solid with it and is hollowed out behind for lightness. It dates from the second half of the 13th century, and cannot represent John de Port, son of the founder, as commonly said. It is now set on a tomb-shaped block of masonry, on which is a marble grave slab, and there are similar blocks and gravestones in the other three recesses, all of 13th or early 14th-century date. To the north and south of the altar table are set four similar slabs; the first is very like that in the south recess; the cross on the second is almost obliterated, but the other two have leaves of late 12th or early 13th-century style branching from the stems of the crosses, and one has an inscription running round its moulded edge in early Gothic characters, some of the letters contained within others, as often in 12th-century inscriptions. It reads:—

MONK SHERBORNE PRIORY CHURCH (USED AS PAMBER PARISH CHURCH) : THE TOWER

‘❖ SI QVIS ERIS QVI TRANSIERIS STA PERLEGE
FLORA ❖ SVM QVOD ERIS FVERAM QUE QVOD ES PRO ME PRECOR HORA.’

At the foot of the cross shaft is an Agnus Dei.

Near the font are a few old tiles, probably 15th-century work; the patterns on them are almost obliterated.

On the north wall of the presbytery below the string some of the old painted decoration has been uncovered, showing a consecration cross and some winged angels, with a few letters in black letter smalls; the whole is probably of 15th-century date. On the same wall is the brass plate recording Thomas Sympson's benefactions, 1674, as at Baughurst and elsewhere.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The evidences of the arrangement of the church in monastic times are small, and the priory having been alien, and therefore suppressed early in the 15th century, much of the mediaeval fittings may be parochial and not monastic.

The consecration cross painted on the north wall of the chancel seems contemporary with the paintings of angels close to it, which from their style and the letters of the inscription seem to be not earlier than the 15th century. The heavy wooden screen, which is a good deal like that of Monk Sherborne close by, is also of 15th-century date, and can only be parochial, and the seats are apparently made up of woodwork of the same character. It is probable that a complete refitting of the church took place after the suppression, and that the monastic arrangements were swept away. The nave, transepts and chapels probably did not long survive the priory, and the blocking of the three sides of the crossing is carefully done, and no doubt mediaeval. The stair turret at the north-west angle of the tower, which is part of the 12th-century work, gives some interesting evidence about the original arrangements. Its ground stage, as already noted, forms a passage from the north transept to the nave, and the stair only begins on the next stage above, and is reached through a doorway immediately over that opening from the passage to the nave. This can only have been reached from a raised passage or gallery, which was probably nothing else than the original pulpitum at the west end of the 12th-century quire, the position of which has been already referred to. When the eastern arm was rebuilt and lengthened in the 13th century the quire was probably moved eastward, and the modern repairs to the responds of the east arch of the tower suggest that they have been formerly cut back for the fitting of stalls. When the nave was destroyed the access to the upper doorway in the north-west turret was provided for by making a doorway in the blocking of the west arch of the tower, as already noted.

There are four bells: the treble was dated 1598, but has been recast by Taylor in 1851; the second is by Joseph Carter, 1579, and the inscription is obviously the continuation of a verse originally begun on the treble, 'That has sent us thy holy worde'; the third is also by Joseph Carter, 1582, and is inscribed: 'O Lorde even for thy holy name'; and the tenor originally of 1579 but recast in 1850 by Taylor: 'Inflame our hearts to love the same.'

The plate consists of a silver Elizabethan communion cup, paten cover and alms dish. There are also two other services, one of which is of silver gilt.

The registers of the parish begin in 1661; the first book contains baptisms thence to 1812, burials same period and marriages to 1754. The second has the marriages from 1754 to 1812.

The church of Monk Sherborne ADVOWSON with all tithes<sup>65</sup> was granted to the priory at its foundation by Henry de Port.<sup>65a</sup> The advowson was taken into the king's hands in the 14th century on account of the war with France,<sup>66</sup> and was subsequently granted by King Edward IV to Queen's College, Oxford.<sup>67</sup> The Provost and fellows of the College are the patrons at the present day.<sup>68</sup>

A chantry was founded in the 15th century by Queen's College,<sup>69</sup> and the priest appointed to serve it was accustomed 'to minister there as in a chapel of ease' to the inhabitants of Pamber who lived close to the priory and had no parish church.<sup>70</sup> The result was that by the time the chantry was dissolved in 1547 the people of the district had come to believe that the priory chapel was their church, and they subsequently brought a suit in Chancery against the Provost and fellows for neglecting to provide a priest.<sup>71</sup>

In the 13th century there was also a church at Chincham.<sup>72</sup>

In 1674 Thomas Sympson by will CHARITIES gave to the poor of six parishes, including this parish, the sum of £15 yearly for ever, to be received out of his land in this parish and the parish of Baughurst, £2 10s. each parish. In 1905 twelve persons received 4s. 2d. each.

The annual sum of £1 3s. 4d. is received from Queen's College, Oxford, in respect of a gift of Adam de Port, and distributed to the poor on 2 January in every year. The same college also remitted £4 a year to the schools, claimed to be a voluntary payment.

<sup>65</sup> As late as 1676 hay, apples, wool, lambs, white cows, calves, pigs, honey, geese, eggs and winter sheep were all titiable (Par. Reg. Monk Sherborne; ex inform. Mr. J. H. Cope).

<sup>65a</sup> Warner, Hants, i, 162.

<sup>66</sup> Cal. Pat. 1422-9, p. 68.

<sup>67</sup> Pat. 13 Edw. IV, pt. i, m. 10.

<sup>68</sup> Clergy List, 1910.

<sup>69</sup> Chant. Cert.

<sup>70</sup> Chant. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 145, no. 85.

<sup>71</sup> See 'Pamber' in Barton Stacey Huntdred for a further account of this lawsuit.

<sup>72</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212;
Inq. Non. 125; V.C.H. Hants, ii, 227;
Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.).

MONK SHERBORNE PRIORY CHURCH : PISCINA

MONK SHERBORNE PRIORY CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING EAST

WOOTTON ST. LAWRENCE

Wudutune, Wudetone (x cent.); Odetune (xi cent.); Wutton, Wotton (xiii cent.); Laurence Wotton (xvi cent.).

The parish of Wootton St. Lawrence covers a long strip of land stretching from Tadley and Baughurst in the north to Deane and Kempshott in the south: it contains 4,405 acres, of which 2,911½ acres are arable land, 1,070½ acres are permanent grass and 405 acres woodland.<sup>1</sup> The woods in the parish were always very valuable and extensive. They supplied William of Wykeham with timber when he was reconstructing his cathedral nave: in 1392 no fewer than ninety-one cartloads were sent from Manydown, and wood was again supplied in 1398 for the works of the cathedral.<sup>2</sup> In 1459 three huge oaks were sent to Winchester for the roof of the great hall of the priory, which now forms the main part of the deanery, and may still be seen in the upper rooms into which the roof was afterwards divided.<sup>3</sup>

The village of Wootton St. Lawrence is close to the eastern border of the parish: almost in the centre of it stands the church of St. Lawrence, and close to the church is the school. The philologist Charles Butler, author of The Feminine Monarchie, was vicar here for forty-eight years: he died on 29 March 1647 and is buried in the church.

Skeyers Farm, near Ewhurst Park, was held of Magdalen College by John Ayliffe at the end of the 15th century. In 1501 the college granted a lease to Archbishop Warham,<sup>4</sup> but the property was afterwards again leased to the Ayliffe family, who continued to be the tenants at least as late as 1674.<sup>5</sup>

Newfound, a quarter of a mile south of Wootton St. Lawrence village, and East Oakley, on the border of Church Oakley, are hamlets in the parish. The common lands of Wootton St. Lawrence were inclosed in 1832 under a Private Act of 1829.<sup>6</sup> The soil is loam, the subsoil chalk, and the chief crops are barley, swedes, clover and sainfoin.

Ramsdell, formerly a tithing in the north of this parish, was formed into a separate ecclesiastical district in 1868: the church had been built in the previous year. Charter Alley is a hamlet in this parish, but belongs also to the civil parish of Monk Sherborne.

The following place-names occur in local records: Est Acle,<sup>7</sup> Heselden, Rammesdelle<sup>8</sup> (xiii cent.); Sengette Boddene, Hordhulle, Haghyate, Samsoneswode<sup>9</sup> (xiv cent.); Cowedowne or Sower Downe, Bottom Meade<sup>10</sup> (xvii cent.).

The manor of WOOTTON, afterwards MANORS called MANYDOWN, was held by the monks of the bishopric of Winchester at the time of the Domesday Survey, when the land was assessed at 20 hides<sup>11</sup>: it was probably the same property as that which had been granted by King Edgar to his thegn Æthelric in 958,<sup>12</sup> but the date at which it came into the possession of St. Swithun's is uncertain.

In the reign of Henry III the prior and convent enlarged the estate by the addition of several holdings in East Oakley,<sup>13</sup> and in 1284 John of Pontoise, Bishop of Winchester, quitclaimed to them all his right in the manor.<sup>14</sup> In 1332 they received licence to impark their wood of Wootton,<sup>15</sup> which was visited by the royal huntsmen in 1361 and 1363.<sup>16</sup> In 1377 the park was fenced round in order that the deer might not stray.<sup>17</sup> The Prior and convent of St. Swithun remained in possession of Manydown until the Dissolution,<sup>18</sup> when the estate was granted to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester,<sup>19</sup> who continued to hold it until 1649, in which year the trustees for the sale of church-lands sold it to William Wither, whose family had long been resident at Manydown.<sup>20</sup> There is a tradition that Robert, the first of the Hampshire Withers, was the godson of Prior Robert Rudborne (1384-94), who made him farmer of the demesne lands of Manydown,<sup>21</sup> and the Withers certainly held lands in Wootton under St. Swithun's as early as 1402.<sup>22</sup>

Thomas Wither is described as 'farmer' (firarius) in 1487: he rendered the account of the manor in 1491, 1501 and 1506,<sup>23</sup> and the estate was leased after his death to Joan his widow, who was 'farmer' in 1507, 1516 and 1522.<sup>24</sup> John the son of Thomas Wither rendered the account in 1530 after his mother's death.<sup>25</sup> He died in 1536, leaving by his will his 'endurent of yeres' to his second son Richard,<sup>26</sup> who obtained a renewal of the lease in 1544.<sup>27</sup> Richard Wither died in 1577, and was succeeded by his eldest son John.<sup>28</sup>

In 1613 John Wither made an agreement by which he gave up to his eldest son William all his right in Manydown on condition that certain rooms in the manor-house were reserved for himself and his wife, and that he was allowed £40 yearly, two servants and 'a horse, three couple of beagles and one greyhound for his pleasure.' If at a future time he chose to live elsewhere he was to receive 200 marks. William was also to provide for the education of his three younger brothers, and to pay £300 to each on his twenty-sixth birthday.<sup>29</sup> It was this William who bought the manor in 1649.<sup>30</sup>

In 1662, after the Restoration, the dean and chapter re-entered upon their rights in the manor,<sup>31</sup> for which William Wither's son and heir, another William, received no compensation. In 1674 this

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Kitchin, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 8-11.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. <sup>4</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 80.

<sup>5</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 26 Chas. II, no. 2.

<sup>6</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>7</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 31 Hen. III.

<sup>8</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 58.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 62. <sup>10</sup> Ibid. 186.

<sup>11</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 468.

<sup>12</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. iii, 246.

<sup>13</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 31 Hen. III;

Mich. 35 Hen. III; Hil. 40 Hen. III; Trin. 47 Hen. III.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 288.

<sup>15</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 13.

<sup>16</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 9. There were deer in the park in 1430 (ibid.).

<sup>17</sup> Ibid.

<sup>18</sup> Bigg-Wither, The Wither Family, 117.

<sup>19</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix.

<sup>20</sup> Close, 1650, pt. ii, m. 35.

<sup>21</sup> Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 20.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. <sup>23</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 207.

<sup>24</sup> Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 21.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. 24.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. 'Leases of Manydown.'

<sup>28</sup> Ibid. 28.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid. 31.

<sup>30</sup> He also bought from the Uvedales in 1619 the manor of Woodgarston in Monk Sherborne (q.v. for a further account of the Wither family).

<sup>31</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1673-5, p. 422.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

William Wither sent a petition to the king 'praying a dispensation of the new statutes . . . which restrain the dean and chapter from granting leases of their lands for any term other than twenty-one years,' and stating that he and his ancestors had been 'tenants time out of mind for the demesnes of the manor of Manydown by lease of three lives.'<sup>32</sup> Charles II recommended him to the dean and chapter for the renewal he desired,<sup>33</sup> but he seems to have been unable to obtain it, for the property was held by the Withers on leases for the term of twenty-one years from that date until 1863,<sup>34</sup> in which year the Rev. Lovelace Bigg-Wither purchased the reversion of the manor.<sup>35</sup> He sold the estate in 1871 to Sir Edward Bates, bart.,<sup>36</sup> whose grandson, Mr. Sydney Eggers Bates, is the owner at the present day.

To the west of the village, and surrounded by a park of 250 acres with 400 acres of plantations, is Manydown, a large irregular brick house which retains at least the original plan and traces of the original building: there are some pillars in the cellars which may be of the 14th century. One of the most remarkable relics is the well, with its raising gear carried up above the middle of the first floor, so that the water might more easily be conveyed to the upper rooms. The house is built round a square court, still called Cheyney Court, on one side of which is the old court room, where the 'courts Leet and Customary' were held. The south front was rebuilt in 1790.

The estate now known as TANGIER PARK was called FABIANS<sup>37</sup> until the reign of Charles II, when Sir Thomas Hooke, bart., is said to have renamed it after the town which formed part of the dowry of Katherine of Braganza.

John Fabian held lands in Yerdeley and Wootton before 1282, in which year they were included among those which were to pay tithe to the rector of Wootton.<sup>38</sup> The property in 1331 covered an area of 100 acres, and must have been valuable, for it is said to have been worth about one-sixth as much as the whole tithe of Wootton rectory.<sup>39</sup> It seems subsequently to have been enlarged, for it was described as 'a messuage, 2 carucates of land and 20 acres of pasture' in 1411, in which year another John Fabian and Isabel his wife quitclaimed it to John Gerveys and Thomas Horton,<sup>40</sup> who in the following year obtained licence to grant it to the priory of St. Swithun.<sup>41</sup>

In 1541 the estate was granted as part of the manor of Manydown to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester,<sup>42</sup> who continued to hold the manorial rights until the reversion was purchased by the Rev. Lovelace Bigg-Wither in 1863.

In 1413 the Prior and convent of St. Swithun had leased the land lately bought from John Fabian to Robert Dyneley,<sup>43</sup> and the tenancy afterwards followed the descent of the manor of Malshanger<sup>44</sup> (q.v.) in Church Oakley, until it was sold at the Restoration by Sir Richard Kingsmill to Sir Thomas Hooke, bart.,<sup>45</sup> who is said to have built the existing house in 1662. The property again changed hands in 1710, when it was sold by Sir Hele Hooke son and heir of Sir Thomas to Henry Limbrey,<sup>46</sup> from whose family it subsequently passed by marriage to the Sclaters.<sup>47</sup> In 1833 it was bought by the Rev. Lovelace Bigg-Wither,<sup>48</sup> who lived there until 1871, when he sold it with Manydown to Sir Edward Bates.<sup>49</sup> Mr. Sydney Eggers Bates is the owner at the present day.

Tangier House, which stands to the north of Manydown, was built in the 17th century by Sir Thomas Hooke, bart.: the park, which covers an area of about 143 acres, forms part of the Manydown estate, but was leased in 1903 to Colonel William Ironside Bax.

EAST OAKLEY, on the borders of Wootton St. Lawrence, was acquired by the Prior and convent of St. Swithun from several small landholders in the reign of Henry III,<sup>50</sup> and subsequently formed part of the manor of Manydown (q.v.).

There were 4 hides of land at WOOTTON which were granted in 940 by King Edmund to his thegn Edric for three lives,<sup>51</sup> and in 956 by King Eadwig to Æthelwold<sup>52</sup>: this land was perhaps included in the 5 hides which belonged at the time of the Domesday Survey to Hugh de Port<sup>53</sup> and had previously been held of King Edward the Confessor by Elmar and Alviat.<sup>54</sup> The estate was probably incorporated in the manor of Monk Sherborne and granted to the priory there by Henry de Port, for no mention occurs of it among the St. John lands, and Michael, the Prior of Sherborne, was stated to be holding a lay fee in Wootton St. Lawrence in the reign of Henry III.<sup>55</sup>

The church of ST. LAWRENCE CHURCHES consists of a chancel 26 ft. 4 in. by 14 ft. 8 in. with a vestry on the north side, a nave 40 ft. by 17 ft. 9 in., with a north aisle 12 ft. 4 in. wide and a south aisle 12 ft. 8 in. wide. There is also a west tower 11 ft. square and a south porch. All the measurements are internal.

HOOKE, baronet.
Quarterly sable and argent a cross quarterly between four scallops counter-coloured.

<sup>32</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1673-5, p. 422.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.

<sup>34</sup> Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 'Leases of Manydown.'

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. 118.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid.

<sup>37</sup> It was called 'Fabians and Marvins' in the Survey of 1649 (see Kitchin, op. cit.), probably because it included the downland called Marvin's Down. It was still called 'Fabians' in the lease of 1670 (see Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 186).

<sup>38</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 24.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. 58-9.

<sup>40</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 12 Hen. IV.

<sup>41</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 442, no. 12. In 1427 the prior was fined by the manorial court for blocking the bridle path between the land formerly Fabian's and the park at Manydown; i.e. from Tangier Lodge to the gate overlooking Malshanger (Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 186; Kitchin, op. cit. 64).

<sup>42</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, 878.

<sup>43</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 204; Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 118. The lease was renewed in 1440 (ibid. 119).

<sup>44</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, m. 2.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid. 204.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. Sir Thomas died in 1677. His widow died at Tangier Park in or before 1708. His heir was his son Sir Hele, who died without issue in 1712 (G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, iii, 254).

<sup>47</sup> Ibid.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid.

<sup>50</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 31 Hen. III; Mich. 35 Hen. III; Hil. 40 Hen. III; Trin. 47 Hen. III.

<sup>51</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 493. It is doubtful whether this grant refers to Wootton St. Lawrence, for, though the boundaries are given, it is difficult to identify them.

<sup>52</sup> Ibid. iii, 157.

<sup>53</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 486.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid.

<sup>55</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East, 40 Hen. III.

With the exception of the tower the whole of the church was rebuilt and the south aisle added in 1863, but the old work re-used shows that there was a 12th-century building which had a north aisle with an arcade of three bays. In the chancel and south aisle are some early 14th-century windows, and the tower as it now stands is probably in part of the same period.

The east window of the chancel is of 15th-century style and has three cinquefoiled lights with tracery under a two-centred arch with a moulded label. The outside jambs and the mullions are moulded. The inside splay of this and all the rest of the windows are modern.

The north window of the chancel is apparently of 14th-century work and has two trefoiled lights with a pierced quatrefoil in the spandrel. There is no label. To the west of this window is a modern doorway to the vestry. The rebate is on the chancel side and the jambs and two-centred arch are chamfered.

The vestry has an old east window of three small trefoiled lights. There is also a modern doorway in the north wall.

The easternmost of the two south windows of the chancel has two trefoiled lights with a quatrefoil over and is without an arch. It is of early 14th-century date. The other window in the same wall is similar to the one in the north wall of the chancel, but the top foils are of an ogee shape and the spandrel is not foiled.

The chancel arch is entirely modern, and has plain hollow-chamfered jambs and a moulded two-centred arch, the inner order of which rests on foliated corbels.

The north arcade is of four bays, the first three having circular columns with scalloped capitals and modern moulded bases. Both responds of the arcade have capitals resting on broad conical corbels. The western pier is square with stop-chamfered angles.

The western 13th-century bay is much narrower than the rest and has a flat-chamfered respond. The arch to this bay is pointed, with slightly chamfered angles. The other three arches are semicircular of one square-chamfered order with hollow-chamfered labels on the nave side.

The modern south arcade is of three bays with circular marble columns having moulded bases and foliated capitals and corbels. The drop arches are two-centred and have two chamfered orders.

All the windows of the north aisle are modern, the first three in the north wall having each two trefoiled lights with a pierced quatrefoil over. The fourth window near the west end is a single trefoiled lancet.

The west window of this aisle is similar to the two-light north windows but has a moulded label and carved head stops.

The east window of the south aisle is modern and has three trefoiled lights with tracery of 14th-century design, moulded label and head stops.

The easternmost of the two south windows is of 14th-century date and is similar to the north window of the chancel. The other window is a modern copy of it. The west window of the aisle is similar to the corresponding one in the north aisle.

The south doorway is placed near the west end of the aisle and is of rebuilt and partly restored 12th-century work. The jambs are shafted and have moulded bases and cushion capitals enriched with beads. The abaci above are clumsy modern additions.

The arch is semicircular of a single order with lines of zigzag and an outer line of hatched ornament.

The tower arch is modern and has two chamfered orders continuous with the jambs. In the south wall of the tower is a small old trefoiled light. The west doorway is modern and has moulded jambs and a four-centred arch under a square head with a moulded label. The spandrels are carved. Above this doorway is a modern window with two cinquefoiled lights and a quatrefoil spandrel under a two-centred head with a moulded label.

The walls of the whole building are faced with flint and stone and the roofs are tiled.

The quoins in the upper part of the tower and part of a north buttress are old. The top is crowned with a cornice moulding and is roofed with a slated pyramidal roof. In each face except the east, near the top, is a modern window of two cinquefoiled lights. In the west face lower down is an old small trefoiled light.

The roofs are of modern open timber work and all the internal fittings, except a few pews in the north aisle, are quite modern.

Under the tower arch is a narrow strip of old tiles with various designs in yellow on a red ground, including a fleur de lis, a cross made of four fleurs de lis, two lions rampant face to face, an eagle displayed and other patterns.

In a recess in the south wall of the chancel is a white marble monument to Sir Thomas Hooke, bart., who died in 1677, aged 36. His effigy of white marble is in plate armour, resting on one arm, with one hand on his helmet. The crest above the inscription is a scallop between two wings, and the arms on the base of the tomb are Hooke quartered with (Gules) a bend indented ermine, for Hele, and impaling (Or) a fesse dancetty (azure) with three stars (argent) thereon and a quarter (azure) with the sun (or) therein, which are the arms of Elizabeth daughter of Sir William Thompson, his wife.

Placed on the sill of the east window is a 14th-century grave slab with a floriated cross on the top.

There are several good armorial slabs on the floor of the chancel, including one to William infant son of William Dyer of Newnham in the county of Hertford, esquire, and Ann his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Hooke. The date is hidden under the footpace of the altar. In a shield are the arms Quarterly 1 and 4 a chief indented, 2 a cross paty, 3 a cross paty in a border engrailed, all impaling the arms of Hooke.

On the north side is a slab to John Wither of Manydown, esquire, 1620, and Joan his wife, daughter of John Love of Basing 1639. On the lower part of the same slab is an inscription to William Wither, 1671, son and heir of the above John Wither, and Joan his wife, daughter of Thomas Geale, 1691.

In the centre is another inscription to Alethea Bethell daughter of the above William and Joan Wither, 1708.

On the top of the slab are the arms, Quarterly 1 and 4 a chevron between three crescents, 2 and 3 a lion with two heads, impaling Barry and in chief three lions' heads razed.

In the centre of the slab is a shield charged with the same arms as in the first half of the above. In the centre is an escutcheon Quarterly 1 and 4 two spear heads and a boar's head in chief, 2 and 3, two bars with three lions' heads razed in chief.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

On the south wall of the south aisle is a monument with a Latin inscription to Susan wife of William Wither, who died 1653. There are three shields of arms, the first having Wither, the second has a fesse between three crescents, and the third shield has Wither impaling the arms of the second shield.

There are several other wall and floor monuments to the Wither and other families of 17th and 18th-century dates, in different parts of the church.

On the westernmost pier of the north arcade is a replica of the brass to be found in Monk Sherborne and other neighbouring churches setting forth the bequests of one Thomas Sympson, dated 1674.

On the south wall of the chancel is an iron bracket on which are placed a helmet, a pair of spurs, a pair of gauntlets and a dagger. On the bracket are the initials of Sir Thomas Hooke and the date 1677.

The tower contains five bells, the treble being by Warner, 1864. The second is inscribed, 'This bell was made 1625'; the third, 'Our hope is in the Lord, 1625'; the fourth, 'Praise ye the Lord, 1625'; and the tenor, 'Let your hope be in the Lord, 1625.' All the last four are evidently by the same man, but there is no name or maker's mark.

The plate consists of a silver-gilt chalice and paten cover of 1624 inscribed, 'The gift of John Wither gent. to the parish church of Laurence Wootton, 1625,' and bearing the arms of Wither of Manydown; a silver paten of 1735, the gift of Elizabeth Wither of Manydown; a silver flagon of 1688; a silver alms dish inscribed as the paten and a baptismal bowl of 1743.

The first book of the registers contains all entries from 1560, the baptisms and burials running to 1785 and the marriages to 1753. The book is very complete and is beautifully written. The second book contains burials from 1563, marriages from 1564, baptisms from 1657, all running to 1706. On the first page is a note as follows: 'Memorandum that ye Births, Marriages and Burials entered here were done to signify ye taxes quarterly paid to King William for every one born, married and buried. This distinguisheth ye Burials Marriages and Burials (sic) written in ye other register where there is not account of ye quarterly entry of births, etc.' The third book contains marriages between 1754 and 1811, the fourth contains baptisms and burials from 1770 to 1812, and a fifth book brings the marriages up to 1812.

The first book of churchwardens' accounts contains entries between 1558 and 1675, and there are books containing subsequent entries.

CHRIST CHURCH, RAMSDELL, built in 1867, is of flint with stone dressings in 13th-century style, and consists of chancel, nave and tower with spire. The registers date from 1868.

There was a church at Wootton ADWOWSONS St. Lawrence as early as 940,<sup>56</sup> if the 4 hides of land at Wootton granted by King Edmund to Edric in that year were in this parish. There is no mention, however, of any church here in Domesday Book.

The advowson belonged to the Bishops of Winchester until the end of the 13th century, for though in 1243 Pope Innocent IV included the church in his confirmation of the liberties of St. Swithun,<sup>57</sup> Aylmer bishop-elect of Winchester was acknowledged as the true patron about 1256,<sup>58</sup> and it was not until 1299 that the bishop, John of Pontoise, gave up to the prior and convent the patronage of the church of Wootton and all other rights thereto belonging.<sup>59</sup>

The priory of St. Swithun continued in possession until the Dissolution,<sup>60</sup> when the rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted with the manor of Manydown to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester,<sup>61</sup> who are the patrons at the present day.<sup>62</sup>

The living of Wootton St. Lawrence was said to be a vicarage in 1238,<sup>63</sup> when the king presented to it by reason of the voidance of the bishopric of Winchester, but this seems to have been a mistake, for it was certainly a rectory during the second half of the 13th century,<sup>64</sup> and a vicarage was not ordained until 1299. At this time a dispute arose between the rector, Ralf de Stanford, and the Sherborne monks who laid claim to the tithes from certain lands in Wootton St. Lawrence<sup>65</sup> in respect of the gift of Henry de Port.<sup>66</sup> As the bishopric was then vacant the case went before the archbishop's court, and after due hearing it was decided, probably about 1282, that the rector should receive in peace the tithes from certain of the lands in question, while the remainder should be paid to Sherborne Priory.<sup>67</sup> The rector, however, was evidently not allowed to receive his share in peace, for in 1283 John of Pontoise, then Bishop of Winchester, learned upon trustworthy report that 'certain satellites and followers of the Ancient Enemy having no fear of God before their eyes had molested disquieted and disturbed the rector,' so that he could not take his tithes.<sup>68</sup> It was perhaps on this account that the bishop decided in 1299 that these tithes should for the future be paid to the priory of St. Swithun.<sup>69</sup>

The living of Ramsdell is a vicarage, net yearly value £275, in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.

Newfound has a small Wesleyan chapel, and there is a small Primitive Methodist chapel at East Oakley. At Ramsdell there is a Congregational chapel.

In 1674 Thomas Sympson by will CHARITIES gave to the poor of six parishes, including this parish, the sum of £15 yearly —see under Monk Sherborne. The sum of £2 10s. is annually distributed in money.

<sup>56</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 493. There is mention of the 'cyrichide' in this charter.

<sup>57</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 201.

<sup>58</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 40 Hen. III.

<sup>59</sup> Chart. R. 27 Edw. I, m. 5.

<sup>60</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 17; 2033,

fol. 18, 134; 2034, fol. 29, 94, 134, 176; Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid.

<sup>62</sup> Clergy List, 1910.

<sup>63</sup> Cal. Pat. 1232-47, p. 230.

<sup>64</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212;

Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 547.

<sup>65</sup> Kitchin, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 22.

<sup>66</sup> Warner, Hants, i, 162.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid. 23.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid. 26.

<sup>69</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 41.

WOOTTON ST. LAWRENCE CHURCH : NORTH ARCADE OF NAVE

WORTING

Wortinges (xi cent.); Wothing, Wurting (xiii cent.); Worthyng (xv cent.); Wourtinge (xvi cent.).

The parish of Worting covers an area of 1,145 acres: it lies to the west of Basingstoke, and the eastern boundary runs along the line of the Roman road<sup>1</sup> from Winchester to Silchester, part of which, under the name of Rooksdown Lane, is still used. The western border skirts the edge of Wootton Copse.

Worting village is on the road from Andover to Basingstoke, not far from the point at which the London and South Western Railway crosses both this and the Roman road. The great lime tree by the railway arch was planted in 1740 by Walter Bigg, rector of Worting, the son of Dorothy Wither, to mark the boundary between this parish and Basingstoke.<sup>2</sup> A lane leads north to Worting Wood from the Basingstoke road; at its junction with the road is the post office, at a little distance to the south is Worting Farm, and here too are the smithy and the village school. The church of St. Thomas of Canterbury stands to the north, on the way to Worting Wood; the rectory is on the opposite side of the road.

On 9 May 1655 a great fire broke out in the village 'which burnt to the ground the parish church, a farm-house adjacent to the parsonage, the White Horse Inn, six other dwelling houses, eleven barns and many goods.'<sup>3</sup> The inhabitants 'lost £2,000 and were utterly destitute.' They appealed to the justices of the peace for 'leave to make a public collection, and a brief to pass through Hampshire and other counties for their charitable relief'<sup>4</sup>; and an Order in Council was issued for a collection in Hampshire, Wiltshire, Sussex and Dorset.<sup>5</sup> The church which was subsequently rebuilt was pulled down in 1848, when a new one was built on the same site.<sup>6</sup> The present rectory was built in 1732.<sup>7</sup> A little to the north of the rectory is Hillside House, the residence of Mr. Sidney Lauriston Bullock.

Within half a mile north of Lone Farm in the southern part of the parish there are four tumuli, two of which stand close together, the other two being at equal distance from them, to the north-east and south-west respectively.

Worting House, the seat of Major-General Sir Arthur Frederick Warren, K.C.B., stands at the western end of the village.

The soil is chalk and light loam, the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats.

The manor of WORTING was granted MANOR by King Edmund Ironside in 1016 to the Abbot and convent of Hyde by Winchester,<sup>8</sup> who continued in possession of it until the Dissolution.<sup>9</sup>

In 1249 the abbot enlarged the estate by the addition of 1 virgate of land, which was quitclaimed to him and his successors by Robert Achard,<sup>10</sup> and in February 1311 William de Lutgareshall obtained licence for the alienation in mortmain to the abbey of a mesuage, 204½ acres of land, 3 acres of wood and 3s. 2d. rent in Worting and Wootton St. Lawrence,<sup>11</sup> for which concession the abbot paid 50s. to the king.<sup>12</sup>

In 1388 it was found by inquisition that 'the Convent of the Abbey of Hyde . . . hold, and they and their predecessors from time immemorial have held, of their own portion, separately from the portion of the Abbot thereof,' the manor of Worting.<sup>13</sup> The king therefore granted, in July of that year, that the premises and every parcel thereof distinct from the abbot's portion should on all voidances of the abbey be exempt from seizure, saving only the advowson belonging thereto.<sup>14</sup>

At the Dissolution, in 1539, Henry VIII granted the manor of Worting to William Paulet Lord St. John,<sup>15</sup> who in 1571 obtained licence to alienate it to James True and Richard Pyncke and their heirs.<sup>16</sup>

Richard Pyncke sold his moiety in 1579 to James Rumbold,<sup>17</sup> who in 1591 had a lawsuit concerning it with one William Stynt.<sup>18</sup> It seems that there was some agreement between them concerning the moiety of Worting, which, because Rumbold was 'a man utterly unlearned and could neyther wright nor read,' Stynt 'did set down with his own hand . . . which articles of agreement, before that they were read . . . he did cause the defendant (James Rumbold) to sign.'<sup>19</sup> Afterwards, when the document had been read to him, Rumbold 'did then make challenge to the said articles and said that they were not set down according to the true meaning of their agreement.'<sup>20</sup> Apparently James Rumbold won his case, for he was seised of his moiety in 1596, in which year he settled it on himself for life with reversion to his younger son James.<sup>21</sup> He died in 1607, and was succeeded by his son James,<sup>22</sup> who sold his moiety of the manor to William Wither of Manydown in 1619.<sup>23</sup>

James True and Elizabeth his wife and Thomas Dabridgecourt<sup>24</sup> and Margaret his wife dealt with the 'manor' of Worting in 1576, conveying it in that year to John Coroderoy<sup>25</sup>: it was afterwards bought HYDE ABBEY. Argent a lion sable and a chief sable with two keys argent having their bows interlaced therein.

<sup>1</sup> Not only does the Roman road form the boundary of the parish, but it is of interest to notice that a far more ancient track, the Harrow Way, crosses the Roman road at Worting.

<sup>2</sup> Bigg-Wither, The Wither Family, 123.

<sup>3</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1655, p. 350.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 349.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 350.

<sup>6</sup> Bigg-Wither, The Wither Family, 123.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> Dugdale, Mon. ii, 436.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 470; Feet of F.

Hants, Trin. 3 Hen. III; Hil. 33 Hen. III; Cal. Pat. 1307-13, p. 321; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 180; Inq. p.m. 12 Ric. II, no. 150; L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906 (1).

<sup>10</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III.

<sup>11</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 85, no. 3.

<sup>12</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 180.

<sup>13</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Ric. II, no. 150.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Pat. 1385-9, p. 496.

<sup>15</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906

(1).

<sup>16</sup> Pat. 13 Eliz. pt. xi, m. 28.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 21 Eliz.

<sup>18</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 102, no. 60.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid.

<sup>21</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 41, no. 14.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.

<sup>23</sup> Bigg-Wither, The Wither Family, 121.

<sup>24</sup> Richard Pyncke had mortgaged his moiety to Thomas Dabridgecourt in 1573 (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 15 Eliz.).

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. Trin. 18 Eliz.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

by William Wither, who had shortly before acquired the other moiety from James Rumbold the younger.<sup>26</sup> The reunited manor subsequently followed the same descent as Manydown (q.v. in Wootton St. Lawrence) until 1871, when, although much of the land was sold to Sir Edward Bates, bart.,<sup>27</sup> the manorial rights were retained by the Rev. Lovelace Bigg-Wither, whose son, the Rev. Reginald Fitzhugh Bigg-Wither, the rector of Wonston, is the lord of the manor at the present day.

Worting House was apparently included in the moiety which belonged to James True, and was leased for eleven years to Francis and William Saunders by William True and Anne his wife in 1615.<sup>28</sup> It subsequently passed to the Edwards family, by whom it was held in the 18th century,<sup>29</sup> and was sold in 1797 to Lovelace Bigg-Wither.<sup>30</sup> After his death in 1813 it was bought from his son and heir Harris by Lord Spencer Chichester,<sup>31</sup> whose creditors subsequently sold it to Lady Jones,<sup>32</sup> from whom it descended to its present owner, Major-General Sir Arthur Frederick Warren, K.C.B. The house, which was built in the time of George I, stands in well-wooded grounds of 47 acres, and commands a pleasant view of the surrounding country.

The church of ST. THOMAS OF CHURCH CANTERBURY stands a little back from the main road in a very pretty and well-kept churchyard. It was built in 1848 in 14th-century style, and consists of a chancel 26 ft. 2 in. by 15 ft., with a small vestry on the north side, and nave 42 ft. 5 in. by 21 ft. 6 in., with a north aisle 8 ft. 8 in. wide. On the south side is a porch and over the west end is a timber bell-turret. The turret contains one bell.

The plate consists of a silver-gilt service made in 1848 and a silver paten. The flagon is engraved 'Kyrie Eleison' and 'Christe Eleison.' There is also a gilded alms dish.

The first book of the registers contains all entries from 1604 to 1733, but is in a very fragmentary condition; a copy made of it in 1812 is preserved. The second volume is the printed marriage register 1754-1812.

There was a church in Worting at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>33</sup>

The right of presentation belonged to the Abbot and convent of Hyde until the Dissolution,<sup>34</sup> though it was reserved to the Crown 'in times of voidance of the Abbey' by King Richard II in 1388.<sup>35</sup>

In 1539 it was granted with the manor by Henry VIII to William Paulet Lord St. John,<sup>36</sup> who apparently alienated the whole advowson to Richard Pyncke in 1571.<sup>37</sup> The patronage then followed the descent of Pyncke's moiety,<sup>38</sup> and subsequently of the whole manor until 1832,<sup>39</sup> in which year Harris Bigg-Wither presented to the church. The advowson was, however, bought from the Bigg-Wither family in 1892 by Major-General Sir Arthur Frederick Warren, K.C.B., who is the patron at the present day.<sup>40</sup>

In 1835 Mrs. Waldo by deed conveyed to trustees two cottages and 2 acres 2 roods of land, the rents thereof to be applied for the benefit of the poor. The land is let at £6 a year, which is divided among poor families. A sum of £60 consols is also held by the official trustees, representing a gift in 1873 of George Lamb, for the repair of this property.

In 1873 George Lamb also by deed gave £120 consols, the dividends amounting to £3 a year, to be applied in prizes at the National School. The stock is held by the official trustees.

<sup>26</sup> Bigg-Wither, loc. cit.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. 122.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 13 Jas. I.

<sup>29</sup> Bigg-Wither, op. cit. 121.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. 122.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 470.

<sup>34</sup> Cal. Pat. 1385-9, p. 496; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 151; 2033, fol. 43; 2034, fol. 29, 69, 121, 144. Richard II presented 'by voidance of the Abbey' in Jan. 1381 (Cal. Pat. 1377-81, p. 584).

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. 1385-9, p. 496.

<sup>36</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (1), g. 906 (1).

<sup>37</sup> Pat. 13 Eliz. pt. xi, m. 28.

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 21 Eliz.; W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 41, no. 14.

<sup>39</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.). Thomas Bigg presented for one turn in 1795 (ibid.).

<sup>40</sup> Ex inform. Maj.-Gen. Sir Arthur Frederick Warren, K.C.B.

THE HUNDRED OF KINGSCLERE

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

EWHURST
KINGSCLERE<sup>1</sup> (PART OF)

LITCHFIELD
WOLVERTON

The above list represents the extent of the hundred at the time of the Population Returns of 1831.<sup>2</sup> At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred of Kingsclere comprised Ewhurst,<sup>3</sup> Wolverton,<sup>4</sup> Ecchinswell,<sup>5</sup> Sydmonton,<sup>6</sup> the tithing of Swampton in St. Mary Bourne,<sup>7</sup> the tithing of Earlstone in the parish of Burghclere,<sup>8</sup> and the whole of the modern parish of Kingsclere,<sup>9</sup> with the exception of the tithings of Kingsclere Lordship and Kingsclere Parsonage and a small estate called Tidgrove in the tithing of North Oakley. Kingsclere Lordship was entered under Basingstoke Hundred<sup>10</sup> and Kingsclere Parsonage under Mainsbridge Hundred,<sup>11</sup> while Tidgrove and a portion of Litchfield formed part of the hundreds of Redbridge<sup>12</sup> and Pastrow<sup>13</sup> respectively. The land comprising the hundred was assessed at a little over 30 hides.

By 1346 the hundred had assumed practically the same dimensions as in 1831, comprising as it did the modern parishes of Ewhurst, Kingsclere, Sydmonton<sup>14</sup> and Wolverton, the greater part of Litchfield and the tithing of Earlstone in the parish of Burghclere.<sup>15</sup> The rest of Litchfield, as in 1086, was still in Pastrow Hundred,<sup>16</sup> but how much longer it remained so is unknown.<sup>17</sup> Ecchinswell, as part of the liberty of the Bishop of

<sup>1</sup> Except Ecchinswell, which till 1852 formed part of the parish of Kingsclere.

<sup>2</sup> With the addition of the tithing of Earlstone in the parish of Burghclere.

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481*b*.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 502*a*.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 467*b*.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. 474*b*.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. 490*a*.

<sup>8</sup> Earlstone is not mentioned by name in Domesday Book, but it is represented by the 3 hides 2½ virgates in Clere in Clere Hundred held by William son of Baderon (ibid. 498*b*). Earlstone (q.v.) was held subsequently of his descendants the baronial Monmouths.

<sup>9</sup> The parish is represented by two entries under 'Chenol' (ibid. 481*b*, 490*a*), the modern Sandford, five entries under Clere (ibid. 481*b*, 508*a*, b), and one under Hannington (ibid. 508*b*), afterwards Hannington Lancelevy (q.v. infra). <sup>10</sup> Ibid. 456*b*. <sup>11</sup> Ibid. 471*b*. <sup>12</sup> Ibid. 487*a*.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 481*b*, 482*a*. The rest of Litchfield was at this time most probably included in the royal manor of Kingsclere.

<sup>14</sup> Till 1852 Sydmonton formed part of the parish of Kingsclere.

<sup>15</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330-1.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 323.

<sup>17</sup> It was not apparently in Pastrow Hundred in the reign of Henry VIII (Exch. Lay Subs. R. Hants, bdle. 173, no. 216).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Winchester, was included in Evingar Hundred<sup>18</sup> and is so still, and Swampton also before 1346 had been transferred to the same hundred.<sup>19</sup>

Since 1831 the tithing of Earlstone has been transferred to the hundred of Evingar, and the hundred of Kingsclere now consists of the parishes of Ewhurst, Kingsclere, Litchfield, Sydmonton (constituted a separate parish in 1852) and Wolverton.

As its name implies, Kingsclere Hundred formerly belonged to the Crown. The grant of the manor of Kingsclere to the church of St. Mary, Rouen, was followed by the grant of the hundred, the grantor being probably King Henry II, and his charter was confirmed by King John and by King Henry III in 1227.<sup>20</sup> By 1280, however, the hundred had once more become Crown property,<sup>21</sup> and it is probable that during the reigns of Edward I and Edward II the king held one hundred court only for the vills comprising the hundreds of Pastrow and Kingsclere.<sup>22</sup> The hundred was perhaps included in the sale of Kingsclere Manor to William de Melton, Archbishop of York, in 1335, although it is not specifically mentioned. It was sold, however, with the manor in 1544 to Sir William Paulet by Sir George Darcy and Dorothy his wife, daughter and heir of Sir John Melton,<sup>23</sup> and from this time it has followed the same descent as the manor (q.v.).

The hundred court was held in the open air on Nothing Hill,<sup>24</sup> near Frobury.<sup>25</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 308. See also Exch. Lay Subs. R. Hants, bdle. 174, no. 416.

<sup>19</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>20</sup> Cal. Chart. R. i, 46. The original charter is not extant, but Henry III in his confirmation refers to charters of King Henry and King John.

<sup>21</sup> Assize R. no. 789, m. 23.

<sup>22</sup> Thus in 1316 the vills of Kingsclere, Sydmonton, North Oakley and Wolverton are entered under the hundred of Pastrow (Feud. Aids, ii, 309).

<sup>23</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Hen. VIII.

<sup>24</sup> This is said to be a corruption of 'Mote-thing Hill.'

<sup>25</sup> A. T. Finch, The Ancient Church at Clere, 1.

EWHURST

Werste (xi cent.); Ywhurst (xiii cent.); Iwehurst, Yhurst, Iwerste (xiv cent.); Ewerst (xvi cent.).

Ewhurst is a small parish of 477 acres situated 6 miles north-west from Basingstoke and containing 103 acres of arable land, 254½ acres of permanent grass and 86¾ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> Ewhurst House, standing in a large park which contains a fine artificial lake of 18 acres surrounded by beech trees, is one of the seats of the Duke of Wellington. A little to the north of the house is the parish church, which was rebuilt in 1872-3 at the expense of Mr. William Henry Chichele Plowden, who rented Ewhurst for over twenty years from the Dukes of Wellington. Warner gives the following description of the estate in 1795: 'Here is a winding road amongst well-growing plantations, and by the side of a considerable sheet of water. The ground gradually rises from hence towards the house, and the gentle swells and inequalities are pleasingly interspersed with groups and single trees which we continued amongst till we approached the front of the house. The building is certainly not equal to these outward ornaments, as it consists of no particular style of architecture, being evidently built at different periods and very low, but within it contains a most excellent dining-room. The small parish church, which he (Robert Mackreth) has much improved, stands very near it upon the same eminence, so that together with the surrounding foliage they form a picturesque assemblage. But a retrospect upon the water and scenes we had just left was by far the most pleasing. The grounds yet unfinished in the back part of the house also deserve commendation, particularly a terrace, which, though thickly shaded with shrubs and evergreens, affords at intervals much fine prospect of the hills in Berkshire and the surrounding country.'<sup>2</sup>

Ewhurst Farm, which stands just outside the boundary of the park, was used as the parsonage in the 18th century<sup>3</sup>; the rector now resides at Wolverton, to which Ewhurst is annexed for ecclesiastical purposes.

The soil is chalk and clay, and the subsoil chalk and gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The children of this place attend the school at Ramsdell (vide Wootton St. Lawrence).

Among place-names mentioned in extant local records are the following—'Estlogelonde' and 'Breche,' a field near Dorroll Copse (xiii cent.).<sup>4</sup>

EWHURST, which had formed part MANORS of Earl Godwin's estates, was held by Walter of Hugh de Port in 1086, and was assessed at 1 hide.<sup>5</sup> Like the rest of the Port Barony, Ewhurst passed to the St. Johns as overlords, occurring in 14th-century lists of St. John knights' fees,<sup>6</sup> but as early as 1315 it was stated to be held of the king in chief by barony as a member of the manor of Sherborne St. John.<sup>7</sup> Peter de Pirifist was returned as holding half a knight's fee in Ewhurst of the old enfeoffment of Robert de St. John in the middle of the 13th century.<sup>8</sup> The manor subsequently reverted to the overlord, and in 1310 was settled by John de St. John the son of Robert on his son Roger de St. John and Joan his wife in fee-tail.<sup>9</sup> Roger died seised of the manor in 1315, leaving a son and heir Edward aged six,<sup>10</sup> and in the same year the custody of his lands and tenements in Ewhurst and North Oakley was granted by Edward II to Isumbert de St. Blumund to hold until the coming of age of the heir by the rent of £6 os. 7d.<sup>11</sup>—a rent which Edward III released to Isumbert in 1327 in consideration of the services which he had rendered Queen Isabel.<sup>12</sup> Sir Edward de St. John, perhaps the son and heir of Roger, but more probably his grandson, died seised of the manor of Ewhurst in 1384.<sup>13</sup> His heir was returned as Joan the daughter of his brother Richard de St. John aged eighteen and more, but by indenture he had granted the reversion after the death of himself and his wife Joan to trustees,<sup>14</sup> and it is doubtful, therefore, whether his niece ever succeeded to the manor. The history of the manor at this period is obscure, the only light thrown on it being afforded by the names of the patrons of the church as given in the episcopal registers. William Purchas of Alton, one of the trustees, presented the rector in 1392,<sup>15</sup> and four years later Nicholas Westone acted as patron,<sup>16</sup> but whether as lord of the manor does not appear. By the middle of the 15th century, however, Ewhurst had passed into the hands of John Norwode or Northwode, lord of the manor of 'Northwode Chastyners' (Norwood, co. Kent), who presented to the living of Ewhurst four times between 1447 and 1492.<sup>17</sup>

By his will John gave his land in 'Hamshire and Wildeshire' to his wife for the term of her life,<sup>18</sup> and she was still holding it in 1496, in which year her son and heir John Norwode died seised of the manor of 'Northwode Chastyners,' leaving as his heirs his two daughters Joan and Elizabeth aged respectively six and three.<sup>19</sup> The former married Sir John Norton, while the latter became the wife of Henry Barley, who owned much property in Essex and Hertfordshire,<sup>20</sup> and whose estates were increased in 1516 by the surrender of the manors of Ewhurst and

ST. JOHN. Argent a chief gules with two molets or therein.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 253-4.

<sup>3</sup> P.C.C. Will, 442 Cheslyn.

<sup>4</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481b.

<sup>6</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230a; Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17.

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. II, no. 15.

<sup>8</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230a.

<sup>9</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 23.

<sup>10</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. II, no. 15; 9 Edw. II, no. 44.

<sup>11</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 227.

<sup>12</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 34.

<sup>13</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Ric. II, no. 34.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid.

<sup>15</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 184.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 203.

<sup>17</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 47, 80, 105.

<sup>18</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xi, 29.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 8 Hen. VIII; Berry, Herts. Gen. 75.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

North Oakley by Sir John Norton and Joan.<sup>21</sup> Henry died in 1529 and was succeeded by his son William,<sup>22</sup> whose name appears as patron of Ewhurst in the register of Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester (1531–55).<sup>23</sup> William left two daughters. Anne, who married William or Richard Barley of Isleham (co. Cambs.), and Dorothy, who married first Thomas Clopton and secondly Thomas Leventhorpe,<sup>24</sup> and the manor seems to have been sold by these co-heirs to Richard Ayliff, a Hampshire yeoman,<sup>25</sup> who by deed of 1581 settled the reversion on his nephew, Brian Ayliff, the son of his brother Roland.<sup>26</sup> Brian died in 1588 during the lifetime of his uncle, and consequently on Richard's death in 1597 it passed to Brian's son and heir Richard.<sup>27</sup> From the latter it descended to the Richard Ayliff who in 1654 petitioned to contract for his estate at Ewhurst which had frequently been plundered during the civil wars.<sup>28</sup> He was succeeded by John Ayliff, probably his son, who was holding in 1664,<sup>29</sup> but within the next twenty years the manor had passed to James Plowden,<sup>30</sup> who had married Dorothy the eldest daughter of John Ayliff, and his descendant, the Rev. James Plowden of Ewhurst, died on 8 August 1761.<sup>31</sup> His son and heir James Chichele Plowden sold the manor shortly afterwards to the notorious Robert Mackreth,<sup>32</sup> who began life as a servant and billiard-marker at White's Club, St. James's Street, and amassed a large fortune in India. He was nominated for the pocket-borough of Castle Rising by the third Earl of Orford in 1774 and was knighted by George III in 1795.<sup>33</sup> Seven years later, on his withdrawal from public life, he retired to his estate at Ewhurst, on which he spent enormous sums<sup>34</sup> and ruined himself. The house was then sold to a Mr. Symonds, from whom it passed to Sir Peter Pole, who also spent large sums on Ewhurst.<sup>35</sup> In 1837 he sold it to Arthur Wellesley first Duke of Wellington,<sup>36</sup> whose grandson Arthur Charles fourth Duke of Wellington is the lord of the manor and the owner of the whole parish. He resides at Ewhurst and has much improved the house.

A wind-mill was included in an extent of the manor made in 1315.<sup>37</sup>

FINLEY, once a farm in the parish of Ewhurst,<sup>38</sup>

occurs as 'Finlei' in Domesday Book, being held with Wolverton by Alvred the Priest.<sup>39</sup> There are two references to land in Finley in early fines—the first in 1249, in which year Godfrey de Finley quitclaimed half a virgate in Finley to Adam de Finley, receiving in exchange 12 acres in the same vill lying in fields called 'Estlogelonde' and 'Breche',<sup>40</sup> and the second in 1293, in which year John de Batesford settled a messuage and 2 virgates of land in Finley on Robert de Finley and Maud his wife and their issue.<sup>41</sup> The name is still preserved in Finley's Row, which is situated a little to the north of Ewhurst Park.

WELLESLEY, Duke of Wellington. Gules a cross between twenty roundels argent, for WELLESLEY, quartered with Or a lion gules collared with a crown or for COLLEY, and in the chief a scutcheon of the union device of Great Britain and Ireland.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN,

rebuilt at the expense of Mr. W. H. C. Plowden and consecrated in 1873, consists of a chancel 12 ft. 10 in. by 12 ft., nave 25 ft. 4 in. by 15 ft. 8 in., with a north transept and vestry 9 ft. 2 in. by 8 ft. 8 in., and a south transept 9 ft. 2 in. by 6 ft. 3 in., the measurements being internal.

The east window is partly of 15th-century stonework, and has three cinquefoiled lights under a four-centred head with a moulded label.

The other windows throughout the church are modern, in 14th-century style. The west doorway is the principal entrance to the church, and has shafted jambs and a moulded two-centred arch.

The piscina in the south wall of the chancel has two late 13th-century stones in the jambs with stop chamfers, and the old drain is also preserved. The walls are of flint and stone and the roofs are tiled. All the internal fittings are modern.

In the north transept is a monument to Sir Robert Mackreth's wife, while in the south are two modern wall tablets to members of the Plowden family of Ewhurst House. The stone bell-cot over the west gable contains one small bell.

The plate consists of a silver chalice inscribed, 'The gift of Francis Chute, 1739'; a silver paten of 1720 given by the rector, the Rev. Richard Pole, in 1847; a silver flagon of 1847 inscribed, 'The gift of W. H. C. Plowden, August 1873'; and a silver alms dish of 1863, inscribed as the flagon.

There is only one book of registers, and the entries

Plowden. Azure a fesse dancetty with its points ending in fleurs de lis or.

<sup>21</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 8 Hen. VIII.

<sup>22</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), li, 4, 5.

<sup>23</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 163 d.

<sup>24</sup> Berry, Herts. Gen. 75.

<sup>25</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclii, 43.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.; P.C.C. Will, 87 Cobham.

<sup>28</sup> Cal. of Com. for Comp. v, 3197.

<sup>29</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 9 Will. III, no. 2.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. He was the grandson of Sir Edmund Plowden, the governor of New Albion, who died in 1659 (N. and Q. [Ser. 1], iv, 321).

<sup>31</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry (5th ed.), ii, 1100. According to Burke the name of his eldest son was Richard Chichele, but it is given in his will as James Chichele (P.C.C. Will, 442 Cheslyn).

<sup>32</sup> He conveyed it to Thomas Duck in 1763, no doubt for purposes of sale (Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 4 Geo. III; Recov. R. Mich. 4 Geo. III, rot. 270). Robert Mackreth had certainly purchased the estate prior to 1778, in which year he is returned as the patron of the church (Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling).

<sup>33</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog. He and a fellow servant Rumbold went to India together. Rumbold, who had been under Mackreth in England, amassed the larger fortune, and hence the following epigram:

'When Robert Macreath with upper servant's pride,

"Here, fellow, clean my boots," to Rumbold cried,

He meekly answered, "Yea, Bob."

But since returned from India's plundered land

The purse-proud Rumbold at the same command

Would stoutly answer, "Na, Bob." (Ex inform. Mr. John Hautenville Cope.)

<sup>34</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, i, 233.

<sup>35</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. A. T. Finch.

<sup>36</sup> Ex inform. the agent of the Duke of Wellington.

<sup>37</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. II, no. 15; 9 Edw. II, no. 44.

<sup>38</sup> Money, A Perfect Boke 60.

<sup>39</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 502a.

<sup>40</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 33 Hen. III.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid. Trin. 21 Edw. I.

are arranged in columns, on the parchment pages, under the headings of baptisms, marriages and burials, the first dating from 1684 to 1810, with a gap between 1765 and 1772, the marriages from 1682 to 1738 and from 1771 to 1812, and the burials from 1687 to 1762 and from 1792 to 1800. At the other end of the same book are a few marriage entries from 1771 to 1812, the number being only eight.

The first mention of a church in ADVOWSON the parish is in 1310, in which year the advowson was included in the settlement of the manor upon Roger de St. John and his wife Joan.<sup>42</sup> The advowson has throughout followed the descent of the manor<sup>43</sup> (q.v.).

On 2 July 1880 Ewhurst rectory was united with the rectory of Wolverton by Order in Council.<sup>44</sup>

There was also a free chapel in the parish endowed with tithes which were of the yearly value of £1 6s. 8d. in the reign of Edward VI. The incumbent, Sir Richard Gosmer, clerk, received the profits, it was stated, but 'doth nether celebrate nor saye the devyne service there at any tyme.'<sup>45</sup>

In the reign of William III James Plowden, lord of the manor of Ewhurst, engaged in a dispute with Andrew Bruce, the rector of Ewhurst, about the payment of tithes. Plowden wished to compound for them by an annual payment of £15, while the rector wished to take his tithes in kind—a practice which had fallen into disuse during the civil wars—because he had been informed that if he did so he would make £25 a year from them.<sup>46</sup> The result of the suit has not been discovered.

There are apparently no endowed charities in this parish.

KINGSCLERE

Klere (ix cent.); Cleare, Clera (x cent.); Clere (xi cent.); Kyngescler (xiii cent.).

In 1831 the parish of Kingsclere, which has been described as 'too healthy to die in and too poor to live in,' covered a far larger area than it does at the present day. It extended over 17,000 acres, and stretched from the River Enborne in the north to the Port Way, the ancient road from Salisbury to Silchester, in the south, Baughurst and Wolverton bounding it on the east, and Newtown, Burghclere and Litchfield forming its western boundary. Since then Kingsclere Woodlands has been formed into an ecclesiastical district, Ecchinswell and Sydmonton have been constituted separate parishes, and the area of Kingsclere with Kingsclere Woodlands is now only 13,116 acres of land and 10 acres of land covered by water. The general rise of the ground is from the north up to the range of lofty downs in the south which runs from King John's or Cottington's Hill to Inkpen Beacon, near Hungerford. The town is situated in about the centre of the parish at the point where the roads from Basingstoke to Newbury and from Andover to Reading cross, and are joined by a road running north from Whitchurch. A stream rises about 300 yds. south of Kingsclere and flows almost due north through the town to empty itself into the River Enborne, which forms the boundary between Hampshire and Berkshire. The town is picturesque, but none of its buildings present any special architectural interest except the parish church, which stands on the western side of the market place. The rectory was originally at the north-east of the church, but in 1853 the building was used as two cottages and afterwards demolished.<sup>1</sup> Some of the oak panelling was taken to Beenham Court, about 2 miles north of Kingsclere, when that house was being built in 1875, and some is at Elm Grove, the residence of Mr. William Holding, D.C.L., J.P., to the east of the town—a house built in the early part of the 19th century and much enlarged and altered at its close. The ancient vicarage-house was to the south-west of the church. It was abandoned, and the vicar had no residence of his own until 1850, when the present vicarage was built at a cost of £1,407 on 2 acres of land given by William third Lord Bolton.<sup>2</sup> The Falcon Inn, one of the oldest in Hampshire, is especially interesting as being at one time in the possession of William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, who in 1510 gave it to Winchester College upon trust for the maintenance and support of the scholars upon its foundation.<sup>3</sup>

It is probable that the kings of England often rode through Kingsclere on their way to and from Freemantle Park, to which they resorted for hunting. The park remained part of the royal demesne till the beginning of the 17th century. Kingsclere was also important during the Civil War owing to its proximity to Newbury.<sup>4</sup> On 21 October 1644 Charles I intending to relieve Basing House marched hither from Whitchurch, but finding the enemy so greatly his superior in cavalry, after one night's halt he continued his march towards Newbury.<sup>5</sup> According to Captain Symonds, the author of Marches of the Royal Army, the house at which the king spent the night was Frobury Manor House, about a mile north-west of the town, his host being Robert Towers.<sup>6</sup> In this house, which is now occupied by the farmer of the lands, is still shown what is called a priest's chamber. The following statement made by Edward Prior, a witness in an Exchequer suit of 1674, is also significant: 'About the beginning of the late trouble there was a vicarage house in Itchinswell, wherein

<sup>42</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 23.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 18 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 34; 2 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 30, 32; Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 60 d.; 2033, fol. 20; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 42, 84, 145, 184, 203; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 47, 80, 105, 134, 163 d.; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>44</sup> Lond. Gaz. 2 July 1880, p. 3752.

<sup>45</sup> Chant. Cert. Hants.

<sup>46</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 9 Will. III, no. 2.

<sup>1</sup> A. T. Finch, The Ancient Church at Clere, 37-43.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> A detailed account of the history of the Inn is given in Hants N. and Q., v, 103-4. The original 'Crownne' Inn is mentioned in the parish register in 1611, the 'Golden Faucon' in 1628. The modern 'Crown Inn' was built in 1853. Ex inform. the Rev. A. T. Finch.

<sup>4</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1625-49, p. 677; 1644-5, p. 65; Hist. MSS. Com. Rep. xiii, App. ii, 155, 495.

<sup>5</sup> C. N. Godwin, The Civil War in Hampshire, 275-6.

<sup>6</sup> 'Munday, Oct. 21st. His Majesty lay at King Cleer (at Mr. Tower's) at Frobury, a moated house, seven miles from Basing,' quoted in C. N. Godwin, loc. cit.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

the curate for the time being did usually live, which house partly fell down, and was partly pulled down in the time of the late trouble.<sup>7</sup> About two miles south-west of Kingsclere, Cannon Heath Down, Cannon Park and Cannon Heath Farm preserve the memory of the canons of Rouen, the early holders of the manor. Cannon Court was in the occupation of James Hunte towards the close of the 16th century.<sup>8</sup> Charles first Duke of Bolton built Canham or Cannon's Lodge, probably on its site, from materials said to have been brought from the ruins of Basing House. It was for some time occupied as a hunting-box by the first Earl of Mexborough and afterwards by Henry Frederick Duke of Cumberland, brother of King George III, but was pulled down in 1805.<sup>9</sup> The heath now forms part of the training-quarters belonging to the celebrated Park House Racing Stables which formerly belonged to Sir Joseph Henry Hawley, bart.; the present proprietors are the Dukes of Wellington and Portland, for whom Mr. William Waugh trains. The soil is chalk and clay, the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. Kingsclere and Kingsclere Woodlands contain 5,586½ acres of arable land, 3,013½ acres of permanent grass and 1,804½ acres of woods and plantations.<sup>10</sup> The common fields were inclosed in 1845.<sup>11</sup>

Ecchinswell is a long, narrow parish lying between Kingsclere and Sydmonton, and containing 2,349 acres. The village lies in the centre of the parish near the source of a small stream which rises close to the site of the old church, east of the vicarage near the watercress bed, marked by the tombstone of Mr. John Digweed of Ecchinswell House, whose interment took place inside the church in 1844. There are two burial grounds in Ecchinswell; one surrounds the present church, the other was purchased and consecrated in 1844.<sup>12</sup> The vicarage-house was built during the incumbency of the Rev. Lewis Rugg, M.A., in 1853.<sup>13</sup> Ecchinswell House, now the property of Mr. Lionel T. Wasey, was occupied by the late Major William H. Digweed until his death about 1880.

The soil is rich loam and the subsoil gravel and chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats, and watercress is also grown. There are 905¾ acres of arable land, 817½ acres of permanent grass and 75½ acres of woods and plantations in the parish of Ecchinswell.<sup>14</sup> The inclosure award is dated 13 November 1850.<sup>15</sup>

Sydmonton is a long, narrow parish bounded on the east by Ecchinswell and on the west by Newtown, Burghclere and Litchfield. To the north of the church, which is in the centre of the parish, is Sydmonton Court. This house has several times been altered and enlarged and is at present occupied by Sir Charles Elliot. South of the church is a terrace from which a fine view may be obtained of the North Downs across the intervening valley. Sydmonton Dower House, belonging to the lord of the manor, is now on lease. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and beans.

The total area is 2,145 acres, comprising 1,382 acres of arable land, 448 acres of permanent grass and 332 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>16</sup>

Kingsclere Woodlands was formed into an ecclesiastical parish from the northern parts of Kingsclere in 1846, and contains 4,790 acres. It averages about 300 ft. above the ordnance datum, and is watered by three tributaries of the Enborne, which form its northern boundary. St. Paul's Church is situated near Ashford Hill, and near it is the vicarage, which was built in 1847-8.<sup>17</sup> Beenham Court is a modern house standing on the site of Mrs. May's farm of the same name which was pulled down in 1875.<sup>18</sup> To the north is Headley Common, which is intersected by the main road from Basingstoke to Newbury, which enters Berkshire at Knight's Bridge over the Enborne. Knightsbridge House is the residence of Mrs. Caroline E. Lamb.

Among ancient place-names in Kingsclere are the following:—a field called Rammesholte<sup>19</sup> (xii cent.); lands called Denpurcuc, Tawyerescroft,<sup>20</sup> Williamsmore, Nortle (Norley Copse)<sup>21</sup> and Wluithesmede<sup>22</sup> (xiii cent.); a wood called Hauekhurst (Hawkhurst Hill), a bridge called Ixnesford (Exmansford), waste-land called Smetheburgh,<sup>23</sup> pasture called Polelond and Holtmede (The Holt),<sup>24</sup> and crofts called Hagenhull and Strokyngeclond (Strokings)<sup>25</sup> (xiv cent.); a messuage called Coppidhulle<sup>26</sup> (xv cent.); lands called Wigard or Wiggers, Strattons, Little Pychehorne,<sup>27</sup> a tenement called Wakemans,<sup>28</sup> a meadow called Crooked Meade,<sup>29</sup> and a messuage called Gaylys (Gailey's Mill)<sup>30</sup> (xvi cent.); and a mill called Abbot's Mill<sup>31</sup>; closes of pasture called Apsanger,<sup>32</sup> a messuage called Holthatche,<sup>33</sup> and lands called Fordefieldes, Maiden Meade, Wakriges, Ashford Hill and Readings<sup>34</sup> (xvii cent.).

The following place-names in Ecchinswell are found on the Court Rolls:—lands called Bishopp's Ashley and Twichens,<sup>35</sup> a copse called Frobreche, public ways called Carvyles and Hachhouse Lane and a messuage and virgate of land called Le Garre<sup>36</sup> (xvi cent.); fields called The Midlemawme, The Little Mawme, Ilond Close, Little Maulin near Twynlie, Merrie Hill,<sup>37</sup> Mousehoale<sup>38</sup> and Bishopp's Greene, a copse called Mowles and messuages called Plott House and Mookells.<sup>39</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants, Mich. 26 Chas. II, no. 17.

<sup>8</sup> Walter Money, A Perfect Boke, 40.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid.

<sup>10</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>11</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>12</sup> White, Hist. Gazetteer and Dir. of Hants (1859).

<sup>13</sup> Ibid.

<sup>14</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>15</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>16</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>17</sup> White, Hist. Gazetteer and Dir. of Hants (1859).

<sup>18</sup> A. T. Finch, op. cit. 37-43.

<sup>19</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. xx, fol. 22 d.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. fol. 22.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid. fol. 22 d.

<sup>22</sup> Add. Chart. 24693.

<sup>23</sup> Close, 5 Edw. III, part i, m. 10. Represented by the modern Haughurst Hill, Oxford Bridge and Smithley's Copse.

<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Ric. II, no. 33.

<sup>25</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. xx, fol. 22.

<sup>26</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), iii, 107.

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 30 Eliz. pt. vi, m. 10. There are still farms in the parish called Stratton Farm and Pitchorn Farm.

<sup>28</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), bdle. 86, no. 18.

<sup>29</sup> Pat. 8 Eliz. pt. viii, m. 16. This meadow, still called Crooked Meadow, which Thomas Smith had bequeathed for the maintenance of mass and a light before the image of St. Katherine in the parish church of Kingsclere, was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Thomas Blackway and Francis Barker in 1566.

<sup>30</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Hen. VII.

<sup>31</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), i, 67.

<sup>32</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 167b.

<sup>33</sup> Ct. of Req. bdle. 45, no. 48.

<sup>34</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 134. Readings is represented by the modern Riddings Farm.

<sup>35</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. bdle. 91, no. 4. Bishopp's Ashley is probably the same as Ashley Warren Down.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid. bdle. 90, no. 3.

<sup>37</sup> Ibid. bdle. 117, no. 3.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. bdle. 137, no. 4.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. bdle. 117, no. 3.

KINGSCLERE HUNDRED

KINGSCLERE

Donymede and Pontesdowne in Sydmonton occur in the 16th century.<sup>40</sup>

KINGSCLERE formed part of the MANORS ancient demesne of the Crown. King

Alfred by will left it for life to his second daughter Ethelgiva, Abbess of Shaftesbury,<sup>41</sup> and there are many other mentions of it in Saxon charters. Thus in 931 King Athelstan at a Witenagemot at Colchester granted 10 hides of land at Clere to Abbot Aelfric.<sup>42</sup> Again, in 943 King Edmund bestowed 15 hides of land at Clere on the religious woman Aelfswith,<sup>43</sup> while sixteen years later King Edgar gave his thegn Aelfwine 10 hides of land at West Clere.<sup>44</sup> At the time of the Domesday Survey Kingsclere contributed towards the day's ferm rendered from Basingstoke,<sup>45</sup> and remained in possession of the Crown until 1107, in which year Henry I granted it to the canons of the church of St. Mary of Rouen.<sup>46</sup> This grant was confirmed by Henry II between 1154 and 1158,<sup>47</sup> by Richard I in 1190,<sup>48</sup> and by Henry III in 1227.<sup>49</sup> Henry III also in 1227 granted the wood of Wittingley quit of all forest law in free alms to the church of St. Mary, Rouen, and the dean and chapter there to dispose of at their will,<sup>50</sup> and confirmed the same grant in 1247.<sup>51</sup> The dean and chapter remained in possession of the manor until the end of the reign of Edward II,<sup>52</sup> when it came into the possession of the Crown by reason of the war between England and France and was committed to the custody of Peter de Galicien in 1324.<sup>53</sup> Edward III on his accession granted it during his pleasure to his clerk Robert de Wyvyll, parson of the church of Kingsclere,<sup>54</sup> but before four years had elapsed the Dean and Chapter of Rouen had evidently regained possession of their manor. Thus in 1331 an inquisition was held on their complaint that the king's foresters of Pamber had claimed as part of the royal forest 100 acres of wood and 300 acres of pasture<sup>55</sup> which had always belonged to their manor of Kingsclere.<sup>56</sup> At length in 1335 the connexion of the dean and chapter with the parish was severed, the king in that year granting them licence to alienate the manor to William de Melton, Archbishop of York.<sup>57</sup> On the death of the archbishop in 1340 Kingsclere passed to his nephew William, son of his brother Henry de Melton,<sup>58</sup> in accordance with a settlement made in the same year.<sup>59</sup>

William the nephew obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Kingsclere in 1346,<sup>60</sup> and was succeeded by his son, Sir William de Melton,<sup>61</sup> who died seised of the manor in 1399, leaving a son and heir John, aged twenty-two and more.<sup>62</sup> John, who was soon afterwards knighted, granted a forty years' lease of the manor in 1404 to William Fauconer of Kingsclere,<sup>63</sup> and in 1431 was returned as holding the manor of Kingsclere for one knight's fee.<sup>64</sup> He died in 1455, leaving a son, John de Melton,<sup>65</sup> who on his death nineteen years later left as his heir his grandson John, son of his son John,<sup>66</sup> who succeeded to this manor only after the death of his grandmother Cecilia in 1484.<sup>67</sup> In 1505 the manor was settled on him on the occasion of his marriage with his second wife Eleanor daughter of Sir John de St. John and widow of John Zouche.<sup>68</sup> He died in 1510 and was succeeded by his son John,<sup>69</sup> whose only daughter and heir Dorothy<sup>70</sup> joined with her husband, Sir George Darcy, in 1544 in selling the manor to Sir William Paulet Lord St. John.<sup>71</sup> From this date the manor remained with his successors,<sup>72</sup> Marquesses of Winchester<sup>73</sup> and Dukes of Bolton,<sup>74</sup> until the death without issue of Harry sixth Duke of Bolton in 1794.<sup>75</sup> It then passed in accordance with a settlement made by Charles, the fifth Duke, to Thomas Orde, the husband of his natural daughter Jean Mary. Thomas Orde assumed by sign manual the additional surname and arms of Powlett in 1795, and was elevated to the peerage as Lord Bolton of Bolton Castle (co. Yorks.) on 20 October 1797.<sup>76</sup> The present lord of the manor is his great-grandson, William Thomas Orde-Powlett Lord Bolton.

There were two mills within the manor at the MELTON. Argent a cross patty voided azure.

PAULET, Marquess of Winchester. Sable three swords argent in pile with their hilts or.

<sup>40</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. vii, m. 32.

<sup>41</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 178, 182.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. 357-9.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 530-3.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid. iii, 268-9.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants. i, 456b.

<sup>46</sup> Vide Hants Field Club, iii (2), 198.

<sup>47</sup> Round, Cal. of Doc. France, 5.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid.

<sup>49</sup> Chart. R. 11 Hen. III, pt. ii, m. 9.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid. pt. i, m. 2.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid. 31 Hen. III, m. 6.

<sup>52</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II, rot. 12, m. 1 d.; Close, 8 John, m. 1 d.; Feud. Aids, ii, 309. They usually farmed it out. Thus in 1270 they leased it for nine years to Sir William de Wintershill, who was at the time lord of the manor of Frobury, at a rent of sixty marks (Hants Field Club, iii [2], 199).

<sup>53</sup> Close, 18 Edw. II, m. 36; Mins. Accts. bdle. 1126, no. 19; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 284.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. ii, 7.

<sup>55</sup> Viz. 100 acres of wood at 'Hauek-

hurst,' 100 acres of pasture annexed to the same, and 200 acres of pasture called 'Smetheburgh.'

<sup>56</sup> Inq. Misc. Chan. file 116. By the inquisition it was returned that the wood and pasture were the soil of the dean and chapter as appertaining to their manor of Kingsclere. The king accordingly ordered the justices in eyre for forest pleas to permit the dean and chapter to make their profit of the same, and to command the foresters to desist from molesting them (Close, 5 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 10).

<sup>57</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 227, no. 15; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 94.

<sup>58</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 43; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 136. He settled it upon himself and his issue in 1341 (Pat. 15 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 24; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 15 Edw. III).

<sup>59</sup> Pat. 14 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 46.

<sup>60</sup> Chart. R. 20 Edw. III, m. 4.

<sup>61</sup> Vide Harl. Soc. Publ. xvi, 203.

<sup>62</sup> Inq. p.m. 22 Ric. II, no. 33.

<sup>63</sup> Vide Pat. 8 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 21.

<sup>64</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 373.

<sup>65</sup> Inq. p.m. 33 Hen. VI, no. 22.

<sup>66</sup> Ibid. 14 Edw. IV, no. 27.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid. 2 Ric. III, no. 18.

<sup>68</sup> De Banc. R. East. 20 Hen. VII (Chart. Enr.), m. 2 d.; De Banc. R. East. 20 Hen. VII, m. 114.

<sup>69</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxv, 16.

<sup>70</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xvi, 203.

<sup>71</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Hen. VIII; Recov. R. Hil. 36 Hen. VIII, rot. 319. <sup>72</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxii, 125; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 1 Jas. I; Hil. 7 Jas. I; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccclxviii, 102; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, rot. 112; Mich. 28 Geo. II, rot. 383.

<sup>73</sup> Sir William Paulet was created Marquess of Winchester in 1551.

<sup>74</sup> His descendant Charles, the sixth Marquess, was created Duke of Bolton in 1689.

<sup>75</sup> Burke, Peerage (1906), 1721-2.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid. 184.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>77</sup> There is mention in the 14th century of a water-mill which was farmed out for 16s. 8d. a year.<sup>78</sup> One water-mill is generally included in extents of the manor of the 14th and 15th centuries,<sup>79</sup> but two water-mills and one wind-mill are mentioned in 1544.<sup>80</sup>

The site of the wind-mill is perhaps marked by Mill Green, near the River Enborne. In 1859 there were four mills in the town—Town or Pope's Mill, Island Mill, Gailey Mill and a mill called Victoria Mill.<sup>81</sup> Of these Gailey Mill probably occupied the site of Gales Mill, which was an appurtenance of the manor of Sandford. In 1875 James Bradfield of Fox Grove was the proprietor of Upper and Lower Mills, and William Prior of Victoria and Town Mills.<sup>82</sup> At the present day there are three mills in Kingsclere—Upper or Gailey Mill (steam and water) Victoria and Lower Mills.

In 1218 the king ordered that the market which had been held in Kingsclere on Sundays should in the future be held on Saturdays.<sup>83</sup> Warner, writing in the 18th century, mentions a well-frequented market on Tuesdays, and fairs the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday after 10 October.<sup>84</sup> In 1848 the market was still held on Tuesdays, but had fallen very much into disuse, only a few farmers meeting at the Swan Inn with samples,<sup>85</sup> and it probably ceased altogether about 1850. The fairs are still held—on Whit Tuesday for pleasure on Ashford Hill and the Tuesday after Old Michaelmas Day for hiring servants and pleasure in the market place.

At the time of the Domesday Survey 15s. a year was received from tolls at Kingsclere<sup>86</sup>; 20d. a year was paid to the lord of the manor from this source during the 14th century.<sup>87</sup>

The Kings of England from a very early date owned a large estate in the parish called FREEMANTLE (Freitmantel, xii cent.; Frigidum Mantellum, Francmantel, xiii cent.). One of Fair Rosamond's bowers was in Freemantle Park,<sup>88</sup> and there are numerous references to Freemantle in early Pipe Rolls. In 1183 the sum of 31s. 2d. was spent on work at the king's houses at Freemantle,<sup>89</sup> the steps and wall of the king's ORDE-POWLETT, Lord Bolton. The arms of PAULET, with the difference of a quarter argent and thereon a scutcheon sable with a salmon rising.

chamber were repaired at a cost of 18s. 2d. in 1185,<sup>90</sup> while twelve years later 20s. was paid to Eljas, the engineer (Ingeniator) for repairing the king's houses at Freemantle.<sup>91</sup> King John stayed at Freemantle no fewer than thirty-seven times during his reign,<sup>92</sup> probably for hunting, and there are many entries on the Close Rolls of expenses incurred in the carriage of wine to his residence there.<sup>93</sup> In 1205 also John ordered the payment of 6s. 8d. to John son of Hugh for carrying the royal jewels from Windsor to Freemantle.<sup>94</sup> Edward I in July 1276 granted the manor of Freemantle with the royal houses, park and all appurtenances to Reginald FitzPeter, for life,<sup>95</sup> but six months later ordered him to deliver the king's houses there to Pain de Chaworth,<sup>96</sup> who the same day obtained permission from the king to pull them down, and to carry away and dispose of the timber, walls and other things in them.<sup>97</sup> In 1280 Edward I sought to recover the estate from Reginald,<sup>98</sup> but failed in his attempt, and Freemantle did not revert to the Crown until the death of Reginald in 1286.<sup>99</sup> From this date the park remained in the possession of the Crown until the 17th century. As is shown below, the manor of Edmundsthorp Benham was theoretically held by the serjeanty of keeping the park, but in practice the parkers were appointed by the Crown.<sup>100</sup> Till about 1340 the wages were fixed at 2d. a day,<sup>101</sup> but in 1343 Simon Bacon was appointed parker for life at the wages of 3d. a day and 13s. 4d. yearly for a robe,<sup>102</sup> and this rate of pay continued.<sup>103</sup> The parker from an early date was allowed ten cartloads of hay a year for the deer in winter.<sup>104</sup> In the 15th century also the custom had arisen of paying him five marks a year for supplying the deer and game with water in the summer,<sup>105</sup> and from the 16th-century grants it appears that the parkers when appointed had a right to all the herbage and pannage of the park, reserving, however, sufficient food for the deer.<sup>106</sup> Sir William Sandys was appointed parker in 1510,<sup>107</sup> and Sir Humphrey Forster of Clere Woodcott in 1541.<sup>108</sup> In 1608 James I granted the reversion of the office after the death of Sir William Kingsmill to Henry Kingsmill,<sup>109</sup> but in the course of the next thirty years the park had ceased to be Crown property and had passed into the possession of Francis Cottington, created Lord Cottington of Hanworth on 10 July 1631,<sup>110</sup> who dealt with it by fine in 1640.<sup>111</sup> During the civil wars Lord Cottington remained faithful to the royal cause, and eventually went into exile with King Charles II.<sup>112</sup> Freemantle Park was accordingly

<sup>77</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456b.

<sup>78</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 978, no. 29, 30; bdle. 1126, no. 19.

<sup>79</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 43; 22 Ric. II, no. 33; 33 Hen. VI, no. 22.

<sup>80</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 36 Hen. VIII.
<sup>81</sup> White, Hist. Gazetteer and Dir. of Hants (1859).

<sup>82</sup> P. O. Dir. of Hants (1875).

<sup>83</sup> Close, 2 Hen. III, m. 2.

<sup>84</sup> Warner, Hist. of Hants, ii, 2.

<sup>85</sup> P. O. Dir. of Hants (1848).

<sup>86</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456b.

<sup>87</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 978, no. 29; bdle. 1126, no. 19.

<sup>88</sup> Dugdale, Mon. iv, 358.

<sup>89</sup> Pipe R. 30 Hen. II, m. 6.

<sup>90</sup> Ibid. 31 Hen. II, m. 14.

<sup>91</sup> Ibid. 9 Ric. I, m. 2.

<sup>92</sup> Hants N. and Q. vi, 31.

<sup>93</sup> Close, 6 John, m. 21; 7 John, m. 21, 11; 8 John, m. 3; 9 John, m. 18, 10, 9; 16 John, m. 10.

<sup>94</sup> Ibid. 7 John, m. 11.

<sup>95</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. I, m. 14.

<sup>96</sup> Close, 4 Edw. I, m. 17.

<sup>97</sup> Ibid. m. 16.

<sup>98</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 764-5.

<sup>99</sup> Inq. 14 Edw. I, no. 18.

<sup>100</sup> Pat. 30 Hen. III, m. 8; 4 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 8; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 220; Pat. 10 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 29; 20 Edw. II, m. 5; 4 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 24; 6 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 19, &c.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid. 11 Edw. III, pt. iii, m. 36;

Close, 14 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 54.

<sup>102</sup> Pat. 17 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 35.

The 13s. 4d. was subsequently paid by the Prior of Southwick from the manor of Colemene (Pat. 6 Edw. IV, pt. i, m. 7).

<sup>103</sup> Close, 22 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 15, &c.

<sup>104</sup> Enr. Accts. F 8 Ric. II, F; 11 Ric. II, A d.; 6 Edw. IV, H, &c.

<sup>105</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. IV, pt. i, m. 7; 1 Ric. III, pt. v, m. 16, &c.

<sup>106</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. Hil. 5 Eliz. rot. 16.

<sup>107</sup> Pat. 2 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 16.

<sup>108</sup> Ibid. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. iv, m. 28.

<sup>109</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1603-10, p. 438.

<sup>110</sup> Burke, Extinct Peerage, 140. Cottington Hill in the parish commemorates his name.

<sup>111</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 16 Chas. I.

<sup>112</sup> Burke, Extinct Peerage, 140.

sequestered, and was for some time administered by Trustees of Irish Affairs, the revenue apparently being used for public purposes in Ireland, but finally by order of 1651 the park was discharged from sequestration and delivered to President Bradshaw, to whom it had been granted by Parliament.<sup>113</sup> At the Restoration Freemantle Park passed to Charles Cottington, the nephew and heir of Francis Lord Cottington, who had died at Valladolid in 1653,<sup>114</sup> and for some time remained in the Cottington family, Francis Cottington dealing with it by recovery in 1739.<sup>115</sup> In 1778 it was in the occupation of Henry Fitch,<sup>116</sup> but shortly afterwards the mansion was taken down and the park converted into a farm.<sup>117</sup> Freemantle Park Farm, the site of King John's house, was in the possession of the yeoman family of Hyde in the middle of the 19th century.<sup>118</sup> It now belongs to Mrs. Currie of Minley Manor.

COTTINGTON, Lord Cottington. Azure a fesse between three roses or.

By an inquisition taken in the reign of Henry III it was returned that the park contained 1,136 perches, and that only part of it was inclosed.<sup>119</sup> The work of inclosing the park was soon afterwards completed, and large sums of money were spent every year in cutting down timber and repairing the paling.<sup>120</sup>

Henry III, Edward I and Edward II made frequent presents of deer taken in the park,<sup>121</sup> and in a Close Roll of 1315 there is an interesting entry, viz. an order to the king's yeoman John de Knokyn to take venison in the park of Freemantle, to find salt and barrels for the same, and to cause it to be sent to Carlisle and delivered to Robert de Welle, receiver of the king's victuals.<sup>122</sup> There were still deer in the park in the 17th century.<sup>123</sup> By the order of the commissioners of the navy a survey was made of the timber in the park in 1650, and it was returned by the surveyors that it contained 437 trees fit for the uses of the navy.<sup>124</sup> The site of the park is marked at the present time by Freemantle Park Down, King John's Hill or Cottington Hill, Freemantle Park Farm and Park Copse, which are situated between one and two miles south of the village of Kingsclere. According to tradition King John's house occupied a site on the southern slope of King John's Hill, which reaches a height of 754 ft. above the ordnance datum and commands a splendid view extending over six counties. A spectacula or watch tower was built on the summit by one of the Cottingtons in the 18th century, but is now in ruins.

The manor of ECCHINSWELL (Eccleswelle, xi cent.; Echeneswell, xiii cent.; Itchinswell, Itchingeswell, xvi cent.; Itchinwen, Itchinswen, xviii cent.), sometimes also called the manor of NUTHANGER (Nutehangre, xiv cent.), from the name of the capital messuage, formed part of the original endowment of the see of Winchester, and at the time of the Domesday Survey was assessed at 7½ hides.<sup>125</sup> The manor continued to form part of the possessions of the bishopric until 1648,<sup>126</sup> when as a result of the Root and Branch Act it was sold to Nicholas Love and George Wither.<sup>127</sup> In 1660, however, the manor once more came to the bishop, and continued to be held by him until as late as the middle of the 18th century.<sup>128</sup> The lordship was soon afterwards acquired by the Herbert family, Henry John George Herbert Lord Porchester, son and heir of Henry George second Earl of Carnarvon, dealing with the manor by recovery in 1821.<sup>129</sup> His grandson George Edward Stanhope Molyneux, the fifth earl, is at the present time lord of the manor of Ecchinswell.

SEE OF WINCHESTER. Gules St. Peter's keys crossed with St. Paul's sword.

HERBERT, Earl of Carnarvon. Party azure and gules three lions argent.

Of the leasehold tenants of the manor we know that in 1580 John Watson, Bishop of Winchester, leased the site of the manor for eighty years to Queen Elizabeth, who six months later made over the remainder of the lease to Sir Henry Wallop.<sup>130</sup> At the sale of the bishop's lands in 1648 the site of the manor of Ecchinswell or Nuthanger Farm was described as now or late in the possession of Robert Wallop.<sup>131</sup> In 1744 the site of the manor was granted to Matthew Combe, M.D., to hold during the lives of Samuel Burroughs, Sarah Morley and Sarah Burroughs.<sup>132</sup>

Two mills worth 100*d.* were included in the extent of the manor taken in 1086.<sup>133</sup> At a court of the manor held in 1595 John Benham paid 6*d.* on taking up a water-mill with an orchard in Ecchinswell which had fallen into the hands of the lords on the surrender of Robert Kisby and Anne his wife.<sup>134</sup> No mills are <sup>113</sup> Cal. of Com. for Comp. i, 439, 486, 487, 493, 497.

<sup>114</sup> Burke, Extinct Peerage, 140. Charles dealt with it by fine in 1667, conveying it in that year to Walter Buckland and James Frampton (Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 18 & 19 Chas. II).

<sup>115</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 13 Geo. II.

<sup>116</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse, MS. Surv. of Hants penes Lord Swaythling.

<sup>117</sup> White, Hist. Gawettree and Dir. of Hants (1859).

<sup>118</sup> P.O. Dir. of Hants (1848, 1859).

<sup>119</sup> Inq. Misc. Chan. file 9, no. 6.

<sup>120</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 978, no. 26; Enr. Accts. F 42 Edw. III, I; 48 Edw.

III, E; 8 Ric. II, F; 5 Hen. VI, A, &c.

<sup>121</sup> Thus in 1293 Edward I ordered the parker to allow Beatrice de la Roche the daughter of William le Brun to have three does in Freemantle Park of the king's gift, and to aid and counsel her in taking them (Close, 21 Edw. I, m. 10). See also Close, 22 Edw. I, m. 6; 7 Edw. II, m. 27; 10 Edw. II, m. 27.

<sup>122</sup> Ibid. 9 Edw. II, m. 29.

<sup>123</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1603-10, p. 164.

<sup>124</sup> S. P. Dom. Commonw. xii, 32.

<sup>125</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 467*b*.

<sup>126</sup> Mins. Accts. bdle. 1142, no. 1, 4, 25; Chart. R. 12 Edw. I, m. 5; Feud.

Aids, ii, 308; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxv, 21.

<sup>127</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, m. 24.

<sup>128</sup> In 1744 it was held in lease for lives under the bishopric (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 17 Edw. II).

<sup>129</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 2 Geo. IV, rot. 221.

<sup>130</sup> Pat. 23 Eliz. pt. xi, m. 24.

<sup>131</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, m. 24.

<sup>132</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 17 Geo. II.

<sup>133</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 467*b*.

<sup>134</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. bdle. 117, no. 3. Robert Kisby's name is preserved in Kisby's Farm situated on the river a short distance east of Ecchinswell House.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

mentioned in the deed of sale of 1648,<sup>135</sup> but there is a water-mill in the parish at the present day. A warren of conies called Ashley and Tidgrove near Echinswell, and a little house called The Lodge in the warren, which had been leased for twenty-one years by Walter Curll, Bishop of Winchester, to Nicholas Christmas in 1639, were included in the sale of Ecchinswell Manor to Nicholas Love and George Wither in 1648.<sup>136</sup> The site of the warren is marked at the present time by Ashley Warren Down and Ashley Warren Farm in the south of the parish.

The manor of SYDMONTON (Sidemanestone, xi cent.; Sidemontaine, xvii cent.) formed part of the original endowment of the abbey of Romsey,<sup>137</sup> and continued in its possession until its dissolution in 1539.<sup>138</sup> In the following year Henry VIII granted it with the pasture called 'Donymede' and 'Pontesdowne' in Sydmonton to John Kingsmill of Whitchurch,<sup>139</sup> who died seised of it in 1556, leaving a son and heir William.<sup>140</sup> He bequeathed the manor for life to his wife Constance,<sup>141</sup> who remained seised of it until her death in 1580,<sup>142</sup> when it passed to Sir William Kingsmill, knight. On the death of Sir William in 1592 it passed to his son and heir William, who, dying in 1619, was succeeded by his second but first surviving son

Henry.<sup>143</sup> The latter died five years later, leaving a son and heir William Kingsmill,<sup>144</sup> who suffered much during the civil wars. He was really on the Parliamentary side and only acted for the king under compulsion, being forced in 1642 by the king's summons to go to Reading, where he was made sheriff, 'an office which he took in the honest sense of serving his country for which it was first ordained.'<sup>145</sup> In April 1645 he petitioned the Committee for Compounding to settle him in his estate in Hampshire, alleging that he had been thrice plundered by express order from the king, by whom he had been sequestered for the last twelve months, that he had lost £400 in horses and cattle by Lord Manchester and Sir William Waller when lying at Newbury, and that owing to the position of his house between the two parties in the middle of the western road he had been obliged to entertain all comers. He was at length permitted to compound for his estate in May 1651 by payment of a fine of £750.<sup>146</sup> He died in 1661, leaving a son and heir, Sir William Kingsmill, on whose death in 1698 the manor of Sydmonton passed to his eldest son, William Kingsmill,<sup>147</sup> who died unmarried in KINGSMILL. Argent crusilly fitchy sable a chevron ermine between three mill-rinds sable and a chief ermine.

1766. This estate then passed to his niece Elizabeth the daughter of his sister Frances Cory, who married Captain Robert Brice, afterwards Admiral of the Blue.<sup>148</sup> Robert took the name of Kingsmill by Act of Parliament in 1766, was created a baronet on 24 November 1800, and died without issue in 1805.<sup>149</sup> He left Sydmonton to the Rev. John Stephens, vicar of Chewton Mendip (co. Somers.),<sup>150</sup> who assumed the surname and arms of Kingsmill by royal licence in 1806.<sup>151</sup> He died in 1814, leaving an eldest surviving son, William Kingsmill, who married Anne Jane daughter of William Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury,<sup>152</sup> and died in 1865, leaving issue William Howley Kingsmill, whose son and heir, Mr. Andrew de Portal Kingsmill, is the present lord of the manor.

The manor of FROBURY (Frolleberi, Frolebyr', Frollesbyr', xiii cent.; Frollebury, xiv cent.; Throlbery, xv cent.; Frowbery, Froylbery, xvi cent.) is not mentioned in Domesday Book by name, and is probably represented by one of the estates in the hundred of Kingsclere held of the king in chief, perhaps by the 2 hides which Ravelin had been holding for twenty years and more.<sup>153</sup> The history of the manor for some time is obscure, but in the middle of the 12th century it was probably held by Ranulf de Broc, usher and chief marshal of the household to Henry II, its tenure being attached to the serjeanty of being usher to the king.<sup>154</sup> On his death about 1187 it was probably assigned in dower to his widow Damietta, the lady of Chetton, Eudon and Berwick (co. Salop), who held it until her death in 1204,<sup>155</sup> in which year the sheriff of Hampshire was ordered to give seisin of the manor to Stephen de Turnham and Edeline his wife, the daughter and heir of Ranulf and Damietta.<sup>156</sup> Stephen held the manor in right of his wife until his death<sup>157</sup> about 1214,<sup>158</sup> when it passed to his widow, who as Edeline of Frobury was returned by the Testa de Nevill as holding £6 worth of land in the vill of Frobury of the king in chief by the serjeanty of guarding the king's door.<sup>159</sup> Edeline survived her husband about six years, leaving by him five daughters and co-heirs, Maud or Mabel the wife of Thomas de Bavelingham, Alice the wife of Adam de Bending, Eleanor who married Roger de Leyburn, Eleanor who married Ralph Fitz Bernard and Beatrice the wife of Ralph de Fay.<sup>160</sup> Frobury fell as her share to Beatrice, probably the eldest daughter, and passed from her to her daughter Philippa the wife of William de Nevill,<sup>161</sup> who in the middle of the 13th century was stated to be holding half a hide in Frobury of the old enfeofment by the serjeanty of guarding the door of the queen's chamber.<sup>162</sup> In 1249 Philippa de Nevill granted it in free marriage to William de Wintershull,<sup>163</sup> who had married her daughter Beatrice,<sup>164</sup> and from this date Frobury continued in the Wintershull

<sup>135</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, m. 24.

<sup>136</sup> Ibid.

<sup>137</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 474b.

<sup>138</sup> Pipe R. 15 Hen. II, rot. 11, m. 2; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215; Feud. Aids, ii, 309, 331, 346.

<sup>139</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. vii, m. 32.

<sup>140</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 996, no. 1.

<sup>141</sup> P.C.C. Will, F 12 Ketchyn.

<sup>142</sup> Ibid. 24 Darcy.

<sup>143</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), bdle. 28, no. 49.

<sup>144</sup> Ibid. bdle. 41, no. 121.

<sup>145</sup> Cal. of Com. for Comp. ii, 882-3.

<sup>146</sup> Ibid.

<sup>147</sup> Burke, Hist. of Landed Gentry (ed. 5), i, 734.

<sup>148</sup> Ibid.

<sup>149</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, v, 331.

<sup>150</sup> P.C.C. Will, 52 Pitt.

<sup>151</sup> Burke, Hist. of Landed Gentry (1906), 953-4.

<sup>152</sup> Ibid.

<sup>153</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 508.

<sup>154</sup> Eyton, Antiq. of Shropshire, i, 170.

<sup>155</sup> Ibid. 170, 190.

<sup>156</sup> Close, 6 John, m. 19.

<sup>157</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 235; Red Bk. of Exch. ii, 460.

<sup>158</sup> Eyton, op. cit. i, 190.

<sup>159</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 236b.

<sup>160</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 25.

<sup>161</sup> Manning & Bray, Hist. of Surr. ii, 84-5.

<sup>162</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232.

<sup>163</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 33 Hen.

III. <sup>164</sup> Manning & Bray, op. cit. ii, 84-5.

family for about two centuries. William obtained licence to impark his wood of Frobury, which covered an area of 10 acres, in 1269,<sup>165</sup> and died seised of the manor of Frobury in 1287, leaving as his heir his son John, aged thirty-five.<sup>166</sup> Beatrice, however, continued to hold the manor, and presented to the chapel of Frobury in her widowhood during the episcopacy of John of Pontoise (1282-1304).<sup>167</sup> On her death it passed in accordance with her wishes to her second son Walter,<sup>168</sup> who in 1310 released his interest in it to his younger brother Edmund,<sup>169</sup> but it ultimately reverted to Walter or his heirs for his grandson.<sup>170</sup>

WINTERSHILL. Or two bars gules and a label sable.

Thomas died seised of a messuage and half a hide of land in Frobury in 1387, leaving a son and heir Thomas.<sup>171</sup> Thomas son and heir of the last-named, who succeeded to the manor in 1400,<sup>172</sup> died twenty years later leaving no issue, and his property was thereupon divided between his two sisters and co-heirs, Joan the widow of William Weston, and Agnes the wife of William Basset.<sup>173</sup> Frobury fell to Agnes<sup>174</sup> and passed from her to Thomas Basset, probably her son, Sheriff of Surrey and Sussex in 1457.<sup>175</sup> Thomas Basset the younger, probably the son and heir of the above-named, dealt with the manor in conjunction with his wife Alice in 1482,<sup>176</sup> and died seised ten years later, leaving a son, Richard Basset,<sup>177</sup> who died in 1509, his heir being his son Thomas, aged twelve.<sup>178</sup> The manor, however, continued with Juliane widow of Richard. In January 1511 she married as her second husband a certain John Wintershill,<sup>179</sup> and had issue by him two daughters, Alice and Juliane. She died at Winchester in 1534,<sup>180</sup> and her husband, John Wintershill, continued to hold the manor until his death in 1545, when it passed to Joan wife of William Unwin, only daughter of Juliane by her first husband, her son Thomas having apparently left no issue.<sup>181</sup> The following year William and Joan sold the manor to William Paulet Lord St. John,<sup>182</sup> and from this date it has followed the same descent as the manor of Kingsclere,<sup>183</sup> the present owner being Lord Bolton. The site of the manor is marked by Frobury Farm and Frobury Park Copse, which are situated about a mile north-west of the village of Kingsclere.

The manor of CLERE, afterwards known as the manor of CLERE WOODCOTT from its early holders, was held by Saulf and Godwine of the king in the reign of Edward the Confessor.<sup>184</sup> William I bestowed it on Hugh de Port, and at the time of the Domesday Survey it was held of him by Faderlin.<sup>185</sup> The overlordship continued with the descendants of Hugh de Port, there being frequent mentions of Clere Woodcott in 14th-century lists of knights' fees held by the St. Johns.<sup>186</sup> An undated grant by Ruald de Woodcott to the nuns of Godstow<sup>187</sup> of the Bastard's virgate in Kingsclere and of other lands in the parish held of him by Herennardus makes it probable that he was then holding the manor. Before 1166 he had been succeeded by Henry de Woodcott or Henry Fitz Ruald,<sup>188</sup> probably the ancestor of the Henry de Woodcott<sup>189</sup> who at the beginning of the reign of Edward I was holding two knights' fees in Clere and Woodcott of the old enfeoffment of Robert de St. John.<sup>190</sup> He died leaving a widow Sanchea and an only daughter Philippa, who married Walter de Eversley, as is clear from a fine of 1286 whereby Walter and Philippa gave up holdings in West Litchfield and 'Hock' to Sanchea and Richard de Cardevile in exchange for all the land that Sanchea held in the vill of Kingsclere in dower of the inheritance of Philippa.<sup>191</sup> Gilbert Cundy, John Freemantle and Adam de la Fenne, who were probably trustees, in 1303 quitclaimed 1 messuage, 1 mill, 2 carucates of land, 10 acres of meadow, 30 acres of wood and £1 14s. rent in Kingsclere to Robert de Harwedon, clerk,<sup>192</sup> who settled the same a month or two later upon Walter de Eversley to hold for life for the rent of a rose.<sup>193</sup> On the death of Walter the premises reverted to Robert, who in 1307 obtained licence from the king to grant 1 messuage and 2 carucates of land in Kingsclere to Richard de Bourne, the provost of the chapel of St. Elizabeth by Winchester,<sup>194</sup> and from this date Clere Woodcott remained in the possession of the college or chapel until its dissolution in 1536.<sup>195</sup> In 1545 Lord Wriothsley, to whom Henry VIII had granted the site of the college with all its possessions a year before,<sup>196</sup> settled the manor upon his servant William Stone on his marriage with Frances Palmer, one of the daughters of John Palmer of Kentish Town.<sup>197</sup> William Stone died seised of the manor in 1549.<sup>198</sup> It was then held by his widow until her death twelve years later, when it passed to her son and heir Henry, a minor,<sup>199</sup> who died without issue in 1569.<sup>200</sup> On his death his <sup>165</sup> Pat. 53 Hen. III, m. 3, no. 9.

<sup>166</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. I, no. 15; Close, 15 Edw. I, m. 5.

<sup>167</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 14.

<sup>168</sup> Manning & Bray, op. cit. ii, 84-5.

<sup>169</sup> Close, 4 Edw. II, m. 22 d.

<sup>170</sup> Manning & Bray, op. cit. ii, 84-5.

<sup>171</sup> Inq. p.m. 11 Ric. II, no. 54.

<sup>172</sup> Ibid. 5 Hen. V, no. 52.

<sup>173</sup> Ibid. 8 Hen. V, no. 86.

<sup>174</sup> In 1436 she dealt with it by indenture, granting it to John Uvedale and others as trustees (Close, 14 Hen. VI, m. 6). She died in 1442 (Manning & Bray, op. cit. ii, 84-5).

<sup>175</sup> Enr. Accts. F 6 Edw. IV, E.

<sup>176</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 22 Edw. IV.

<sup>177</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ix, 51.

<sup>178</sup> Ibid. xxviii, 36.

<sup>179</sup> Pat. 3 Hen. VIII, pt. i, m. 18; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 3 Hen. VIII.

<sup>180</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 993,

no. 113.

<sup>181</sup> Ibid. Pat. 32 Hen. VIII, pt. vi, m. 28; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 33 Hen. VIII.

<sup>182</sup> Ibid. 38 Hen. VIII.

<sup>183</sup> Exch. L.T.R. Memo. R. East. 5 Eliz. pt. i, m. 65; Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 7 Jas. I; Cal. of Com. for Comp. ii, 2533; Recov. R. Trin. 1652, m. 112; Mich. 28 Geo. II, m. 383.

<sup>184</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481b.

<sup>185</sup> Ibid.

<sup>186</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230a; Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67; 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>187</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 21 d.

<sup>188</sup> Clere Woodcott was no doubt comprised in the two knights' fees in Hampshire held by Henry Fitz Ruald of John de Port in 1166 (Red Bk. of Exch. i, 208).

<sup>189</sup> The following entry is in the list of knights' fees of which John de St. John died seised:—two knights' fees in Clere, Litchfield, 'Cnolle' and 'Titegrave' which the heir of the son of 'Rudwald' holds (Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67).

<sup>190</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230a.

<sup>191</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 14 Edw. I.

<sup>192</sup> Ibid. 32 Edw. I.

<sup>193</sup> Ibid. Mich. 32 Edw. I.

<sup>194</sup> Inq. a.q.d. Edw. II, file 67, no. 1;

Pat. 1 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 9.

<sup>195</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331, 345; Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17, 18 d.

<sup>196</sup> Pat. 35 Hen. VIII, pt. ix, m. 33.

<sup>197</sup> Ibid. 37 Hen. VIII, pt. xvii, m. 41.

<sup>198</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xcii, 91.

<sup>199</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 1001,

no. 3.

<sup>200</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xii, 29.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

property was divided between his two sisters and co-heirs Mary and Catherine.<sup>201</sup> Clere Woodcott passed as her share to Catherine the wife of Christopher Willenhall of Willenhall, near Coventry. In 1571 Christopher and Catherine sold the manor to William Forster,<sup>202</sup> who made good his title to it in the following year,<sup>203</sup> and died in 1574, leaving a son and heir Humphrey.<sup>204</sup> The latter, who was afterwards knighted, died in 1601, when the manor passed to his son, William Forster.<sup>205</sup> William, who was likewise subsequently knighted, died in 1618, and was succeeded by his son Humphrey,<sup>206</sup> who was created a baronet in 1620,<sup>207</sup> and the same year sold the manor to John, James and Henry Hunt of Popham.<sup>208</sup> John Hunt died in 1625, and was succeeded by his son, James Hunt.<sup>209</sup> Another James Hunt was in possession in 1693,<sup>210</sup> while in 1715 his son and heir James conveyed the manor to John Bowen in order to bar the entail.<sup>211</sup> In 1739 it was apparently purchased by Matthew Bowen,<sup>212</sup> from whom it descended in moieties to two co-heiresses, Anne Bowen and Louisa wife of Thomas Threlkeld. In 1757 Louisa conveyed her moiety to George Prentis and John Saxon,<sup>213</sup> while eight years later Anne parted with her moiety to Richard Woodhouse and John Griffith.<sup>214</sup> The history of the manor for a short time after this is uncertain, but it eventually became part of the Wolverton estate, being purchased in 1795 by Sir Charles Pole, bart., of Wolverton Park, from John Davis, Jane Griffith widow of John Griffith, and William Cribb.<sup>215</sup> The name of Clere Woodcott is no longer preserved, but various farms situated north of the village which were included in the sale<sup>216</sup>—Harriden Farm, Coldridge's Farm, Hall's Farm, Wheat Hold Farm, Scarlett's Farm, Ridding's Farm and Thornford Farm—are still in existence.

There was a mill in the manor in 1086.<sup>217</sup> It was in existence in 1303,<sup>218</sup> but all trace of it has now disappeared.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two estates in KNOWL (Chenol, xi cent.; Cnolle, xii cent.), one held by Faderlin of Hugh de Port and assessed at 3½ virgates,<sup>219</sup> the other by FORSTER, baronet.

Sable a chevron engrailed between three arrows argent.

Oidelard of Ralph de Mortimer and assessed at 2 hides.<sup>220</sup> While the overlordship of the former estate continued with the St. Johns, the descendants of Hugh de Port, until as late as the 14th century,<sup>221</sup> the actual ownership passed with the rest of Faderlin's Hampshire property to Ruald de Woodcott and from him to his descendant Henry de Woodcott.<sup>222</sup> It is probable that this holding was comprised in the messuage and 2 carucates of land in Kingsclere granted in 1307 to Richard de Bourne, the provost of the chapel of St. Elizabeth by Winchester,<sup>223</sup> and if so it must have subsequently become merged in the manor of Clere Woodcott (q.v.). The overlordship of the latter estate continued with the Mortimers until as late as the middle of the 13th century.<sup>224</sup> Oidelard, who held it of Ralph de Mortimer, was perhaps the ancestor of Richard Labaanc,<sup>225</sup> who in the presence of Henry II and Queen Eleanor on the occasion of the admission of his mother Rose and his sister Cecilia as nuns to the nunnery of Godstow (co. Oxon.) gave to that foundation in free alms all his mother's dowry, viz., 'Cnolle and Swanton' [vide Swampton in St. Mary Bourne, Evingar Hundred], which belongs to the same, and Sandford and Hodicotte,<sup>227</sup> as much as my predecessors have possessed, viz., 5 hides, in return for an annuity of £2.<sup>228</sup> This gift was confirmed by Hugh de Mortimer,<sup>229</sup> son and heir of the Domesday Ralph,<sup>230</sup> but in spite of this confirmation Ralph de Mortimer, his great-grandson,<sup>231</sup> at the beginning of the reign of Henry III exacted services from Amphyllis the Abbess of Godstow for the free tenement which she held of him in the parish of Kingsclere, and was obliged to renew the confirmation in 1229.<sup>232</sup> Some difficulty, however, still remained with regard to the tenure of the manor, for in 1257 Emma the Abbess of Godstow gave up all her right to rent from a mill in Worthy Mortimer in exchange for a charter by Ralph's son Roger, quitclaiming all right and claim in the whole of the tenement which the abbess and church held in fee in the parish of Kingsclere.<sup>233</sup> Richard Labaanc's gift was confirmed by Richard I and his successors,<sup>234</sup> and in addition Henry III showed great favour to the abbess and convent, granting to them in 1221 their reasonable estovers in their wood of Clere to repair the shingles on the roofs of their church, houses and offices of Godstow.<sup>235</sup> In the course of time the name Knowl was dropped, and the estate of the nunnery became known merely as the manor of SANDFORD. The abbess and convent remained in possession until the Dissolution,<sup>236</sup> when

<sup>201</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xii, 29.

<sup>202</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Eliz.; Recov. R. Trin. 13 Eliz. m. 110.

<sup>203</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. Hil. 14 Eliz.

m. 1.

<sup>204</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 828, no. 9.

<sup>205</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxx, 108.

<sup>206</sup> Burke, Extinct Baronetage, 204-5.

<sup>207</sup> Ibid.

<sup>208</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 18 Jas. I.

<sup>209</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 398.

<sup>210</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 5 Will and Mary, m. 7.

<sup>211</sup> Ibid. Trin. 1 Geo. I, m. 50.

<sup>212</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 13 Geo. II, m. 169.

<sup>213</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 30 Geo. II.

<sup>214</sup> Ibid. Mich. 6 Geo. III.

<sup>215</sup> Com. Pleas Deeds Enr. Trin. 35 Geo. III, m. 97.

<sup>216</sup> Ibid.

<sup>217</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481b.

<sup>218</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 32 Edw. I; Mich. 32 Edw. I.

<sup>219</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481b.

<sup>220</sup> Ibid. 490a.

<sup>221</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67.

<sup>222</sup> Vide Clere Woodcott above.

<sup>223</sup> Ibid.

<sup>224</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 20, 20 d., 23 d.

<sup>225</sup> Oidelard was certainly a family name of the Labaancs, the name Oidelard Labaanc occurring in the list of witnesses who were present at Richard Labaanc's grant to Godstow Nunnery (Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 20).

<sup>226</sup> Swampton in St. Mary Bourne.

<sup>227</sup> The modern Hodicotte (co. Berks.). It was held by the same Oidelard of Ralph de Mortimer at the time of the Domesday Survey (V.C.H. Berks. i, 362a).

<sup>228</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 19 d., 20, 20 d.

<sup>229</sup> Ibid. vol. 20.

<sup>230</sup> Eyton, Antiq. of Shropshire, iv, 198.

<sup>231</sup> Ibid.

<sup>232</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 20 d.; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 14 Hen. III.

<sup>233</sup> Ibid. fol. 23 d.

<sup>234</sup> Ibid. fol. 163 d.-179. In the royal confirmations the land of Sandford is said to be of the gift of Arnulf de Bolde, but this seems to be an error, as it is included in Richard Labaanc's grant, and no charter of Arnulf de Bolde is found in the Godstow chartulary.

<sup>235</sup> Close, 5 Hen. III, m. 3. See also Close, 6 Hen. III, m. 14.

<sup>236</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331, 346.

the manor fell into the hands of the king.<sup>237</sup> In 1540 the king granted it to John Kingsmill,<sup>238</sup> and its subsequent history is identical with that of the manor of Woodcott in the hundred of Pastrow (q.v.).

The site of the manor is marked by Sandford Farm and Sandford Wood, about a mile east of the village, while Knowls Farm, Great Knowl Hill and Little Knowl Hill, about three-quarters of a mile north-east of the village, still preserve the 'Chenol' of Domesday Book. The separation of Yew Tree Farm (i.e. the portion of Sandford on the south side of the new road) from Sandford took place in 1874. The present owner of Yew Tree Farm is Mrs. Humphries of Ogbourne, Wilts.

In 1280 the Abbess of Godstow, described as the holder of land in 'Sandelford de Knoll,' claimed the right to the fines of the assize of bread and ale at Kingsclere.<sup>239</sup>

There were two mills in the estate in Knowl held of Ralph de Mortimer by Oidelard at the time of the Domesday Survey,<sup>240</sup> and these were still in existence in the 16th century, water-mills called Gales Mill and Swayne's Mill being included in the grant of the manor of Sandford to John Kingsmill in 1540.<sup>241</sup> The site of the former is marked by the present Gailey Mill.

In the middle of the 12th century William de Salvervilla or Savervilla, with the consent of his wife Maud and his sons Gilbert, Manasseh and Robert, granted to Edith the first Abbess of Godstow and the church there his land called CLERE PREVET to hold of him and his successors for the rent of 22s. In return for this grant the abbess gave him 5 marks of silver, to his wife half a mark, to Gilbert 2s. and two silver dice, to Manasseh 1s. 6d., and to Robert 1s. 6d.<sup>242</sup> Manasseh, on succeeding to the property, exacted an annual payment of 28s. from the nuns,<sup>243</sup> but some time afterwards he gave up all right to it, in return for 25 marks, to Henry II,<sup>244</sup> who finally confirmed the gift in free alms.<sup>245</sup>

The probability, in lack of further definite information as to these lands called Clere Prevet, is that they were absorbed in the neighbouring possessions of the nunnery, possibly in the manor of Sandford (q.v. supra).

TIDGROVE (Titegrove, xi cent.) in the tithing of North Oakley was held by Faderlin of Hugh de Port at the time of the Domesday Survey and was assessed at 1 hide 1 virgate.<sup>246</sup> The overlordship continued with the St. Johns, the descendants of Hugh de Port, until the middle of the 14th century,<sup>247</sup> while the actual ownership passed like Knowl with the rest of Faderlin's Hampshire property to Ruald de Woodcott,<sup>248</sup> and from him to Henry Fitz Ruald, who in 1166 was returned as holding two knights' fees in Hampshire of John de St. John.<sup>249</sup> Tidgrove next passed into the possession of the priory of Sandlesford or Sandford (co. Berks.), which also held five shillingsworth of land in Frobury of the manor of Frobury,<sup>250</sup> and it is quite clear that it had done so before 1241, for in that year John de Lancelevy, lord of the manor of Hannington Lancelevy, gave up his right to common of pasture in the prior's land of Tidgrove.<sup>251</sup> In 1280 the Prior of Sandlesford was forced to acknowledge that he owed suit at the king's hundred court of Kingsclere for his possessions in the parish,<sup>252</sup> which were increased in 1312 when he obtained licence to acquire a messuage, 20 acres of land and 2 acres of meadow in Clere Woodland by Kingsclere from Thomas de Sandlesford.<sup>253</sup> In 1346 the Prior of Sandlesford was stated to be holding the eighth part of a fee in Tidgrove,<sup>254</sup> while in 1346 and again in 1349 in lists of St. John knights' fees his property is described as the fourth part of a fee of the yearly value of 40s.<sup>255</sup> Tidgrove remained in the possession of the priory until about 1478, when it was united with all its possessions to the collegiate church of Windsor.<sup>256</sup>

In the 12th century there was a royal residence in Tidgrove, as appears from the Pipe Rolls. In 1176 wine was sent to Tidgrove by the king's orders.<sup>257</sup> In 1177 £7 16s. was spent on repairing the king's chapel at Tidgrove,<sup>258</sup> and in 1178 the king's houses at Tidgrove were repaired at a cost of £24 18s. 7d.,<sup>259</sup> probably in preparation for the royal visit of the following year.<sup>260</sup>

At the beginning of the 13th century the manor of NORTH OAKLEY (Acle, Aclei, Oclye, Accleghe, xiii cent.; Northocle, xiv cent.) was held by Peter Fitz Herbert by serjeanty in the king's household,<sup>261</sup> and for some little time followed the same descent as the manor of Wolverton (q.v.), being held in the middle of the 13th century by Herbert Fitz Peter with Wolverton for two knights' fees.<sup>262</sup> In 1280 Reginald Fitz Peter, brother and heir of Herbert, made good his right to free warren in all his demesne lands in North Oakley, basing his claim on a charter of Henry III to his father, Peter Fitz Herbert,<sup>263</sup> but within the next thirty years the manor had passed to John de St. John,<sup>264</sup> the overlord of Ewhurst, who in 1310 granted the reversion after the death of Amadeus de St. John to Roger de St. John and Joan his wife.<sup>265</sup> From this time the manor followed the same descent as the manor of Ewhurst until about the middle of the 16th century,<sup>266</sup> when it passed by sale to Thomas Aylyff,<sup>267</sup> the brother of Richard Aylyff, <sup>237</sup> Mins. Accts. Oxon. 31 & 32 Hen. VIII, bde. 127, m. 21 d.

<sup>238</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. vii, m. 32.

<sup>239</sup> Assize R. no. 789, m. 23.

<sup>240</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 490a.

<sup>241</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. vii, m. 32.

<sup>242</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 21.

<sup>243</sup> Ibid. fol. 21 d. <sup>244</sup> Ibid. fol. 21.

<sup>245</sup> Ibid. fol. 163 d.-165.

<sup>246</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487a.

<sup>247</sup> Close, 3 Edw. III, m. 4; 23 Edw.

III, pt. i, m. 17; Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57.

<sup>248</sup> Vide Clere Woodcott above.

<sup>249</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 208.

<sup>250</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 242a.

<sup>251</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 25 Hen. III.

<sup>252</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 772.

<sup>253</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 86, no. 22; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 198; Pat. 6 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 18.

<sup>254</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331.

<sup>255</sup> Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 17.

<sup>256</sup> V.C.H. Berks. ii, 86-8.

<sup>257</sup> Pipe R. 22 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 200.

<sup>258</sup> Ibid. 23 Hen. II, 166.

<sup>259</sup> Ibid. 24 Hen. II, 106.

<sup>260</sup> Ibid. 25 Hen. II, 200.

<sup>261</sup> Red. Bk. of Exch. ii, 459-60; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 235a.

<sup>262</sup> Ibid. 231a.

<sup>263</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 766.

<sup>264</sup> A trace of its old connexion with Wolverton is seen as late as the reign of Charles I, when in the inquisition taken on the death of Richard Aylyff it was said to be held of Edward Lord Newburgh as of his manor of Wolverton by fealty and suit of court (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], dxxxiii, 84).

<sup>265</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 4 Edw. II.

<sup>266</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 309; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 227; Pat. 1 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 34; 7 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 34; Inq. p.m. 8 Ric. II, no. 34; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 8 Hen. VIII.

<sup>267</sup> Thomas dealt with it by fine in 1586 (Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 28 & 29 Eliz.).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

who purchased Ewhurst. Richard Ayloff, son and heir of Thomas,<sup>268</sup> died seised of North Oakley Farm and other property in the parish in 1614, leaving a son and heir Thomas.<sup>269</sup> From the latter it descended to another Richard Ayloff, on whose death it fell to seven co-heirs.<sup>270</sup> One part passed to his sister Dorothy the wife of Thomas Woodyer, and descended from her to her son Thomas Woodyer, who in 1711 in conjunction with his only child Alice conveyed it to William Guidott of Preston Candover.<sup>271</sup> In 1769 John Fanshawe of Shabden in the parish of Chipstead (co. Surr.)<sup>272</sup> and Penelope his wife sold two-sevenths of the manor to Charles Bishop,<sup>273</sup> who three years later acquired the other five-sevenths from William Woodroffe Guidott,<sup>274</sup> the kinsman and heir of William Guidott, who had died in 1745.<sup>275</sup> By 1787 the manor had passed to William Mount of Wasing Place (co. Berks.)<sup>276</sup> and Jane his wife, who in that year joined with Christine Mount, John Francis Meyrick and Jane his wife and Harry Mount and Frances Dorothea his wife in conveying it to Oliver Cromwell<sup>277</sup> of Cheshunt Park (co. Herts.), the last direct male descendant of Henry Cromwell, the Protector's fourth<sup>278</sup> son. By the early 19th century all manorial rights had presumably lapsed, and at the present day the site of the manor is marked only by North Oakley Farm in the south of the parish.

Certain lands in NORTH OAKLEY were retained by Reginald Fitz Peter, as is apparent from the fact that in 1340 William Savage of North Oakley, who in 1323, in conjunction with Peter des Roches, had acquired a messuage and a virgate of land in North Oakley from Margaret de Wyndesore,<sup>279</sup> received licence in consideration of a fine of 30s. to retain 5 acres and 26s. 8d. rents in North Oakley by Hannington which he had purchased from Matthew Fitz Herbert,<sup>280</sup> great-grandson of Reginald.<sup>281</sup> In the same year William Brokhurst and Juliana his wife and their son Roger were pardoned for acquiring 100 acres of pasture from Matthew Fitz Herbert.<sup>282</sup> These holdings apparently passed to Alice Lancelevy, the holder of Hannington Lancelevy, who in 1346 was stated to be holding half a fee in North Oakley, which had belonged to John de Vivonia and his co-parceners.<sup>283</sup> It was granted with Hannington Lancelevy (q.v.) to Southwick Priory in 1384,<sup>284</sup> and from this date followed the same descent as the latter manor.

John Wallop at his death in 1486 was seised of lands and tenements of the yearly value of 20s. in 'Boltyscham' held of William Dyncley as of the manor of Wolverton.<sup>285</sup> These lands and tenements probably represent the barn, 300 acres of land, 10 acres of meadow, 100 acres of pasture, 60 acres of wood and 20 acres of heath in North Oakley and Kingsclere called BOLSHAMS, of the annual value of £2, of which Richard Ayloff died seised in 1614, for in the inquisition taken in the next reign they were said to be held of Edward Lord Newburgh as of the manor of Wolverton by fealty and suit of court.<sup>286</sup> The further history of the manor of Boltshams or Bolshams, as it was subsequently called, is identical with that of North Oakley (q.v.).<sup>287</sup>

The so-called manor of FREEMANTLE, now represented by Freemantle Farm, in the tithing of North Oakley, a short distance south-east of North Oakley Farm, was held under the manor of Manydown in the parish of Wootton St. Lawrence.<sup>288</sup> At an early date it was in the possession of the Freemantle family,<sup>289</sup> being granted for life to Sir Edward de St. John by John de Freemantle in 1357.<sup>290</sup> By the reign of Edward VI it had come with other property in the parish into the hands of William Warham, nephew and heir of William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1552 was settled by the name of a messuage and lands called Freemantles on him and his wife Elizabeth in tail-male.<sup>291</sup> In 1570 Francis Morrys and Anne his wife, granddaughter and heir of William Warham,<sup>292</sup> to whom the reversion had been granted ten years before,<sup>293</sup> conveyed the manor of Freemantle to Walter Beconsaw and Richard Beconsaw.<sup>294</sup> By the reign of Charles I it had passed, probably by sale, into the hands of Richard Ayloff, who, at his death in 1614, was seised of a messuage, an orchard, 200 acres of land, 5 acres of meadow, 100 acres of pasture and 100 acres of wood in Hannington, North Oakley and Kingsclere in the tenure of Richard Soper, called Freemantle Farm.<sup>295</sup> The subsequent history of this holding is identical with that of North Oakley.<sup>296</sup>

The manor of HANNINGTON, subsequently called HANNINGTON LANCELEVY from its early holders, is probably represented by the 1 hide of land in Hannington worth 20s. which had been held by Estan in parage of Edward the Confessor, and was held by Lewin of William I in 1086.<sup>297</sup> By the 13th century it had passed to Peter Fitz Herbert, who received a charter of free warren for fox, hare and

<sup>268</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 284.

<sup>269</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dxxxiii,

84.

<sup>270</sup> Vide Close, 10 Anne, pt. vi, no. 19.

<sup>271</sup> Ibid.; Recov. R. Hil. 10 Anne, rot.

13.

<sup>272</sup> Manning & Bray, Hist. of Surr. ii,

246.

<sup>273</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 9 Geo. III.

<sup>274</sup> Recov. R. East. 12 Geo. III, rot.

38.

<sup>275</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 373.

<sup>276</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry (ed. 5), 1201.

<sup>277</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 27 Geo.

III. The term before William Mount and Jane had conveyed it to Richard Townsend (Feet of F. Hants, East. 27

Geo. III).

<sup>278</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry (ed. 11), 398.

<sup>279</sup> Inq. a.q.d. 16 Edw. II, no. 158;

Pat. 16 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 7. Margaret de Wyndesore had purchased them from

Andrew de Strode, who had acquired them from William Jacob of Thorshagh and Joan his wife in 1318 (Inq. a.q.d. 12 Edw. II, no. 31; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. [Rec. Com.], i, 245; Pat. 12 Edw. II, pt. i, m. 1).

<sup>280</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii,

139; Pat. 14 Edw. III, pt. iii, m. 54.

<sup>281</sup> He was the son of Herbert son of John son of Reginald.

<sup>282</sup> Pat. 14 Edw. III, pt. iii, m. 48.

<sup>283</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331. He was the second husband of Joan widow of Reginald

Fitz Peter.

<sup>284</sup> Vide Feud. Aids, ii, 345.

<sup>285</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ii, 31.

<sup>286</sup> Ibid. dxxxiii, 84.

<sup>287</sup> Close, 10 Anne, pt. vi, m. 19; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 9 Geo. III; Recov. R.

Hil. 9 Geo. III, m. 190; Feet of F. Div.

Co. Trin. 27 Geo. III.

<sup>288</sup> Kitchen, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 138.

<sup>289</sup> Ibid.

<sup>290</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 31 Edw.

III.

<sup>291</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Hil. 5 & 6

Edw. VI, m. 2.

<sup>292</sup> See Malshanger in the parish of Church Oakley.

<sup>293</sup> Notes of F. East. 2 Eliz.

<sup>294</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 12 Eliz.;

Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 12 Eliz.

<sup>295</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dxxxiii,

84. It was said to be held of the Dean and chapter of St. Swithun as of their manor of Manydown by fealty, suit of court and rent of 23s., and its annual value was given as £10.

<sup>296</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 9 Geo. III;

Recov. R. Hil. 9 Geo. III, m. 190;

Feet of F. Div. Co. East. 27 Geo. III.

<sup>297</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 508b.

roe-deer in Wolverton, Oakley and Hannington and in all their lands within the hundred of Kingsclere from Henry III.<sup>298</sup> He was succeeded by his son Herbert, who seems to have granted the manor to John de Lancelevy to hold of him and his heirs, for the latter is returned as holding half a knight's fee in Hannington of Herbert Fitz Peter.<sup>299</sup> That the manor continued for some time to be held of the manor of North Oakley is apparent from the fact that the grant of Hannington to Southwick Priory in 1384 was confirmed by Sir Edward de St. John, who was at that time lord of the manor of North Oakley.<sup>300</sup>

In 1333 the manor was settled upon John Lancelevy and Alice his wife in fee-tail, with contingent remainder to Thomas de Boarhunt and Margaret his wife for life, with remainder to their son John and his issue by his wife Mary.<sup>301</sup> Alice Lancelevy was still holding the manor in 1346,<sup>302</sup> and it is probable that she did not die until after 1359, for John de Boarhunt was not seised of it at his death in the latter year.<sup>303</sup> The fact, however, that in 1363 Sir Bernard Brocas obtained a grant of free warren in the demesne lands of his manor of Hannington<sup>304</sup> shows that by this time it had passed to him in right of his wife Mary the widow of John de Boarhunt.<sup>305</sup> In the same year John, son of Herbert de Boarhunt, to whom the reversion of the manor had belonged since the death of John de Boarhunt's son and heir John, made it over to Valentine atte Mede of Bramdean,<sup>306</sup> probably for settlement on Sir Bernard, as the latter was certainly seised of it in his own right in 1385, in which year he granted it with the exception of 6 marks rent to the Prior and convent of Southwick 'for celebrating divine service daily for the good estate of the king, the said Bernard and Katherine his wife while living and for their souls after death, and for the soul of the late king, Mary the late wife of Bernard and the parents and ancestors of Bernard and Mary.'<sup>307</sup> The 6 marks rent he granted to a chaplain to celebrate divine service daily in the parish church of Clewer<sup>308</sup> (co. Berks.), and this gift was confirmed to William Northleigh, the perpetual chaplain of the chantry by Richard Nowell, the Prior of Southwick,

SOUTHWICK PRIORY.
Argent a chiefsable with two roses argent therein.

on 26 May 1385.<sup>309</sup> The manor remained in the possession of the priory until its suppression in 1538.<sup>310</sup> In 1540 the king granted it as part of her jointure to Anne of Cleves on his marriage with her,<sup>311</sup> while in the following year he granted it for life to Catherine Howard, in whose hands it remained until her execution in 1542.<sup>312</sup> The king next granted it to his servant John Leigh,<sup>313</sup> who sold it in 1544 to John Fisher of Overton.<sup>314</sup> John died seised in 1545,<sup>315</sup> having by will left the manor to his wife Margery for life with remainder to his son and heir John.<sup>316</sup> Margery subsequently married William Kettyll, but had been left a widow a second time before 1562,<sup>317</sup> in which year she and her son John sought to recover the manor from Jane Knight and her son John, who based their claim on a lease made by the prior and convent before the Dissolution.<sup>318</sup> They were apparently reinstated, as John Fisher was in possession at his death in 1591.<sup>319</sup> Seven years later his son and heir William conveyed it to Richard Fisher,<sup>320</sup> who sold it in 1602 to Richard Ayliff and Elizabeth his wife.<sup>321</sup> From the latter it was purchased in 1610 by Edmund Marshe,<sup>322</sup> who died in 1630, leaving as his heir his only daughter Elizabeth the wife of Cuthbert Mayne, citizen and cloth-worker of London.<sup>323</sup> In the same year Cuthbert Mayne and Elizabeth conveyed Hannington Lancelevy to Francis Rivett,<sup>324</sup> but by 1699 the manor had fallen into two moieties, held respectively by Frances<sup>325</sup> the wife of Ellis Mews, and Margery the wife of Walter Godfrey, who in that year dealt with it by fine.<sup>326</sup> Ellis Mews subsequently took the name and arms of St. John by Act of Parliament, and was succeeded in the possession of his moiety by his son Paulet St. John,<sup>327</sup> upon whom it was settled in 1731.<sup>328</sup> The other moiety was again subdivided, half passing to John Weekes, who in conjunction with Ellis and his wife conveyed it in 1761 to William Howard,<sup>329</sup> who in the following year conveyed it to Richard Wardroper.<sup>330</sup> The other half was purchased by Sir Paulet St. John, who had been created a baronet in 1772, and from him descended to his grandson, Sir Henry Paulet St. John, bart.,<sup>331</sup> who dealt with three-quarters of the manor of Hannington Lancelevy by recovery in 1786.<sup>332</sup> The remaining quarter was conveyed to Thomas Day in 1778 by John Pett and Anne his wife, William Howard and Elizabeth his wife, Robert Corral and Hannah his wife, Elizabeth Stone and Thomas Marshall Jordan,<sup>333</sup> and in 1826 was in the possession of Richard Jordan, the son of Thomas

<sup>298</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 766.

<sup>299</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 231a.

<sup>300</sup> Montagu Burrows, The Family of Brocas of Beaurepaire, 347; Add. MS. 33280, fol. 286 d.

<sup>301</sup> Ibid. fol. 286; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 7 Edw. III.

<sup>302</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331.

<sup>303</sup> Inq. p.m. 33 Edw. III (2nd nos.), no. 103.

<sup>304</sup> Chart. R. 37 Edw. III, m. 11.

<sup>305</sup> V.C.H. Hants, iii, 145.

<sup>306</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 37 Edw. III.

<sup>307</sup> Add. MS. 33280, fol. 280-5; Inq. a.q.d. 7 Ric. II; Pat. 8 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 36.

<sup>308</sup> Ibid. 8 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 35.

<sup>309</sup> Add. MS. 33280, fol. 284.

<sup>310</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 345; Add. MS. 33280, fol. 288.

<sup>311</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xiv (2), 432; xv, g. 20 (2).

<sup>312</sup> Ibid. xvi, g. 878 (1).

<sup>313</sup> Pat. 35 Hen. VIII, pt. x, m. 33.

<sup>314</sup> Ibid. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xxv, m. 16.

<sup>315</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 993, no. 6.

<sup>316</sup> Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), file 105, no. 7.

<sup>317</sup> Ibid.

<sup>318</sup> Ibid.

<sup>319</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), 34 Eliz. pt. i, no. 52.

<sup>320</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz.

<sup>321</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 147.

<sup>322</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 8 Jas. I.

<sup>323</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Misc. file 712, no. 123.

<sup>324</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Chas. I.

<sup>325</sup> She was the only daughter and eventually sole heir of Oliver St. John of Farley Chamberlayne, by Margery Rivett daughter and co-heir of Francis Rivett (Berry, Hants Gen. 230).

<sup>326</sup> They conveyed it to Edmund Dummer (Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 11 Will. III; Recov. R. East. 12 Will. III, m. 193).

<sup>327</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 230.

<sup>328</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. Mich. 5 Geo. II, m. 14 d. Vide also Recov. R. Trin. 3 Geo. III, m. 479.

<sup>329</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 1 Geo. III.

<sup>330</sup> Ibid. Hil. 2 Geo. III.

<sup>331</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 230.

<sup>332</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 26 Geo. III, m. 155.

<sup>333</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 19 Geo. III. Thomas Marshall Jordan was rector of Barming (co. Kent) and Iden (co. Suss.) (Berry, Kent Gen. 431).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Marshall Jordan,<sup>334</sup> Phineas Pett, D.D., Canon of Christchurch,<sup>335</sup> Anne Pett and Elizabeth Pett, who in that year dealt with it by fine.<sup>336</sup> Hannington now belongs, except for small holdings, to the Duke of Wellington.

The manor of EDMUNDSTHORP BENHAM (Aedmundestorp, xii cent. ; Edmondestrop, xiv cent. ; Edmondistropp, Edmynstrop Benam, xvi cent.) is not mentioned in Domesday Book by name, but is probably represented by the 2 hides assessed at 1 virgate which Edwin the huntsman was holding at the time of the Survey of the gift of King Edward the Confessor.<sup>337</sup> Ruald de Woodcott's grant of land in Kingsclere to the nuns of Godstow was witnessed by Michael de Edmundsthorp,<sup>338</sup> probably the father of the William who was holding Edmundsthorp in 1167.<sup>339</sup> It is probable that the latter was identical with the William de Edmundsthorp who was returned as holding 1 virgate of land in Edmundsthorp worth 20s. of the old enfeoffment of the king in chief by the serjeanty of guarding the forest of Wittingley.<sup>340</sup> After the forest of Wittingley ceased to be a royal forest, viz. after 1227, in which year Henry III granted it in free alms to the Dean and chapter of Rouen,<sup>341</sup> who were lords of the manor of Kingsclere, the manor was held by the serjeanty of keeping the king's park or forest of Freemantle.<sup>342</sup> Henry de Edmundsthorp, the successor of William, discharged the serjeanty in person, as is apparent from the king's order to him in 1279 to permit the Abbot of Hyde to take timber in his own woods within the forest of Freemantle necessary for the repair of the frater of the abbey.<sup>343</sup> Later the service was commuted for an annual payment of 2d. at Winchester Castle,<sup>344</sup> and although as late at least as the 16th century the manor was said to be held by the service of keeping the king's park of Freemantle, receiving thence 3d. a day,<sup>345</sup> it is quite clear that this service was but nominal, as the real keepers of the park were appointed by the king from time to time. Henry de Edmundsthorp, for the safety of his soul and that of his wife Isabel, granted 2 acres in Kingsclere to the nunnery of Godstow in free alms.<sup>346</sup> He died in 1306,<sup>347</sup> leaving two daughters and co-heirs, Alice the wife of John de Benham and Pavia. On 20 December 1306 their father's property was divided equally between them,<sup>348</sup> but in 1308, Pavia having obtained permission to alienate her moiety,<sup>349</sup> John de Benham paid the king a fine of 20s. for licence to enter into possession.<sup>350</sup> He died seised of 1 messuage, 64 acres of arable land, 2 acres of meadow, and 9s. 2d. rent in the vill of Kingsclere in 1338, leaving a son and heir Richard de Benham,<sup>351</sup> who died in 1361, his heir being his son John, aged twenty-three.<sup>352</sup> The property, which at the time of John's death in 1419 was described as 1 messuage, 40 acres of arable land and 6 acres of meadow in Edmundsthorp Benham,<sup>353</sup> passed from him to his son Philip, who died in 1427, leaving a son and heir William.<sup>354</sup> In 1463 William, who died three years later,<sup>355</sup> settled a messuage and 4 virgates of land in Edmundsthorp Benham upon himself and his second wife Eleanor in fee-tail,<sup>356</sup> thus passing over Joan, Alice and Margaret, his three daughters by his first wife Agnes.<sup>357</sup> Eleanor afterwards married as her second husband ——— More. On her death in 1497 her property was divided between her two daughters by William Benham—Joan wife of Ellis Goulde and Elizabeth Edwards, aged respectively thirty-nine and thirty-six.<sup>358</sup> Elizabeth apparently died without issue, as at her death in 1527 Joan was seised of 3 messuages, 100 acres of land, 5 acres of meadow, 20 acres of wood and 3 acres of moor in Edmundsthorp and Kingsclere held of the king as of Winchester Castle by rent of 2d. a year and by the service of keeping the king's park of Freemantle.<sup>359</sup> Her heirs were her daughter, Mary the wife of Peter Hunsdon, and her granddaughter Mary, wife of William Wigmore and daughter of her deceased daughter Eleanor Pole.<sup>360</sup> The so-called manor of Edmundsthorp Benham fell as her purparty to Mary, and was conveyed by her and her husband in 1529 to trustees<sup>361</sup> for sale to the president and scholars of Corpus Christi College, who proved their title in 1533.<sup>362</sup> In 1542 Peter Hunsdon and Mary his wife settled their purparty of the land in Edmundsthorp Benham and Kingsclere upon themselves for life with remainder to their son Jeremy.<sup>363</sup> Alexander Hunsdon dealt with premises in Kingsclere by recovery in 1564,<sup>364</sup> but the further history of these tenements has not been traced.

The site of the manor is marked at the present time by Beenham Court, the seat of Mr. John Ashley Waller, J.P.,<sup>365</sup> who has owned the property since 1883.

The Fauconers or Fawknars for a long period had large possessions in the parish sometimes dignified by the name of the manor of KINGSCLERE or LYMMERS.<sup>366</sup> They were already settled here in 1403, in which year William of Wykeham granted licence to William Fauconer and Margery his wife to have a chapel in their mansion at Kingsclere.<sup>367</sup> In 1404 William obtained a forty years' lease of the

<sup>334</sup> He was vicar of Hoo (co. Kent) and Mountfield (co. Suss.) (Berry, Kent Gen. 431).

<sup>335</sup> Hasted, Hist. of Kent (Hund. of Blackheath, ed. by H. H. Drake), 20.

<sup>336</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Geo. IV.

<sup>337</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 508b.

<sup>338</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 21 d.

<sup>339</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191.

<sup>340</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232a, 234a, 236b. See also Red Bk. of Exch. ii, 459-60.

<sup>341</sup> Chart. R. 11 Hen. III, pt. i, m. 2.

<sup>342</sup> Inq. a.q.d. Edw. I, file 63, no. 26 ; Inq. p.m. 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 16 ; 7 Hen. V, no. 12 ; 5 Hen. VI, no. 30.

<sup>343</sup> Close, 8 Edw. I, m. 11.

<sup>344</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. III, no. 28 ; 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 16 ; 7 Hen. V, no. 12 ; 5 Hen. VI, no. 30 ; 7 Edw. IV, no. 56.

<sup>345</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 980, no. 10.

<sup>346</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 22 d, 23.

<sup>347</sup> Inq. p.m. 1 Edw. II, no. 33.

<sup>348</sup> Ibid. 7 Edw. II, no. 44.

<sup>349</sup> Inq. a.q.d. Edw. I, file 63, no. 26 ;

Edw. II, file 67, no. 8 ; Pat. 1 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 25.

<sup>350</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 158.

<sup>351</sup> Inq. p.m. 12 Edw. III, no. 28.

<sup>352</sup> Ibid. 35 Edw. III, pt. i, no. 16.

<sup>353</sup> Ibid. 7 Hen. V, no. 12.

<sup>354</sup> Ibid. 5 Hen. VI, no. 30.

<sup>355</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xii, 110.

<sup>356</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. IV, pt. i, m. 20.

<sup>357</sup> Inq. p.m. 7 Edw. IV, no. 56.

<sup>358</sup> Ibid.

<sup>359</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file 980, no. 10.

<sup>360</sup> Ibid.

<sup>361</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 21 Hen. VIII.

<sup>362</sup> L.T.R. Memo. R. Mich. 25 Hen. VIII, m. 33.

<sup>363</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. v, m. 10.

<sup>364</sup> Recov. R. East. 6 Eliz. m. 308.

<sup>365</sup> The college apparently sold the estate between 1860 and 1875 to William Holding. He sold in 1883 to the present owner, John Ashley Waller.

<sup>366</sup> Vide Ct. of Req. bdle. 43, no. 71 ;

bdle. 45, no. 48.

<sup>367</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.),

ii, 547.

chief manor of Kingsclere from John de Melton,<sup>368</sup> and died in 1413,<sup>369</sup> being perhaps succeeded by the Richard Fauconer<sup>370</sup> who in 1408 was pardoned for the death of John Belmy or Belamy at Kingsclere.<sup>371</sup> Dame Eleanor Manners, widow of William Fauconer, who was the son and heir of Richard,<sup>372</sup> died in 1493,<sup>373</sup> and on her death the Fauconer estate passed to William's son and heir Thomas.<sup>374</sup> Thomas at his death in 1510 was seised of the following property in the parish:—2 messuages, 105 acres of land, 20 acres of pasture, 10 acres of wood, 8 acres of moor, 10 acres of heath and 3 acres of meadow of the yearly value of 4 marks held of John Melton as of his manor of Kingsclere, 9 messuages, 9 gardens and 30 acres of land of the yearly value of 5 marks held of the Prior of Bisham, and a messuage and lands held of the master and scholars of the college of St. Elizabeth next Winchester.<sup>375</sup> His heir was his son William, aged forty and more,<sup>376</sup> who was followed by his son Peter.<sup>377</sup> Peter died about 1590, having by will devised his property to his grandson Peter, son of his son Edward, in tail-male with contingent remainder in tail-male successively to his sons John, William and Richard.<sup>378</sup> Peter died without issue in 1600, his heir being his sister Dorothy, wife of Richard Ayliff,<sup>379</sup> and consequently the manor, mansion or dwelling-house in Kingsclere called Lymmers and the other property in the parish passed to his uncle John.<sup>380</sup> Thomas Fauconer, son of Thomas and grandson of John, was living in 1634,<sup>381</sup> but by 1670 the estate had passed to John Fauconer, who in that year suffered forfeiture for an assault made on 20 May 1669 on Sir Dowse Fuller.<sup>382</sup> The name Lymmers has now been lost, but the estate was probably situated in the extreme north of the parish near the River Enborne. Such at least is the position of Ashfordhill Farm and Ridding Farm, of both of which Peter Fauconer died seised in 1600.

The church of Kingsclere as far back as Saxon times was endowed with a manor of its own, the name of which has come down to the present day as the PARSONAGE TITHING. Queen Edith, wife of Edward the Confessor and daughter of Earl Godwin, held it in her widowhood until her death, when it reverted to William the Conqueror, who granted it, together with the church of Kingsclere, to Hyde Abbey in return for the land in High Street, Winchester, on which he built a royal palace.<sup>383</sup>

FAUCONER. Sable three falcons argent with their bells and jesses or.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the church with 4 hides 1 virgate belonging to it was held by Hyde Abbey,<sup>384</sup> and from this date the manor of the rectory followed the same descent as the advowson, being granted as 1 acre of land to Bisham Abbey (co. Berks.) by William Montagu Earl of Salisbury in 1337.<sup>385</sup> It reverted to William Marquess of Winchester on the death of Anne of Cleves in 1557<sup>386</sup> in accordance with a grant of 1545,<sup>387</sup> and from this date followed the same descent as the chief manor of Kingsclere (q.v.).

Besides the lands the history of which has been traced there was an estate in KINGSCLERE at the time of the Domesday Survey, assessed at half a hide and held by Alwin Wit of Miles Crispin.<sup>388</sup> The later history of this holding is obscure, although, of course, it may be identical either in whole or in part with any of the sub-manors in Kingsclere which are not mentioned by name in Domesday Book.

The church of ST. MARY consists of a chancel 43 ft. 4 in. by 20 ft. 6 in., with a vestry on the north side, south chapel 44 ft. 9 in. by 18 ft. 4 in., central tower 20 ft. 9 in. square, north and south transepts each 20 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft. 2 in., and a nave 66 ft. 6 in. by 22 ft. 7 in., all the measurements being internal.

The general plan of the church at its first building, c. 1130–40, consisted of nave, chancel and transepts as at present, with a low tower over the crossing, the chancel being shorter than the present one. About 1270 the chancel was lengthened and a south chapel was added, opening to the chancel and south transept. In the 15th century this chapel was made equal in width to the south transept, and new windows were inserted in various places, and the tower was raised, according to an illustration which shows the building as it stood in 1847.<sup>388a</sup> In 1848 a large amount of restoration was done, including the facing of all the walls with flint, the rubble being cut back to a depth of 9 in. to make room for this except at the quoins. Some old mullion stones and pieces of moulding are used to bond the flint facing. The tower was altered and copies of 12th-century windows were inserted in the place of the 15th-century ones. Several other windows were inserted or restored in different parts of the building, and a new west doorway was built.

The vestry is modern, but part of the doorway leading into it from the chancel shows that one existed in the same position at an earlier date.

The tracery of the east window of the chancel is new and consists of three cinquefoiled lights with three cinquefoiled circles in the head. The internal jambs of c. 1280 are hollow chamfered and shafted at the angles with moulded capitals and bases. The rear

<sup>368</sup> Pat. 8 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 21.

<sup>369</sup> P.C.C. Will, 28 Marche.

<sup>370</sup> The Fauconer pedigree given in the visitation of 1634 starts with Richard Fauconer (Berry, Hants Gen. 297).

<sup>371</sup> Pat. 9 Hen. IV, pt. ii, m. 24.

<sup>372</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 297.

<sup>373</sup> P.C.C. Will, 6 Vox.

<sup>374</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 297.

<sup>375</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxv, 21.

<sup>376</sup> Ibid.

<sup>377</sup> Vide Ct. of Req. bdle. 43, no. 71.

<sup>378</sup> P.C.C. Will, 84 Sainherbe.

<sup>379</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 134. The following is the description of the premises of which he died seised:—2 messuages, 200 acres of land, 20 acres of meadow, 100 acres of pasture in Kingsclere; another messuage, 40 acres of land, and 3 acres of meadow in Kingsclere; 20 acres of land, 6 acres of meadow and 10 acres of pasture called Fordefeeldes and Duckemeade in Kingsclere; 6 acres of land called Maiden Meade; closes called Asheforde Hill and Readinges; parcels of land called Wakrises, Pasbures land and Vapidles.

<sup>380</sup> Vide Ct. of Req. bdle. 41, no. 3; bdle. 45, no. 48; bdle. 77, no. 83.

<sup>381</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 297.

<sup>382</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1670, p. 627.

<sup>383</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 471b.

<sup>384</sup> Ibid.

<sup>385</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 111; Close, 11 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 13 d.; Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 4; Close, 13 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 35 d.

<sup>386</sup> Thus in 1602 various tenements in Kingsclere were said to be held of William Marquess of Winchester as of his manor of the rectory of Kingsclere (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], cclxviii, 134).

<sup>387</sup> Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvi, m. 51.

<sup>388</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 508.

<sup>388a</sup> Vide A. T. Finch, op. cit. 9.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

arch is richly moulded and has a scroll-moulded label, the carved head stops of which are almost destroyed.

The easternmost window in the north wall of the chancel is of the same date, a single lancet with chamfered external jambs and plain internal splays with a moulded rear arch having a moulded label returned at the springing.

The second north window near the west end of the chancel is composed of two uncusped lights under a two-centred arch, the spandrel being filled up with flint, and in the middle is inserted a small 12th-century stone ornamented with incised diaper work.

The internal jambs and rear arch are very similar to those of the east window.

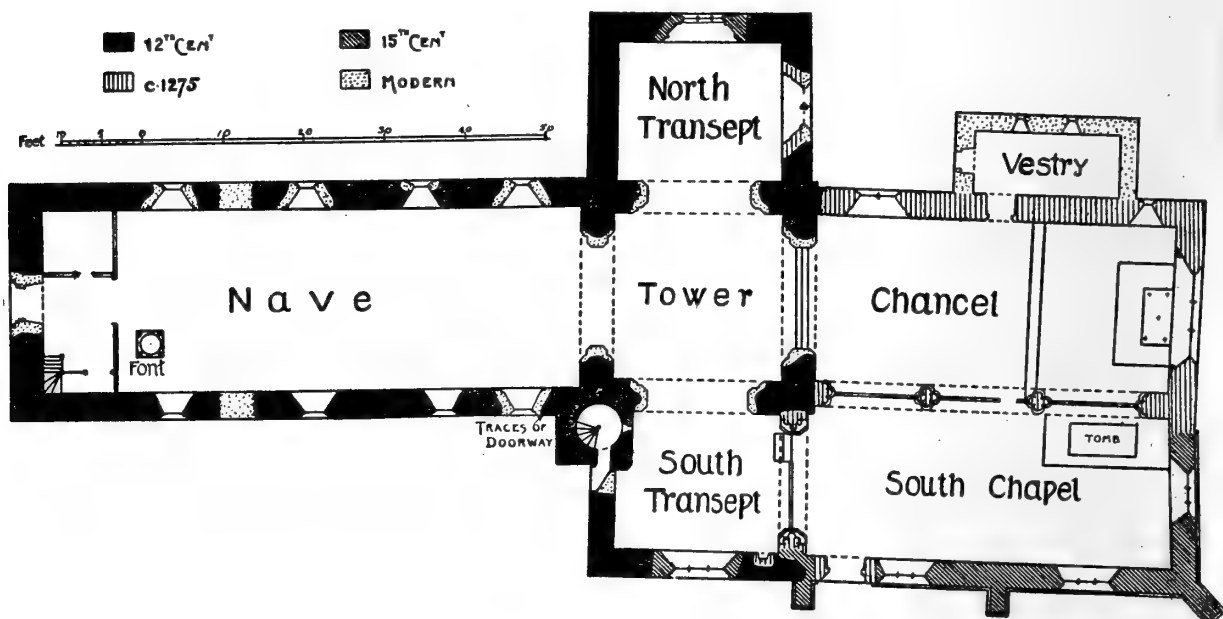

The vestry doorway between these two windows has modern chamfered jambs and a pointed hollow-chamfered arch of 13th-century date, with a scroll and bead label having returned ends.

The vestry has two small lights in the north wall and an outer doorway in the west.

been chamfered and cut away, and the abaci are modern throughout; they probably had jamb shafts originally, but these have all been destroyed. The east arch is plain towards the chancel, the outer order setting out only a few inches beyond the inner, but is of two enriched orders with a label on the west, the inner order having a series of flat cheverons terminating in roll joints, while the outer has a large roll and a border of zigzag.

The north and south arches have a large edge roll between the orders on the faces towards the crossing, but are otherwise plain, and the west arch, which is completely renewed on the west face, has a roll to the inner order on both faces, and on the outer order a diaper of two rows of four-leaved flowers on the west side, with a billet label.

The abaci continue as strings to the north and south walls, and beneath them runs a band of most effective ornament, consisting of a series of spiral coils branching off on either side of a chequered stem.

PLAN OF KINGSCLERE CHURCH

The south arcade of the chancel is of three bays with piers composed of four engaged round shafts having moulded bases and capitals. The arches are two-centred and have two hollow-chamfered orders.

The east<sup>388b</sup> and two south windows of the south chapel have each three cinquefoiled lights under a four-centred arch with a moulded label of late 15th-century date, and near the west end of the south wall is a late 13th-century doorway with double chamfered jambs and slightly segmental arch of the same section.

The arch between the chapel and the south transept is similar to those of the arcade above described, but is wider and nearly semicircular, having been widened at the widening of the south chapel. The jambs have no moulded bases but stop abruptly on chamfered plinths. The four crossing arches are semicircular and of two orders, their jambs having

In a like position under the abaci of the east arch, and returned westward on both sides, is a band of scale ornament in modern stonework.

The small round-headed windows of the second stage of the tower, two on each face, light the crossing, which has a good modern painted and gilt wooden ceiling.

The east window of the north transept, of the same date as those in the chancel, was blocked up in 1848, and until quite recently only the inner jambs were showing. Now it has been opened out and has two pointed lights with a pierced spandrel over, the tracery being all new, but a few old stones which were found showed this to have been the original design.

The north window of the north transept was restored in 1848, being substituted for a smaller window to match the corresponding one in the opposite transept, but the internal jambs belong to a 15th-century window and have shafts with moulded capitals and a moulded rear arch. This transept is the burial-place of the Woodruffe family.

<sup>388b</sup> In the east window the arms of Bishop Fox were formerly to be seen (Stowe MS. 845).

The south window of the south transept is of 15th-century date and has three cinquefoiled lights and perpendicular tracery. The jambs are sunk and chamfered outside but plain inside. At the time when there was a gallery in this transept the south window was not in the centre of the wall, but this was corrected when the gallery was removed in 1848. To the east of this window is a small piscina with chamfered jambs and four-centred head. The basin is missing.

The windows of the nave have been altered considerably at different times. Prior to the 1848 restoration there were two 12th-century windows in the north wall, and below the eastern of the two an inserted window of late date. The south wall had four windows, three being of 12th-century date with a lower one of later date, as in the north wall. In 1848 these lower windows were closed, and one north window (the present second from the east) and three south windows were allowed to remain. For the sake of more light and uniformity an extra window was added near the east end of the south wall and three others in the north wall, all copies of the 12th-century windows, which have plain semicircular heads and wide splayed jambs with a large edge roll on the inside.

The west window is a copy (1848) of Norman work inserted in the place of a three-light 15th-century window. Some of the stones of the inside arch of this window are, however, of real 12th-century workmanship, removed apparently from elsewhere. They have a large edge roll and a band of incised diaper work, which is copied round the remainder of the jambs and arch.

The doorway below this window is also modern of 12th-century design with shafted jambs, moulded bases, scalloped capitals and a semicircular arch enriched with chevrons and billets.

The 12th-century north doorway has been blocked and shows on the outside only. The jambs are of two orders much restored. The shafts are missing, but the mutilated scalloped capitals remain with grooved and chamfered abaci. The inner order of the semicircular arch is modern and has diaper enrichment, but the outer with double-cheveron ornament and the moulded label are both original. Built into the blocking of this doorway is an old weather-worn stone head, representing a bishop.

The tower is of three stages finished with a plain parapet carried by a billeted corbel table of nebuly pattern. The windows in each face of the top stage are of 12th-century design. The small windows just above the roofs in the lower stage belong to the original 12th-century work, but have been partly restored. There are two in each face except on the west side, that has only one on account of the stair turret, which is placed at the south-west angle, more to the south than the west. It is square below and circular after it clears the eaves of the roofs, and is finished off at the corbel table level with a conical roof. A dividing line between the ashlar facing and flint shows where the 12th-century work finished off. All the roofs are covered with lead.

The woodwork of the chancel and north and south transept roofs is modern. That of the nave has the stumps of the tie-beams of a much flatter 15th-century roof, used as hammer-beams with modern carved-bracket supports. The moulded cornice with the series of trefoiled panels over and the jacks to the hammer-beams are also old. The corbels supporting the easternmost brackets are of 15th-century date, having carved heads, one a crowned king, apparently Richard II, and the other a child, surmounted by semi-octagonal moulded abaci.

The font, which is placed near the west end of the nave on the south side, has a shallow square 12th-century Purbeck marble bowl with a hollow scalloped capital at each corner. The shafts and bases to these and the large stem in the centre are modern. The east face of the bowl has a row of large pointed leaves, the south face has a series of hollow flutes, on the west side are three roses and on the north face is a four-leaf flower between two disks. There is a pretty 17th-century cover.

KINGSCLERE CHURCH FROM THE NORTH-WEST

The pulpit is an elaborate example of early 17th-century woodwork, hexagonal in form with two tiers of panels, the lower arched and the upper rectangular, every available space being carved with shallow arabesque patterns, the 'antick work' of the time. It stands under the tower, on a modern pedestal.

In the north-east corner of the south chapel is a large altar tomb to Sir Henry Kingsmill, 'Kt, Son and Heir of Sir W<sup>m</sup>. Kingsmill of Sydmonton in the county of Hants, who married Bridget White, a daughter of John White of Southom, Esq., by whom he had five sons and two daughters. He died in 1625 and his widow erected this monument in 1670 and died in 1672.' On the slab are two recumbent alabaster effigies. Sir Henry is in the armour of the time of Charles I. He has his right hand on his breast, while the other is holding the scabbard of his sword, which is broken away. His wife wears a veil and a tight bodice and has her left hand on her breast and holds a book and a handkerchief in the other.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

On a lozenge at the east end of the tomb are the arms of Kingsmill impaling White. At the head of the base are the Kingsmill arms with the crest of a hand holding a millrind. On the floor of the south chapel is a 16th-century brass plate to Sir John Kingsmill (ob. Aug. 11, 1556), who married Constance Goring, with a Latin inscription giving an account of the large family born to a Kingsmill of Sydmonton, and on a shield are the Kingsmill arms impaling quarterly (1) a chevron between three rings, (2) on a chief indented three molets, (3) on a chief three roundels, (4) on a bend cotised four lions passant, (5) barry of six with a leopard's head on a quarter. There are four other brasses in this chapel, one to John Bossewell, gentleman and 'notarye publique,' who died in 1580.<sup>389</sup> Above the inscription is a shield bearing the arms of Bossewell, which are Argent a fesse indented gules with three molets sable in the chief.

The next is a small brass figure of a priest in Mass vestments and having a shaven head, and the inscription shows him to be 'Willm. Estwod late Vycar of this church and Psonne of Newnom,' who died in 1519.

The third brass has a small figure of a lady in a close-fitting dress holding her hands in prayer. The inscription reads: 'Jhu have mercy on the soule of Cisily Gobard which dyed 17 Feb. an 1503.'

The fourth brass is to Elizabeth Hunt, wife of Jacob Hunt of Popham, who died in 1606.

Let into the middle of the chapel floor is fixed an old stone coffin in which have been laid some fragments of 15th-century tiles of various patterns, including a winged dragon in a circle, a reversed lion passant, fleur de lis, double eagle, and a counterchange pattern.

The tower contains a ring of six bells, all of which were cast by Henry Knight of Reading in 1664, but the fifth was recast in 1849 by Taylor of Loughborough. There is another small bell for the use of the clock only, which was cast by C. & G. Mears of London in 1846.

Under the tower hangs a brass chandelier of ten lights given in 1713 by Amey the wife of Robert Hiam.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, a paten cover of 1707 and two pairs of patens of 1703 and 1704, all inscribed 'The gift of John Fawconer Esq.' with an impaled coat of arms; two other chalices of 1567 and 1568, and a silver flagon of 1670 given by Lady Bridget Kingsmill in that year, bearing the arms of White of Southwick.

There are eleven books of registers, the first one being of great interest, as it is one of the few original paper copies of 1538 and contains entries of baptisms, marriages and burials from that date to 1665. The second book is parchment and has the same entries, and includes the parishes of Ecchinswell and Sydmonton from 1610 to 1638, and the third book continues the same from 1638 to 1673. The fourth book is a paper transcript of all entries from 1653 to 1665. The fifth book is of parchment and has baptisms, marriages and burials from 1665 to 1678. The sixth book contains baptisms from 1682 to 1812 and marriages from 1682 to 1754, with three others dating 1772, 1802 and 1810. The seventh book has marriages and banns from 1754 to 1777, the eighth marriages from 1777 to 1806, and the ninth continues them on to 1812. The tenth and eleventh books contain burials from 1678 to 1765 and 1767 to 1812 respectively.

The new church of ST. LAWRENCE, ECCHINSWELL, was rebuilt in 1885-6 and consecrated in 1886 on a site north of that of the original church, which was demolished in 1885. It is of cut flint with stone dressings in 13th-century style, and consists of chancel, nave, aisles, south porch and tower with spire containing two bells. There is a fine oak screen.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1570, a silver paten of 1879 and a silver flagon of 1871.

The registers begin in 1844, the earlier register being included in that of Kingsclere.

The church of ST. MARY, SYDMONTON, stands in the beautifully kept grounds of Sydmonton Court, surrounded by a grass lawn; the house is to the north, and to the south is a terrace walk looking across the valley. The church is a modern building finished in 1853<sup>389a</sup> in 14th-century style and consists of a chancel 18 ft. by 11 ft. 6 in. with an organ chamber on the north side, a nave 34 ft. 3 in. by 16 ft. 9 in. with a south porch, and a west tower 10 ft. by 9 ft. 7 in., the measurements being internal.

The most interesting parts of the building are the three re-used early 12th-century arches, one to the north doorway of the nave now blocked, another to the south doorway, and the third in the east wall of the tower. The first two are exactly alike and have an inner order of rich diaper work and an outer order of hatched ornament.

The tower arch has a particularly effective design of scrolls growing from a central stem on the inner order, while the outer order has a large cable moulding. The abaci and jambs of all these arches are modern. All the fittings of the church are new, including the plain octagonal font at the west end of the nave.

The walls are of flint with stone dressings, faced inside with ashlar, and the ground stage of the tower has a stone rib vault. The roofs are of oak, open in the nave, and panelled, with carved bosses, in the chancel, and are covered with tiles. The tower is of two stages with a panelled parapet and a stair turret at the south-east; the belfry windows are single cinquefoiled lights, and there is a smaller cinquefoiled west window in the lower stage.

There are six bells, all by Mears & Stainbank, the tenor and fifth being cast in 1853 and the others in 1869.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten cover and paten of 1707 inscribed 'ex dono Rebecca Kingsmill'; a silver flagon of 1723 inscribed 'The gift of Dame Rebecca Kingsmill to ye chappel of South Sidmonton . . . 1723'; and a silver alms dish.

<sup>389</sup> This John Bossewell was the author of 'Workes of Armoire' (1572) of whom the Dict. Nat. Biog. says that the date of his death is unknown (J.H.R.).

<sup>389a</sup> It was rebuilt in this year at a cost of £3,300, of which £2,300 was given by Mr. William Kingsmill, and the remainder by his father-in-law, William Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury. The parishioners also helped by carting material, &c. (White, Hist. Gazetteer and Dir. of Hants [1859]).

There was a church in the parish ADVOWSONS in Saxon times. It was held by Queen Edith, widow of Edward the Confessor, until her death, when it reverted to William the Conqueror,<sup>390</sup> who granted it together with 4 hides and 1 virgate of land in Kingsclere to Hyde Abbey in exchange for land in Winchester on which he built a royal palace.<sup>391</sup> The advowson remained in the possession of Hyde Abbey for over a century, but eventually fell into the hands of Peter Fitz Herbert, lord of the manors of North Oakley and Wolverton.<sup>392</sup> At the beginning of the 13th century he engaged in a dispute with Walter Abbot of Hyde about his right to it,<sup>393</sup> and in 1217 obtained a confirmation from the abbot in return for a charter granting the abbey 100 lb. of wax yearly.<sup>394</sup> This rent continued to be paid for a considerable period,<sup>395</sup> and in 1346 the Abbot of Hyde succeeded in recovering from the Prior of Bisham, who was at the time the patron of the living, arrears of rent amounting to 2,010 lb. of wax.<sup>396</sup>

Henry III presented James de Kewurthe to the church in 1246,<sup>397</sup> and by succession the advowson passed to Edward I, who presented in 1275, 1291-2 and 1296.<sup>398</sup> John de Drokensford, who had been instituted rector in 1296, in 1305-6 presented Richard de Hamme to the vicarage, and on this occasion it was agreed that the vicar should receive all the tithes belonging to the church excepting the tithe of all kinds of corn, of lambs, wool and hay and mortuaries and £10 of the oblations to the Holy Cross. Moreover, for his residence the vicar had assigned to him the dwelling called La Morwell in the churchyard of the parish church of Kingsclere<sup>399</sup> for the support of himself and a 'fit chaplain.'

Edward II presented rectors in 1309<sup>400</sup> and 1317,<sup>401</sup> but in 1318, having formed the design of refounding the house of Dominican Friars of Guildford and appropriating it to Dominican sisters instead of friars, he wrote a letter to the pope soliciting permission to endow the nunnery with the appropriation of the rectory of Kingsclere.<sup>402</sup> The application, however, failed<sup>403</sup>; the friars continued to hold the house according to the original foundation, and the advowson of the church remained in the hands of the king, passing from him to Edward III, who in 1336 sold it for 500 marks to William Montagu Earl of Salisbury.<sup>404</sup> A year later the earl granted the advowson to the monastery of Bisham (co. Berks.), which he had just founded,<sup>405</sup> and in the same year the bishop granted licence to the prior and convent to appropriate the church.<sup>406</sup> From this date the prior and convent presented the vicars until July 1536,<sup>407</sup> when Bisham was surrendered to the king.<sup>408</sup> Six months later the king founded an abbey at Bisham of the order of St. Benedict and endowed it with the house, lands and all appurtenances of the priory of Bisham, the lands of the abbey of Chertsey and of various other priories,<sup>409</sup> but this new abbey lasted for only six months,<sup>410</sup> and on its dissolution the rectory and the advowson of the vicarage of Kingsclere fell again into the hands of the king, who in 1541 granted them to Anne of Cleves.<sup>411</sup> On her death in 1557 they reverted to William Marquess of Winchester in accordance with a grant of 1545,<sup>412</sup> and from this date the advowson has followed the same descent as the manor,<sup>413</sup> the present patron of the vicarage and impropriator of the great tithes being Lord Bolton. Dependent upon the mother-church of Kingsclere were the chapelries of North Oakley, Ecchinswell and Sydmonton.<sup>414</sup> North Oakley Chapel has now disappeared, and its site is marked at the present day by Church Hanger, which is situated a little to the north of Warren Bottom Copse in the tithing of North Oakley. Ecchinswell and Sydmonton continued to be served from Kingsclere until 1852,<sup>415</sup> in which year Ecchinswell was constituted a separate vicarage with that of Sydmonton annexed in the patronage of the vicar of Kingsclere for the time being.<sup>416</sup> During the 13th and 14th centuries the Bishops of Winchester collated to the portion or prebend of Nuthanger or Ecchinswell which consisted of the tithes proceeding from the demesne lands of the manor.<sup>417</sup> In 1446 Henry Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, obtained licence from the Crown to alienate the advowson of the free chapel belonging to his manor of Ecchinswell to the hospital of St. Cross near Winchester.<sup>418</sup> All trace of this chapel has now been lost. The grant must have included the portion of Nuthanger, although it is not specified, for at the present day £225 of the great tithe of Ecchinswell is paid to St. Cross.<sup>419</sup>

There was a chapel belonging to the manor of Frobury called the free chapel of St. Thomas, Frobury,<sup>420</sup> which dated back to the end of the 13th century, Beatrice de Wintershill presenting a chaplain during the episcopacy of John of Pontoise (1282-1304).<sup>421</sup> In the reign of Edward VI its endowment, consisting of lands and tenements in Frobury of the annual value of £2 6s. 8d., in the tenure of Andrew Chamberlayn, and a rent of 1s. issuing from 6 acres of

<sup>390</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 471b.

<sup>391</sup> Ibid.; Stowe MS. 944, fol. 41; Dugdale, Mon. ii, 436. This charter was confirmed by Henry I (Cart. Antiq. Y m. 21), Hen. III. (Chart. R. 54 Hen. III, m. 4), and Edw. IV. (Dugdale, Mon. ii, 444-5).

<sup>392</sup> De Banc. R. 348, m. 370d.

<sup>393</sup> Ibid.

<sup>394</sup> Ibid.

<sup>395</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212; Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 61.

<sup>396</sup> Ibid. 2033, fol. 55; De Banc. R. 348, m. 370d.

<sup>397</sup> A. T. Finch, op. cit. 37-43.

<sup>398</sup> Ibid.; Pat. 24 Edw. I, m. 7.

<sup>399</sup> A. T. Finch, op. cit. 37-43.

<sup>400</sup> Pat. 3 Edw. II, m. 34; Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 81d.

<sup>401</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 146.

<sup>402</sup> Ibid. 279-86.

<sup>403</sup> V.C.H. Surr. ii, 114-15.

<sup>404</sup> Chart. R. 10 Edw. III, m. 3; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), ii, 111.

<sup>405</sup> Close, 11 Edw. III, pt. ii, m. 13 d.;

Pat. 11 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 4.

<sup>406</sup> Ibid.; Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 106.

See also Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 495, 616; Cal. of Papal Letters, v, 430.

<sup>407</sup> Egerton MSS. 2032, fol. 106 d., 140;

2033, fol. 20 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants

Rec. Soc.), i, 26, 205, 218; Egerton MS.

2034, fol. 8, 37, 80, 128 d., 140.

<sup>408</sup> Mins. Accts. Berks. 27 & 28 Hen.

VIII, no. 77, m. 3 d.

<sup>409</sup> V.C.H. Berks. ii, 83-4.

<sup>410</sup> Ibid.

<sup>411</sup> L. and P. Hen. VIII, xvi, 717. She presented to the vicarage in 1543 (Egerton

MS. 2034, fol. 166 d.).

<sup>412</sup> Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvi, m. 51.

<sup>413</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>414</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 106; Mins.

Accts. Berks. 27 & 28 Hen. VIII, no. 77,

m. 3 d.; Pat. 36 Hen. VIII, pt. xvi, m. 51.

<sup>415</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 26 Chas. II, no.

17; Exch. Spec. Com. 26 Chas. II, no.

6454.

<sup>416</sup> The Rev. A. T. Finch, The Ancient

Church at Clere, 5.

<sup>417</sup> Cal. Pat. 1272-81, p. 425; Eger- ton MSS. 2031, fol. 22; 2032, fol. 67;

2033, fol. 26; Cal. of Papal Letters, ii,

100; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.),

i, 81, 206; ii, 300.

<sup>418</sup> Inq. a.q.d. 24 Hen. VI, no. 16.

<sup>419</sup> Ex inform. the Rev. W. A. Boyce,

B.A., vicar of Ecchinswell-cum-Sydmonton.

<sup>420</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 14, 75;

2033, fol. 14; 2034, fol. 15 d.; Wykeham's

Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 198.

<sup>421</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 14.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

land lying in the common fields under the will of one Agnes Langford, became Crown property,<sup>422</sup> and so continued until 1554, in which year Queen Mary granted the lands to Henry Smythe on a lease of twenty-one years at a rent of £2 6s. 8d.<sup>423</sup> Seven years later Queen Elizabeth granted the chapel with all its appurtenances to William Paulet Marquess of Winchester,<sup>424</sup> and from this time it followed the same descent as the manor, although it was sometimes let on long leases.<sup>425</sup> The ruins of the chapel can still be seen on the south side of Frobury Farm.

According to tradition a chapel also existed near Stratton Farm,<sup>426</sup> a short distance to the south of Beenham Court, and 16th-century tiles were found when the present house was built showing where the chapel floor had been.

Owing to the fact that the living of Kingsclere was a vicarage, and that various chapelries were dependent upon it, there were frequent disputes about the payment of tithes. Thus during the episcopacy of Henry Woodlock (1305-16) an inquisition was held to ascertain the value of the tithes of the church of Kingsclere.<sup>427</sup> Again, in 1321-2 all the parishioners of the church of Kingsclere were ordered to pay in full all just and true tithes without any diminution or subtraction,<sup>428</sup> while, by order of Adam Orlton, Bishop of Winchester (1333-45), an inquiry was held to discover the true value of the church and the great tithes of Ecchinswell and Sydmonton.<sup>429</sup> But it was in the 17th century that there was the greatest controversy about the payment of tithes. Thus, in 1666, Dr. Edward Webbe, chaplain in ordinary to Charles II and vicar of Kingsclere, engaged in a dispute with Richard Kent, the farmer of the appropriate tithes of Ecchinswell and Sydmonton, as to which tithes were payable to him and which to Richard Kent.<sup>430</sup> In 1668 Richard Kent sued Robert Lush, the farmer of Sydmonton, for tithes from Sydmonton,<sup>431</sup> but this dispute was ended in the same year, since it was found that the tenants of Sydmonton farm had a right to compound for their tithes by the annual payment of 1 acre of wheat and 1 acre of barley.<sup>432</sup> Some years later Dr. Edward Webbe claimed tithes of rabbits from a warrener, John Newman by name, but by the deposition of witnesses taken at the 'Sign of the Crown' in Kingsclere on 19 October 1674 it appeared that no tithe-rabbits had ever been paid from 'Wakeridge Warren,' and that 2s. a year only had been paid in lieu of tithes from 'Kingsleaze.'<sup>433</sup> About the same time Dr. Edward Webbe claimed the small tithes from Ecchinswell and Sydmonton, but by the depositions of witnesses taken on 19 October 1674 it was found that it had long been the custom to pay them direct to the curate who served the cure, and that some time before the inhabitants of Sydmonton out of charity had agreed with one another to almost double their contributions because the 'newly come curate one Mr. Smith had a great family of children and was but in a mean condition.'<sup>434</sup> Ambrose Webbe, the son and successor of Dr. Edward Webbe, who died in 1680, pursued the same policy as his father, and in the reign of James II claimed from John Matthew and Noah Starling tithe-corn from woody and bushy ground that had been grubbed up above the common within the parish, whereas it was really payable to the rector impropriate.<sup>435</sup>

The living of Kingsclere Woodlands is a vicarage in the gift of the vicar of Kingsclere for the time being. The church of St. Peter, Headley Common, was built on a site given by Mrs. Goddard and consecrated in 1868.

There is a Baptist chapel on Headley Common opened in 1836, and a Wesleyan chapel in the market place of Kingsclere, while there are no fewer than three Primitive Methodist chapels in the modern parish of Kingsclere Woodlands, situated respectively at Plastow Green, Ashford Hill and Wolverton End. The Congregational chapel in Ecchinswell was built in 1812. In 1672 Charles II, in answer to a petition from divers inhabitants of the parish of Kingsclere, granted licence to Richard Avery, a Presbyterian, to preach to them in the house of a certain William Jones.<sup>436</sup>

The Girls' School (Church) was built in 1839. The Boys' School (National) was built in 1861, to replace the ruinous free school, and a class-room for fifty infants was added in 1873. The school at Kingsclere Woodlands (Church) was built in 1863 and enlarged in 1895. The school at Headley (National) was built in 1872-3. The children of Sydmonton attend the school at Ecchinswell (Church), which dates from 1861.

The free school, also called the CHARITIES 'Litten School,' the date of foundation of which is unknown, was endowed with £20 a year by will of Sir James Lancaster, dated 18 April 1618, which is paid by the Corporation of Basingstoke and applied to the Boys' School.

Sir James Lancaster likewise directed that £10 a year should be paid for distribution to the poor in bread and otherwise. The annuity is regularly received from the corporation.

The poor also receive a moiety of the income of 14½ acres known as Osman's Lands (gift of John Chamberlain, 1649), now let at £20 (see church estate below); an annuity of 20s. by will of William Pigeon, paid out of a farm called Stanton's; an annuity of 20s. charged by will of William Atfield, 1658, on the Old Farm; an annuity of 20s. charged by George Higham on Westlands; an annuity of £4 (subject to

<sup>422</sup> Chant. Cert.

<sup>423</sup> Pat. 1 & 2 Mary, pt. xv, m. 33.

<sup>424</sup> Ibid. 3 Eliz. pt. iii, m. 21.

<sup>425</sup> Thus in 1613 the Marquess of Winchester granted it to Robert Percehay to hold for ninety-nine years from Michaelmas 1621 at a rent of £2 0s. 8d. By 1636 the interest in the lease had come to William Cufaud of Midhurst (co. Suss.) and Francis Cufaud of River Park (co. Surr.), who in that year sold it to Edward Manning for £110 (Cal. S. P. Dom. 1635-6, p. 528).

<sup>426</sup> This farm was sold by Ingram

Bachelor in 1588 to Peter Aylyff (Pat. 30 Eliz. pt. vi, m. 10), who died seised in 1636 (Chan. Inq. p.m. [Ser. 2], dxxxii, 21).

<sup>427</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 81 d.

<sup>428</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 474-5.

<sup>429</sup> Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 106.

<sup>430</sup> Exch. Dep. East. 18 Chas. II, no. 3.

<sup>431</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. 20 Chas. II, no. 6450.

<sup>432</sup> Ibid. 26 Chas. II, no. 6454.

<sup>433</sup> Exch. Dep. Mich. 26 Chas. II, no. 2. Mary Aylyff, who many years before had rented the tithes of the tithing of North Oakley from Mr. Claybrooke, the vicar of Kingsclere, stated that she had sometimes received this payment in money, and sometimes 'to serve her occasions in her family incomes.'

<sup>434</sup> Ibid. no. 17.

<sup>435</sup> Ibid. Mich. 3 Jas. II, no. 2. With the exception of tithes from corn growing on Boltishams Farm, Pitt Grounds, part of Foskett Farm and Measeplots, which belonged to the vicar.

<sup>436</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1672, pp. 196, 200.

the payment of £1 to the churchwardens) in respect of charity of Andrew Chamberlain, paid out of a farm called Pitchorn.

The poor also receive £8 6s. 8d. a year, being the dividends on £333 6s. 8d. consols held by the official trustees in trust for the charity of James Widmore, founded by codicil to will proved 3 November 1825.

In 1907-8 the income of these charities for the poor, amounting to £34 6s. 8d., was, less expenses, applied in the distribution of clothing.

John Fauconer by will (date not stated) gave to twelve poor housekeepers the yearly sum of £12 for ever on 25 December, also £3 yearly for ever for the repairs of the parish church. The annuity of £15 (less land tax) is paid out of Woodhouse Farm, Woodlands, by Mrs. Caroline E. Lamb of Knightsbridge House, Newbury. In 1907 £2 8s. was paid to the churchwardens and £9 12s. to twenty poor widows.

In 1726 Lady Rebecca Kingsmill by will appointed a sum of £400 to be laid out in land, the profits to be employed in the payment of £1 5s. a year to the incumbent of Kingsclere for a sermon at Sydmonton Chapel on Trinity Sunday and for providing the bread and wine for the sacrament, and to the clerk 5s.; £2 10s. to the poor of North and South Sydmonton, and to twelve poor men of Kingsclere 10s. each.

The sum of £10 is received annually from the owner of certain lands called the Hurst Meadows, now in the possession of the Rev. J. Rolfe Fisher, and is duly applied.

It was stated on the table of benefactions that the Rev. Thomas Brown, a former vicar, in 1586 gave one almshouse and £1 per annum for repairs. The last payment of this was in 1814. The almshouse was rebuilt in 1853 at the expense of Mr. William Holding and the Misses Holding of Elm Grove. It now provides accommodation for four women.

In 1722 Robert Higham, by his will dated 30 May, devised certain properties, the rents and profits thereof to be applied for poor in clothing, for educational purposes and for apprenticing. The trust estates now consist of a farm called Blissett's Farm, containing 51 acres 1 rood 29 poles, 38 acres 0 roods 33 poles of arable land let partly in allotments, about 4 acres of meadow land, four cottages, i.e. three in the Marsh and one in the Dell, and a piece of waste land in Dell, producing a gross rental of about £115. Trustees were last appointed by an order of the Charity Commissioners of 28 June 1901, and by a further order of 4 March 1904, made under the Board of Education Act 1899, the proportion of the income applicable for educational purposes was determined to be one-fourth. In 1907-8 £20 16s. was applied in clothing, £50 in premiums on apprenticeships and £20 for ten scholars at £2 each.

Church Estate.—In addition to a moiety of the rent of Osman's Lands mentioned above, amounting to £10 a year, the churchwardens receive the rents of 3 acres, known as the Crooked Mead, now let at £5 10s. a year, arising from the gift of one Thomas Smith, temp. Henry VIII. Also £1 a year from the gift of Andrew Chamberlain and £2 8s. a year under John Fauconer's gift above mentioned.

The recreation grounds consist of 21 acres in Kingsclere, Headley and Ashford Hill, producing yearly, with certain tolls, £7 14s., which is absorbed in payment of the outgoings.

In 1875 Charles James Kilpin by will, proved at London 14 August, left £200, free of duty, for the benefit of the poor. A portion of the capital amounting to £50 was expended on the school, and the balance invested in £159 3s. 6d. consols, in the names of the Rev. Arthur Thomas Finch and the two churchwardens.

A charity called the Digweed charity founded by Col. William Henry Digweed of Ecchinswell House provides a bed for any parishioner of Ecchinswell at Winchester Hospital and also assistance for the poor there amounting to £4 19s. per annum through the investment of £200 in consols. The charity is administered by the Guardians of the Poor.

Another charity was founded by the parishioners in 1897 called the Queen Victoria Memorial (Maternity) Charity for the purpose of providing nourishment to women after their confinement. The investment of £155 in India 3 per cents. yields £4 5s. 4d. per annum. The charity is administered by a committee, of which the vicar is chairman, hon. secretary and treasurer.

LITCHFIELD

Liveselle (xi cent.); Livescelve, Liveschella, Lieuselve (xii cent.); Lidescelve, Lideshull, Lidde-sulde, Lidulse (xiii cent.); Lydeshef, Ludeshul, Leteshelve, Luddeshelve (xiv cent.); Lodeschylve (xv cent.); Ludeshulff, Ludshelf (xvi cent.).

Litchfield is a parish situated to the north of Whitchurch, its southern boundary being formed by the Port Way, the ancient road from Salisbury to Silchester. The general rise of the ground is from south-west to north-east, a height of 768 ft. above the ordnance datum being attained at Ladle Hill in the northern extremity of the parish. The village, which is served by a station on the Didcot, Newbury and Winchester line of the Great Western Railway, lies along the main road from Whitchurch to Newbury in the west of the parish. The soil and sub-soil are chalk, and the chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The parish contains 1,814 acres of land, of which 952½ acres are arable land, 77½ acres permanent grass and 112 acres woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey MANORS there were most probably two estates in Litchfield, one held by the king and the other held of Hugh de Port. The first is not mentioned by the name of Litchfield, and probably at this time formed part of the royal manor of Kingsclere.<sup>2</sup> The second occurs as 'Liveselle,' and, assessed at 3 hides, was held of Hugh de Port by Faderlin.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 456.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. 481.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The first named, which afterwards developed into the manor of LITCHFIELD, was granted as 1 hide of land by Henry II to Ralph Monachus or le Moyne,<sup>4</sup> lord of Great Easton (co. Essex),<sup>5</sup> to hold of him by the serjeanty of being the king's lardner at his coronation. While lord of Litchfield Ralph granted a rent of 1 mark of silver, payable on the Feast of St. Giles to Hyde Abbey, 'for the soul of his father Robert, who lay buried in the monastery before the altar of the Holy Apostles Andrew and James,'<sup>6</sup> and in 1228 granted half of the manor to Brian de Stopham, lord of the manor of Stopham (co. Suss.), to hold of him and his heirs by a rent of 10 marks.<sup>7</sup> In the Testa de Nevill, which in the ordinary way should be later than 1228, Ralf is returned as holding half the vill of Litchfield of the annual value of £5 by serjeanty,<sup>8</sup> but Mr. Round considers that this entry is previous to 1228, in which case it represents the half which Ralf held and granted to Brian de Stopham in 1228, and suggests that Ralf never held more than half the manor.

STOPHAM. Quarterly fessewise indented argent and gules four crescents countercoloured.

On the death of Ralph the rent of 10 marks paid by the Stophams passed to his son William, who confirmed his father's grant to Hyde Abbey in 1241.<sup>9</sup> He was succeeded by his son Henry,<sup>10</sup> who settled it upon himself and his wife Joan in 1309,<sup>11</sup> and died in 1314.<sup>12</sup> His widow survived him twenty-six years, dying in 1340, and on her death the rent of £6 13s. 4d. in Litchfield passed to her son John.<sup>13</sup> Sir Henry le Moyne, probably son and heir of John, died seised of the rent in 1375, leaving a son and heir John,<sup>14</sup> whose only daughter and heir Elizabeth became the wife of Sir William Stourton.<sup>15</sup> Sir John Stourton, son and heir of Sir William and Elizabeth, was seised of £6 rent from the manor at his death in 1462,<sup>16</sup> as was also his son and heir Sir William Stourton, who died in 1477,<sup>17</sup> but the payments seem to have lapsed after this date.

To return, however, to the Stophams and their successors, who before the middle of the 13th century were tenants in fee of the whole (2 hides) manor. Brian de Stopham died leaving as his heir a minor, and the custody of the manor was thereupon committed to Alan de Schusche, who about the middle of the 13th century is returned as holding 2 hides in Litchfield of the old feoffment by the serjeanty of being the king's lardner.<sup>18</sup> Before the end of the reign of Henry III, however, the manor had passed to Ralph de Stopham, probably son and heir of Brian,<sup>19</sup> who presented to the living of Litchfield,<sup>20</sup> and died in 1271, leaving as his heir his son Ralph, aged twenty-three,<sup>21</sup> who died in 1291,<sup>22</sup> leaving a widow Isabel, to whom the manor of Litchfield was assigned in dower,<sup>23</sup> and an only daughter Eva, the wife of William de Echingham.<sup>24</sup> On the death of Isabel, Litchfield passed to William and Eva, and was sold by them in 1315 to Edward de St. John of Barlavington (co. Suss.).<sup>25</sup> Edward obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Litchfield in 1334<sup>26</sup> and died about 1340,<sup>27</sup> leaving a widow Eva, who in 1346 was stated to be holding half a fee in Litchfield which had belonged to Isabel de Stopham.<sup>28</sup> Eva died in 1354,<sup>29</sup> leaving by Edward an only daughter Elizabeth, who became the wife of Henry Dyke of Sussex,<sup>30</sup> from whom the manor ultimately descended to two sisters and co-heirs, Eleanor the wife of William Dering of Surrenden (co. Kent) and Constance the wife of John Goring of Burton (co. Suss.).<sup>31</sup> In 1514 the manor was settled on John Goring and Constance for life with remainder to their son William in tail-male,<sup>32</sup> but this settlement seems later to have been set on one side, for in 1537 John Kingsmill, who married Constance daughter of John Goring<sup>33</sup> (if the pedigrees are correct), but in all probability his widow,<sup>34</sup> obtained a quitclaim of the manor from Nicholas Dering, son and heir of William Dering and Eleanor,<sup>35</sup> in return for an annuity of £6 12s. 8d.<sup>36</sup> In 1540 John obtained a grant of the rent of 13s. 4d. issuing from the manor formerly belonging to Hyde Abbey,<sup>37</sup> and died seised of the manor in 1556, leaving a son and heir William.<sup>38</sup> From this date the manor has followed the same descent as Sydmonton (q.v.), the present owner being Mr. Andrew de Portal Kingsmill.

The estate which was held of Hugh de Port by Faderlin in 1086<sup>39</sup> was afterwards known as the hamlet of LITCHFIELD or WEST LITCHFIELD, and was held of the St. Johns, the descendants of Hugh de Port, as late at least as the middle of the 14th century.<sup>40</sup> Like the rest of Faderlin's property in

<sup>4</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 235a, 236a.

<sup>5</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, ii, 431-2.

<sup>6</sup> Harl. MS. 1761, fol. 188.

<sup>7</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 12 Hen. III.

<sup>8</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 236b.

Mr. Round also suggests that the 2 hides of the manor with the 3 hides of 'Liveselle' would have made up a 5 hide unit.

<sup>9</sup> Harl. MS. 1761, fol. 188 d.

<sup>10</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, ii, 431.

<sup>11</sup> Inq. a.q.d. 1 Edw. II, no. 113; Pat.

1 Edw. II, pt. xii, m. 6; Feet of F. Hants, East. 2 Edw. II.

<sup>12</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. II, no. 39.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. 14 Edw. III, no. 29.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 49 Edw. III, pt. ii, no. 16.

<sup>15</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, ii, 432; Edmondson, Baronagium Genealogicum.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 2 Edw. IV, no. 18.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 17 Edw. IV.

<sup>18</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 232a.

<sup>19</sup> Vide Elwes & Robinson, Castles and Manors of Western Sussex. This Ralph left a son and heir aged twenty-three at his death in 1271. Brian is sometimes said to have been still living in 1268 (Suss. Arch. Coll. xxvii, 50), but, as Mr. Round points out, this is impossible, since, as stated above, his son and heir was in wardship by the middle of the 13th century.

<sup>20</sup> Coram Rege R. Mich. 33 & 34 Edw. I, m. 55d.

<sup>21</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Hen. III, file 40, no. 13; Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 554.

<sup>22</sup> Fine R. 19 Edw. I, m. 10.

<sup>23</sup> Close, 19 Edw. I, m. 14.

<sup>24</sup> Fine R. 20 Edw. I, m. 17.

<sup>25</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 9 Edw. II.

<sup>26</sup> Chart. R. 8 Edw. III, m. 10.

<sup>27</sup> The date of his death is uncertain, but it was during the episcopacy of Adam Orleton (1333-45), who granted licence to the rector of Litchfield to assist at his obsequies (Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 108).

<sup>28</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 331.

<sup>29</sup> Inq. p.m. 28 Edw. III, no. 54.

<sup>30</sup> Berry, Sussex Gen. 138; Elwes & Robinson, op. cit. 266.

<sup>31</sup> According to the pedigrees they were the daughters of Elizabeth and Henry, but this is obviously a mistake. It is much more likely that they were their great-grandchildren.

<sup>32</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 6 Hen. VIII.

<sup>33</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 44; Burke, Extinct Baronetage, 290.

<sup>34</sup> In the Goring pedigree the names of the daughters of John Goring and Constance are given as Sybil, Eleanor, Jane and Anne (Berry, Suss. Gen. 138).

<sup>35</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 219.

<sup>36</sup> Recov. R. East. 29 Hen. VIII, m. 414; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 29 Hen. VIII.

<sup>37</sup> Pat. 31 Hen. VIII, pt. vii, m. 32.

<sup>38</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cx, 142.

<sup>39</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 481b.

<sup>40</sup> Inq. p.m. 3 Edw. III, no. 67; 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 19.

Hampshire, Litchfield passed to Ruald de Woodcott,<sup>41</sup> and was comprised in the two knights' fees which Henry Fitz Ruald held of John de Port in Hampshire in 1166.<sup>42</sup> From the latter it descended to Henry de Woodcott, who was returned in the Testa de Nevill as holding one knight's fee in Litchfield of the ancient feoffment of Robert de St. John.<sup>43</sup> In 1286 Walter de Eversley and Philippa his wife, probably daughter and heir of Henry de Woodcott, quitclaimed 4 messuages, 400 acres of land, 37 acres of wood, £1 1s. rent and the rent of a pound of pepper in West Litchfield and 'Hock' to Sancha widow of Henry de Woodcott and Richard de Cardevile and the heirs of Richard.<sup>44</sup> Richard granted the hamlet of Litchfield with the manor of Woodcott in the hundred of Pastrow to the prior and brethren of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England in 1303,<sup>45</sup> and from that date it has followed the same descent as the manor of Woodcott<sup>46</sup> (q.v.).

The church of ST. JAMES consists of a chancel 15 ft. 10 in. by 13 ft. 10 in. without a chancel arch, continuous with a nave 32 ft. 8 in. long, a north aisle 7 ft. 2 in. wide, a south porch and a timber bell-turret at the west end.

PLAN OF LITCHFIELD CHURCH

The 12th-century building on the site consisted of a nave one bay shorter eastwards than at present, with a south aisle divided off by an arcade of two bays; now blocked, the aisle being destroyed. There may have been at first a chancel narrower than the nave, but if so it has left no trace, and the present chancel was added c. 1190, having its eastern bay covered with a stone vault. About the year 1200 an aisle of two bays was added on the north side of the nave, and shortly afterwards an east bay was added to both nave arcades, that on the north opening to the site of a former north-east vestry. There may have been a similar vestry or chapel at the east of the south aisle.

The whole building underwent a restoration in 1875, the walls being then refaced, and at the same time the south porch was added and the north aisle rebuilt.

In the east wall of the chancel is a short and rather wide 12th-century window, with its round head altered to a point, and having a slightly pointed rear arch. On the north side of the window is a large locker with a segmental head. A similar locker appears to have been blocked on the opposite side. The principal windows in the north wall with the corresponding ones in the south wall are like the east window but retain their round heads; at a lower level on the north-west and south-west are 13th-century inserted lights. Near the east end of the south wall is a piscina with square jambs and segmental arch and a semicircular projecting chamfered basin.

The four vault corbels referred to above have moulded abaci resting on carved heads, except that in the south-east corner, which is moulded only. The corbels for the arch formerly existing at the west end of the chancel are in the form of irregular octagons above and semicircular below, carved with fluted scallops of late 12th-century type.

The north arcade is of three bays, the two western having a square chamfered pier, chamfered bases and moulded abaci, and the eastern bay being the same but a little wider and with chamfered abaci. All the arches are two-centred of one chamfered order.

Close to the eastern respond is the jamb and part of the segmental head of a low doorway older than the arch, and part of the original work. It must have opened from a vestry whose area was afterwards thrown into the aisle.

All the windows of the aisle are modern, the east and west walls containing small lancets, and the north wall two windows, the first having three trefoiled lights and the second five.

The blocked south arcade has an added east bay like that opposite, but the western half of the first pier, which is square, has a piece of a rough scalloped capital. The second pier is circular, half buried in the wall, and has a very roughly scalloped capital; the western respond has also part of a similar capital. The first and second bays contain single modern lancet windows, and in the third bay is the south doorway, evidently built with the porch in 1875. This has chamfered jambs and a two-centred arch. The outer doorway is the same but with a moulded arch, and in the side walls of the porch are pairs of small round lights.

The west window of the nave is a modern lancet, and above it is another small square-headed light, also modern.

All the walls are refaced with flint and stone dressing, except the aisle, which is plastered, and the roofs are tiled. The bell-turret is shingled.

The roofs and internal fittings, except the screen, which is of 17th-century date with small shafts, are modern. Near the modern font is the bowl of an old one which is considerably damaged and is square with chamfered corners.

There are two bells.

The plate consists of a silver chalice of 1571, a silver paten of 1874 inscribed 'Litchfield Church 1875,' and a small silver bowl like a salt cellar made in London.

The registers date from 1624, the first book, which is of parchment, containing entries of baptisms, marriages and burials from that date to 1728. The second book begins at 1718, the baptisms being to 1810, some marriages to 1751, and burials to 1812. There is a gap in the marriages from 1716 to 1738.

<sup>41</sup> Vide Clere Woodcott in the parish of Kingsclere.

<sup>42</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 208.

<sup>43</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 230b.

<sup>44</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 14 Edw. I.

<sup>45</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 127; Pat. 31 Edw. I, m. 17.

<sup>46</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 323; Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. III, no. 57; Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 19.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The third book is of the usual printed form for marriages from 1755 to 1812.

There was a church in the parish ADVOWSON by the middle of the 13th century, for a rector was presented by Ralph de Stopham,<sup>47</sup> who died in 1271.<sup>48</sup>

The advowson has throughout followed the same descent as the manor<sup>49</sup> (q.v.).

The Church School with accommodation for 33 scholars was built in 1868. It was enlarged in 1907 to accommodate 42 children.

There are no endowed charities in the parish.

WOLVERTON

Ulvretune (xi cent.); Ulfertona, Olferton (xii cent.); Wlfrinton, Wulfrestone, Wlfferton (xiii cent.); Wolferton (xiv cent.); Wolverston (xvii cent.).

Wolverton is a small parish with an area of 1,453 acres situated to the east of Kingsclere. The general rise of the ground is from north to south, a height of 624 ft. above the ordnance datum being attained a little to the north of the Port Way, the ancient road from Salisbury to Silchester, which intersects the south of the parish. The main road from Kingsclere to Newbury runs through Wolverton from west to east, being joined at the school by a road from Basingstoke. The parish church is situated to the east of Crabs Hill in the extreme west of the parish. Near it is Wolverton House, which has been rented from the Duke of Wellington by Mr. Wallace James Walker for over thirty years—a handsome stone mansion looking south-east and standing in a finely-wooded park of 150 acres. To the north of the park are Wolverton Wood and Wolverton Common. The soil varies, and the subsoil is chalk and sand. The chief crops are wheat, oats and barley. According to the agricultural returns of 1905 about half the parish is arable land and rather less than half permanent grass, the remainder being woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> The Inclosure Award for Wolverton is dated 31 August 1861.<sup>2</sup>

Among place-names preserved in extant records are Le Frith, La Breche<sup>3</sup> (xiii cent.), Nuvelles<sup>4</sup> (xiii cent.), Hyetoune<sup>5</sup> (xv cent.), Smithborowe and Freborne Water<sup>6</sup> (xvi cent.).

WOLVERTON, which Elveva had MANORS held of Edward the Confessor, was held by Alvrud the priest of the Conqueror at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>7</sup> In the 12th century the manor was farmed out for £10 a year,<sup>8</sup> exclusive of the park, which sometimes brought in an additional £1,<sup>9</sup> and also occasionally furnished venison for the royal table.<sup>10</sup> There was a royal residence at Wolverton, as appears from the Pipe Rolls, in which there is frequent mention of money spent in repairing the king's houses there,<sup>11</sup> and it seems probable that the early kings sometimes stayed in the parish. Thus in 1165 Queen Eleanor, the wife of Henry II, was at Wolverton during her husband's absence in Normandy, and her expenses during her stay amounted to £18.<sup>12</sup>

At length King John in 1215 granted the manor to Peter Fitz Herbert<sup>13</sup>—a gift which was, however, rendered void in 1217, in which year it was granted by Henry III to his mother, the dowager queen Isabel, as part of her dower.<sup>14</sup> Peter, however, subsequently regained possession of the manor, obtaining a grant of free warren in his lands in the hundred of Kingsclere from Henry III,<sup>15</sup> and it was probably after its restoration that he granted licence to the nuns of Godstow to inclose, plough and sow their essart which lay next to his park of Wolverton.<sup>16</sup> He died in 1235, and was succeeded by his son Herbert Fitz Peter,<sup>17</sup> who in the Testa de Nevill is returned as holding Wolverton and North Oakley of the old feoffment for two parts of a knight's fee.<sup>18</sup> Herbert left no issue, and was consequently succeeded by his brother Reginald Fitz Peter,<sup>19</sup> who proved his title to the manor in 1280.<sup>20</sup> He took the Abbess and convent of Godstow under his special protection, receiving common of pasture for himself and his men in the wood called 'The Frith' in exchange for his charter,<sup>21</sup> and died seised of the manor of Wolverton, including a park stocked with deer, in 1286, leaving a son John and a widow Joan,<sup>22</sup> who soon afterwards received the manor in dower.<sup>23</sup> Joan afterwards married John de Vivonia, and on her death in 1315<sup>24</sup> the manor passed to her grandson, Herbert Fitz John,<sup>25</sup> in accordance with a settlement made by John Fitz Reginald in 1306.<sup>26</sup> Herbert died seised of the manor in 1321, his heir being his son Matthew,<sup>27</sup> who four years later settled it upon himself and his heirs by his wife Margaret.<sup>28</sup> He died without issue in 1356, his heirs being returned as his nieces Margaret and Elizabeth, daughters of his brother Reginald Fitz Herbert, aged fourteen and seven respectively,<sup>29</sup> but on the death of his wife Margaret six months later<sup>30</sup> the manor passed to Edward de St. John,<sup>31</sup> to whom the reversion

<sup>47</sup> Coram Rege R. Mich. 33 & 34 Edw. I, m. 55 d.

<sup>48</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. Hen. III, file 40, no. 13.

<sup>49</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 88; 2032, fol. 141; 2033, fol. 22 d.; 2034, fol. 167; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards, 158.

<sup>3</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 20 d., 21.

<sup>4</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. I, no. 18.

<sup>5</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ix, 94.

<sup>6</sup> Harl. MS. 1579, fol. 104.

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 502a.

<sup>8</sup> Pipe R. 5 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 45; 6 Hen. II, 48, &c.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 15 Hen. II, 150.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 18 Hen. II, 84, 'For the hire of carts to take venison from Wolverton to Winchester 2s.'

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 5 Hen. II, 45; 6 Hen. II, 48; 12 Hen. II, 101; 13 Hen. II, 176.

<sup>12</sup> Vide Eyton, Court, Household and Itinerary of Hen. II, 85.

<sup>13</sup> Close, 17 John, m. 32.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 1 Hen. III, pt. i, m. 25.

<sup>15</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 766.

<sup>16</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, m. 21 d.

<sup>17</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), i, 282-3.

<sup>18</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 231a.

<sup>19</sup> Excerpta e Rot. Fin. (Rec. Com.), ii, 35, 347.

<sup>20</sup> Plac. de Quo War. (Rec. Com.), 764.

<sup>21</sup> Exch. K. R. Misc. Bks. vol. 20, fol. 20 d., 21.

<sup>22</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. I, no. 18.

<sup>23</sup> Close, 14 Edw. I, m. 3.

<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Edw. II, no. 42.

<sup>25</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 230; Pat. 9 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 10.

<sup>26</sup> Inq. a.q.d. 35 Edw. I, no. 101.

<sup>27</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. II, no. 30.

<sup>28</sup> Inq. a.q.d. Edw. II, clxxix, 1; Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 289;

Pat. 18 Edw. II, pt. ii, m. 3.

<sup>29</sup> Inq. p.m. 30 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 43.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. 31 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 28.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid.

had been granted in 1340.<sup>32</sup> Sir Edward de St. John, perhaps a son of the last named, died without issue in December 1384,<sup>33</sup> and the next year his widow Joan released her right in the manor to Hugh Craan, a citizen of Winchester,<sup>34</sup> who soon afterwards settled it upon Robert Dyneley and Margaret his wife and the heirs and assigns of Robert.<sup>35</sup> Robert died seised of the manor in 1395, leaving a son and heir Robert, aged eighteen,<sup>36</sup> who in 1428 was stated to be holding half a fee in Wolverton which had belonged to Matthew Fitz Herbert.<sup>37</sup> In his lifetime he seems to have settled the manor upon his eldest son William and his wife Margaret, a descendant of Reginald Fitz Herbert through his younger daughter Elizabeth.<sup>38</sup> William and Margaret were apparently seised of it in 1437,<sup>39</sup> and Robert Dyneley did not own any lands or tenements in Hampshire at his death in 1455.<sup>40</sup> In 1469 the manor was settled in tail-male upon William Dyneley and his second wife Anne Mompesson,<sup>41</sup> and they dealt with it by fine four years later.<sup>42</sup> From them it passed to William's grandson, Edward Dyneley, whose father Robert, William's son by his first wife, had apparently predeceased them.<sup>43</sup> Edward's widow Sanchea married as her second husband Peter Carvanell,<sup>44</sup> and died seised of the manor in 1494, her heir being her son, Thomas Dyneley, aged fifteen.<sup>45</sup> Thomas died eight years later, leaving a widow Philippa, to whom he left the manor for life, and an infant daughter Elizabeth.<sup>46</sup> Philippa next married John Barrett, lord of the manor of Belhouse in the parish of Aveley (co. Essex),<sup>47</sup> and held a court in conjunction with her husband at Wolverton in 1510,<sup>48</sup> but must have died before 1517, in which year Elizabeth, who had married George Barrett, son and heir of John, obtained livery of her inheritance.<sup>49</sup> Her husband, by whom she had three sons, Edward, Arthur and Robert, and one daughter, Elizabeth,<sup>50</sup> died in 1525,<sup>51</sup> and she next married Sir John Baker of Sissinghurst (co. Kent),<sup>52</sup> but apparently died before 1570, in which year Edward Barrett settled

DYNELEY. Argent a fesse sable with a molet between two roundels sable in the chief.

BARRETT of Belhouse. Party argent and gules and barry of four pieces counter-coloured.

it in tail-male upon himself and his third wife Elizabeth, the widow of Thomas Little.<sup>53</sup> In 1576 Edward engaged in a dispute with John Paulet Marquess of Winchester, the lord of the manors of Kingsclere and Frobury, as to his right to a waste in Wolverton called Smythborough,<sup>54</sup> and died seised of the manor in 1586. He left no male issue by Elizabeth, and consequently Wolverton ultimately passed to Edward the son of his son Charles by his second wife Anne.<sup>55</sup> Edward, who was created Lord Newburgh of Fife on 17 October 1627,<sup>56</sup> remained seised of the manor until his death in 1644.<sup>57</sup> By his will he directed his executors to sell his manor of Wolverton and his other lands in Hampshire for the payment of his debts and legacies, paying the surplus, if any, to his half-brother, Richard Leveson.<sup>58</sup> The purchaser was George Browne of Spelmonden (co. Kent), who presented to the rectory in 1661,<sup>59</sup> and dealt with the manor by fine in 1669.<sup>60</sup> On his death it passed to his son, Sir George Browne of Wolverton, who married Jane daughter of Sir Henry Worsley of Appuldercomb,<sup>61</sup> and had an only daughter and heir Elizabeth, who married Sir Jemmett Raymond of Barton Court (co. Berks.), and died in 1688, aged seventeen, nine days after the birth of her only son Jemmett.<sup>62</sup> Jemmett succeeded to the manor on attaining to his majority,<sup>63</sup> presenting to the rectory in 1719 and 1759.<sup>64</sup> He had no children, and consequently in 1772 he settled the reversion of the manor in tail-male after the death of himself and his wife Elizabeth on his second cousin, Dame Elizabeth Worsley,<sup>65</sup> the granddaughter of Elizabeth, wife of Sir William Meux, bart., who was the sister of his grandfather, Sir George Browne.<sup>66</sup> She died in 1774, and the manor consequently passed to her son and heir, Edward Meux-Worsley of Gatcombe House,<sup>67</sup> who sold it in 1782 to Charles Van Notten, a successful London merchant and uncle to Sir Peter Pole of Ewhurst.<sup>68</sup> Charles by royal licence on 7 March 1789 took the name of Pole in conse-

<sup>32</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Hil. 14 Edw. III.

<sup>33</sup> Inq. p.m. 8 Ric. II, no. 34.

<sup>34</sup> Add. Chart. 24698-9.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid. 24700. In 1389 Richard II pardoned them for entering on the premises without licence (Pat. 13 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 35, 33).

<sup>36</sup> Inq. p.m. 18 Ric. II, no. 12. A year before his death Robert settled the manor upon trustees for his son (Add. Chart. 24701; Pat. 18 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 3; 19 Ric. II, pt. i, m. 25).

<sup>37</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 345.

<sup>38</sup> She was either the great-granddaughter or the great-great-granddaughter of Elizabeth (cf. De Banc. R. Trin. 15 Hen. VI, m. 308 and Harl. Soc. Publ. xiv, 548-9).

<sup>39</sup> De Banc. R. Trin. 15 Hen. VI, m. 308.

<sup>40</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Hen. VI, no. 26; P.C.C. Will, 8 Stockton.

<sup>41</sup> Pat. 9 Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 13.

<sup>42</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 13 Edw. IV.

<sup>43</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ix, 94.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. xvi, 123.

<sup>47</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, i, 79.

<sup>48</sup> Harl. MS. 1579, fol. 103 d.

<sup>49</sup> Pat. 9 Hen. VIII, pt. ii, m. 10.

<sup>50</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, i, 79.

<sup>51</sup> P.C.C. Will, 36 Bodfelde.

<sup>52</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, i, 79; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 176.

<sup>53</sup> Pat. 12 Eliz. pt. ix, m. 12; L.T.R.

Memo. R. East. 16 Eliz. m. 38.

<sup>54</sup> Harl. MS. 1579, fol. 103-4; Chan. Proc. (Ser. 2), cxcv, 15.

<sup>55</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 21, no. 226.

<sup>56</sup> Morant, Hist. of Essex, i, 80.

<sup>57</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 44 Eliz. m. 9; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 19 Jas. I; Div. Co. East. 1 Chas. I.

<sup>58</sup> William Palin, More about Stifford and its Neighbourhood, 85-7. His mother

Christine married as her second husband Sir John Leveson of Halling (co. Kent) (Morant, Hist. of Essex, i, 80). This Richard was her second son by this marriage (Morant, Hist. of Essex, ii, 124, 480).

<sup>59</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>60</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 21 Chas.

II. He conveyed it to Sir Robert Worsley, bart., the brother of his daughter-in-law Jane.

<sup>61</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 137-8.

<sup>62</sup> Vide Close, 22 Geo. III, pt. xvii, no. 18; Harl. Soc. Publ. xxxvii, 368-9.

<sup>63</sup> He dealt with it by indenture in 1709 (vide Close, 22 Geo. III, pt. xvii, no. 18).

<sup>64</sup> Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>65</sup> Recov. R. Mich. 13 Geo. III, rot. 79.

<sup>66</sup> Manning & Bray, Hist. of Surr. ii, 182; Berry, Hants Gen. 57.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid.

<sup>68</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 21 Geo. III, m. 38; Close, 22 Geo. III, pt. xvii, 18.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

quence of his marriage with Millicent, the eldest daughter and co-heir of Charles Pole of Holcroft (co. Lancs.),<sup>69</sup> and was created a baronet two years later.<sup>70</sup> He died on 18 June 1813, and was succeeded by his son and heir, Sir Peter Pole, bart., M.P. for Yarmouth (Isle of Wight) 1819–26,<sup>71</sup> who sold the manor in 1837 to Arthur Wellesley first Duke of Wellington.<sup>72</sup> The present owner is his grandson, Arthur Charles Wellesley the fourth Duke.

In 1280 Reginald Fitz Peter claimed the right to tumbrel and the fines of the assize of bread and ale in Wolverton.<sup>73</sup>

The church of ST. CATHERINE CHURCH consists of a chancel 17 ft. 7 in. by 13 ft. 9 in., a nave 43 ft. 9 in. by 18 ft. 6 in., north and south transepts each 13 ft. 7 in. by 11 ft., a north vestry balancing a south porch, and a west tower 17 ft. 9 in. by 14 ft. 5 in. It is of red brick with dressings of stone and of darker glazed bricks, and is a rather attractive symmetrically designed 18th-century building, the west tower being large and somewhat out of scale with the rest. The nave roof, however, is a simple but most effective piece of 15th-century work preserved from an older building which may have been of wooden construction like Hartley Wespall Church. It is in four bays with a half bay at the east, and has large arched braces which spring from well below the plate, their feet being now cut away and clumsy wooden corbels inserted. They probably were continued as posts to the ground in the first instance. Over the braces are collars with small posts from which arched struts spring to the ridge; there are two purlins on each slope of the roof, with curved wind-braces between them. The chancel roof is a copy of that of the nave.

The windows are all segmental or round-headed and have modern brick jambs and round-headed lights in them. The interior of the church is in its way very effective with small recesses surmounted by pediments set across the eastern angles of the nave flanking the plain round-headed chancel arch, opening to the panelled 18th-century reading desk and pulpit. There are good wrought iron altar rails and remains of a screen of like material and date; the reredos and panelling in the chancel are also of good 18th-century design. The arches opening to the transepts continue the design of the chancel arch and its flanking recesses to which they adjoin; to the west of each transept arch is a second narrow arch corresponding to the recesses. The church was restored by the Rev. Richard Pole in 1871 when the west gallery was taken away and the pews lowered to the present height.

The keystones and square imposts of the arches are worked in hard plaster. The interior of the tower is of the same character, with narrow arcades flanking a wide central opening on the west, blank arcades on north and south, and squinches set across the angles. The east arch is round-headed and like the rest very plain.

The porch and vestry are quite plain and balance each other. Externally the church has tall brick parapets with pilasters and a cornice of darker bluish bricks, the gables of the transepts and chancel having stepped and curved outlines with projecting quoins. Over the transept windows are arched semicircular niches, and on the east parapets of the transepts are shallow brick pediments.

The tower is also of brick, but has chamfered stone quoins alternating with the glazed bricks and stone dressed windows. It is of three high stages with a stone modillioned cornice and a plain brick parapet with stone pilasters at the angles. The belfry windows are large and square-headed with moulded architraves and cornices. There are six bells by Thomas Lester and T. Pocock, London, 1752. The tenor and treble were recast and the bell frame strengthened by Mears & Stainbank in 1900. In the second stage are circular windows on the east and west, and on the ground stage three two-light windows, north, south and west, the latter being the largest and higher up, having below it a blocked round-headed doorway with projecting stone quoins. At the north-east is a stair with well-worked vaulted brick ceiling and steps.

The seating is of 18th-century date and of panelled oak, solid and good. The font is modern and octagonal. At the east of the nave hangs a pretty brass chandelier of 18th-century date, and the church has also modern brass hanging lamps and brass candlesticks fastened to the pews.

The plate consists of a pair of silver chalices of 1717 inscribed 'The gift of Jemmett Raymond Esq. 1717'; two silver patens of 1713 inscribed 'Ex dono Gab. Barnaby hujus ecclesiae Rectoris'; and a silver flagon of 1873, the gift of the Rev. Richard Pole.

The earliest book of the registers contains all entries from 1717, baptisms and burials running to 1812 and marriages to 1754. At the beginning is a note giving this book as 'volume the third,' but the earlier books have been lost. The second book contains marriages from 1761 to 1812.

The first mention of a church in ADVOWSON Wolverton is in 1286 in the inquisition taken on the death of Reginald Fitz Peter.<sup>74</sup> The advowson has throughout followed the descent of the manor.<sup>75</sup> By order in council (2 July 1880) Wolverton rectory was united with the rectory of Ewhurst.<sup>76</sup>

Sir George Browne by will dated CHARITIES 11 April 1685 devised four small houses and parcels of land in trust for the poor.

The trust estate now consists of cottages and land containing about 15 acres, producing yearly about £20.

In 1906 coals to the value of £4 12s. were distributed among the poor and £14 10s. in cash at Christmas.

<sup>69</sup> Phillimore & Fry, Changes of Name, 257.

<sup>70</sup> G.E.C. Complete Baronetage, v, 275.

<sup>71</sup> Ibid.

<sup>72</sup> Information supplied by the agent of the Duke of Wellington.

<sup>73</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 23.

<sup>74</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Edw. I, no. 18.

<sup>75</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.),

137; Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 42 d.; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 103, 226; Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 29, 68 d., 93 d., 105, 176; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>76</sup> Lond. Gaz. 2 July 1880, p. 3752.

LITCHFIELD CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING EAST

WOLVERTON CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING EAST

THE HUNDRED OF EVINGAR

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

ASHMANSWORTH
BAUGHURST
BURGHCLERE<sup>1</sup>
FREEFOLK
HIGHCLERE

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS
NEWTOWN
ST. MARY BOURNE
WHITCHURCH
EAST WOODHAY

The above list represents the extent of the hundred in 1831.<sup>2</sup>

At the time of the Domesday Survey<sup>3</sup> the hundred of Evingar comprised Whitchurch, Freefolk, Hurstbourne Priors<sup>4</sup> and Clere,<sup>5</sup> and was assessed at 78½ hides,<sup>6</sup> whereas in the time of King Edward the Confessor it had been assessed at 86 hides.

In the 13th century the hundred included, besides, Ecchinswell in Kingsclere, Ashmansworth, East Woodhay<sup>7</sup> and Newtown,<sup>8</sup> making its extent almost identical with that of 1831.

The tithing of Swampton in the parish of St. Mary Bourne, which was included under Kingsclere Hundred at the time of the Domesday Survey, formed part of the hundred of Evingar before 1346.<sup>9</sup> The tithing of Earlstone in the parish of Burghclere was included in the hundred of Pastrow in 1316 and in the hundred of Kingsclere in 1346 and 1428.<sup>10</sup> It was not until after 1831 that it was transferred from Kingsclere to Evingar. Between 1831 and 1841 Tufton was added to the hundred, and in 1850 a separate ecclesiastical parish was formed of Woolton Hill, originally in the parish of East Woodhay.

In 1280 the hundred was declared to be the property of the Prior and convent of St. Swithun and its value was given as 40s.,<sup>11</sup> and in 1284 John de Pontoise, Bishop of Winchester gave up all right in the hundred to the prior and convent.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Except the tithing of Earlstone in the hundred of Kingsclere.

<sup>2</sup> Pop. Ret. (1831).

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>4</sup> St. Mary Bourne with the tithings of Egbury, Benley, Week and Stoke, and possibly Baughurst, were included in the entry of Hurstbourne Priors.

<sup>5</sup> Highclere or Burghclere or both.

<sup>6</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>7</sup> Assize R. 33 Hen III printed in Stevens' St. Mary Bourne, 298.

<sup>8</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215b.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 490a; Feud. Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. ii, 309, 331, 345. The insertion under Pastrow in 1316 is probably erroneous. See under Pastrow Hundred.

<sup>11</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 301.

<sup>12</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 288.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

ASHMANSWORTH

Æscmeresworth (x cent.); Esmeresworda, Esshermeresworth, Ashmeresworth (xiii cent.); Ashmansworth (xviii cent.).

The parish of Ashmansworth lies west of East Woodhay; the greater part of the land lies high and there is very little woodland. A belt of trees forms part of the western boundary, while within the parish are Privet Copse and Buckhanger Copse in the north, Codley Copse north-west of the village, and Sidley Wood in the south.

The village itself consists mainly of a few farms; Manor Farm, Steel's Farm, and Porter's Farm are north of the church, while south of it are Church Farm and Lower Manor Farm. The school, which is not far from Manor Farm, was built in 1872, and the Methodist chapel, near by, in 1888.

Several chalk-pits are scattered about the parish, which has a heavy soil with a subsoil of chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats and turnips. There are 1,003 acres of arable land, 282 acres of permanent grass and 94 acres of woods and plantations,<sup>1</sup> and the total acreage of the parish is 1,821 acres.

Some place-names of interest are Downlanger, Mowshold, Hyther, Boccambe Downe, a close called Gallycoop and Hardyngs Croft (1725).<sup>2</sup>

When the church was restored in 1900 some fragments of Roman urns and pottery were discovered.

ASHMANSWORTH, which was MANOR granted as part of Whitchurch to the church of Winchester for the maintenance of the monks by Earl Hemele, was subsequently appropriated by the Bishop of Winchester, but was restored to the church by Edward of Wessex in 909.<sup>3</sup>

In 934 King Athelstan confirmed the church of Winchester in possession of ten cassates at Ashmansworth 'ad refectorium fratribus et ad vestimenta,' directing that this land should be under the management of the bishop.<sup>4</sup>

The prior and convent, however, had lost all their right to the manor by the 13th century, Ashmansworth being entirely in the bishop's hands<sup>5</sup> in 1208-9 and mentioned in the general confirmation of his manors made by Edward I in 1284.<sup>6</sup>

It remained among the possessions of the bishopric until 1649,<sup>7</sup> when it was sold to Obadiah Sedgwick,<sup>8</sup> 'minister in Covent Garden,' who on his death in March 1654-5 left it by will to his son Obadiah, 'together with the piece of gilt plate with the cover which the king and queen of Bohemia gave unto mee.'<sup>9</sup> In 1660, however, the manor, like Ecchinswell (q.v. in Kingsclere), evidently returned to the bishop<sup>10</sup> and passed in the late 18th or early 19th century to the Herbert family, by whose representative the Earl of Carnarvon it is now held.

The church of ST. JAMES<sup>10a</sup> consists of a chancel 27 ft. 8 in. by 15 ft. 2 in. and a nave 31 ft. 8 in. by 21 ft. 6 in., with a south porch and a wooden bell-turret over the west end.

The history of the church begins about the middle of the 12th century, to which date the nave belongs. The chancel, judging by its north windows, dates from the end of the same century. Windows have been inserted at various dates and the east wall was rebuilt in 1745.

The east window of the chancel, which has a wooden frame and dates from 1745, is blocked inside. The north wall of the chancel contains two round-headed windows of chalk masonry, now much weathered; they are tall and narrow, with an external rebate, the internal jambs showing vertical tooling, and are probably not much earlier than 1200. In the south wall are two much repaired pointed lancets of c. 1220, and beneath the eastern of the pair a plain recess in which is the head of a 12th-century pillar piscina, and a second and larger recess with a segmental head.

The second window has lost its rear arch, a flat lintel taking its place. Near the west end of this wall is a doorway which has old square jambs and a segmental head, the external masonry being much patched and decayed. The chancel arch is round-headed, a little distorted by settlements, and is of a single square order with a grooved and chamfered abacus at the springing and a beaded and chamfered base. On either side is a squint which has been cut at a later date, the wall over them being only carried by thin wood lintels, and their sides have been patched with brickwork. In the gable above the chancel arch is a small splayed opening now boarded up on the east side.

The two two-light windows in the north wall of the nave are 17th-century work and have wooden frames. Below the second of these, which is high up, is an original but much damaged doorway with a plain semicircular head and square jambs. It is blocked and its outer arch seems to have been rebuilt, a relieving arch of tiles showing in the wall.

In the south wall of the nave near the east end is a 14th-century window of two trefoiled lights, to the west of which at the top of the wall is a small square light, with wooden lintels, of uncertain date. The south doorway is quite plain and has a chamfered arch and the porch dates from 1694.

SEE OF WINCHESTER.
*Gules St. Peter's keys crossed with St. Paul's
sword.*

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 159462.

<sup>3</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. v, 174. The boundaries of Æscmereswardet are given in this charter.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. v, 215.

<sup>5</sup> H. Hall, Pipe R. Bp. of Winton (1208-9), 10.

<sup>6</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274.

<sup>7</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215b; Mins. Accts. 1141.

<sup>8</sup> Close, 1649, pt. xviii, no. 7.

<sup>9</sup> P.C.C. Will 20 Wootton.

<sup>10</sup> It appears on the court rolls of the bishopric as late as 1723, when a John Stevens was reeve of the manor (Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 159462).

<sup>10a</sup> But formerly St. Nicholas, as appears from the wills of John Yedele, 1427, and William Cole, 1553.

In the west wall is a modern window of two trefoiled lancets. The internal jambs and part of the rear arch are, however, old, probably of 14th-century date. Two consecration crosses remain in the plaster on the north wall of the nave and two on the south.

The chancel has a plastered segmental ceiling and the nave a roof with modern boarding, but with old moulded plates and two tie-beams, which have large pendant bosses at their centres, one carved with a rose and leaves and the other with a rose between four lions' heads. At the west end the bell-cote is supported by four large posts set against the walls.

The font has been recut to its present form within memory, but is old, and perhaps of the 12th century. A good deal of wall painting was found on the walls of the chancel in 1887, but all is now covered up by colour wash except a small piece between the two north windows, which consists of the upper portion of a figure and is said to represent St. Anne. It is of very good style, in red outline, but now much faded. A note by Mr. Walter Money, published in the Newbury Weekly News of 3 November 1887, describes the principal figure as being on the left splay of the north window, representing a saint in vestments in an attitude of adoration to another figure.

During some restorations in 1900 more paintings were discovered in the nave. Over the chancel arch are remains of a doom, with blank spaces for the rood, our Lady and St. John, and below, and partly behind a 17th-century tie-beam, are two tiers of subjects of earlier style which have been identified as a Harrowing of Hell and the Day of Pentecost.

There are the lower portions of three nude figures and on the right-hand side are remains of what appear to be a dragon's wings and other small human figures. These fragments have been partly hidden by later work, probably of the 17th century, which is continued lower down and also occurs in patches on the north and south walls of the nave. The royal arms, probably of Charles II, are painted over the chancel arch on canvas.

Between the two windows of the north wall of the nave is part of a 15th-century painting of a man in a red and white robe; the right arm and hand are visible but the head is gone. There was an inscription above, and some drapery near the shoulders of the man shows that it is St. Christopher with the child Christ.

There are three bells in the turret, the first being inscribed, 'God be our guyd I W 1588'; the second, 'Samuell Knight of Reading meade mee 1692'; and the third, 'Robert Wells, Aldbourne 1780.'

The chalice, paten and alms dish belonging to this church are Sheffield plate.

The registers commence at 1810, all those previous to this date having been burnt.

Ashmansworth was formerly a ADVOWSON chapel dependent on the church of East Woodhay, which was in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>11</sup> The two churches were separated at the time of the Reformation, but were united again some time early in the 18th century.<sup>12</sup> In 1884 a vicar was appointed to Ashmansworth, and since then it has been a separate vicarage in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>13</sup>

BAUGHURST

Baggehurst, Bagehurst (xii cent.); Baghurst (xv cent.).

The parish of Baughurst on the northern borders of Hampshire consists of the village of Baughurst and the tithings of Inhurst and Ham. Inhurst occupies the northern part of the parish, where there is a quantity of woodland. The thickly-wooded common of Baughurst is in the extreme north, and other copses within the tithings are Great Baughurst Copse, Wigmore Copse, Heath Row Copse and Great Copse. The parish lies low and is liable to floods from the stream which runs northwards through the tithing of Ham. It is evident that this was a source of trouble in very early times, as in 1451 it is recorded that 'via equina et pedalis inter Foxcote et Baghurst super-effluitur per inundationem aquae supervenientis in defectu exaltationis ejusdem bis ad nocumentum patriae et transiuntium.'<sup>1</sup> Near the eastern boundary of the parish is the village of Baughurst, north of which is Manor Farm, standing back from the road which runs north to Reading. Causeway Farm is close to the village, and there is a school which was built in 1843. Other places in the parish are Browning

Hill, Pound Green and Town End. Baughurst House, near Pound Green, is the residence of Mr. John Singleton. Some place-names of interest are Rushmoore, le Netherparte, Fossattmeade (1693) and Causway (1661).<sup>2</sup>

The commons were inclosed in 1827.<sup>3</sup> The soil and subsoil are clay and the crops are the usual cereals. The total acreage is 1,797 acres, of which 684½ acres are arable land, 618½ acres permanent grass and 203½ woods and plantations.<sup>4</sup> The Duke of Wellington is the principal landowner in the parish.

There is no definite mention of the MANORS manor of BAUGHURST in the Domesday Survey. However, it was probably granted to the church of Winchester as part of Hurstbourne Priors (q.v.) by King Alfred, and may possibly be represented in the survey by the unidentified holding of a certain William, '2 hides less 1 virgate' in Hurstbourne, since it was the duty of the tenants of Baughurst to make suit at the court of Hurstbourne until their suit was transferred to the manor and court of Manydown by 1462.<sup>5</sup> Thus Baughurst, as probably included in Hurstbourne, was held by the Bishop of <sup>11</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, App.

<sup>12</sup> Information kindly supplied by the Rev. C. P. C. Seagrims.

<sup>13</sup> Clergy List (1910).

<sup>1</sup> Kitchen, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 90.

<sup>2</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 159492; Ct. R.

quoted in The Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 141.

<sup>3</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>4</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>5</sup> Kitchen, op. cit. 7. By this date Baughurst had been incorporated in the prior and convent manor of Manydown. Thus in a stock book of the latter manor belonging to the year 1390 there is no mention of Baughurst, but in a Baughurst Account Roll of 1462 there is an entry of a fine levied upon the tenants there 'pro secta sua ad Curiam de Husseborn relaxata ita quod praesentare possint omnia dictae Curiae tangencia, dum domino placuerit apud Manydowne.' Ibid.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Winchester for the support of the monks of Winchester, and it is mentioned by name as in his holding in 1259,<sup>6</sup> and again in 1316.<sup>7</sup> However, in the usual way the prior and convent were in full possession in the 14th century, and by the middle of the 15th century Baughurst had again lost its identity, being included 'in the prior and convent manor of Manydown.'<sup>8</sup> At the Dissolution the manor passed to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester in 1541,<sup>9</sup> was evidently included in the sale of Manydown Manor (q.v.) in 1649, and restored with it to the dean and chapter in 1660. Thus it is included in an account of the extent of Manydown Manor in a Chapter Book of 1686.<sup>10</sup> The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, as representatives of the dean and chapter, are now lords of the manor.

The earliest mention of the so-called manor of INHURST (Ineshurst, Isenhurst, Iwnest, xiii and xiv cent.) is, it seems, in 1298, when William de Kenne and Joan his wife, who held adjoining lands in Pamber (q.v. in Barton Stacey Hundred), alienated 13s. rent in Pamber, Ham and Inhurst to Roger de Coudray.<sup>11</sup> The Coudray family held directly of the king, and in 1316 the 'vill of Inhurst' was said to be held by the lord king,<sup>12</sup> while in 1428 Inhurst was said to contain less than ten inhabitants, domiciles, tenements, &c.<sup>13</sup> Obviously the early holding of the Coudrays in Inhurst was very small, but by the end of the 15th century it was reckoned, together with their holding in Pamber, as three messuages, two tofts and 20 acres of land,<sup>14</sup> which William More held of Morgan Kydwelly, knight, by service of 6s. 8d. yearly. Morgan Kydwelly held the inheritance of the Coudrays for life, in right of his wife Avice, the widow of William Coudray, and on his death in March 1506 it passed to Morgan Coudray, heir of William, aged sixteen.<sup>15</sup> Here the connexion between Pamber and Inhurst ceases, the 'manor of Pamber' passed to the Paulets, while Inhurst presumably continued in the Coudray family until sold, probably in the middle of the 16th century, to the Palmes family, who were busily acquiring lands at this date (see under Bentworth). In 1613 Sir Francis Palmes died seised of 'the manor of Inhurst,' but by what tenure he held it was not known; his son and heir, Sir Guy, was over thirty years of age at his father's death.<sup>16</sup> In 1691 John and Michael Acton owned the manor,<sup>17</sup> and in 1713 Fawler and Edward Meaton with their wives conveyed Inhurst to Marcellus Green.<sup>18</sup> Thomas Graham and others were concerned in a conveyance in 1789, when the manor passed to Stephen Maberly,<sup>19</sup> who was probably a trustee, as in the following year he with his wife Mary conveyed Inhurst to Charles Pole,<sup>20</sup> the owner of Wolverton, and from that date it has apparently followed the same descent as Wolverton (q.v.), the present owner being the Duke of Wellington.

COUDRAY. Sable ten billets or.

HAM was another reputed manor in Baughurst, and it appears to have followed the same descent as Inhurst (q.v. supra) from the earliest mention of it in 1298.<sup>21</sup> It is now represented by Ham Farm.

The church of CHURCH ST. STEPHEN is a modern building erected in 1845 on the site of an old structure said to be of 12th-century date. It consists of a chancel, north vestry, nave and a south-west tower, the lower stage of which forms the porch.

The building is of flint and stone in the 13th-century style. A few old stones are re-used, some rebuilt into the west doorway of the vestry, on one of which is a deeply incised cross, and in the west wall of the nave a blocked late 12th-century doorway is inserted.

The low chancel screen is of 15th-century date, with a modern upper beam and crest. It has solid lower panels, entirely plain, and four traceried openings above on either side of the square-headed central doorway. Some more tracery work of the same design and age is used in the quire seats on the north side of the chancel. The altar table is a small late 17th-century specimen.

The font is also of 15th-century date, and has an octagonal bowl with quatrefoiled panels inclosing flowers. The stem is octagonal with a moulded base. The modern open roofs of nave and chancel are of very good design.

The tower has an octagonal upper stage and a stone spire, and its lower stage is vaulted; the stair is at the north-west angle.

On the west wall of the nave is a brass plate of 1674 reciting the charities given in that year by Thomas Sympson of Sherborne St. John.

The tower contains a ring of five bells, all cast by Thomas Swaine, 1775. The tenor is inscribed, 'Mr. Maberly did contrive to run three into five in 1775.'

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1569; a silver paten of 1780, the gift of William De Best, rector at that date; and a silver flagon of 1762 inscribed, 'The gift of John Dollery to the church at Baughurst in the year 1760' (sic).

The first book of registers contains baptisms from 1678 to 1801, marriages from 1678 to 1754 and burials from the same date to 1798. The second book has marriages only from 1754 to 1812, and the third has baptisms from 1805 to 1812 and burials from 1798 to 1812.

PALMES. Gules three fleurs de lis argent and a chief vair.

<sup>6</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 147.

<sup>7</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 308.

<sup>8</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 7, 212.

<sup>9</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix, m. 5-10.

<sup>10</sup> Kitchin, op. cit. 10.

<sup>11</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 26 Edw. I, file 15, 8.

<sup>12</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 311. <sup>13</sup> Ibid. 342.

<sup>14</sup> The total holding of William More was 6 messuages, 4 tofts and 40 acres with appurtenances in Pamber and Inhurst, but of these 3 acres, 2 tofts and 20 acres, the moiety of the holding, were held of the Prior of Sandleford for 8s. yearly, and not of the Coudray inheritance (Chan. Inq. p.m. 21 Edw. IV, file 80, no. 21).

<sup>15</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xix, 71.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. cccxxiii, 43.

<sup>17</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 3 Will. and Mary, rot. 27.

<sup>18</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 12 Anne.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid. East. 29 Geo. III.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. Hants, Mich. 30 Geo. III.

<sup>21</sup> Vide also Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cccxxiii, 43; Recov. R. Trin. 3 Will. and Mary, rot. 27; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 12 Anne; East. 29 Geo. III.

BURGHCLERE CHURCH : THE WEST DOORWAY

ASHMANSWORTH CHURCH : NAVE LOOKING EAST

Edward I confirmed John, Bishop ADVOUSON of Winchester in possession of the advowson of the church of Baughurst in 1284, and the patronage of the living belongs to the bishopric at the present day.<sup>22</sup>

Dr. John Storey, LL.D., had some connexion with the church in the 16th century, since he is once mentioned<sup>23</sup> as presenting during Bishop Gardiner's tenure of the see (1531-55).

From very early days the church paid the hospital of St. Cross a pension of 5*s.*, which is first referred to in a Papal Bull of 1187, and Baughurst is included in a royal charter of 1189, confirming the hospital in possession of several churches.<sup>24</sup>

'A certain pension' was deducted from the value of Baughurst Church in the 16th century, and the rector pays the pension at the present day.<sup>25</sup>

The Primitive Methodists and the Baptists have chapels in the parish.

In 1674 Thomas Sympson by his CHARITIES will charged his lands in the tithing of Inhurst with an annuity of £15 for the poor of six parishes, including Baughurst, to be laid out in the distribution of bread. The sum of 50*s.* for this parish is paid by Mr. Frederick Hunt, the owner of the property charged, consisting of 10 acres, known as 'Jack Higgs' land.

The poor formerly received also an annuity of 10*s.* mentioned in the parliamentary returns of 1786 as the gift of Robert Green by will 1712, but which has ceased to be paid.

The National school, founded in 1843, is regulated by scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 1 November 1872.

In 1870 Charles Lamb, by deed, gave £100 consols, the dividends to be applied by the rector in providing four prizes of a religious kind to be awarded annually to boys in the parish school. The stock is held by the official trustees.

The official trustees hold a sum of £63 9s. 10*d.* India 3 per cent. stock, the dividends of which, amounting to £1 18*s.*, are under a declaration of trust, dated 11 March 1897, applicable, under the title of 'The Baughurst Charity,' for the relief of deserving and necessitous poor.

BURGHCLERE

Clere Episcopi, Burcler (xiii cent.); Bisshopesclere, Bourghclere, Burghclere (xiv cent.); Boroughclere, Burghcleere, Borowecclere, Burcleare (xvi cent.); Burroughclere, Borough Cleere, Burgh Cleere (xvii cent.).

Burghclere is a large parish 5 miles west of Kingsclere, and is immediately adjacent to Highclere, which is on its western boundary. In the centre of the parish stands the old church of All Saints, and close by is Burghclere Manor House, which was formerly the rectory, and is now the residence of Mr. P. H. Woods. Burghclere Farm is north of the old church.

The modern church of The Ascension stands on a hill in the north of the parish; near it are the school and the rectory. Earlstone Common and Burghclere Common are in this part of the parish, and east of these commons is the estate of Adbury Park, the residence of Mr. W. F. Fox. Earlstone Farm on the north-west side of the river which forms the north-eastern boundary of the parish and Earlstone are south of Earlstone Common, and on the north side of Burghclere Common is the small parish of Newtown, the chapelry of which is annexed to the rectory of Burghclere. Other places of importance in the parish are Heatherwold in the north, Whitway on a hill on the north-west boundary, Wergs 1 mile north-east of the village and Palmer's Hill. The Methodist chapel, built in 1864 and rebuilt in 1894, is north of Whitway, near the Newbury road.

The commons were inclosed in 1783.<sup>1</sup>

Some place-names of interest are Le Byle, Erchelreston and Harte (1558),<sup>2</sup> Garstone (14th century),<sup>3</sup>

Nochesland<sup>4</sup> and Pilgrims' Farm at Earlstone, which probably derived its name from being on the line of an ancient trackway, a pilgrims' way which leads to Winchester.<sup>5</sup>

The southern part of the parish is open down country. Beacon Hill, which is 842 ft. above the ordnance datum, is here a conspicuous landmark, upon which are the remains of an ancient earthwork. Down Farm lies east of the hill close to the Great Western Railway, which runs almost due north from here through the parish.

The total acreage of the parish is 5,269 acres, of which 1,740 acres are arable land, 2,174 acres permanent grass and 500 acres woods and plantations.<sup>6</sup> The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats; the soil varies, being chiefly gravel and chalk, the subsoil chalk and greensand.

In 1233 the common fields<sup>7</sup> (campi) of Burghclere comprised Stock (67½ acres), Surlande (31½ acres), Harebert and Leylie (242 acres), Lendecumbe (151 acres), as well as 10 acres of meadow dispersed over the manor.

There are several very early grants MANORS of land at CLERE to the church at Winchester.

In 749 King Cuthred granted 'aliquantulum portionem juxta mensuram scilicet x familiarum quam solicolae Cleran nominant' to the church at Winchester,<sup>8</sup> in 955 King Eadred granted 'quandam particulam bis quinis mansiunculis estimatam quam solicole nominant Cleran' to Ælfsige, Bishop of Winchester, for four lives with reversion to the church at Winchester,<sup>9</sup> and King Edgar, who was

<sup>22</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 235; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>23</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 159*b*.

<sup>24</sup> Harl. Chart. 43 C 28; Kitchen, Manor of Manydown (Hants Rec. Soc.), 96.

<sup>25</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 15; Kitchen, op. cit. 96.

<sup>1</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 24 Geo. III, m. 108.

<sup>2</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 155974.

<sup>3</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 75*b*.

<sup>4</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 144.

<sup>5</sup> Hunts Field Club Proc. iv (2), 162.

<sup>6</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>7</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 23, no. 159283.

<sup>8</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 256. The boundaries of the land are given.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. iii, 65. In this charter also the bounds are given.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

reigning in 959, confirmed 'quoddam rus x videlicet mansarum quantitate taxatum usitato ÆTCLEARAN nuncupatum vocabulo' to the church at Winchester; this confirmation describes this land as having been formerly granted to the church by Ethelwulf, but in later times unjustly seized 'perfidis raptoribus.'<sup>10</sup>

Clere, which possibly includes BURGHCLERE and HIGHCLERE, is described in the Domesday Survey of 1086 as consisting of 10 hides in the time of Edward the Confessor and 7½ hides in 1086, and as being held by the Bishop of Winchester for the support of the monks of Winchester.<sup>11</sup>

In 1167 and 1206 there is a reference to Clere Episcopi.<sup>12</sup> As early as 1208-9 Burghclere and Highclere had each its own reeve, and soon after they are separately accounted for on the Pipe Rolls of the see of Winchester.<sup>13</sup>

Burghclere remained in the possession of the see of Winchester until 1551, when Edward VI received it from John Poynt, Bishop of Winchester, in exchange for lands elsewhere.<sup>14</sup> The king granted it to William Fitz William in the same year,<sup>15</sup> and although, under Philip and Mary, John White, the then Bishop of Winchester, was reinstated in 1557,<sup>16</sup> William Fitz William died seised in 1559, leaving four daughters as his heirs. Of these Mabel, the eldest, was married to Sir Thomas Browne, and Katharine to Christopher Preston Viscount Gormanston; the two younger, both called Elizabeth, subsequently married Francis Jermy and Innocent Rede respectively.<sup>17</sup>

Sir William bequeathed the manor to his wife Jane for life, and after her death to his three younger daughters, whose respective husbands are found each holding a third part<sup>18</sup>; in 1568 Innocent Rede and Elizabeth his wife conveyed a third part of the manor to Hugh Hare, in 1569 Francis Jermy was concerned in the conveyance of a third, and in 1576 Christopher Viscount Gormanston held a third.<sup>19</sup> In 1577 Richard Kingsmill acquired by fines the whole manor<sup>20</sup> which George Kingsmill, his brother, was holding for life at the time of Richard's death in 1600.<sup>21</sup> Constance, only daughter and heir of Richard, married Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote (co. Warw.), whom she survived,<sup>22</sup> and on her death in January 1637<sup>23</sup> her son Sir Thomas Lucy inherited. In 1647 the manor was in possession of Spencer Lucy son and heir of Sir Thomas, and it passed with Highclere to his brother Richard, who owned the latter manor in 1667, and presented to the church of Burghclere in 1661.<sup>24</sup> Ten years later the property was conveyed to Sir Robert Sawyer, who died seised of the manors of Burghclere and High Clere in 1692, leaving as heiress an only daughter, Margaret wife of Thomas Earl of Pembroke, ancestor of the Earls of Carnarvon.<sup>25</sup> Burghclere has remained in the possession of the same family since this date, and is now in the hands of George Edward Stanhope, fifth earl, the first earl inheriting by the will of his uncle, the Hon Robert Sawyer Herbert, second son of Thomas Earl of Pembroke.<sup>26</sup>

In 1218 the king granted permission to Peter, Bishop of Winchester to have a weekly market on Monday at his manor of 'Novo Burgo de Clere.'<sup>27</sup>

In the 17th and 18th centuries mention is made of the rights of free warren, free fishery, court leet and court baron and view of frankpledge, which belonged to the lord of the manor of Burghclere,<sup>28</sup> and in the reign of Elizabeth 'a grievous complaint' was made by the inhabitants of Burghclere and other manors against Richard Kingsmill, 'Surveyour of her Majesty's Court of Wardes and Liveries,' 'concerning the breach of sundry customes, innovacions of tythes, encroachments of pasture, &c.'<sup>29</sup>

The manor of EARLSTONE (Erlestone, 1167; Hurleston, 1316; Urleston, 1346) is undoubtedly represented in Domesday by the 3 hides 2½ virgates in Clere held by William son of Baderon. It had been held by Saxi of King Edward as 4 hides.<sup>30</sup> In 1167 it was in the possession of Baderon,<sup>31</sup> descendant of William, son of Baderon of Domesday, and son of Withenoc de Monmouth.<sup>32</sup> John de Monmouth, either the son or grandson of Gilbert, son of Baderon, is returned as the overlord of Earlstone in the Testa de Nevill, but in the 16th century the overlordship belonged to the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>33</sup>

Robert de Treigoz, or Treget, who held Earlstone as half a knight's fee of the old enfeoffment of John de Monmouth, was succeeded in its possession by Walter Treget. At the beginning of the reign of Edward I Emma the widow of William Fawkenor claimed the manor by grant from Walter Treget, but his charter being denounced as invalid she gave up all right in this manor to William son and heir of Walter Treget, and Humphrey Dunster, his guardian, paid her in return 160 marks.<sup>34</sup> Humphrey was allowed to retain the manor until he had received the value of the 150 marks which he had thus spent on behalf of his ward, and William Treget conveyed the manor to his guardian in 1283. Thus in 1316 Geoffrey Dunster, the son of Humphrey, was returned as owner.<sup>35</sup> Anthony de Braden appears to have had some claim to the manor, as in the following year there was a fine between him and Geoffrey, when it was agreed that Geoffrey and Isabel and the heirs of Geoffrey should hold the manor of Anthony and his heirs 'for a rose at Midsummer and for doing the service due to chief lords instead of Anthony.'<sup>36</sup> It seems probable that Isabel wife of Geoffrey married

<sup>10</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. iii, 406.

<sup>11</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>12</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191; Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 39, 69b.

<sup>13</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 22.

<sup>14</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 308; Mins. Accts. bdle. 1141, 1142; Inq. a.q.d. (Ser. 2), ccccl, 17; Pat. 5 Edw. VI, pt. vi, m. 26.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. pt. vi.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. 4 & 5 Phil. and Mary, pt. vii, m. 19.

<sup>17</sup> Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cxxviii, 75; Nicholls, Topog. and Gen. iii, 405.

<sup>18</sup> P.C.C. Will 53 Chaynay.

<sup>19</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 10 & 11

Eliz.; Hants, East. 11 Eliz.; Div. Co. Mich. 18 Eliz.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. Hants, Hil. 19 Eliz.; Recov. R. Hil. 19 Eliz. rot. 932; Com. Pleas Deeds Enr. Hil. 19 Eliz.

<sup>21</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 128; Berry, Hants Gen. 45.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 3 Jas. I.

<sup>23</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dlxxxvi, 112.

<sup>24</sup> Recov. R. East. 23 Chas. I. rot. 99; Trin. 19 Chas. II. rot. 129; Burke, Commoners, iii, 99; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>25</sup> P.C.C. Will 175 Fane.

<sup>26</sup> Topog. and Gen. iii, 408; P.C.C. Will 166 Bogg.

<sup>27</sup> Rot. Lit. Claus. (Rec. Com.), i, 363.

<sup>28</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 28 Chas. II; Recov. R. East. 6 Geo. I. rot. 728.

<sup>29</sup> Acts of P.C. 1590-9, p. 160.

<sup>30</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 498.

<sup>31</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191.

<sup>32</sup> Banks, Dormant and Extinct Peerage, i, 138.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid.; Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 231; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xlix, 4.

<sup>34</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 261; Coram Rege R. 1, m. 6 d.

<sup>35</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 309; Feet of F. Southants, Mich. 11 Edw. II. no. 27.

<sup>36</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 11 Edw. II.

as her second husband John Gambon, as he with his wife Isabel was holding the manor of Earlstone in 1364 for the life of Isabel.<sup>37</sup> Earlstone is then described as 'the hereditament of Stephen son of John Jeysaunt,' who may possibly have been a descendant of Anthony.<sup>38</sup>

Isabel died between 1364 and 1374, and in the latter year John Fauconer of Hurstbourne released all his right in the manor of Earlstone to William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester.<sup>39</sup> The manor was inherited by the bishop's heir, Sir Thomas Wykeham,<sup>40</sup> his great-nephew, and in 1402 he was granted free warren there.<sup>41</sup> Eighteen years later Sir Thomas with Elizabeth his wife conveyed the manor to Robert Dyneley and Thomas Loundres, the latter with his wife Joan holding for life.<sup>42</sup> In 1431 Sir Thomas Wykeham gave up his reversionary right to the manor to Thomas Lestraunge,<sup>43</sup> probably in trust, as the manor ultimately went to the Fiennes family, who were the heirs of Sir Thomas Wykeham. Margaret granddaughter of Sir Thomas married William Fiennes Lord Say and Sele, and her grandson Richard died seised of the manor of Earlstone.<sup>44</sup> Elizabeth West, widow of Richard, held during her lifetime, and the manor passed after her death to Edward Fiennes, her son by her first husband.<sup>45</sup> Earlstone remained in the hands of the Fiennes family for two more generations. Edward, dying in 1528, was succeeded by his son Richard,<sup>46</sup> who died in 1573, leaving a son and heir of the same name.<sup>47</sup> Thirteen years later the manor was conveyed by this second Richard to Benjamin Tichborne, Richard Beconshaw and Martin Tichborne.<sup>48</sup> John Beconshaw of Earlstone, who was a cousin of Richard, married Anne daughter of Nicholas Tichborne and sister of Benjamin.<sup>49</sup> In the reign of Elizabeth John Beconshaw was outlawed for recusancy and his possessions, including '2 closes of pasture in the tithing of Earlstone,' besides a lease of the manor of Burghclere, were forfeited in 1583.<sup>50</sup> He was apparently not at this time seised of the manor, but probably subsequently acquired it from Benjamin, Richard and Martin, who were apparently only acting as trustees in the conveyance of 1586. His son Peter conveyed the manor to Jeremy Tichborne and Thomas Harrys in 1609,<sup>51</sup> probably for the purpose of a trust, for Peter, who died in 1641, is described on his tombstone as of Earlstone.<sup>52</sup> There is a reference in 1664<sup>53</sup> to Benjamin Beconshaw of Burghclere, doubtless his brother, but whether he succeeded to his brother's estate is not known.

WYKEHAM. Argent two cheverons sable between three roses gules.

FIENNES. Azure three lions or.

In the late 17th and early 18th centuries the Cornwallis family held Earlstone. Thus in 1698 Cornelius Cornwallis of Earlstone bought the manor of Little Ann,<sup>54</sup> and in 1721 Elizabeth Cornwallis owned Earlstone (see infra under 'Charities'). Admiral John Ambrose was holding the estate at his death in 1771,<sup>55</sup> and John Ambrose, presumably his son, was holding in 1778.<sup>56</sup> Soon after this date the manor passed to the Herbert family, and so descended to the present owner, the fifth Earl of Carnarvon.<sup>57</sup>

There is very little known of the manor of WHITWAY or WHITEWEYES, the overlordship of which belonged to the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>58</sup>

Sanchea Carvanell, whose first husband was Edward Dyneley, died in 1494 seised of the reversion of the manor, which Anne Dyneley, widow of William Dyneley, grandfather of Edward, was then holding for the term of her life.<sup>59</sup> Thomas Dyneley, son of Edward and Sanchea, died in 1502, leaving a daughter Elizabeth, heiress of the manor of Whitway, which Anne, the widow of her great-great-grandfather, was apparently still holding.<sup>60</sup> Elizabeth married George Barrett,<sup>61</sup> and their son Edward in 1571 conveyed the manor to John Knight.<sup>62</sup> In the latter half of the 17th century James Gardner owned the manor,<sup>63</sup> but its history cannot be traced after that date. It has apparently lost all manorial existence, but belongs now to Lord Carnarvon, whose forester occupies Whitway House.<sup>64</sup>

The present parish church of Burgh-CHURCHES is the CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION. It is a medium-sized building, dating from 1838, and originally it had a small apsidal chancel, nave, transepts and west tower. About thirty years ago it was enlarged, the chancel being rebuilt on a large scale with a north vestry and south chapel; a spire was added to the tower and other work done.

The plate consists of a silver chalice indistinctly dated, a silver paten, flagon and alms dish of 1837, and a pewter flagon of 1680.

CORNWALLIS. Sable with drops argent and a fesse argent with three Cornish choughs thereon.

<sup>37</sup> In 1346 John Gambon was holding  $\frac{1}{2}$  fee lately belonging to Humphrey Dunster (Feud. Aids, ii, 331).

<sup>38</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 38 Edw. III.

<sup>39</sup> Close, 47 Edw. III, m. 31.

<sup>40</sup> Her. and Gen. v, 228.

<sup>41</sup> Chart. R. 3 & 4 Hen. IV, no. 2.

<sup>42</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 8 Hen. V; Trin. 9 Hen. VI.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid.

<sup>44</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xv, 61; Her. and Gen. v, 228; G.E.C. Peerage, vii, 64.

<sup>45</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xli, 73.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid. xlix, 4.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid. clxvii, 72.

<sup>48</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 28 Eliz.

<sup>49</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (3), 163; Berry, Hants Gen. 31.

<sup>50</sup> Exch. Spec. Com. Hants, no. 2030.

<sup>51</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 7 Jas. I.

<sup>52</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (4), 159.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid. iv (3), 163.

<sup>54</sup> Close, 10 Will. III, pt. xi, no. 18.

<sup>55</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (2), 60; Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>56</sup> Sir Thomas Gatehouse's MS. Survey of Hants *pene*s Lord Swaythling.

<sup>57</sup> Ex inform. the Earl of Carnarvon.

<sup>58</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ix, 94.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid. Vide Wolverton in Kingsclere Hundred.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid. xvi, 123.

<sup>61</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xiv, 548.

<sup>62</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 13 Eliz.

<sup>63</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 28 & 29 Chas. II, rot. 41.

<sup>64</sup> Ex inform. the Earl of Carnarvon.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The old church of ALL SAINTS at Burghclere is of greater interest. It has a chancel 26 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft. 1 in., nave 71 ft. by 19 ft. 3 in., and a north transept 18 ft. 9 in. by 17 ft. 2 in.

The nave dates from 1100-20, except some 25 ft. at the west end, which is an addition of about 1240. The original chancel was rebuilt 1220, and about 1280 the north transept was added. Larger windows replaced those of earlier date in the nave in the latter part of the 14th century. When the new parish church was built, this building fell into a dilapidated condition, and remained so until 1861, when it was restored. During the restoration a painting of the Martyrdom of St. Sebastian was found over the chancel arch, but it was not preserved. The chancel has been practically rebuilt, and all its windows and other details are modern. The walls are of flint with stone dressings, and in the transept the masonry is in alternate bands of flint and wrought stone.

The east window of the chancel has a group of three lancets under a two-centred rear arch, with jamb shafts and foliate capitals; in the north wall are two lancet windows, and between them a pointed doorway with undercut moulded jambs and arch. There were probably two similar lancets in the south wall, but square head with a moulded label outside, and the other is a modern copy of it. Between the windows is a blocked 12th-century doorway with angle shafts in the jambs having early volute capitals and moulded bases; the abaci are grooved and hollow-chamfered; and the semicircular arch is moulded with a roll and hollow, and has a label carved with billet ornament. The internal jambs and rear arch are 13th-century work.

On the south side are three two-light windows like those opposite; the first and second have modern mullions, while the third is entirely new. Between the latter two windows is another blocked 12th-century doorway, plainer and smaller than the other; the jambs are chamfered, and stopped below the springing line of the arch with a ball stop, and there is no abacus; the head is round with a tympanum carved with scale ornament and has no label. Several sundials are scratched on its jambs, and also on the quoins of the south-east angle of the nave. The walls at the west end of the nave are thickened outside about 6 in. On the north side the thickening is carried up to within 6 ft. of the eaves, and extends 14 ft. 6 in. from the west face; on the south side it is stopped below the window sill, but is almost twice the length. The west doorway is a good example of 13th-century work. The jambs are of three orders, the inner and outermost with edge rolls, and the middle with a filleted bowtell between two small hollow chamfers. Each of the two outer rolls has detached shafts with moulded bases and carved foliate capitals with grooved, hollow-chamfered and beaded abaci. The arch is pointed; of its only the western one is now to be seen, the position of the other being covered by a wall monument.

PLAN OF ALL SAINTS', BURGHCLERE

A large burial vault belonging to the Earl of Carnarvon's family is built against this wall outside.

The chancel arch has square 12th-century jambs, but a later, probably 13th-century, pointed arch of two chamfered orders. It is probable that the original chancel arch was narrower, and that the jambs are reset in their present position. On the west the corbels for the back beams of the rood loft remain on either side, and in a recess in the south jamb of the arch stands an hour glass. The arch into the north transept is very obtusely pointed, of two chamfered orders dying into a chamfered jamb on the west and into the wall on the east. The east and north windows of the transept are each of three trefoiled lights with soffit cusps, and with plain intersecting tracery under a two-centred head, the north window being the taller of the two; they are coeval with the transept, though the stonework is new in places.

In the east wall is also a modernized piscina recess without a basin, now hidden behind the organ. Of the two north windows of the nave, the first is a late 14th-century insertion of two trefoiled lights under a three orders the innermost continues from the jambs; the second and outermost are a series of filleted rounds and deep hollows, and the label is moulded. The doorway has been restored in parts; the middle order in the north jamb with its capital is wholly modern. Above the doorway is a modern window of two lancets with a quatrefoil over.

The walling generally is of flint with large mortar joints and with stone dressings. The roof of the chancel is modern, open-timbered below with round trussed rafters. The nave roof is old but has no distinctive mouldings; it is open-timbered with cross-braced rafters and simply moulded tie-beams, and has a heavy wall plate in three stages. The transept roof also has old tie-beams; all the roofs are tiled, and over the west end of the nave is a plain painted wood bell-turret of modern date, and the west bay of the roof is also modern.

The font is a modern square one of 12th-century style.

There are some good plain oak pews of 17th-century date in the nave; the other furniture is modern, except the altar table, which dates from 1716.

In the nave floor is a small brass inscription on a Petworth marble slab to Thomas Hilman, 1615; this is the oldest monument in the church. There are also slabs to Peter Beconsawe, 1641; Ann wife of John Warner, 'youman,' 1685; Stephen Hunt, 1716; and in the north transept brass plates to John Brownejohn, 1633; Mary his wife, 1637; and other members of the family. On the south wall of the chancel is a grey marble monument to Mrs. Anne Eyre, 1745, and lying loose on the floor are stones to John Sladd, a former rector, 1689, and to Judith Sladd, October 5 1677; these were formerly in the churchyard.

Of the four bells formerly here only one remains; it is inscribed 'Henri Knight made me 1621.' The other three have been removed to the present parish church. The first of these is inscribed: 'Blessed be the name of the Lord. C. W. 1602'; the second 'May Christ be our joy. William Houldwy, 1691'; and the third is by Robert Wells of Aldbourne, 1764.

The plate consists of two silver chalices, one of 1837; three silver patens, of 1664, presented by Maria Sladd in 1667, of 1870, presented by Henry Howard Molyneux Earl of Carnarvon in 1872, and of 1899; and a silver flagon of 1870 presented by Henrietta Countess Dowager of Carnarvon in 1872.

The registers begin in 1559, the first book containing baptisms from that date to 1655, marriages to 1623 and burials from 1561 to 1656; the second has baptisms from 1646 to 1712, marriages 1656 to 1711, and burials 1655 to 1712; the third baptisms from 1712 to 1812 and marriages 1712 to 1753; all the former books are in vellum. The fourth is on paper and contains burials 1695 to 1812, marriages 1693 to 1711, and baptisms 1695 to 1711, and some briefs from 1712 to 1740; the fifth is the printed marriage register from 1754 to 1812.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Burghclere has always belonged to the lord of the manor.<sup>65</sup> In the Domesday Survey of 1086 mention is made of the priest Alvrice who held of the Bishop of Winchester 1 hide of land with the church in Clere.<sup>66</sup> The rector of Burghclere had right of common at Wood Garston in the early times, but in 1312-13 in compensation for this right he was granted common of pasture for 16 oxen in the bishop's pasture at Burghclere; a further grant was made in 1403 adding common of pasture for 100 ewes and 4 rams to compensate the rector for the loss of tithe caused by the inclosure of the park.<sup>67</sup>

The School.—In 1721 Elizabeth Cornwallis, by will, devised a rent-charge of £10 per annum for teaching poor children to read. The annuity is paid by the Earl of Carnarvon out of the estate called Earlstone, which formerly belonged to the testatrix.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH, BURGHCLERE, FROM THE WEST

The Poor's Allotments, which formerly consisted of 70 acres acquired under an award, 1783, made under the Inclosure Act for this parish and Highclere, have been sold, and the trust funds are now represented by £2,163 3s. 7d. consols, with the official trustees, producing £90 11s. yearly, which, under a scheme of 10 March 1874, is applicable in the distribution of coals, clothing, blankets and gifts of money in special cases.

<sup>65</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 572; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 16, 77, 105; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cxxviii, 75; cclxviii, 128; Recov. R. East. 6 Geo. I, rot. 728; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>66</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>67</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 553.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

FREEFOLK

Frigefolk (xi cent.); Frifhoc (xii cent.); Fryfolk (xiii cent.); Freefolke, Frefolk, Fryfolk Syfrewast, Freefolk Sifrewast (xiv cent.); South Fryfolk, South Freefolk (xv cent.).

Freefolk, which is attached to Laverstoke for ecclesiastical purposes, is on the River Test, 1½ miles east of Whitchurch. It is an undulating parish of 1,594 acres, of which 886 acres are arable land and 291½ acres permanent grass.<sup>1</sup> The soil is heavy, the subsoil chalk. The hamlet, which consists of a few houses in the extreme north of the parish, is within the boundaries of Laverstoke Park. Close to the River Test, west of the hamlet, are the old parish church and parsonage, with the Manor Farm near by. The old manor house was pulled down by the late Mr. Melville Portal.

There is one mill on the river, Bere Mill, which is probably built on the site of the mill mentioned in the Domesday Survey as worth 20s.<sup>2</sup> Henri de Portal settled here after his naturalization at Winchester in 1711,<sup>3</sup> and carried on the art of paper making, assisted by French workmen.<sup>4</sup>

The southern part of the parish is open down country with no habitation save a couple of farms and a few cottages. Here and there is a clump of trees, while near New Barn Farm is Brickkiln Wood, and further south Freefolk Wood, forming the southern boundary of the parish.

FREEFOLK is described in the MANORS Domesday Survey of 1086 as a manor held by Ralf the son of Seifrid of the manor of Whitchurch, and as being assigned to the support of the monks of Winchester.<sup>5</sup> In the reign of Edward the Confessor the tenant was Ednod, 'who held it of the bishop, and could not betake himself anywhere'; a mill is mentioned as worth 20s., and it was stated that the value of the manor had decreased from £16 in Edward the Confessor's time to £10 at the time of the Survey.<sup>6</sup> The last mention of the bishop as overlord is in 1542.<sup>7</sup>

Robert de Sifrewast probably held the manor early in the 12th century, as William son of Robert de Sifrewast is described in the return of the Bishop of Winchester in 1166 as holding two knights' fees,<sup>8</sup> which his father had held before him,<sup>9</sup> and there is an entry for the following year of half a mark which was paid into the Treasury for 'Frifhoc' by a certain William.<sup>10</sup> William de Sifrewast, possibly son of the first William, died seised of Freefolk, which Roger de Sifrewast was holi in of him at the time of his death, probably about 1244.<sup>11</sup> Philippa, William's widow, possibly held in dower after her husband's death, as she had a dispute about her wood in Freefolk in 1253-4.<sup>12</sup> In 1269 Henry Husee or Hussey acquired the manor from Nicholas Sifrewast, son of William, and he was granted free warren in his demesne lands in Freefolk in 1271.<sup>13</sup> He died in 1290, leaving as his heir his son Henry.<sup>14</sup> The latter agreed to allow his mother Agnes to hold in dower one-third of the manor of Freefolk which Anne widow of Nicholas Sifrewast had formerly held.<sup>15</sup> Henry died in 1331, leaving a son and heir Henry,<sup>16</sup> but as the manor had been settled upon Henry and his wife Isabel for life it was restored to the latter by the king's command in 1332<sup>17</sup>; he also assigned to her one-third of an annual rent of £9 10s. issuing out of the manor which had formerly been received by Agnes widow of Peter de Braose, whose first husband was Henry Husee.<sup>18</sup>

In 1346 Henry Husee was holding half a fee in Freefolk which his father had held before him,<sup>19</sup> and a year later he obtained a final quitclaim of the manor from Joan formerly wife of Walter de Huntingfield.<sup>20</sup> Henry died in 1349, and the manor then passed in accordance with a settlement of 1347 to his widow Katharine for life.<sup>21</sup> She subsequently married Sir Andrew Peverel,<sup>22</sup> and in 1366 joined with her husband and her stepson, Sir Henry Husee, in granting the reversion of the manor after her death to Sir Thomas Ludlow.<sup>23</sup> Sir Thomas was succeeded by his son and namesake, who granted the manor of Freefolk in 1403 to Mark le Fayre, a citizen of Winchester.<sup>24</sup> From the latter Freefolk passed by sale in 1411 to Henry Somer and Katherine his wife, who obtained two quitclaims in 1411 and 1419, one from Mark le Fayre, the other from Mark son of Sir Henry.<sup>25</sup> Henry Somer was returned as owner in 1428,<sup>26</sup> but in 1441 he conveyed the

SIFREWAST. Anne
two gimel bars and a chief or.

HUSEE. Barry ermine
and gules.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>3</sup> Walter Money, A Royal Purveyance, 52.

<sup>4</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Portal, bart.

<sup>5</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid.

<sup>7</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxvii, 144. The lands were held of the bishop by the service of rendering 2s. yearly at the Feast of the Nativity of the Virgin, or a sore sparrow-hawk on 1 Aug., and of paying suit at the time of the fairs held on the hill of St. Giles', Winchester, at the Bishop's court held in the place called 'Pavyjoun' (vide Winchester).

<sup>8</sup> The other was Quidhampton, in the parish of Overton (q.v.).

<sup>9</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. i, 205.

<sup>10</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191.

<sup>11</sup> Inq. p.m. 29 Hen. III, no. 41.

<sup>12</sup> Abbrev. Plac. (Rec. Com.), 139; Excerpta e Rot. Fin. i, 428.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. ii, 252; Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 54 Hen. III; Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 176.

<sup>14</sup> Cal. Inq. p.m. Edw. I, 474; Berry, Sussex Gen. 344.

<sup>15</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. file i, no. 7.

<sup>16</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 66.

<sup>17</sup> Cal. Close, 1300-33, pp. 441, 470.

<sup>18</sup> Inq. p.m. 6 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 66; Exch. Inq. p.m. file 1, no. 7.

<sup>19</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 21 Edw. III. It has not yet been ascertained who this Joan was or what right she had in the manor.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid.; Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 77; Cal. Close, 1349-54, p. 111.

<sup>22</sup> Berry, Sussex Gen. 344.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid.; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 46 Edw. III; MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid.; Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 86b.

<sup>25</sup> MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>26</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 342.

EVINGAR HUNDRED

FREEFOLK

manor to John Roger 'the younger,' of Beenham Valence (co. Berks.).<sup>37</sup> There were several transfers among various trustees in the following years, and John Roger the elder acquired an interest by entail from Robert Shotesbroke and others, trustees, which interest he gave up to his son in 1460.<sup>38</sup>

John Roger the younger died in 1486, leaving as his heirs his daughters Anne, wife of John Brocas, and Elizabeth, who subsequently married Richard Andrews.<sup>39</sup> A year after the death of Anne Roger, widow of John, the manor was assigned to John Brocas and Anne, from whom it was claimed by Sir Reginald Bray and Henry Lovell as the rightful inheritance of their wives, Katharine and Constance, daughters of Nicholas Husee, great-grandson of the Henry Husee who sold the reversion of the manor in 1366.<sup>40</sup> John Brocas and Anne evidently lost the suit, as Sir Reginald bequeathed the manor in 1503 to his nephew, the Richard Andrews who had married Elizabeth Roger.<sup>41</sup>

Katherine, Constance and Ursula, the three daughters of Richard and Elizabeth, inherited the manor from their father, who died in 1542,<sup>42</sup> having appointed Sir Thomas Wriothesley their guardian,<sup>43</sup> and the manor was subsequently held by their respective husbands, John Paulet, Richard Lambert and Henry Norris.<sup>44</sup> Ursula, daughter of Henry and Ursula, died childless and in 1582 there was a partition of the Andrews property between Katherine Paulet, widow, and Thomas Lambert, son and heir of Richard and Constance; Freefolk and Chalgrave were assigned to Katherine, while Thomas Lambert received Laverstoke and a rent of £20 charged on Freefolk.<sup>45</sup>

Katherine settled her share upon her son Richard in the same year,<sup>46</sup> and he died in 1614, leaving two daughters: Lucy wife of Sir Thomas Jervoise, and Anne wife of Sir William Younge.<sup>47</sup> The latter died without issue, and in 1637<sup>48</sup> the manor of Freefolk was settled on Lucy's son Richard on his marriage with Frances daughter and co-heir of Sir George Croke, Justice of the King's Bench.<sup>49</sup> Richard died in 1643,<sup>50</sup> and his daughter Mary, wife of William Wilmot, of Upper Lambourn (co. Berks.), inherited the manor, which in 1674 she conveyed to Randal Clayton for £7,500.<sup>51</sup>

The manor was sold in 1682 to a Thomas Deane, who died four years later, leaving a son Thomas, who is mentioned as holding a lease of the tithes of Freefolk Chapel.<sup>52</sup> This second Thomas died in or before the year 1718, and Jane Deane, who appears to have been his only daughter and heiress, married Sir John Cullum, bart., of Hardwick, in 1728, and died in the following year.<sup>53</sup>

Joseph Portal, of Laverstoke and Freefolk Priors, purchased the manor in 1769, and it is still in the possession of this family,<sup>54</sup> the present lord being Sir William Wyndham Portal, bart., who succeeded his father, Sir Wyndham Spencer Portal (created a baronet in 1901), on his death in 1905.<sup>55</sup>

In 1367 Andrew Peverel was concerned in a suit with certain persons whose offence was that 'with force and arms they broke into the close of the same Andrew at Fryfolk Cyfrewast and fished in his several fishery there and cut down his grass there, and took away fish and other goods to the value of £40 and killed an ox price 30s. and chased cows with their dogs.'<sup>56</sup>

The property known as CHALGRAVE, which was called a manor in the 16th century,<sup>57</sup> appears to have belonged to William of Chalgrave in 1267-8 when he applied for and was granted permission to erect a chapel on his estate at Freefolk.<sup>58</sup> In 1322 the Bishop of Winchester granted a licence to hear the confessions of several persons, among them Richard of Chalgrave.<sup>59</sup> The manor was subsequently acquired by the owners of Freefolk and followed the descent of that manor, but there is no trace of the property later than 1763.<sup>60</sup> Early in the 18th century it was held on lease together with Freefolk Farm and was then said to consist of from two to three hundred acres separated from Freefolk Farm by 'an antient Bank or Ditch.'<sup>61</sup>

The old church formerly the free CHURCH chapel of ST. NICHOLAS is a small rectangular building 36 ft. by 15 ft. 3 in., and is now only occasionally used, as a new and larger parish church has been built on adjoining higher ground.

The first church on this site of which there is now evidence seems to have been built in the 13th century, and the walls of the present building may be of this date, but all the details are of the 15th century or later.

The east window is of 15th-century design and entirely modern, having been reproduced from the evidence of one or two old stones which were found at the rebuilding of the east wall, from which it was possible to recover the original design. The two windows in the north wall and the three in the south are all single 15th-century lights with cinquefoiled heads. The west window has two cinquefoiled lights and a square head and is of the same date.

The south doorway, placed near the west end, has hollow chamfered jambs and two-centred arch, and was repaired in 1703, when a good deal seems to

PORTAL OF FREEFOLK.
Party saltirewise azure and gules a castle argent and a chief ermine with a crescent azure between two molets gules.

<sup>37</sup> MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid.; Close, 38 Hen. VI, m. 14.

<sup>39</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xxiii, 59.

<sup>40</sup> De Banc. R. Mich. 3 Hen. VII, m. 154.

<sup>41</sup> P.C.C. Will 26 Blamyr.

<sup>42</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dcccxcxi, 12.

<sup>43</sup> ib. and P. Hen. VIII, xvii, g. 1012 (51).

<sup>44</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), vii, 4; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 16 Eliz.; Woodward, Hants, iii, 245.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid.

<sup>46</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 121.

<sup>47</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 78; W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 38, no. 199a.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid.

<sup>49</sup> MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid.

<sup>52</sup> Stowe MS. 345, fol. 79.

<sup>53</sup> Exch. Dep. 5 Geo. I, m. 8.

<sup>54</sup> Ex inform. Sir William Portal, bart.

<sup>55</sup> Burke, Peerage. For further account of the Portal family see Laverstoke.

<sup>56</sup> De Banc. R. East. 41 Edw. III, m. 186.

<sup>57</sup> Add. MS. 33278, fol. 121.

<sup>58</sup> MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>59</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. John de Sendale, &c. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 509.

<sup>60</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), vii, 4; Recov. R. Hil. Eliz. rot. 600; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 25 Eliz.; Trin. 10 & 11 Geo. II; Trin. 3 Geo. III.

<sup>61</sup> Exch. Dep. Hants Mich. 5 Geo. I, m. 8.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

have been done to the church. Opposite to it on the north is a low arched recess looking like the rear arch of another doorway, but much too low, and showing no signs of having been ever cut through to the outer face of the wall. The walls are all plastered within and without, and strengthened with modern brick buttresses.

The roof is covered with tiles. At the west end is a small wooden turret containing one bell which is inscribed, 'THIS BELL NEW CAST & ENLARGED I.C. 1729 BY IANE DEANE WIDOW OF THO. DEANE ESQ.,' the initials being those of John Cor of Aldbourne.

FREEFOLK: THE OLD CHURCH FROM THE RECTORY GARDEN

Across the nave near the west end is a wooden 15th-century screen with cinquefoiled and traceried lights and a moulded cornice. It has been spoilt as far as appearance goes by a thick coat of paint, and was no doubt once used to separate the chancel from the nave. The interior was 'beautified' in 1703, and a cornice of this date remains, together with seven gilt wooden candles and candlesticks, which doubtless ornamented an altarpiece.

On the north wall are traces of mediaeval colour, and it is evident that a great deal of painted decoration is hidden behind the plaster, and might be with care uncovered.

During a restoration some vaults containing bodies in lead shells were found beneath the chancel floor, but they have since been filled up. The empty wooden coffins in which the lead shells were formerly inclosed were found in the space between the wood floor and the vaults.

The plate consists of a silver tankard of 1641 inscribed, 'The gift of M<sup>d</sup>. Wilmot to the church of Freefolk for ever,' and bearing the coats of arms of Croke and Wilmot, the latter impaling quarterly 1 and 4 Jervoise, 2 and 3 Paulet in a widow's lozenge.

There are no registers; they were returned in 1831 as included in those of Laverstoke.<sup>52</sup>

Freefolk was a ADVOWSONS chapelry dependent upon Whitchurch until it was united to Laverstoke in 1872. It appears by a bull of Pope Clement III, dated 1187, that he confirmed the church of Whitchurch with the chapel of Freefolk to the master and brethren of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem as guardians of the Hospital of St. Cross,<sup>53</sup> to which the church of Whitchurch had been granted by the founder, Henry de Blois, in 1157.<sup>54</sup> It would seem probable that in the following century the chapel here referred to in some way fell into disuse, for in 1267-8 Pope Clement IV issued a bull to the Archbishop of Canterbury for the building of what from the evidence of the architecture must be the later chapel of Freefolk in the following terms:—'A noble man, one William of Chalgrave of the diocese of Winton, has humbly petitioned us, as he is so far from his parish church that he cannot on account of floods, especially in winter time and other great risks, conveniently go to hear the divine service and receive the sacraments of the church, that he may build a chapel on his own estate and have a chaplain attached to it to whom for his maintenance he is prepared to assign a sufficient allowance of his own goods if we will consent to grant him permission. As, however, the Bishop of Winton is working at present at a great distance, we trust the application to thy brotherly care to grant so much as thou deemest expedient (without injury to another) to this noble man with reference to what he offers and asks.'<sup>55</sup> After this date the tithes belonged to St. Cross, while the advowson of the chapel was acquired with the manor of Freefolk by Henry Husee in 1269.<sup>56</sup>

<sup>52</sup> Pop. Ret. 1831, iii, 297.

<sup>53</sup> Harl. MS. 1616, fol. 65b.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid. fol. 10.

<sup>55</sup> A copy of this bull was found among the muniments at Herriard and is endorsed 'Pope Clement's bull for Freefolk Chapple 1265.' The existence of this bull at Herriard is explained by the fact that Herriard and Freefolk Manors belonged to the same lord in the 17th cent. It is dated the 3rd year of the pontificate of Pope Clement, which would be 1267-8.

<sup>56</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Mich. 54 Hen. III.

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS : HURSTBOURNE HOUSE : THE GREAT HALL AND MINSTRELS' GALLERY

and afterwards followed the descent of the manor<sup>57</sup> until the closure of the church in 1896, when Sir William Portal became patron of the new church. In 1439 the chapel was known alternatively as the church or free chapel and in 1441 it was called the church of Freefolk.<sup>58</sup> It was not assessed among the churches belonging to the Bishop of Winchester in Wykeham's time 'propter exilitatem.'<sup>59</sup> In a grant of 1582-3 the chapel attached to the manor is described as 'the free chapel of Freefolk and Chalgrave.'<sup>60</sup>

There seems to have been a question as to its title in the 16th century when Queen Elizabeth granted it to Edward Wymarks, a fishing grantee, who sold it back to Richard Paulet, the lord of the manor.<sup>61</sup> In the grant the chapel is described as 'now ruined and profaned.'

A writer in the beginning of the 18th century describes it as a chapel of ease dependent on Whitchurch with the tithes belonging to the Hospital of St. Cross; its annual value was £15. It was then leased to Thomas Deane for twenty-one years, and he paid the vicar of Whitchurch an annual fee to preach there once a month.<sup>62</sup> In 1848 the chaplain of the Hospital of St. Cross was the incumbent, and conducted a service there once a month.

HIGHCLERE

Clere Episcopi, Alta Clera, Hauteclere (xiii cent.); Bisshopesclere, Hautclere (xiv cent.); Highclere, Highcleer (xvi cent.).

The parish of Highclere, the highest of the three Cleres, consists mainly of a large undulating park with the thickly-wooded Sidown Hill which reaches a height of 887 ft. above the ordnance datum in the south, contrasting strangely with the bare sides of Becon Hill, in the neighbouring parish of Burghclere. In the centre of the park on rising ground stands Highclere Castle, the seat of the Earl of Carnarvon, built on the site of the Palace of the Bishops of Winchester, the original owners of the parish.

There are two lakes, covering 52 acres, in the park, one of which, Milford Lake, was the old fish-pond of the Bishops of Winchester.<sup>1</sup> Near the castle are the ruins of the church of St. Michael, which dates from the end of the 17th century, being built at the expense of the lord of the manor, Sir Robert Sawyer, who according to the parish registers 'of his own liberality cheerfully built a new compleat church in the parish of Highcleer, the old one being ruinous and unfit, which was begun to be plucked down August 18th 1687, and the new church was finished so as we assembled in it on August 18th 1689.' The modern church stands north of the village of Highclere Street, formerly called Hawclere.<sup>2</sup>

Great Pen Wood occupies the greater part of the north of the parish, and on its southern side is the hamlet of Penwood, Little Pen Wood being on the south side of the road which forms the southern boundary of Great Pen Wood. The extreme south of the parish is open down.

The soil is stiff loam, the subsoil in parts red clay, but generally chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The area of the parish is 3,432 acres, of which about four-sevenths are grass, two-sevenths woodland and one-seventh arable land.<sup>2a</sup>

In 1233<sup>3</sup> the common fields comprised Sutdone

(92 acres), Cofurlang (47 acres), Ruyecroft (12½ acres) and Estfield (95 acres).

Some place-names which occur in the court rolls are Le Whetefeld, Chappell and Hawclere,<sup>4</sup> and La Wassche.<sup>5</sup> The date of the award for the inclosure of the commons is 1783.<sup>6</sup>

The earliest references to HIGH-MANOR CLERE cannot be distinguished from Burghclere, with which it was included under the general name of Clere.<sup>7</sup>

However, as early as the year 1208-9 Burghclere and Highclere had each its reeve, and soon after the two manors are separately accounted for on the Pipe Rolls of the bishopric of Winchester.<sup>8</sup>

Although from this date onwards Burghclere and Highclere are distinguished by name, they have always followed the same descent,<sup>9</sup> the lord of the two manors having his mansion at Highclere. Thus the Bishops of Winchester had a palace there. Richard Kingsmill died at Highclere,<sup>10</sup> and the death of Sir Robert Sawyer in 1692 occurred 'at his mansion house of Highclere.'<sup>11</sup>

The first Earl of Carnarvon was created Baron Porchester of Highclere in 1780,<sup>12</sup> and Highclere Castle is the residence of the present earl.

A park existed in Highclere in very early times, and complaints arose of damage from the inclosure of the park. In an account of the dilapidations in the episcopal manors after the death of John Sendale, in 1320, mention is made of damage by inclosure of the park,<sup>13</sup> and in 1403 the rector of Burghclere received compensation for loss of tithe by reason of a great part of arable land having been imparked by the bishop, 'et parco nostro de Altâ Clerâ anneximus ac

HERBERT, Earl of Carnarvon. Party azure and gules three lions argent.

<sup>57</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 75b; Chan. Inq. p.m. 23 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 77; (Ser. 2) xxiii, 59; Cal. Close, 1349-54, p. 111, &c.

<sup>58</sup> From MS. penes Mr. F. H. T. Jervoise of Herriard.

<sup>59</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 375.

<sup>60</sup> Close, 25 Eliz. pt. xiii, 1.

<sup>61</sup> Pat. 29 Eliz. pt. iv, m. 1; Close, 29 Eliz. pt. 6.

<sup>62</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 80.

<sup>1</sup> Information supplied by the Rev. E. Hugh Rycroft, rector of Bishop's Waltham.

<sup>2</sup> W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 26.

<sup>2a</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>3</sup> Ecl. Com. Var. bdle. 23, no. 159283.

<sup>4</sup> Ecl. Com. Ct. R. 155662, 155657.

<sup>5</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 249.

<sup>6</sup> Com. Pleas Recov. R. Mich. 24

Geo. III, m. 108.

<sup>7</sup> See Burghclere.

<sup>8</sup> Ecl. Com. Var. bdle. 22.

<sup>9</sup> Orig. Mins. Accts. pt. i, 1141, 1142; Pat. 5 Edw. VI, pt. vi, m. 26; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), ccxviii, 75; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 19 Eliz.

<sup>10</sup> South, Life of W. of Wykeham; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 128.

<sup>11</sup> Topog. and Gen. iii, 408, 409.

<sup>12</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, ii, 158.

<sup>13</sup> Winton Epis. Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 249; Stubbs, Reg. Sac. Angl. i, 223.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

inclusimus in eodem que quidem inclusio in grave dampnum ecclesie predicti cederet.' <sup>14</sup>Cobbett describes this park as 'the prettiest I have ever seen.' <sup>15</sup>

There was a mill in Clere at the time of the Domesday Survey, <sup>16</sup> and a water corn-mill is mentioned as existing in Highclere in the 17th century, <sup>17</sup> and was possibly on the same site as the present corn-mill in the north of the parish.

One of the Hampshire chases was in Highclere, and the lord of the manor still retains the right of free warren and free chase; in the 18th century he had also free fishery, court leet and court baron. A court baron was held in 1724. <sup>18</sup>

The church of ST. MICHAEL AND CHURCH ALL ANGELS consists of a chancel 29 ft. 3 in. by 19 ft. 2 in., north tower, the lowest story of which is used as a vestry, nave 49 ft. 8 in. by 21 ft. 5 in., and south aisle 10 ft. 8 in. wide.

The building was erected in the year 1870 by Sir Gilbert Scott, in place of the one built in the park by Sir Robert Sawyer. None of the old work seems to have been retained excepting some monuments. The style adopted is that of the 13th century, all the windows being lancets, some coupled under two-centred heads with quatrefoils over. An arcade of three bays divides the nave from the aisle. The tower is of two stages and is surmounted by a wood spire. The furniture is all modern. At the west end of the nave is a large Elizabethan monument to Richard Kingsmill of Seacombe, son of Sir John Kingsmill of Side Mountaine; he was first attorney and afterwards surveyor of Her Majesty's Court of Wards; there is no date upon the tomb, which is one of Renaissance design with an altar-shaped base, on which lies his recumbent effigy. He is dressed in a long black gown, ruff, &c.; behind his head are the kneeling figures of a man and woman, evidently his daughter and her husband Sir Thomas Lucy, of Warwickshire, who erected the monument; the latter is in armour. On the front of the base are the figures, also kneeling, of six sons and four daughters. The cornice above the inscription is brought forward at the sides and supported by Corinthian shafts and surmounted by obelisks. Above are his arms; a shield to the left has the same impaling Falconer (his wife was Alice Falconer of 'Husbourne'); and the third shield (to the right) has Lucy—Gules three lucas argent—impaling Kingsmill; above is the crest, a hand holding a mill rind.

There are also other monuments of 18th-century or later dates.

There are six bells in the tower, all by Taylor & Son, 1871.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and a flagon of 1828 and 1839 respectively, both presented by the Earl of Carnarvon, the one in 1843, the other in 1840, and a silver-gilt paten of 1886.

There are four books of registers. The first contains baptisms and marriages from 1656 to 1674, with two baptismal entries of 1652–3, and burials 1656 to 1679. There are also marriages of 1713–14. The second book contains baptisms and marriages 1656 to 1711, and burials 1656 to 1679, part being thus a copy of the first book. The third contains baptisms 1712 to 1812, and marriages 1714 to 1754; and the fourth marriages 1754 to 1813, and burials 1780 to 1813.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON Highclere has always belonged to the lord of the manor. <sup>19</sup> Isaac Mills, a well-known man in his time, was presented to the living in 1680, and held it for thirty-nine years. The parish register of Highclere describes him as 'for 39 years 2 months 7 days the constant resident rector and pastor of the parish. He never refused any of his neighbours that desired to borrow any money of him, leaving it to them to take their own time to repay it without usury.' He had a school at Highclere, which his son Isaac carried on after his death in 1720. <sup>20</sup> The present school was erected in 1897 at the expense of the Earl of Carnarvon.

The Poor's Land.—The land CHARITIES allotted under an award of 1783, made under the Inclosure Act for this parish and Burghclere, was sold, and the proceeds invested in £825 17s. 10d. consols, producing yearly £20 12s. 8d., which by a scheme of 27 October 1874 is applicable in the distribution of coal and clothing, &c.

In 1815 the Rev. Archibald Gairdner, a former rector, by his will, proved in the P.C.C. (inter alia), bequeathed a sum of stock, now represented by £105 consols, the income to be applied in the purchase of clothing for old and infirm poor.

In 1888 Thomas William Allen, by his will, bequeathed a sum of £100, the income to be distributed by the rector among the poor, preference being given to those employed on the Earl of Carnarvon's estate. The legacy is represented by £100 12s. 7d. consols.

Educational Charities.—In 1724 Edward Band surrendered unto the lord of the manor a cottage and garden to the use of the churchwardens on trust, out of the rents to put three or more children to school. The annual value was about £5 a year.

In 1815 the above-mentioned Rev. Archibald Gairdner bequeathed a sum of stock, now represented by £105 consols, the income to be applied in the education of poor children.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees.

<sup>14</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 554.

<sup>15</sup> Cobbett, Rural Rides.

<sup>16</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Div. Co. Trin. 28 Chas. II.

<sup>18</sup> Hants N. and Q. iv, 146; Recov. R. East. 6 Geo. I, rot. 728.

<sup>19</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 77, 105, 220; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.); Chan. Ing. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 128.

<sup>20</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS

Hissaburna (viii cent.); Eisseburn (xi cent.); Husseburna, Hesseburna Prioris (xii cent.); Husseborne (xiv cent.); Hussburne (xv cent.); Hursborne Priors (xvi cent.).

Hurstbourne Priors is a parish of 3,249 acres lying south-east of St. Mary Bourne, and comprising about 1,600 acres of arable land, 1,300 acres of grass lands and 260 acres of woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup>

The London and South Western Railway runs through the parish, and has a station a mile and a half north-west of the village. South of the railway is Hurstbourne Park, comprising over 1,000 acres. The park consists principally of an old chase which has never been under the plough. It contains a herd of about 700 deer and a flock of black four-horned sheep, similar to those which are still to be found in the parks of some of the Spanish nobles, and which behind the church now called the Cascades. The site of the house is a remarkable one—standing high, immediately overlooking a terraced garden and commanding a view over the deer park and a wide down country, due south, for some 20 miles. The architects of the present house were Messrs. Beeston & Burnster. The entrance is under an elaborately carved porch of heraldic design, within which is a small outer hall, having a marble floor and walls panelled with oak, that opens into the great hall, about 30 ft. high, with a minstrels' gallery, and walls hung with Venetian tapestry. The chimneypiece is of stone and marble with a fine achievement in arms of coloured plaster work. The ceiling and deep cornice are of elaborate Jacobean plaster work. They and the carved oak staircase are after designs of the present earl with the assistance of Mr. Charles Kempe.

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS: HURSTBOURNE HOUSE

tradition says are the descendants of some wrecked in the Armada. The park is famous for its magnificent oaks, beeches, Spanish chestnuts, old thorns and pollard maples. There are also some gigantic yews along what tradition says was one of the pilgrims' ways to Canterbury from the West of England. The great avenues of elm, beech, oak and horse chestnut, eight of which converge at a grotto with a large lead figure, were planted during the early part of the 18th century, many of them probably by the first Earl of Portsmouth. In summer the park is covered with glades of bracken that grow to 7 ft. high.

Hurstbourne House, a Jacobean building of red brick and yellow carved stone, replaces a former classic building which again took the place of a house which stood actually over the River Bourne at a spot

There are two long galleries in the house, upper and lower, both lit by windows from the east and west. The upper gallery is hung with pictures. The lower gallery is about 120 ft. long and 16 ft. wide. It contains three mantelpieces of red Italian marble and is hung from end to end with tapestry and lighted by candles in old silver sconces of the 17th century. From this gallery to the south opens a succession of three reception rooms. The saloon, whose walls are entirely covered with tapestry, has a chimneypiece from floor to ceiling designed by the present earl and Mr. Brindley. It is of marbles and painted stone. The furniture includes the finest specimens of French cabinets (Louis XIV and XV), a buhl clock and a suite upholstered in Gobelin tapestry, that were formerly in the collection of the first Lord Tweedmouth at Guisachan. The library is a long room; its bookcases and its two mantelpieces are of

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

Italian walnut. One portion is exclusively devoted to books and prints connected with Hampshire. The other characteristics of the library are family papers, including those of Sir Isaac Newton, a very fine collection of county histories, and interesting collections of scarce memoirs and of books on sport and on art. It also contains a valuable collection of early printed books made by Mr. Edward Pease, the father of the present Lady Portsmouth. The morning-room and dining-room are hung with family and other pictures and miniatures. There are also four very large ivories, the work of Benvenuto Cellini, brought by the first earl from Italy. In the dining-room of the private wing is a most interesting collection of relics of Sir Isaac Newton, which came to the family through the marriage of Newton's great-niece with Lord Lymington.

When Robert Oxenbridge purchased Hurstbourne Priors in 1558 'there was in the park a lodge and a fayre Manor House,' and a royalist officer, writing just before the second battle of Newbury, describes the estate as 'a fayre old house and large park with many ewe trees'.<sup>2</sup> The 'fayre old house' represented the old mansion known as the Grange that stood over the river.

The River Bourne takes a south-westerly course through the parish, and runs between the village and the park, and the Test marks the south-east boundary of the parish.

The village habitations are scattered, and on the Andover and Basingstoke road, which runs east and west through the village, is Manor Farm, which may possibly represent the manor-house of the manor of Hurstbourne Exterius mentioned in many records. In the extreme south-western corner of the parish is Faulkner's Down Farm, preserving the name of a family who flourished in this parish from the early part of the 13th century onwards.<sup>3</sup> Further north are Apsley Farm (which is mentioned in a notice in the belfry of St. Mary Bourne Church stating that Mrs. Longman, of Apsley Hamlet, gave a chandelier in 1807),<sup>4</sup> and the little hamlet of Pratt's Down, which contained a mill in 1602,<sup>5</sup> and on the other side of the railway near the Harrow Way (an ancient Saxon route) is New Barn Farm, where the court leet of the manor was held as late as during the lifetime of the third Earl of Portsmouth.<sup>6</sup>

Remains of a Roman villa have been discovered at New Barn Down, near Duty Corner, three-quarters of a mile east of the railway station. They consist of fragments of stone, roof tiles and pottery and distinct traces of a dwelling-house, masonry, stucco, Samian and other pottery, while part of a tile and some pottery were found in Hurstbourne Priors churchyard.<sup>7</sup>

The commons were inclosed under an award dated 1787.<sup>8</sup>

Some place-names mentioned in early records are Wykenesham by Thurmyngley Wood, a field called Wynerde (1333),<sup>9</sup> land called Upper and Lower Ower and a field called Winsome Field<sup>10</sup> (1636).

The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips.

The manor of HURSTBOURNE MANORS PRIORS, DOWN HURSTBOURNE, or NETHER HURSTBOURNE,<sup>10a</sup> including the tithings of St. Mary Bourne, Stoke Binley, Week and Egbury, was given to a certain Prince Hemele by King Beortric in exchange for land on the River Meon before the year 790.<sup>11</sup> The former granted it to the monks of Abingdon, from whom it was shortly afterwards acquired by King Egbert (802-839).<sup>12</sup> The property, consisting of 50 'manentes' at Hurstbourne and 10 at Stoke,<sup>13</sup> passed to his son Ethelwulf, who bequeathed it to his son Alfred, with reversion to the monks of Winchester for the support of the refectory.<sup>14</sup> The monks, who appear to have been given possession during the lifetime of Alfred, complained that they were unable to bear the heavy charges laid upon the land, and they were relieved by King Alfred, who regranted them the property under easier conditions.<sup>15</sup> They were, moreover, confirmed in their possession by a special clause in Alfred's will (885).<sup>16</sup>

The gift was confirmed by Edward the Elder in 901,<sup>17</sup> but it appears evident that the land was subsequently unlawfully taken from the monks, as King Edred (946-55) is said to have restored this manor to them.<sup>18</sup> King Edgar either granted or confirmed this property to the monks at Abingdon in 961,<sup>19</sup> but on the death of Edgar these royal estates were resumed by order of the Witan, and Ethelred in 993 granted other lands in compensation to Abingdon and confirmed Hurstbourne to Winchester.<sup>20</sup> At the time of the Domesday Survey it is described as belonging to the church of Winchester. Its value had increased since the time of King Edward the Confessor from £26 to £40, and there were five mills on the manor worth 25s.<sup>21</sup>

Less than a century later the same manor is called Hurstbourne 'Prioris',<sup>22</sup> and in 1205 Pope Innocent III confirmed the prior and monks in possession of the manor,<sup>23</sup> while the Bishop of Winchester made a similar confirmation in 1285.<sup>24</sup> The prior and convent continued in possession until the Dissolution in 1535,<sup>25</sup> when the manor fell into the hands of the king, who appointed Ellis Wynne bailiff.<sup>26</sup>

In 1547 the whole of the Hurstbourne estate, by the description of 'the manors of Hursborne, Hursborne Interius (Hurstbourne Priors) and Hursborne Exterius (Hurstbourne Fauconers) and the Park of <sup>2</sup> Harl. MS. 608, fol. 86; W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 23 n.

<sup>3</sup> Feet of F. Hants, 3 Hen. III, no.

37. <sup>4</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 204.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. 150.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. 312.

<sup>7</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 304, 305.

<sup>8</sup> Blue Bk. Incl. Awards.

<sup>9</sup> Pat. 6 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 31.

<sup>10</sup> Close, 11 Chas. I, pt. i, no. 10.

<sup>10a</sup> Several private deeds relating to this manor have been seen by courtesy of Mrs. John Hautenville Cope.

<sup>11</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 215; Birch, Cart. Sax. i, 359.

<sup>12</sup> Chron. Mon. de Abingdon (Rolls Ser.), i, 28; Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 238 and 241-2.

<sup>13</sup> One charter states that Egbert purchased 40 manentes and another gives 50 at Hurstbourne and 20 at Stoke as the amount of Egbert's purchase (Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 238; Dugdale, Mon. i, 212).

<sup>14</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. ii, 238; Dugdale, Mon. i, 212.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. 205.

<sup>16</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 75.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. 238, 239.

<sup>18</sup> Dugdale, Mon. i, 206.

<sup>19</sup> Birch, Cart. Sax. iii, 308. The boundaries of 'Hisseburne' are here given.

<sup>20</sup> Chron. Mon. de Abingdon (Rolls Ser.), ii, 367.

<sup>21</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>22</sup> Pipe R. 13 Hen. II (Pipe R. Soc.), 191.

<sup>23</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 21.

<sup>24</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 288.

<sup>25</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 308; L. and P. Hen. VIII, ix, 438; Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. iv.

<sup>26</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 124, 125; Aug. Off. Dec. ii, fol. 1346.

Hursborne,' &c., was granted by the king to Edward Duke of Somerset,<sup>27</sup> who held it until his death on Tower Hill in 1552. The property then escheated to the king, who, in May 1553, granted it to his vice-chamberlain and captain of the guard, Sir John Gate. The latter was concerned in the attempt to place Lady Jane Grey on the throne, and was executed in August 1553.<sup>28</sup>

In 1558 Sir Robert Oxenbridge purchased the manor from the Crown,<sup>29</sup> and it remained in the possession of this family for nearly a century. The first Robert died in 1574 and was succeeded by his son Robert, who died in 1591.<sup>30</sup> His son and namesake died seised in 1616.<sup>31</sup> Sir Robert Oxenbridge, son of the latter, who died unmarried in 1638, sold his manor of Hurstbourne Priors in 1636 for £1,747 12s. 4d. to Sir Henry Wallop, of Farleigh Wallop, another old place in the county, the property of the present Earl of Portsmouth, whose son Robert was one of the judges of King Charles,<sup>32</sup> and was attainted at the Restoration, when his estates were confiscated.<sup>33</sup> He died in the Tower in 1667, and his son Henry then succeeded to his estates, which had been granted to Sir Robert's brother-in-law, Thomas Earl of Southampton.<sup>34</sup>

The manor has remained in the possession of the Wallop family ever since.<sup>35</sup> John grandson of Sir Henry was created Viscount Lymington in 1720 and Earl of Portsmouth in 1743; he died in 1749, and was succeeded by his grandson the second earl, whose mother was a niece of Sir Isaac Newton. The third earl was succeeded by his brother Newton Fellowes, of Eggesford (co. Devon), who died in 1854. The fourth earl was succeeded by his son the fifth earl. The sixth and present earl, now owning the property, is the son of the fifth earl.<sup>36</sup>

Extensive liberties in their lands were granted to the Bishop, Prior and monks of St Swithun in 1231,<sup>37</sup> and in 1280 the Prior of St. Swithun, as lord of the manor of Hurstbourne, had the following rights, viz. the returns of writs, estreats, summonses, view of frankpledge, gallows, assize of bread and ale, infingenthef, chattels of felons, warren and free chase for taking all manner of beasts and pleas of withernam.<sup>38</sup>

Free warren was confirmed to the lord in 1300, and the warren which was called Bradley or Badley was farmed out at £2 6s. 8d.<sup>39</sup>

In 1485 the prior had occasion to bring an action against Henry Hepkyn for breach of his privilege<sup>40</sup>; fishery in Colles lake (in St. Mary Bourne) was also the right of the lord of the manor.<sup>41</sup> In 1332 licence was given to the Prior of St. Swithun, Winchester, to impark his wood at Hurstbourne.<sup>42</sup> This became the 16th-century park often referred to,<sup>43</sup> which when sold by Sir Robert Oxenbridge to Sir Henry Wallop in the 17th century contained 350 acres. There is a record of a request from the Dean and Chapter of Winchester in 1660 'for an allowance of convenient timber from Husborne Park that they may rebuild their demolished cloisters, library, dwelling house, &c.'<sup>44</sup>

Six mills are mentioned under Hurstbourne in the Domesday Survey, five on the main manor worth 25s. and one on Geoffrey's holding worth 20s. 6d.<sup>45</sup>

At the Dissolution there were apparently three belonging to the manor; one in Hurstbourne demised to Richard Cowpar at a rent of 20s., a fulling mill called Robhodismyll or Rodeswoode Mill demised to Robert Regill at a rent of £1 5s. 4d. and a water-mill in St. Mary Bourne, in the tenure of Thomas Power.<sup>46</sup> Two other mills are mentioned in 1602, one at Chapmansford and one called Pratsdowne Mill,<sup>47</sup> and in the sale of Sir Robert Oxenbridge's property in 1636 four water-mills are mentioned.<sup>48</sup>

The manor of HURSTBOURNE FAUCONERS or HURSTBOURNE EXTERIUS (Fawkener 1600) is probably represented by the 5 hides which Geoffrey held of the Bishop of Winchester and which three thegns, 'who could not betake themselves anywhere,' had previously held.<sup>49</sup> The overlordship continued with the see of Winchester for several centuries, the bishop being returned as the overlord as late as 1541.<sup>50</sup>

It is probable that the estate passed with the manor of Bradley in the hundred of Overton (q.v.) to Emma des Roches, who in 1263 quitclaimed to Ralph Fauconer all her right in a messuage and 1 carucate of land in Hurstbourne together with 1 hide of land and all other lands and tenements which Ralph held of the fee of Emma in that vill in return for a rent of 8 silver marks.<sup>51</sup>

The right to this rent passed to the family of Brocas of Beaufort through the marriage of Mary, a descendant of Emma des Roches, with Sir Bernard Brocas, OXENBRIDGE. Gules a lion argent with a forked tail in a border vert with scallops argent thereon.

WALLOP, Earl of Portsmouth. Argent a bend wavy sable.

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 1 Edw. VI, pt. iv. The site of 'Hurstborne exterius' is probably marked by the Manor Farm (see supra), and that of Hurstborne interius by the park and Hurstbourne House. In 1535 the former was leased to John Milles and the latter to Ellis Wynne (Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 124-5).

<sup>28</sup> Pat. 7 Edw. VI, pt. vii; W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 23; Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 131.

<sup>29</sup> Harl. MS. 608, fol. 86.

<sup>30</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), clxxii, 113; Suss. Arch. Coll. viii, 230.

<sup>31</sup> W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 122.

<sup>32</sup> Suss. Arch. Coll. viii, 230; Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 11 Chas. I; Close, 11 Chas. I, pt. i, no. 10; Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 172.

<sup>33</sup> Pat. 13 Chas. II, pt. xx.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid.; Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 175.

<sup>35</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 1 Geo. I, rot. 83; East. 13 Geo. II, rot. 316; Mich. 4 Geo. III, rot. 52; Hil. 30 Geo. III, rot. 223.

<sup>36</sup> Ex inform. the Earl of Portsmouth.

<sup>37</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 103.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid. 301.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid. 126, 127, 132, &c.; Cal. Chart. R. 1300-26, p. 1.

<sup>40</sup> De Banc. R. 1 Hen. VII, m. 394.

<sup>41</sup> Pat. 4 Edw. VI, pt. viii.

<sup>42</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, p. 263.

<sup>43</sup> Vide supra and Close, 11 Chas. I, pt. i, no. 10.

<sup>44</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1660-1, p. 345.

<sup>45</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>46</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 127.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid. 149, 150.

<sup>48</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 12 Chas. I, rot. 5.

<sup>49</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>50</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxiii,

<sup>51</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 47 Hen. III. As early as 1219 Ralph Fauconer was dealing with lands in Hurstbourne (Feet of F. Hants, 3 Hen. III).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

who died in 1395,<sup>59</sup> but in course of time this right was allowed to lapse. In the reign of Henry VII William Brocas, a descendant of Sir Bernard, claimed £42 13s. 4d. as arrears for eight years, and his bailiffs seized the cattle of one William Wygmore at Court Plate or Court Hayes parcel of the manor of Hurstbourne Fauconers; William pleaded that the manor was leased to him by John Fauconer, but the latter failed to appear and the suit was unfinished.<sup>53</sup>

In 1332 John le Fauconer, probably a descendant of Ralph, described as kinsman and heir of William Fauconer and Emma his wife, exchanged lands in Hurstbourne Priors with the Prior and convent of St. Swithun's<sup>54</sup> and he was returned in 1346 as owner of half a fee in Hurstbourne previously held by William le Fauconer.<sup>55</sup>

Nicholas Fauconer dealt by fine with one messuage, 2 carucates of land in Hurstbourne Priors, Stoke and St. Mary Bourne<sup>56</sup> in 1381, and in 1411 he still had property in Hurstbourne.<sup>57</sup> In 1428 John Fauconer held half a knight's fee in Hurstbourne formerly held by the earlier John,<sup>58</sup> and another John was lord of the manor in 1500.<sup>59</sup>

FAUCONER. Sable three falcons argent with their bells and jesses or.

In 1540 Richard Fauconer died seised of Hurstbourne Fauconers, which passed to his son Richard, who died in 1551,<sup>60</sup> leaving three sisters, Elizabeth, Margaret and Alice, heirs of his property,<sup>61</sup> while his wife Frances held one-third during her lifetime.<sup>62</sup>

Of these Elizabeth married Thomas Yate and left a son Francis, who in 1563 sold his third part of the manor to Richard Kingsmill, who had married Alice on the death of her first husband William Wroughton.<sup>63</sup> In 1574 Richard settled the property upon his second wife Elizabeth Stonehouse with remainder to Constance wife of Sir Thomas Lucy, his daughter by his first wife. He died seised of two-thirds of the manor, designated 'the manor,' in 1600.<sup>64</sup>

Lady Constance Lucy (who died in 1637) and her husband settled the manor of Hurstbourne Fauconers upon their second son, Sir Richard, created a baronet in 1617,<sup>65</sup> whose grandson, Sir Berkeley Lucy, was holding in 1693.<sup>66</sup> He had only one child, Mary,<sup>67</sup> who married the Hon. Charles Compton, one of the younger sons of the fourth Earl of Northampton.<sup>68</sup> They had a son Charles, who succeeded to the earldom and inherited the manor of Hurstbourne Fauconers in 1759 in accordance with the terms of the will of his maternal grandfather, Sir Berkeley Lucy<sup>69</sup>; he died in 1763, and directed that his property should be sold and that after various legacies had been paid off the remainder of the proceeds should go to Spencer Compton, his brother.<sup>70</sup>

The Earl of Portsmouth is found holding the manor in 1790, having probably purchased it after the death of the Earl of Northampton,<sup>71</sup> and from that time it has followed the descent of Hurstbourne Priors.

A mill existed in this property in 1086.<sup>72</sup>

There was another holder under the bishop in Hurstbourne in 1086 whose property has not yet been identified—William, who was holding 2 hides less half a virgate.<sup>73</sup> Sawin held them before him, 'and could not betake himself anywhere.' This holding was worth at one time £6, but at the time of the Survey it was valued at 40s.<sup>74</sup>

In 1086 Lewin held 1 RECTORY MANOR hide in Hurstbourne of the Bishop of Winchester, together with the church; he had a team of 7 oxen and 2 acres of meadow, the property being worth in all 50s.<sup>75</sup> The church was appropriated by the bishop to the Hospital of St. Cross at its foundation in 1132, and confirmed to it in 1189.<sup>76</sup> The duties which the tenants upon this land owed to the hospital are summarized in a register of the estates belonging to the hospital before the year 1386; the place at which the manor courts were held was rented by the prior at 12d. a year, and the total annual rent of assize was then £4 6s. 7½d.<sup>77</sup> In 1535 the value in land tithes and oblations was £13 6s. 8d.<sup>78</sup>

In the 16th century this property was leased out by the hospital, the charges on it being the annual payment of '40 quarters of pure clean wheat of good measure, 60 quarters of good barley malt, and £33 6s. 8d.; also to the vicar of Husborne (being resident upon his vicarage and keeping hospitality there) 4 quarters of good wheat, 4 of barley malt; if the said vicar be not resident there the said wheat and barley to be delivered at the house of St. Cross.'<sup>79</sup> The property is now in the hands of the lay rector, the Earl of Portsmouth.<sup>80</sup>

LUCY. Gules powdered with crosslets argent and three lucas argent.

<sup>59</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 323; Chan. Inq. p.m. file 17, no. 8; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 35 Edw. III; Mich. 7 Ric. II.

<sup>53</sup> Burrows, Brocas of Beaurepaire, 323; De Banc. R. East. 16 Hen. VII, 321.

<sup>54</sup> Cal. Pat. 1330-4, p. 238; 1334-8, p. 565.

<sup>55</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>56</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 5 Ric. II.

<sup>57</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 117.

<sup>58</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

<sup>59</sup> De Banc. R. East. 16 Hen. VII, 321.

<sup>60</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxiii, 51.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid. xciv, 69.

<sup>62</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 5 Eliz. m. 11.

<sup>63</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), xciv, 69;

Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 5 Eliz. m. 11; Berry, Hants Gen. 44.

<sup>64</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), cclxviii, 128. Sir Robert Oxenbridge, who died in 1638, was seised of one-third of the manor, leaving it to his kinsman Edward Oxenbridge. This third was probably the third which had passed to Margaret Kingsmill and her husband, William Sotwell (W. and L. Inq. p.m. bdle. 55, no. 122; Berry, Hants Gen. 239). This third evidently passed to the Wallop family and became merged in the manor of Hurstbourne Priors. Robert Oxenbridge, as elder brother and heir of the above-mentioned Edward, who died in 1639, attempted to make good his claim to the third, but it does not appear that he was successful (Chan. Bills and Answers, Misc. [Ser. 1], pt. xiii, no. 105).

<sup>65</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), dlxxxvi, 112.

<sup>66</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 5 & 6 Will and Mary, m. 1.

<sup>67</sup> Burke, Landed Gentry.

<sup>68</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vi, 74.

<sup>69</sup> Ibid.; P.C.C. Will 366 Arran.

<sup>70</sup> G.E.C. Peerage, vi, 74; Will P.C.C. 562 Caesar.

<sup>71</sup> Recov. R. Hil. 30 Geo. III, rot. 223.

<sup>72</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465a.

<sup>73</sup> Ibid.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid.

<sup>75</sup> Ibid.

<sup>76</sup> Harl. MS. 1616, fol. 7; Harl. Chart. 43, C 28; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), iv, 9; Cal. S. P. Dom. 1595-7, p. 485; Stowe MS. 845, fol. 61.

<sup>77</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 108, 111.

<sup>78</sup> Valor Eccl. iv, 9.

<sup>79</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1595-7, p. 485.

<sup>80</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 215.

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS CHURCH : WEST DOORWAY

HURSTBOURNE PRIORS CHURCH : CHANCEL LOOKING NORTH-EAST

The church of ST. ANDREW consists of a chancel 24 ft. 1 in. by 17 ft. 5 in., north chapel 24 ft. 7 in. by 16 ft. 1 in., nave 49 ft. 9 in. by 22 ft., with a south transept known as the Portsmouth aisle 14 ft. 1 in. by 11 ft. 7 in., and a west tower 11 ft. 11 in. square.

The oldest portion of the building is the chancel, which is of 13th-century date; but there are two arches, which show that there was formerly a 12th-century building here: one of these is now the west doorway of the tower, and the other is the entrance to the north chapel from the chancel. This appears to have once been the chancel arch, which was probably moved to its present position, and the present arch formed, when the north chapel was built in the 16th century. The south transept is an addition of the 18th century, and the nave was rebuilt and the tower added in 1870.

The east window of the chancel has three cinquefoiled lights and tracery of late 15th-century date. Against the east wall is an arched recess 4 ft. 10 in. deep, which rises a little higher than the rear arch of the east window. It is two-centred, and has two small chamfers on its outer edge. Below the springing on each side is an arcade of two small bays of late 12th-century character, with carved or moulded capitals and moulded bases. The arches are semicircular, with chamfered edges. Both the springing stones of the west bays and the western capital and base are modern, and the whole is obviously a make-up of old details.

In the north wall of the chancel is a fine canopied tomb, described below, to the west of which is the 12th-century arch already referred to. This has plain jambs recessed on the south side, a chamfered abacus and a semicircular arch of two orders, the inner one being plain while the outer is enriched with zigzag ornament, and beyond this is a label of diapered ornament. The north side of the arch is quite plain.

The south wall of the chancel contains two 13th-century lancets, chamfered and rebated outside, and between them is a blocked doorway of the same date which has beaded jambs and two-centred arch and a hollow moulded label. On it is incised a sundial.

The north chapel has an east window of five uncusped four-centred 16th-century lights, under a square head with a moulded label. There are two similar three-light windows but without labels in the north wall, and in the west wall a modern window of five lights. At the north-west is a doorway which has a four-centred head, and is contemporary with the windows. The chancel arch has two chamfered orders continued from the jambs, and seems to be modern.

The nave has three modern windows on the north side and two on the south, each of three cinquefoiled lights, with tracery of 15th-century style.

The arch to the south transept is like the chancel arch, but with the inner order resting on moulded corbels.

The tower is of brick with stone dressings and battlemented parapet, with a stair turret on the north-east angle; it is built in an imitation of 12th-century style, the only old detail in it being the west doorway, which has recessed jambs with angle shafts and scalloped capitals with chamfered abaci. The arch details are like those of the arch in the north wall of the chancel.

The tomb in the north wall of the chancel is that of Sir Robert Oxenbridge, 1574, son of Godard Oxenbridge, and sometime Constable of the Tower, and also to his wife, daughter of Thomas Fogge, knight. The inscription is painted on the north side of the tomb, on the plinth of one of the Doric columns flanking the tomb, and is now very much damaged and partly illegible. On the south side is a later inscription to Robert Oxenbridge, of Piddle Trenthide, in the county of Dorset, who died in 1705, and his wife, who died two years later.

On the slab of the tomb are the recumbent effigies of Sir Robert and his wife. He is represented in full armour with a helm beneath his head.

The base of the tomb has a cornice supported by medillions, with small fluted columns at the corners, and below are panels framed in a guilloche border with figures of three sons and four daughters on both sides of the tomb.

The canopy is square-headed with fluted Ionic columns supporting a cornice enriched with medillions.

The arms of Sir Robert and his wife appear above their heads at the side of the canopy and on the soffit, and his arms occur again in the centre above the cornice.

The tower contains a ring of six bells, the treble having the mark of Ellis Knight, and of Henry Knight, with the date 1667 and the inscription, 'I as treble singe.' The second is inscribed, 'I as second sing'; the third, 'I as third ring'; the fourth, 'I as fourth sound'; the fifth, 'I as tenor hum all round 1631'; and the sixth, now the tenor, is by Henry Bagley 1741.

The plate consists of a silver chalice indistinctly dated; two silver patens, one inscribed 'The gift of Dorothy Wallop to ye church of Downe Husband 1682,' the other dated 1894 a Jubilee offering of 1897; and a silver flagon of 1692 given by John Wallop in that year.

The registers are contained in four books, the first having baptisms 1621 to 1740, marriages 1604 to 1739, and burials 1604 to 1681. The second contains baptisms 1740 to 1812, marriages 1740 to 1754, and burials 1678 to 1812, and some briefs dated 1689 and 1707. The third book has marriages from 1755 to 1800, and the fourth the same from 1800 to 1813.

A church is known to have ADVOWSON existed at Hurstbourne in very early times, as a charter of Bishop Denewulf dated 802 refers to its consecration in that year.<sup>81</sup> The Bishop of Winchester retained the advowson of the vicarage after appropriating the church to the Hospital of St. Cross, and the vicarage is still in the gift of the Bishops of Winchester.<sup>82</sup>

There is a Wesleyan chapel in the parish.

The school was built in 1855.

The parliamentary returns of 1786 CHARITIES mention that one Robert Oxenbridge, some 200 years since, by his will left to the poor, not in receipt of parish relief, money which then amounted to £77. The trust fund now consists of £82 7s. 4d. consols with the official trustees, producing yearly £1 17s., which is distributed in half-crowns.

<sup>81</sup> Thorpe, Dipl. Angl. Ævi. Sax. 151-3.

<sup>82</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 76; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

NEWTOWN

Novus Burgus de Clere (xiii cent.); Nova Villa (xiv, xvi, xviii cent.); Novus Burgus, Nova Villa de Sandelford, Nova Villa.

NEWTOWN is a small low-lying parish north of Burghclere, consisting of 480 acres, and situated on the River Enborne, which forms its northern boundary.

There are two large commons in the parish; in the north is Newtown House standing in its own grounds, the residence of Lady Arbuthnot, the principal landowner. Near the common, in the centre of the parish, is the parsonage, while further north, close to Newtown House, is the church of St. Mary and St. John the Baptist, which was rebuilt in 1865 at the sole expense of Edmund and Elizabeth Arbuthnot. The school which existed before 1855 centuries. William le Whyte of Woodhay, possibly an ancestor, owned land here in 1334.<sup>4</sup>

The earliest mention of NEWBOROUGH TOWN as a mesne borough of the Bishop of Winchester occurs about the year 1218. It appears that at this time an industrial settlement had grown up at Sandelford,<sup>5</sup> in the manor of Highclere, where the old road from Winchester to Newbury crosses the River Enborne. On 29 May in this year the Bishop of Winchester received licence<sup>6</sup> to hold a market every Monday in his manor 'de Novo Burgo de Clere,' and in 1218-19 the men of Sandelford had a chapel of their own, which may have been built at that date or shortly before, as it is recorded that the manor of High Clere then bore the expense of plastering it.<sup>7</sup> was enlarged in 1874 at the expense of the late Mr. William Chatteris, of Sandelford Priory, Newbury, and again in 1902, when the necessary funds were raised by subscription.

NEWTOWN: THE SWAN INN

There are 12 acres of arable land here, 210 acres of grass and 30 acres of woods and plantations<sup>1</sup>; the soil is various, the subsoil white gravel. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats. The following place-names are found in extant records: Stanfigg<sup>2</sup> (xvii cent.); Newland (xviii cent.).<sup>3</sup>

In a return of landowners in Newtown in 1575 John White held 2 acres of meadow; this family has been prominently connected with the parish for some

The accounts for 'Novus Burgus' first appear on the episcopal Pipe Rolls<sup>8</sup> in 1218-19. The connexion between Highclere and Newtown is shown by the mention of Sandelford Chapel and Sandelford Mill in the Highclere account, but, on the other hand, the separate account for Newtown (Novus Burgus) reveals the existence of a borough reeve distinct from the reeve of Highclere, while a long list of burgage rents, set out in detail, suggests the recent formation of the borough. The burgesses named are fifty-one in number, holding for the most part one burgage apiece, though John de Hwlton (sic) had five, the Prior of Sandelford and Robert Savoner

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 158874.

<sup>3</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. 159498.

<sup>4</sup> W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 78.

<sup>5</sup> In at least one Pipe Roll of the see of Winchester Newtown is styled in full, 'Nova Villa de Sandelford' (Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 55, no. 159457; 5 W. de Raleigh). Cf. in a 14th-century charter, three each, and eight others two apiece. The annual assised rent of each burgage was 12*d.* Of the total issues, including a small sum for an amercement, 37*s.* went to Ralf, the reeve of Highclere, and 22*s.* was paid to Denis, the treasury clerk at Winchester, 10*s.* remaining in arrear till the following year, when it was paid off and the new account rendered by a serjeant of the bishop and the borough reeve.<sup>9</sup> In this year two new burgesses took holdings and paid 9*d.* apiece, though a note is made that in future they were to pay 12*d.* We also learn that the reeve was to be allowed 12*d.* a year, which in practice meant exemption from the usual burgage rent.

<sup>6</sup> Nova villa juxta Sandelford' (B.M. Harl. Chart. 112, A 35).

<sup>7</sup> Close, 2 Hen. III, m. 5.

<sup>8</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 22, no. 159275. Ibid.

In 1220-1 the development of the town was still proceeding.<sup>10</sup> Several newcomers took up burgages, including Richard the merchant, while others already settled obtained more land from the lord, John Sturun receiving 6 acres at the yearly rent of 6*d.* an acre, which seems here to have been the normal figure. The assised gable or rent with these sources of increment rose to £4 10*s.* 3*d.* In this year none of the issues appear to have gone to Highclere, but Denis, the treasury clerk, received £3 10*s.* at Wolvesey, and 20*s.* 3*d.* was left uncollected till the following year. At Michaelmas 1224 so prosperous was the burghal budget that Denis acknowledged the receipt of £7 16*s.* 5*d.*<sup>11</sup> Evidently also the settlement of artisans and traders at the ford was attracting strangers, for in 1224-5 White paid 4*s.* to be allowed to settle in the new borough.<sup>12</sup> This year, however, only £2 11*s.* went to the Wolvesey treasury, as no less than £3 5*s.* 1*d.* was spent by the townsmen in making a ditch 300 perches long. In the following year one William paid 12*d.* 'pro respectu domus edificandi,' which may suggest that he had taken up land under an implied contract to build a house thereon.<sup>13</sup>

The town was now fairly established, and its inhabitants, with a consciousness of its adult status, were inclined to repudiate their connexion with Highclere. In 1231-2 2*s.* was levied 'de tota villata,' because they did not come to the frankpledge.<sup>14</sup> In the following year<sup>15</sup> 2*s.* was exacted from the men of Newtown, 'quia non venerunt ad curiam de Alta Clera,' and a further 2*s.* in the same year, 'de villata quia non venerunt ad curiam.' Yet in the account<sup>16</sup> for the first and second years of Bishop William de Raleigh about one-third of the borough issues were again paid to the reeve of Highclere, the remainder going to Wolvesey.

The style of reference to the borough in the Pipe Roll<sup>17</sup> of the fifth year of Bishop Raleigh is worth notice. This enrolment is headed 'Burgus de Clere,' but the account is rendered by 'John the serjeant and by Ralf, reeve of the new town of Sandelford' (prepositi nove ville de Sandelford). In fact, from about this time the borough is more frequently styled Newtown (Nova Villa) than Novus Burgus in the official accounts, and it was evidently marking time in its burghal and industrial development. We hear of no fair as at Overton, there is no hint of cloth manufacture as at the episcopal boroughs of Alresford, Downton and Witney; no burgesses went up from Newtown to serve the king in Parliament. It is possible that the borough suffered during the civil troubles<sup>18</sup> of Henry III; it was certainly in financial difficulties in the early years of his successor, and the account of the borough on the Pipe Roll of the eleventh year of Nicholas of Ely<sup>19</sup> is not only headed by arrears amounting to £7 12*s.* 2*d.*, but records that 'the whole borough' paid 4*s.* 'pro fatuo responso et antiquo statu habendo.' Soon after this we hear of the two hundred courts or tourns<sup>20</sup> held about Martinmas and at Hocktide, at each of which 12*d.* tithing-penny was paid by the burgesses. No intermediate courts are mentioned either at this time or later. Craftsmen—butchers, bakers, ironmongers, shoemakers—are still the backbone of Newtown. There may be reference to stalls before the houses, when we hear of 1*d.* increment<sup>21</sup> paid by Philip le Bochere 'for one little place of purpresture before his threshold delivered him in the time of the king,' or when 'a little place which Alice Basely held' at 2*d.* a year was thrown down by the constable of the king<sup>22</sup> 'per statutum.'

When at Michaelmas 1348 the Black Death had just touched the English coast the issues<sup>23</sup> of Newtown paid to the bishop's treasury were £7 13*s.* 8*d.*, and no arrears existed. In the following autumn,<sup>24</sup> probably through the plague—although no burgages are that year recorded on the roll as reverting to the bishop—only £6 was paid in at Wolvesey, no less than £1 15*s.* 11*d.* being left uncollected. Part of this seems to have been due to the abandonment of the tenement of Thomas atte Brome, which was of the yearly value of 10*s.* 8½*d.* It was vacant at least nine years. In the neighbouring manors of Highclere and Burghclere several tenements also came to the bishop's hands. Although after the second pestilence of 1361 there are similar signs of its ravages at Burghclere, the Newtown accountant<sup>25</sup> of 1362 paid £8 2*s.* 10*d.* to Sir Walter Sevenhampton at Wolvesey, and the arrears were wholly due to the long vacant tenement of Thomas atte Brome.

By 1434-5 Newtown<sup>26</sup> seems to have entirely recovered from any effect of the great plagues of the last century. At the end of that financial year £8 19*s.* 8*d.* was paid to William Mareys, the treasurer at Wolvesey, and only 2*s.* 5*d.* was left in arrear. Besides the normal tithing-penny the perquisites of the two tourns reached the sum of 12*s.* 5*d.*, nearly three times as much as in the year of the Black Death. The next century showed no progress at Newtown; the issues, in fact, were inclined to fall off, if only in a slight degree. In 1529 (21 Hen. VIII) the amount<sup>27</sup> paid to the Wolvesey treasurer was £7 16*s.* 6*d.*

The rare surviving books of tourns at this period suggest no special industry at Newtown. It was

<sup>9</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 22, no. 159276.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. no. 159277.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. no. 159278.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. no. 159279.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. bdle. 23, no. 159280.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. no. 159282 (27 P. des Roches).

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. no. 159283.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid. no. 159287.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid. bdle. 55, no. 159457.

<sup>18</sup> In a Pipe Roll of uncertain date, belonging to the episcopate of Bishop Gervais, we find the Nova Villa account burdened with £8 2*s.* 3*d.* arrears, which exceeded the issues of the year; but this seems to have been cleared off by 1268 (cf. Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 55, no. 159458, and bdle. 24, no. 159298).

<sup>19</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 26, no. 159304.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid. bdle. 27, no. 159311; cf.

P.R.O. Mins. Accts. bdle. 1142, no. 2.

<sup>21</sup> Eccl. Com. Var. bdle. 26, no. 159305.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid. bdle. 27, no. 159311, and cf. bdle. 23, no. 159286. The reference seems to be to some act done during the vacancy of the see.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. bdle. 35, no. 159357.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. no. 159358.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. bdle. 38, no. 159372.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. bdle. 50, no. 159430.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid. bdle. 10, no. 155874½.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

merely a wayside village of inns and small holdings,<sup>28</sup> a stage on the Newbury and Winchester road, backed by much common and waste. Only one tourn<sup>29</sup> a year seems to have been held, for the whole of the 2s. tithing-penny was paid at Martinmas and no records of Hocktide Courts for the reign of Henry VIII are forthcoming. At the Martinmas tourn, held 15 November 1531 (23 Hen. VIII), Henry Felde, bailiff, and Richard Smythe, tithingman, made certain presentments, and these were confirmed and supplemented by the verdict of a jury of twelve. The business mainly consisted of formal defaults, breaches of assize, and petty quarrels with such burning questions as the ringing of hogs and the maintenance of hedges. Two hedge-breakers, for instance, John Coterell and John Croke, 'dicti subtenentes,' were bidden to quit the borough by Christmas on pain of half a mark. John Beneyt, too, was enjoined to make a proper fence between 'Le Churchmede' and 'Lyatesland.' The minutes of no other court at Newtown are recorded in the bishop's court book until the Martinmas tourn and court four years after, although intermediate courts for the adjacent manors of Clere and Overton borough regularly appear. However, it may be hazardous to assert that none were held. A new bailiff, John Webbe, and a new tithingman, Philip Roose, had by this time come into office. Brewers, tipplers and hedge-breakers as usual came in for attention, and we also hear of a certain suspect, unknown, who arrived at Newtown and there left two kerchiefs of linen, which the twelve sworn men valued at 10d., and the bailiff seized as a waif for the lord.

By the middle of the next century the name of the borough remained, but at the Martinmas tourn and borough court<sup>30</sup> (Turnus Sancti Martini cum curia burgi), held 11 October 1647, although a jury was sworn, neither bailiff nor reeve appeared. The tithingman, however, was present and the usual tithing-penny of 2s. was paid. No other business is on record. Two centuries later it had been forgotten that Newtown was ever a borough.

This decayed borough remained among the possessions of the bishopric<sup>31</sup> until 1648, when it was sold with the other possessions of the bishopric, the purchaser being James Storey.<sup>32</sup>

On the accession of Charles II it was restored to the bishopric,<sup>33</sup> but was afterwards acquired by the Herbert family, Henry John George Herbert Lord Porchester, son and heir of Henry George second Earl of Carnarvon, dealing with it by recovery in 1821.<sup>34</sup> The present owner is his grandson, George Edward Stanhope Molyneux fifth Earl of Carnarvon.

The church of ST. MARY THE CHURCH VIRGIN AND ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST was rebuilt in the year 1865 and consists of a chancel 20 ft. by 15 ft., with a vestry on the south side, a nave 42 ft. by 18 ft., with a north aisle 5 ft. 9 in. wide, and a tower at the north-west 8 ft. square, the base of which forms the north porch.

All the windows of the chancel, nave and aisle are of 14th-century design. The walls are of flint and stone, the roofs are tiled.

The tower is of three low stages with an octagonal stair turret at the south-west corner and it is finished with an octagonal shingled spire. It contains four bells, all cast by G. Mears & Co. 1865.

The church possesses two old Sheffield-plated chalices, a paten and a flagon.

The registers are contained in two books, the first having baptisms 1666 to 1812, marriages from 1679 to 1682, and from 1731 to 1754, and burials from 1735 to 1812. The second volume is the usual printed form for marriages from 1754 to 1811.

The chapelry of Newtown, originally, it would appear, known as the chapel of Sandford, has always been attached to the church of Burghclere. The advowson of 'Burclere with a chapel' was confirmed to John Bishop of Winchester in 1284 by Edward I, and it has belonged to the lord of that manor ever since.<sup>35</sup>

In 1635 Dame Constance Lucy CHARITIES by will, dated 15 May, directed her sons, Sir Richard Lucy, bart., and the Rev. William Lucy (afterwards Bishop of St. David's), to purchase lands of the clear yearly value of £30, whereof £20 should be for the maintenance of a preacher and £10 for education. By deed, dated 15 October 1771, lands in Collingbourne, Wilts., were conveyed and settled upon the prescribed trusts. By an order of the Charity Commissioners of 8 January 1904, made under the Board of Education Act, 1899, the annual sum of £10, being one-third of the net annual value, was constituted to be the 'Educational Foundation of Lady Constance Lucy.'

The annual sum of 6s. 8d. in respect of the charity of — Boswell was formerly distributed among the poor.

In 1874 Edmund Arbuthnot by will bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens a legacy, now represented by £599 9s. 10d. consols, with the official trustees, the dividends amounting to £15 19s. 8d. to be applied half for organist of parish church, one-fourth for bell-ringers, and one-fourth for internal ornamental repairs, &c., of parish church.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. Harl. Chart. 112 A 35; Assize R. 781, m. 13 d.

<sup>29</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. bdle. 88, no. 4.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. bdle. 99, no. 2.

<sup>31</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274; Mins. Accts. bdle. 1142, no. 1; Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 159500.

<sup>32</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 32.

<sup>33</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. 158874; Eccl. Com. Var. 159498.

<sup>34</sup> Recov. R. Hants, Mich. 2 Geo. IV, rot. 221.

<sup>35</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 273;

Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, App. Newtown seems to have been an offshoot of Highclere. It is not improbable that Burghclere was the mother church of Highclere originally, as well as of Newtown.

ST. MARY BOURNE

Borne, Seynt Marye Borne (xvi cent.).

The village of St. Mary Bourne is 1 mile north-west of Hurstbourne station and lies near the eastern boundary of the parish, which contains the tithings of Binley, Egbury, Stoke, Week and Swampton, and consists of 7,745 acres, of which 5,821 acres are arable land, 1,002 acres are permanent grass and 594 acres are woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup>

The village stands on the River Bourne, a tributary of the Test, and at the south end of it, not far from the site of Port Way, an old Roman road from Sarum to Silchester, in a fairly central position in relation to the various tithings is the church, which is described in a manuscript of the 18th century as 'a Chappel of Ease belonging to the mother church of Hurstbourne.'<sup>2</sup>

South of the village is Upper Link, the residence of Mr. E. B. Black-Hawkins. The tithing of Swampton lies in a valley a mile north-west of St. Mary Bourne. It has since 1723 been the site of the parochial schools which for many years stood on what is known as Swampton Green. The Week, Wick or Wyke tithing is in the west of the parish and contains the several divisions of Upper, Middle and Lower Week. Further up the river north-west from Swampton is the hamlet of Stoke with Stoke House, the residence of Mrs. Addison. Great Wallop Hill Down, west of Stoke, preserves the name of a former lord of the manor.

Binley Hamlet is in the north and is reached by the Wadwick Road and Red Lane. Near it is Warwick (Wadewick, 1636) with the farms of Upper and Lower Warwick. Cobbett in his Rural Rides records a somewhat unfavourable impression of Binley: 'I never saw any uninhabited place more reclude, yet into there the all-searching eye of the taxing Thing reaches. Its exciseman can tell it what it is doing even in the little odd corner of Binley, for even there I saw over the door of a place not half so good as the place in which my fowls roost "Licensed to deal in Tea and Tobacco." Poor half-starved wretches of Binley!'<sup>3</sup>

Egbury lies east of Warwick and has an interesting prehistoric camp known as Egbury Castle, where Roman coins have been found.

The old gabled manor-house at Dunley, a tithing in Egbury, was at one time the residence of a branch of the Oxenbridge family. William, brother of Sir Robert Oxenbridge of Hurstbourne, lived at Dunley, and Edward, his son, is described as 'of Dunley.'<sup>4</sup> It is now the residence of Mr. F. A. Holman.

Some place-names of interest are Court Place, or Court Hayes, Rodeswode Mill, Badley, Bucketts Down and Colleslake<sup>5</sup> (xvi cent.), and Somersets (xvii cent.), so called from Edward Duke of Somerset, at one time lord of the manor.<sup>6</sup>

A number of flint implements have been found in this parish,<sup>7</sup> besides Roman remains. At Lower Week roof tiles and bricks lying on the surface indicate a Roman building; and much pottery has been dug out from what is thought to be a well.<sup>8</sup> At Lower Link Romano-British culinary ware, a denarius of Gordian (A.D. 238-244) and skeletons and urns were discovered.<sup>9</sup>

The commons of Swampton were inclosed in 1753.<sup>10</sup>

The tithings of ST. MARY BOURNE, MANORS BINLEY (Bienlegh, xvi cent.); EGBURY (Eggebury, xvi cent.); WEEK (Wyke, Wick, Wyke), and STOKE (Stoce, Adstoke, x cent.) have always been included in the manor of Hurstbourne Priors<sup>11</sup> (q.v.).

The first four are not mentioned by name in the Saxon charters, but in a charter of King Edward the Elder (901-25) 10 hides in 'Adstoke' are expressly stated to belong to Hurstbourne.<sup>12</sup>

In 1535 the following are described as members of Hurstbourne:—the manor of Bourne, of the annual value of £28 16s. 11d.; the manor of Binley, of the annual value of £16 1s. 9d.; the manor of Stoke, worth yearly £19 10s. 6d.; the manor of Week, worth every year £16 1s. 2d.; and the manor of Egbury, of the annual value of £14 7s. 3½d.; and, again, in the particulars for grants of Hurstbourne to Sir John Gate in 1553 the same places are mentioned.<sup>13</sup>

In 1565 Sir Robert Oxenbridge, who had purchased Hurstbourne from the Crown in 1558, was ordered to show by what title he held 'the manors' of St. Mary Bourne, Week, Stoke, Binley and Egbury, and a suit was begun to decide whether the above were separate manors or whether the manor of Hurstbourne Priors included them. Judgement was finally given that from time immemorial they had been hamlets of the manor of Hurstbourne, and Sir Robert obtained a recognition of his title to them.<sup>14</sup>

The manor of WEEK or WYKE or WYKE DAUNDELY may probably be represented by the 2 hides which Richer, who is generally identified with Richer de Andely, the founder of the family of that name, was holding of the bishop at the time of the Domesday Survey. Alnod had held them before him probably in the time of King Edward.<sup>15</sup> If this is correct the manor followed the same descent<sup>16</sup> as Chilton Candover in the hundred of Mainsborough (q.v.), which was similarly held by Richer in 1086, passing with it from the Daundeleys to the Bayntuns by marriage in the middle of the 14th century.<sup>17</sup>

Sir Edward Bayntun died in 1544<sup>18</sup> and the manor then passed in accordance with a marriage settlement of 1531 to his widow Isabel, who

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 61.

<sup>3</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 268.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. 272; Berry, Hants Gen. 214.

<sup>5</sup> De Banc. R. East. 16 Hen. VII, 321;

Harl. MS. 608, fol. 86.

<sup>6</sup> Stevens, op. cit. 147. <sup>7</sup> Ibid. 53, 59.

<sup>8</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 304.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. <sup>10</sup> Stevens, op. cit. 291.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 87; Moody, Hants, 176; Pat.

7 Edw. VI, pt. vii.

<sup>12</sup> Dugdale, Mon. i, 212.

<sup>13</sup> Stevens, op. cit. 215, 133.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. 136, 137.

<sup>15</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 465; Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 97.

<sup>16</sup> This manor as well as Chilton Candover was held by the Daundeleys in the 14th century (Feud. Aids, ii, 330).

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 6 Edw. II; East. 46 Edw. III; Inq. p.m. 9 Hen. V, no. 48.

<sup>18</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxii, 93.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

subsequently married Sir James Stumpe.<sup>19</sup> In 1546 Andrew Bayntun, son and heir of Sir Edward, granted the reversion of the manor after the death of Isabel to Sir Michael Lyster.<sup>20</sup> Sir Michael apparently con-

DAUNDELEY. Argent two bars gules with three crosslets on each bar.

BAYNTUN. Sable a bend indented argent.

veyed it to Richard Fauconer, lord of Hurstbourne Fauconers (q.v.), for the heirs of the latter, Francis Yate, Alice Kingsmill and Margaret Sotwell, were jointly seised in 1562 of and in the immediate reversion of the manor of Week 'which Sir James Stumpe in right of Dame Isabel Stumpe, now his wife, holdeth for term of natural life.'<sup>21</sup> In that year Francis Yate gave up all his right in the manor to Richard Kingsmill and Alice his wife, and from that date Week Daundely has followed the same descent as Hurstbourne Fauconers<sup>22</sup> (q.v.).

Ralf de Mortemer held 1 hide in SWAMPTON (Suantune) at the time of the Domesday Survey in 1086, and before him, in the time of King Edward, Cheping, a Saxon landowner, had held it for life.<sup>23</sup> It should have reverted to the monks of St. Swithun's, Winchester, after the death of Cheping, but the king granted it with the rest of Cheping's possession to Ralf de Mortemer.<sup>24</sup> In the reign of Henry II Richard Labaanc granted to the nunnery of Godstow all his mother's dowry, i.e. 'Cnolle (Knowle in Kingsclere, q.v.) and Swanton which belongs to the same.'<sup>25</sup> This gift was confirmed both by Henry II and by Hugh de Mortemer, heir of the Domesday Ralf.<sup>26</sup> However, the abbey evidently did not remain in possession, as Swampton never appears in the rent rolls of its lands, and, according to the returns of 1346, the two halves of a knight's fee in Swampton were held respectively by Philip Daundely, successor in possession to John Daundely, and Robert de Eton, successor to Peter de Eton.<sup>27</sup> The Daundely property descended with the manor of Week Daundely (see supra), and it seems probable that the later manor of Swampton represented the estate owned by the Etons.

However, the history of this property is not easy to trace. By the beginning of the 15th century it had presumably been divided between co-heiresses whose respective husbands<sup>28</sup> were returned as holders in 1428. One or more of these portions descended to the Skilling family,<sup>29</sup> one or more to the Bruning family, who in the 16th century were in possession of two-thirds of the manor of Swampton, while the Skillings were in possession of the other third. The whole was sold by the two families to Robert Oxenbridge, the two-thirds by the Brunings in 1576-7,<sup>30</sup> the other third by William Skilling in 1585,<sup>31</sup> and from this date the descent of the manor follows that of Hurstbourne Priors<sup>32</sup> (q.v.).

In 1553 CHAPMANSFORD was included in the lands sold to Sir John Gate.<sup>33</sup> Sir Robert Oxenbridge acquired this property from the Crown in 1558, and in 1589, by copy of court roll and 'in consideration of a great sum of money' he granted 'one messuage and five yard-lands called Chapmans Ford with one pasture called Standhurste and 4 coppices . . . and one water mill' to Geoffrey Poore and Elizabeth his wife and Robert their son.<sup>34</sup>

In 1602 there was a suit between Elizabeth, widow of Geoffrey, and Sir Robert Oxenbridge, who tried to eject her on the ground that she had broken her agreement to grind 'her own corn only and the corn of strangers not tenants of or within the said manor.' On the ground of age and poverty the widow won her case, and her son was allowed to remain in possession as before.<sup>35</sup> Fourteen years later Robert Poore 'of Chapmansford gent.' sold the capital messuage there to John and Geoffrey Poore.<sup>36</sup>

This property is now probably represented by Chapmansford Farm in the south of the parish, but the ford no longer exists, a bridge having been made at the direction of the Earl of Portsmouth in the middle of the last century.<sup>37</sup>

In the 14th and 15th centuries, besides the holding in Stoke belonging to the Prior of St. Swithun's, Winchester, there were two small estates held by the Fauconer and Cotes families respectively. The former was probably appurtenant to the manor of Hurstbourne Fauconers (q.v.) and followed its descent.<sup>38</sup> The later descent of the other holding has not been traced.

The church of ST. PETER consists CHURCH of a chancel 37 ft. 3 in. by 18 ft. 9 in., nave 65 ft. 3 in. by 17 ft., north aisle 5 ft. 11 in. wide, south chapel of three bays 37 ft. 11 in. by 17 ft., south aisle 7 ft. 6 in. wide, south porch and west tower 13 ft. 8 in. by 13 ft. 4 in.

<sup>19</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 5 Eliz. m. 11.

<sup>20</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 38 Hen. VIII; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), lxxii, 93.

<sup>21</sup> Com. Pleas D. Enr. East. 5 Eliz. m. 11.

<sup>22</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 5 Eliz.

<sup>23</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 490.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid.

<sup>25</sup> Exch. K.R. Misc. Bks. xx, 19 d., 20.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.; Dugdale, Baronage, i, 138.

<sup>27</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330. There is no evidence to show that either of these holdings was included in the Mortemer possessions.

<sup>28</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. IV, 15; Pat. 15 Edw. IV, pt. ii, m. 19; Recov. R. East. 25 Hen. VIII, rot. 119. In the returns of 1428 the Daundely half of Swampton was held by John Bayntun, while the rest was held by John Lavington, John Herries, John Bodenewell, and John Wardyn (Feud. Aids, ii, 346).

<sup>29</sup> In 1485 the king granted to John and Richard Pole land in Swampton in St. Mary Bourne, formerly belonging to Michael Skilling in right of Anne his wife, late the wife of John Stooch. In spite of this grant the Skillings apparently regained possession of their property (Cal. Pat. 1476-85, p. 504).

<sup>30</sup> Berry, Hants Gen. 262; Feet of F. Hants, East. 19 Eliz. In 1567 Robert Baker (Pistar), who inherited the property through his mother Rebecca daughter of William Skilling, sold a third of the manor to Richard Bruning, seven years later Francis Bruning dealt by fine with two-thirds of the manor, and finally, in 1576-7, Richard Bruning and Francis Bruning sold the two-thirds to Robert Oxenbridge (Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 9 Eliz.; Hil. 16 Eliz.; East. 19 Eliz.).

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. East. 27 Eliz.

<sup>32</sup> Recov. R. Trin. 12 Chas. I, rot. 5; Trin. 1 Geo. II, rot. 83; East. 13 Geo. II, rot. 316.

<sup>33</sup> Pat. 7 Edw. VI, pt. vii; vide Hurstbourne Priors.

<sup>34</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 149, 150.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid.

<sup>36</sup> Ct. of Wards Deeds Box 9.

<sup>37</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 198.

<sup>38</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330, 346.

These dimensions are taken within the building.

The building is one of the most puzzling in the county. No details earlier than the second half of the 12th century are now to be seen, but the thick west wall of the south chapel, cut away to adapt it to the capital of the third pier of the south arcade, clearly belongs to an older state of things. It must have formed part of a south transept or, what is more likely, a south tower, and a weathering on its west face shows that a south aisle of the same width as that now existing was standing at the time. The present chancel arch, which is of 12th-century masonry re-used early in the 14th, when the present chancel was added, probably stands on the line of the east wall of the early chancel, and any division which may have existed between this chancel and the nave must have been destroyed when the north arcade assumed its present form. This arcade is apparently all of one date, the end of the 12th century, except perhaps its eastern bay, and has diagonal tooling throughout on arches and piers. It is set out without regard to the south arcade, one pier of which, the third, seems to be of equal age with it. The two east bays the tower suggests a rebuilding in the 16th or 17th century. As usual, galleries were put in at the west end and sides, and again removed at a subsequent period. The south porch is a comparatively modern addition. Much of the stonework has had to be renewed in modern times; the easternmost arch on the north side is all modern, and some of the windows are modernized, otherwise the church has undergone no drastic alterations.

The east window of the chancel has five lights under a traceried head of geometrical design, the tracery and mullions being modern. The jambs outside are double chamfered; inside they are splayed in two wave-moulded orders. The chancel is of three bays, and has, in the east and west bays, original two-light north and south windows, trefoiled, and with a quatrefoil in the head; the middle bay on the south contains a small doorway, and that on the north is blank. Under the first south window is a cinque-foiled ogee-headed piscina recess with a round basin partly cut away, and a narrow shelf above; the jambs are of two wave-moulded orders. The south doorway is also old; its jambs are double chamfered with of the south arcade belong to the first quarter of the 13th century, and are of wider span than the rest; the south tower can hardly have been standing after they were built. The three west bays of the south arcade seem to form one work, and have labels of the same section; their arches are of 13th-century date with vertical tooling, and the two western of the three piers are similarly tooled except for their capitals, which are of late 12th-century character, with the diagonal tooling of that date. The remaining pier, already noted as being of equal age with the north arcade, is diagonally tooled on all its masonry. The nave has clearly been shortened, probably when the present west tower was built in the latter part of the 15th century, in order to leave space for the usual procession path within the churchyard boundary, here formed by the road.

PLAN OF ST. MARY BOURNE CHURCH

Early in the 14th century the present fine chancel was built and about 1350-60 the south chapel of the nave, taking up the site of the south tower and 13th-century south chapel, was added. The north wall of the north aisle seems to have been rebuilt in comparatively modern times, and the west walls of both aisles are of the same date as the tower. The upper part of broach stops at the foot, and the arch is two-centred with an ogee and bead label.

The chancel arch has square jambs and a round arch 1 ft. 9 in. thick of a single square order. It has on both sides a 12th-century label enriched with pellet ornament and designed for an arch of shorter radius. The masonry also is 12th-century work partly retooled with a claw chisel, and the present condition of the arch probably dates from the building of the chancel.

The north arcade of the nave has five and a half bays, the half being against the west wall, and the easternmost of narrower span than the others; the east respond is partly hidden by the organ casing, but the angle that shows is square in plan with three edge rolls (the outermost restored with cement); these have scalloped capitals and chamfered abaci. All the piers are square in plan with engaged corner shafts. In the first pier these have no capitals and bases, and the abacus, which is modern, is chamfered above and below. In the second pier the shafts have moulded bases (a hollow between two rounds) and scalloped capitals, of which the south-east is a triple scallop. The north-east and south-west have the faces of the scallops enriched with carving and the north-west is carved with stiff foliage; the abacus of this pier is a scroll mould. The shafts of the third pier have moulded bases as the last. The two eastern capitals are carved with vertical foliage, the other two are scalloped. The abacus is rounded above and has a hollow in a chamfer below. In the fourth pier the shafts have moulded bases, in the two south like the others, the moulding projects beyond the face of the pier to the face of the plinth; the two north bases do not project beyond the pier faces. Of the capitals the two eastern have ornamented scallops; the north-west has a large single scallop and the south-west is a restored scalloped one, the abacus being like that of the third pier. The fifth pier shafts have projecting moulded bases as the others, but the capitals are single scalloped or cushion caps; the abacus is plainer than the others, but has the hollow in the chamfered lower face. Of the arches the easternmost is modern; the others are old of a single chamfered order with a hollow chamfered label which is flush with the face above the arches; in the western half arch the chamfer is stopped off square above the abacus of the pier.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The south arcade has five bays; the responds and piers are square with angle shafts like those opposite, but in the east respond and the first two piers these shafts are filleted and clearly of 13th-century date; the east respond shafts have no capitals, and the base of the north shaft is a square block, while that of the south is moulded with three rounds; the abacus is a plain chamfered one. The first pier shafts have bases of three rounds, and moulded capitals of fully developed bell form. The second pier shafts resemble the first; while those of the third pier are plain rounds set on a chamfered edge. The capitals have scallops enriched with leaves, those to the north being more elaborate than the other two. The abaci of this and the fourth pier are rounded and hollowed like those on the north side. Behind the third pier springs the cross arch dividing the south chapel from the aisle. The south-east shaft of the fourth pier has enriched scallops like the others. The north-east capital is modern and the two to the west are single scallops or cushions; the south-east capital of the west respond is also like the last. The other has been restored, but it had enriched scallops. A south-west shaft can be seen against the west wall of the aisle, proving the respond to be a complete pier. The bases of the third and fourth piers and the west respond are of two rounds. The arches are pointed chamfered ones, like those opposite, but the hood moulds of the first two are deeply undercut like the abaci from which they spring, and those of the three western arches are rounded above and hollowed in a chamfer below.

The north aisle has a blocked east window (now hidden by the organ) of a single ogee trefoiled light of 14th-century date. The three north windows of the aisle are completely modernized; each is of two cinquefoiled ogee-headed lights. Between the second and third is a blocked doorway of a single chamfered order and with a four-centred arch under a square label. The wall has probably been rebuilt at a late date.

The south chapel has an east window of three cinquefoiled ogee-headed lights under an ogee arch filled with flowing tracery of mid-14th-century character; to the south of it inside is the remnant of an image bracket. The two south windows are similar in character to the east, but of two lights under traceried pointed heads. Between them are the mutilated remains of a large tomb recess, with an ogee arch formerly sept-foiled, and with a moulded and crocketed label and carved foliage finial; to the west is part of a crocketed pinnacle. The arch from the chapel to the aisle has a chamfered south jamb with a moulded string at the springing and a two-centred arch edge-chamfered like the rest, the west face of which has been cut away where it joins the third pier of the arcade. The south doorway is of 14th-century date, but is now nearly all of modern repair. It has two continuous chamfered orders with broach stops above the threshold, and the label is large and plain. The window next it is 15th-century work of two cinquefoiled lights.

The arch from the nave into the tower is of two chamfered orders dying on the jambs, which are flush with the tower walls and have chamfered abaci partly modern and partly 12th-century work re-used. The west window in the tower is of early 16th or late 15th-century date and has three cinquefoiled lights under a traceried four-centred head with a moulded label. Above it is a plain rectangular light and over this a clock, all in the first of the two stages of the tower. The bell-chamber is lighted by plain two-light square-headed windows; the parapet is embattled. In the west window are the arms of the see of Winchester in a garter impaled with a coat now lost; but the style of the work makes it probable that the arms were those of Bishop Fox. The south porch is of brick and timber, and probably of 17th-century date. The materials of the walling as usual are flint and stone, the north aisle walls and those of the tower and west ends of the south aisle having been cement faced outside; while the lower part of the north aisle wall is of brick and flint, and the parapet of the south aisle is modern.

The roof of the chancel is modern, of high pitch, plastered below and tiled above; while the nave has a flat-gabled roof, probably dating from the 16th century; it is plastered below and divided into six bays by moulded tie-beams, supported by curved braces; the purlins are also moulded. The roof of the south chapel and aisle is a flat lean-to, now boarded between the rafters, but once plastered. The principals are moulded and appear to be contemporary with the nave roof. The north aisle roof is modern.

There is a plain old oak altar table.

The font is one of the few resembling that of Winchester Cathedral to be found in Hampshire churches; only the bowl remains, the stem being a modern round one. The former is 3 ft. 6 in. square and has been already fully described.<sup>39</sup>

Near the font is a late 17th-century or 18th-century lectern with a four-sided desk, which revolves on a turned middle post. From it are suspended two chains, which served to secure the books resting upon it; these now are a prayer-book of 1776 and Bibles of 1701 and 1717.

A patch of old tiles is set in the floor west of the font.

There are the remains of several 17th-century texts, &c., over the spandrels of the arcades and a restored one at the west end of the south aisle.

There are five bells: the treble by Robert Cor, 1724; the second by the same founder, 1693; the

<sup>39</sup> V.C.H. Hants, ii, 244.

ST. MARY BOURNE CHURCH FROM THE SOUTH-EAST third by John Cor, 1737; the fourth by Robert Cor, 1683; and the fifth also by Robert Cor, 1698.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten cover of 1588; a silver chalice, two patens, a flagon and a credence plate of 1847, given by Mr. Thomas Longman, of Lower Week, in 1848; and a plated alms dish.

The first book of the registers contains baptisms and burials from 1661 to 1799 and marriages to 1751; the second has baptisms and burials 1800 to 1812; the third marriages 1754-1770; the fourth marriages 1771 to 1812. There are also churchwardens' accounts from 1669.

St. Mary Bourne has from time ADVOWSON immemorial been a chapelry dependent upon the mother church of Hurstbourne Priors<sup>40</sup> (q.v.).

There are numerous Nonconformist chapels in the parish: a Baptist chapel at Swampton, rebuilt in 1879; a Primitive Methodist chapel, built in 1859; and another at Stoke, built in 1864. A Wesleyan chapel was rebuilt in 1886, and there is another at Dunley. The 'Old Book Chapel' originally used by the Primitive Methodists is now called the St. Mary Bourne Band of Hope Mission Room. The Salvation Army hold meetings there and in the buildings behind known as Workman's Hall.<sup>41</sup>

The Binley Mission Room (unsectarian) was built in 1882 on land given by Miss Longman, daughter of the late Mr. John Longman of Warwick.<sup>42</sup> The present school was built in 1860 on land given by the Earl of Portsmouth, and a north wing was added in 1878; it was originally a National school, but was made a Board school in 1875.<sup>43</sup>

By a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 27 March 1907 the charities after-mentioned were consolidated under the title of 'The United Charities,' and placed under the administration of the body of trustees thereby constituted; namely, the charities of:—

1. William Batchelor, founded by will, about 1797, trust fund consisting of £55 9s. 5d. consols;

2. Robert Longman, will in 1813, £110 19s. 1d. consols;

3. Hannah Longman, will proved at Winchester 15 September 1838, trust fund £49 18s. 4d. consols;

4. Thomas Sutton, gift in 1844, £33 6s. 10d. consols;

5. William Longman, gift about 1844, £110 19s. 1d. consols;

6. Robert Holdway, for poor, will proved at Winchester, 27 October 1855, £300 consols;

7. Thomas Longman, will proved 26 October 1858, £208 12s. 2d. consols;

8. John Moore, founded by deed, dated 23 July 1878, trust fund £104 8s. 9d. consols;

9. John Longman, will proved 22 April 1879, £210 7s. 5d. consols;

10. Mary Ann Holdway, will proved 17 November 1880, £498 15s. consols;

11. Henry Beckley Vincent, will proved 30 April 1886, £200 consols; and

12. Anne Elizabeth Longman, will proved 11 February 1904, trust fund consisting of £201 19s. 5d. Tasmanian 3½ per cent. stock.

The several sums of stock are held by the official trustees, producing £54 a year, which is distributed usually one-half in sums of 2s. 6d. to 8s. and the other half in coal.

In 1855 the above-mentioned Robert Holdway by his will likewise left £200 consols for the benefit of the parish school. The stock is also held by the official trustees.

The Holdway Almshouse Charity, founded and endowed by Sarah Holdway, by deeds, dated respectively 4 May 1864 and 12 August 1874, consists of four cottages under one roof with gardens, and £718 2s. 9d. Queensland 3½ per cent. Inscribed Stock and £718 2s. 4d. Victoria 3½ per cent. Inscribed Stock in the names of James Eyles and two others, producing yearly £50 5s. 4d.

The charity is regulated by scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 22 November 1904. The inmates are required to be poor widows or spinsters of not less than fifty-five years of age, who receive 4s. a week.

WHITCHURCH

Hwitancyrice (x cent.); Witcirce (xi cent.); Witcherche (xii and xiii cent.); Whicchurch (xv cent.).

Whitchurch is a parish of 6,367 acres, of which 3,760½ acres are arable land, 1,138½ acres permanent grass, 179½ acres woods and plantations, and 19 acres are land covered with water.<sup>1</sup> The soil is clayey loam, and the subsoil chalk. The chief crops are wheat, barley, oats and turnips. The parish contains the borough and the tithings of Whitchurch Parsonage, Freefolk Priors, Charlcot and Cole Henley.

Port Way, the Roman road from Old Sarum to Silchester, runs across the north of the parish, forming a part of the northern boundary; it crosses the Newbury road at Clapgate or Chappgate, which marks where the chapmen or travelling merchants of Saxon and later times crossed the road to Newbury as they were journeying along the Roman road.<sup>2</sup> According to tradition Whitchurch was the scene of a battle with the Danes in the 10th century.<sup>3</sup> In later days the Royalist forces stopped here on their way to the second battle of Newbury, when King Charles slept the night of 19 October 1644 at the house of Mr. Richard Brooke of Whitchurch.<sup>4</sup> In 1649 the inhabitants of Whitchurch sent a complaint signed by the mayor and others to Lord Fairfax concerning the losses which they had sustained by the free quartering of Colonel Martin's soldiers upon them.<sup>5</sup>

The small town of Whitchurch is situated at the <sup>40</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 215; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 76; Egerton MS. 2033; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), iv, App.

<sup>41</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 294, 295.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid. 295.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid. 286.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> Hants N. and Q. ix, 126.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. ix, 121.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. i, 43; Cal. S. P. Dom. 1644-5, p. 14.

<sup>5</sup> Leyborne-Popham MSS. (Hist. MSS. Com.), 14.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

junction of the London to Andover and Newbury to Winchester roads. The market-place is in the centre of the town and from it diverge these four roads and a fifth running north-west around Hurstbourne Park towards St. Mary Bourne. The Test flows to the south of the market-place and is famous for its fishing. It is crossed by a modern brick bridge of five arches on the Winchester road. There is a railway station on the London and South Western Railway about half a mile north of the centre and another on the Newbury Winchester branch of the Great Western Railway to the north-west.

Beyond the church there are few buildings of interest in the place, probably the most interesting being the White Hart Hotel, an old posting house at the corner of the London and Newbury roads; it dates from the time of Queen Anne and contains a good ceiling of that period. Opposite the hotel in the Newbury road is the Town Hall, a plain small structure dating perhaps from the same period as the hotel; its lower part is now used as a reading-room, &c. Several of the cottages and small shops about the market-place are of some age and contain picturesque half-timber work, but the town is now fast being modernized. The vicarage opposite the church probably contains some remains of the house in which Mr. Richard Brooke entertained Charles I in 1644, but all its details are now modern.

The parish church, which is situated to the north-east of the town in the Salisbury road, is particularly interesting, as it is built on the site of what was probably one of the earliest parish churches in Hampshire. The town took its name from the 'White Church,' built no doubt of hard chalk, and as it must have existed in Thane Hemele's time there was probably a parish church here in 800.<sup>6</sup> The monument erected to Frithburga, which was found at the restoration of the church in 1868, probably recorded the site of a burial in the first church.<sup>7</sup>

The workhouse, which was built in 1848 and enlarged in 1869, is on a hill half a mile east of the town.

The Isolation Hospital, on the road to Cole Henley, was built in 1897.

There are three mills in the parish—two flour mills and one silk mill; three existed at the time of the Domesday Survey in 1086, and they may possibly have stood on the same sites. There is a jam manufactory in the parish, and skalloons, serges and other woollens were manufactured to the value of £10,000 about a hundred years ago. The working classes are now employed chiefly at Long's jam factory and Hide's silk mill in the town, and at the bank-note factory at Laverstoke.

Manor Farm stands on rising ground at the west of the town, and there is another farm of the same name in the north in Cole Henley, which was formerly a separate manor.

Freefolk Priors represents that part of Freefolk which belonged to the priory of St. Swithun in the Middle Ages. It is situated on the river in the south-western corner of the parish, and is ecclesiastically attached to Laverstoke. Close to Priory Farm are the school and parish church of St. Mary.

Charlcot Farm is near Fulling Mill, and in the down country in the south of the parish is Charlcot Down Farm. The prior and convent owned Charlcot, which was granted to their successors, the dean and chapter, in 1541.<sup>8</sup> The parsonage tithing consists of 183 acres of land belonging to the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester.

Some place-names of interest are Windenaie (1086), which has been identified with Witnal, now a farm in the north-east of the parish<sup>9</sup>; Linch Hill, which takes its name from the acre strips or dinches of Saxon times; Travellers' Rest, in the north of the parish, the site of an inn when the Harrow Way was used as a high road<sup>10</sup>; Reedes (1691); Newlands and Home-downe (1691)<sup>11</sup>; Knolle (1455); Langelond and Suthhulle (1455)<sup>12</sup>; Culver Close, Pryors Meade, Cordry Moores, Butt Close, Bottom Down, Little Priddle, Evingdale, Boswood Lane, Burridge Feild and Winter Hill (1650).<sup>13</sup>

The commons were inclosed in 1798.<sup>14</sup>

The elementary school, which was built in 1847, was enlarged in 1892.

The first mention of the borough of BOROUGH WHITCHURCH, which followed the same descent as the manor (q.v. infra), is in 1284, when it was granted by the bishop to the Prior and monks of St. Swithun, the grant being confirmed next year by a royal charter.<sup>15</sup>

It probably owed its early importance to its position on the junction of the three great roads to Winchester, Salisbury and Oxford and was already a prosperous place in 1241, when the prior and convent obtained a grant of a weekly market on Monday.<sup>16</sup>

The town was governed by a court leet or port mote, which annually elected the mayor<sup>17</sup> and bailiff as governors of the town when it met in the town-hall in October of each year,<sup>18</sup> but this custom has died out within recent years, though the last elected mayor still retains his title by courtesy.<sup>19</sup>

In 1291 the borough paid £5 10s. annually to the priory,<sup>20</sup> and in 1335 it yielded £10 to the prior's treasury, besides 18s. as perquisites at the port mote or court leet.<sup>21</sup> In the 16th century the dean and chapter, as successors of the prior and convent, received the same amount for the borough,<sup>22</sup> which also had to contribute 6s. 8d. to the serjeant for his official gown.<sup>23</sup> Mr. Clarke, who was mayor in 1897, paid £8 per annum to the dean and chapter, justifying the description of a writer in the early part of the 18th century, who described the mayor 'as no other than a Rent Reeve to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester, to whom the Mannor belongs.'<sup>24</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (2), 171; Kemble, Cod. Dipl. v, 174; Searle, Onomasticon Angl.-Sax.

<sup>7</sup> Hants Field Club Proc. iv (2), 172.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix.

<sup>9</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>10</sup> Hants N. and Q. ix, 126.

<sup>11</sup> Eccles. Com. Ct. R. 159514.

<sup>12</sup> Var. Coll. (Hist. MSS. Com.), iv, 126.

<sup>13</sup> Close, 1650, pt. vii, no. 41.

<sup>14</sup> Blue Bk. Commons Incl. Awards.

<sup>15</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 288. It did not answer as a 'burgus' in the 'Placita Coronae' of 1280 (Assize R. 787).

<sup>16</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 256.

<sup>17</sup> Even in the early part of the 18th century, according to Pavey, the mayor was no more 'than a rent-reeve to the Dean and Chapter of Winton' (Stowe MS. 845, fol. 83).

<sup>18</sup> Moody, Hants, 167.

<sup>19</sup> Local information kindly supplied by the vicar.

<sup>20</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212b.

<sup>21</sup> Obed. R. of St. Swithun's (Hants Rec. Soc.), 127.

<sup>22</sup> Winchester Cath. Doc. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 83.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid. 72; Hants N. and Q. ix, 121.

<sup>24</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 81.

The market, which was changed to Thursday in 1248, was held on Friday in later times; it was still in existence in 1823, but was even then merely nominal<sup>25</sup>; it is now obsolete.

Fairs to be held on the third Thursday in June and the second Thursday in October were granted to Lord Russell in 1696.<sup>26</sup> In 1795 it was the custom to hold a fair on 23 April, 20 June, 7 July, and 19 October<sup>27</sup>; two of these were still held in 1848, but they were abolished in 1879.<sup>28</sup>

Whitchurch first sent two members to Parliament in 1586, when John Cooper and Henry Awdley represented the borough.<sup>29</sup> One of the best known members for Whitchurch was Sir Henry Vane the younger, who was returned for the borough in Richard Cromwell's Parliament.<sup>30</sup>

In an inquiry made before its disenfranchisement in 1832 the right of voting was declared to be in the freeholders, in virtue of a freehold held in right of themselves or their wives, each freeholder paying 1d. to the dean and chapter upon admission to his freehold.<sup>31</sup> The bailiff stated in this return that there had been no contested election at Whitchurch within the memory of the returning officer or of older persons. The following quotations from 17th-century letters will show by what means would-be members obtained a seat in Parliament. Thomas Webb, writing to Robert Read in 1640, says:—

'before it (a letter) came my Lord had been . . . infinitely opportuned for places in this next Parliament, and merely to avoid more he commanded me to write his letters for such as he then thought of that they might be answers to all other suitors . . . so that if you will take a plain truth for a fair excuse thus stands the case, my Lord has written to every corporate town for one and I know not whether his power will extend to more . . . if you have a mind to Whitchurch or any other place in Hampshire they are yet free and with a letter of ours and Lord Cottington's will speed anywhere.'<sup>32</sup>

Robert Read apparently expressed a wish to represent Whitchurch, as a few weeks later his cousin Francis wrote to him that 'Sir Thomas Jervoise hath, as last time, engrossed both the burgers places of Whitchurch, Hampshire, that town being, I know not why, so much at his command that they dare not deny him. Had he been contented with one I had the promise of the other for myself or friend, but through his power there and my loathness to contest with him I must let it alone.'<sup>33</sup>

In a charter of 909 Edward of Wessex MANORS confirmed 'land called Hwitancyrce' to the monks of Winchester, who had complained that this land, which had been granted them by Earl Hemele, was now entirely in the hands of the bishop.<sup>34</sup>

The Domesday Survey of 1086 returned the bishop as holding WHITCHURCH with the reservation that 'it was always the minster's'; two sub-tenants besides the priest were holding land of the manor, William de Fécamp (Fiscannio), who held land, which was previously held by two thegns, in 'Windenaie,' i.e. Witnal, and in two other places, and Mauger, who held land worth 20s.; Alvríc the priest held 1 hide of land with the church also worth 20s.<sup>35</sup> Pope Innocent III confirmed the manor to the prior and monks in 1205.<sup>36</sup>

John Bishop of Winchester gave up all right in the manor to the prior and convent in 1284,<sup>37</sup> and in 1335 the manor of Whitchurch yielded £36 17s. 4d. to the prior's treasury.<sup>38</sup> In 1455 John Roger of Freefolk was granted a lease of the demesne land for forty-four years at an annual rent of 20s.,<sup>39</sup> but John Mawne apparently acquired the remainder of the lease and died in 1479 seised of the manor which he held of the prior and convent.<sup>40</sup> The dean and chapter, who were the successors of the prior and convent, were granted Whitchurch among other possessions of their predecessors in 1541<sup>41</sup>; in 1575 John Clarke held the manor of them on lease.<sup>42</sup>

Robert Wallop, one of the judges of Charles I, who was attainted in 1660,<sup>43</sup> bought the remainder of a lease of Whitchurch Farm from William Shrimpton before the sale of the dean and chapter's manors in 1650; Whitchurch was then bought by James Nutley and William Pell,<sup>44</sup> but was restored to its original owners in 1660, when Daniel Wicherley petitioned the king to renew to him and his brother-in-law, only son of the late William Shrimpton, the lease of Whitchurch Farm which Robert Wallop had forfeited by his attainder.<sup>45</sup> The manor has remained with the dean and chapter, and is now held by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners<sup>46</sup> as their representatives.

In 1774 Charles Townshend acquired the right of free fishery in Whitchurch, together with a large quantity of land from Thomas Townshend,<sup>47</sup> who was returned to Parliament for Whitchurch on 17 April 1754, and continued to represent it until his elevation to the peerage in 1783.<sup>48</sup>

COLE HENLEY (Henle, xiv cent.; Cold Henley, xv cent.; Colhenlye, xvi cent.) was definitely called a manor in 1398, when the Prior of St. Swithun agreed to maintain a 'hedge and ditch between their manor of Whitchurch and the bishop's manor of Henley,'<sup>49</sup> and was very possibly included in the possession of William de Fécamp (Fiscannio) in 1086; if this was the case two thegns had previously held under the bishop, to whom the property belonged.<sup>50</sup>

In 1166 William de Fécamp, possibly a grandson, held three of the knights' fees which Hugh de Fécamp had held of the Bishop of Winchester before him; and Richard de Fécamp, presumably a descendant of these persons, held a messuage in Henley in 1275, when he conveyed the land to Parnel, widow of Ralph de Careville.<sup>51</sup> In the latter part of the 13th or the early part of the 14th century the manor appears to have been held by Martin Sench,

<sup>25</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1226-57, p. 331.

<sup>26</sup> Pat. 8 Will. III., pt. v, m. 7.

<sup>27</sup> Warner, Hants, i (2), 227.

<sup>28</sup> Index to Lond. Gaz.

<sup>29</sup> Blue Bk. Parl. Ret.

<sup>30</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>31</sup> Parl. Papers, xxxvi, 109.

<sup>32</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1640-1, p. 121.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid. 179.

<sup>34</sup> Kemble, Cod. Dipl. v, 174. The boundaries are given in this charter.

<sup>35</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>36</sup> Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 21.

<sup>37</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 288.

<sup>38</sup> Obed. R. of St. Swithun's (Hants Rec. Soc.), 127.

<sup>39</sup> Var. Coll. (Hist. MSS. Com.), iv, 126.

<sup>40</sup> Chan. Inq. p.m. 19 Edw. IV, no. 51.

<sup>41</sup> Pat. 33 Hen. VIII, pt. ix.

<sup>42</sup> Walter Money, A Royal Purveyance, 74.

<sup>43</sup> Stevens, St. Mary Bourne, 172.

<sup>44</sup> Close, 1650, pt. vii, no. 41.

<sup>45</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1660-1, p. 251.

<sup>46</sup> Hants N. and Q. ix, 121.

<sup>47</sup> Feet of F. Trin. 14 Geo. III.

<sup>48</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>49</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), ii, 502.

<sup>50</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 464b.

<sup>51</sup> Red Bk. of Exch. (Rolls Ser.), i, 205; Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 4 Edw. I, 502.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

and after his death his wife Clarissa and Roger of Wellesworth, her second husband,<sup>52</sup> were confirmed by Henry Bishop of Winchester in the wardship of John, son of Martin, a minor, together with the lands held by the late Martin.<sup>53</sup>

In 1322<sup>54</sup> Joan, the widow of Robert Careville, tried to make good her claim to the manor of Henley against John Sench on the ground that it had been granted to her husband and herself during the reign of Edward I by John de Fremantel, and only demised to Martin Sench by Robert Careville. John replied that so far as ten messuages, 50 acres of land and a third of the residue of the manor were concerned, John de Fremantel was never seised, and as to the remainder of the manor he did not enfeof the said Robert and Joan.<sup>55</sup> John Sench afterwards infringed the law by granting a virgate of the land in dispute to John Waspray to maintain his suit,<sup>56</sup> but the result of the suit is not known.<sup>57</sup> It seems probable that John de Fremantel and Martin Sench both derived their rights in the Henley property from Roger le Savage, who died in 1298 holding land in Hampshire and leaving four co-heirs: Clarissa wife of Martin Sench, Alina wife of John de Hamme, Lucy (deceased) wife of John le Savage, and Thomasina.<sup>58</sup> This is supported by the fact that William le Savage of North Oakley, and Maud, his daughter, registered their claim in 1330, when the manor was conveyed by Henry Capon of Grateley, chaplain, to Peter de Watesford and Joan his wife in tail-male, with contingent remainder to the heirs of the said Henry.<sup>59</sup>

Peter de Watesford, son and heir of Peter, presented to the chapel during the episcopate of John Stratford, and was still holding in 1346.<sup>60</sup> He was succeeded by Henry de Watesford, probably his son,<sup>61</sup> but in 1428 Ralph Greyshean was in possession of the manor.<sup>62</sup> It apparently reverted soon afterwards to the Bishop of Winchester as overlord, as he alienated the chapel in 1446.<sup>63</sup>

The manor was sold with other lands belonging to the bishopric in 1650, Thomas Hussey purchasing it for £130 12s.<sup>64</sup> It was restored to the bishopric at the Restoration, and is now held by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as representatives of the bishop.

BRADLEY (Bradelee) in Whitchurch appears to have belonged to Thomas son of William de Salemonvill, who enfeofed Parnel Bluet for a rent of 5s., Parnel in turn giving up her property to Kingston Nuntery<sup>65</sup> (co. Wilts.). The charter is not dated, but the Prioress of Kingston was holding land in Henley and Bradley in 1271 when Ralph Syward quit-claimed to her '1 virgate of land with appurtenances in Henley and Bradeley.'<sup>66</sup> In 1428 the prioress was returned as holding half a knight's fee in Bradley of the Bishop of Winchester and their land is included in the account of the property belonging to the priory in 1535, its value being assessed at £4,<sup>67</sup> though seven years later in 'Particulars for a Grant to Long,' the annual value of 'the Farm of chief messuage in

Bradley with the appurtenances demised to William Cleve and John Cleve' is given as £5 6s. 8d.<sup>68</sup>

The name of Bradley still survives in the north-west of the parish; there are Bradley Wood and Bradley Farm, and just across the boundary in the parish of St. Mary Bourne is Bradley Hill.

The church of ALL HALLOWS has CHURCH a chancel 24 ft. 3 in. by 16 ft. 4 in., nave 47 ft. 8 in. by 21 ft. 10 in., north aisle 18 ft. 1 in. wide, south aisle 17 ft. 10 in., west tower 16 ft. 6 in. square, vestry south of the chancel and a south porch. The measurements are between the walls.

The church was largely rebuilt in 1866, and the only parts left to tell its history are the western halves of the nave arcades and the tower. The three western bays on the south side of the nave date from about 1190 to 1200, and were probably part of an aisle added to an earlier building consisting of a nave and chancel with a western tower. A north aisle was added in the 15th century, and two and a half bays of its arcade still remain. The tower was rebuilt from its foundations in 1716, and the rest of the building is modern. The most interesting features in the church are the 15th-century oak stair turret inside the tower and the small Saxon tombstone now standing at the east end of the nave, both described below.

The chancel is lighted by an east window of three lancets with three cinquefoils over, two single lights with tracery above in the north wall and one in the south wall; next to the last is the doorway to the vestry, which has an outer doorway to the south.

The nave has arcades of four bays a side; the east respond and first pier on the north are modern; the second, third and west respond are of the 15th century; they are of square plan with hollow-chamfered angles and attached half-round shafts, the latter with moulded capitals and bases; they stand on square sub-bases with chamfered plinths, and in all are 2 ft. 10 in. above the floor level.

The arches are two-centred and of three hollow-chamfered orders; the first and the east half of the second are modern, the rest are old. The pillars on the south side are round with moulded bases and capitals with hollow-chamfered abaci; the arches are pointed and of a single chamfered order with moulded labels towards the nave; the west bay is modern, the other three bays are old; the bases on this side are 1 ft. 11 in. high.

The north aisle has two lancets in its east wall with a round traceried light above them, in its north wall are three double-light traceried windows and a single lancet, and in the west wall another double light. The south aisle has its east wall pierced by three trefoils, high up over the vestry roof, and the south wall by two double lights and a single light similar to those opposite; the south doorway is between the second and third, and has a lintel carved with foliage; the west wall also has a two-light window.

<sup>52</sup> Cal. Close, 1318-23, p. 373.

<sup>53</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, fol. 78b; Feud. Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>54</sup> Cal. Close, 1318-23, p. 467.

<sup>55</sup> De Banc. R. 241, m. 9d.

<sup>56</sup> Ibid. 242, m. 131 d.

<sup>57</sup> The De Banc. R. for East. 16 Edw. II is missing.

<sup>58</sup> Abbrev. Rot. Orig. (Rec. Com.), i, 105.

<sup>59</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 4 Edw. III.

<sup>60</sup> Egerton MS. 2031, 78b; Feud.

Aids, ii, 330.

<sup>61</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 58.

<sup>62</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

<sup>63</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 350, no. 17. Richard

Audlye and John Lambden were the landowners in Cole Henley in 1575 (W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 113).

<sup>64</sup> Dugdale, Mon. i, 204.

<sup>65</sup> Ibid. iv, 399.

<sup>66</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 56 Hen. III.

<sup>67</sup> Dugdale, Mon. iv, 401.

<sup>68</sup> Ibid. i, 402.

The archway from the nave into the tower has chamfered jambs, with grooved and hollow-chamfered abaci partly restored; the arch is pointed and of somewhat irregular shape, of a single chamfered order, and is of 12th-century date.

The west doorway in the tower is an 18th-century one, having a round arch with projecting keystone and imposts; its threshold is level with the ground outside, but is 4 ft. 5 in. above the tower floor; its inner jambs are carried up and inclose an oval light above it, which also has keystones on four sides. Over this is a panel with the date 1716. In the first floor is a small window of two round-headed lights of the same date. The bell-chamber is modern and is lighted on each side by two two-light windows with pointed heads; all the buttresses to the tower are modern. Above it is a modern oak shingled spire changing from square to octagonal above the eaves.

The walling generally is of the usual flint work with stone dressings; and the tower has been coated with cement outside.

The roofs are gabled and covered with tiles; the nave appears to retain a few old timbers in its trusses. The stair turret inside the tower is of feathered and beaded oak boarding and is a half-octagon in plan; three moulded bands with battlements pass round it dividing it into four stages; the sides next to the west window of the tower are pierced with small traceried openings and quatrefoils, and the doorway is in the south-west face and its threshold is 4 ft. 8 in. above the floor, showing that the west half of the tower floor was formerly at that level.

The font is a small octagonal one of late 15th-century or early 16th-century date; its sides are panelled with quatrefoils inclosing square flowers, excepting the eastern, which has a large Tudor rose; the underside of the bowl is wave moulded; the stem has a neck mould at top and the base is modern. The altar table is a modern one of plain oak; to the north of it is a small chest with the date 1730.

In the tower are two recumbent effigies from an altar tomb which have been painted with black clothes, &c., and evidently date from the beginning of the 17th century.

In the east wall of the south aisle is set a monumental brass with the figures of a man and his wife; he is in a long fur gown with hood and has a pointed beard, and the lady wears a steeple hat with wide brim, ruff collar and figured skirt, with over all a long gown bound at the waist by a belt. A black letter inscription below them reads:—

‘Pietatis Opus—The grave (oh griefe) has swallowed up with wide and open mouth, | The body of good Richard Brooke of Whitchurch Hampton South, | And Elizabeth his wedded wife twice twentie yeares and one, | Sweet Jesus hath their soules in heaven, ye ground flesh, skin and bone | In Januarie (worne with age) daie sixteenth died hee | Ffrom Christ full fifteene hundred yeares and more by ninetie three, | But Death his twist of life in Maie twentieth did untwine, | From Christ full fifteene hundred yeares and more by ninetie nine; | They left behinde them well to live and growe to good degree, | First Richard, Thomas, Robert Brooke the youngest of the three, | Elizabeth and Barbara then Dorothea the last, | All six the knot of nature's love and kindness keeping fast. | This toombe stone with the Plate thereon thus graven faire and large, | Did Robert Brooke the youngest sonne make of his proper charge | A citizen of London state by faith full service free, | Of marchant great adventurers a brother sworne is he | And of the Indian Companie (come gaine or losse) a lim | and of the goldsmith liverie, all there God's gift to him, | This monument of memorie in love performed he | December thirtie one from Christ, sixteene hundred and three. Anno domini 1603. Laus Deo.’

On two shields above are the arms Checky on a bend a lion passant, and A battled fesse with two stars in chief. A third shield below has the first quartering the second, and is set between three sons and three daughters respectively.

The Saxon tombstone which stands at the south-east of the nave is round-headed with a deep sinking on one face, in which is the half-figure of our Lord in high relief, holding a book in His left hand and with His right held up in blessing; on the curved upper surface of the stone is an inscription in capital letters, ‘HIC CORPVS FRITHBVRGAE REQVIESCIT IN PACEM (sic) SEPVLTVM.’ On the back of the stone is a lightly incised spiral pattern, and the base is left rough and was evidently meant to be hidden. It was found in the north wall at the restoration, and seems to have been originally set at the head of a grave in the churchyard (see p. 304).

There are six bells: the treble is by Robert Catlin, 1748; the second is a pre-Reformation bell inscribed, ‘O Virgo natum fac nobis propitiatum’; the third is inscribed, ‘Elizabeth Warren gave this bell anno 1612,’ with the initials of Henry Knight of Reading; the fourth is a 15th-century bell with the legend ‘Sancta Margarita ora pro nobis,’ in black letters with crowned initial capitals; the fifth is by Henry Knight, 1611, and the tenor by William Tosier, 1724.

The plate consists of a silver chalice, paten and flagon of 1648, 1713 and 1730 respectively, the latter the gift of Ambrosia widow of Richard Becke.

The registers begin in 1605, the first book containing marriages from that date to 1634, burials to 1631, the entries to 1635 being lacking, and baptisms from 1607 to 1635, with gaps from 1608 to 1610, and from 1620 to 1623. The second book has baptisms, marriages and burials from 1635 to 1678; there are many omissions from 1641 to 1647; the book also has some briefs, 1661 to 1664. The third has baptisms and burials 1678 to 1758, and marriages to 1754; from 1678 to 1731 they are mixed, afterwards they are separate. The fourth has marriages from 1754 to 1790, and the fifth baptisms and burials 1758 to 1805; the sixth contains marriages from 1792 to 1812 (entries from 1790 to 1792 being lost); and the seventh baptisms and burials 1805 to 1813.

In the vestry is a mural monument to Joseph Wood, a former vicar, who died in 1731. He left a library of books to the future vicars of Whitchurch; the volumes now number 587. Many of the works are the unread produce of forgotten men, but there are a few valuable works, including a small Sarum breviary of 1525 (its front leaves are missing), a black letter edition of Chaucer of about 1545, and a book of hours in Slavonic, printed in Moscow in 1639.

Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester, gave the church of Whitchurch and the land belonging to it to the Hospital of St. Cross when he founded it in 1132,<sup>69</sup> and Richard I confirmed the gift in 1189.<sup>70</sup> The master and brethren of St. Cross are at the present day the lay rectors, and still retain 183 acres in the parish known as the Parsonage Tithing.<sup>71</sup>

<sup>69</sup> Harl. MS. 1616, fol. 10.

<sup>70</sup> Harl. Chart. 43, C 28.

<sup>71</sup> Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com.), ii, 9.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

The bishop excepted the advowson of the vicarage from this grant, and the living is at the present day of the net annual value of £280 in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester.<sup>72</sup> In 1284 the Bishop of Winchester confirmed a charter whereby former bishops had assigned to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun the right to the Easter offerings and pensions from the church.<sup>73</sup>

There was a free chapel in Cole Henley which was originally attached to the manor, the successive lords presenting.<sup>74</sup> Henry Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, alienated it in 1445, when he presented it to the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester, and Henry VI confirmed this gift ten years later.<sup>75</sup> The chapel, which no longer exists, is mentioned in a Compotus Roll of 1526.<sup>76</sup>

The Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, Primitive Methodists, Congregationalists and Particular Baptists have chapels in Whitchurch; of these the Wesleyan Methodist was built in 1812, the Particular Baptist about 1880, and the Primitive Methodist in 1902. A church, on the site of the present Congregational church, was erected by a congregation of 'Protestant Dissenters' in 1705. The Salvation Army has barracks in the town.

Woollaston's gift, arising under CHARITIES will and codicil of Richard Woollaston, dated respectively 13 November 1688 and 27 February 1689.—In the result of proceedings instituted in the Court of Chancery by the Attorney-General against Jonathan Woollaston and others certain lands at Ashingdon and Latchingdon in Essex, specified in the Master's Report, dated 31 March 1705, were settled upon trust for the poor of this parish, Wormley in Hertfordshire, and six parishes in the county of Leicester in certain proportions. The BACK OF STONE.

SAXON TOMBSTONE, WHITCHURCH CHURCH

<sup>72</sup> In 1284 the king gave up all his right to the advowson of the church of Whitchurch with a vicarage to the bishop (Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274).

<sup>73</sup> The confirmation of the church of Whitchurch to the Prior and convent of St. Swithun by Pope Innocent III in 1205 no doubt refers to this claim (Cal. of Papal Letters, i, 21).

<sup>74</sup> Egerton MSS. 2031, fol. 78b; 2033, fol. 18, 80b; Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), 80.

<sup>75</sup> Inq. a.q.d. file 350, no. 17; Pat. 33 Hen. VI, pt. ii, m. 18.

<sup>76</sup> W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 77 n.

average amount received in this parish is about £50 a year, or three-fifths of a moiety of the net rents (see under Wormley, Herts.), which is applied in the distribution of suits, serge, flannel and calico.

The vicar of Whitchurch receives £10 a year in respect of Bishop Morley's trust (see under Bishop's Waltham), also £19 a year from the Hospital of St. Cross, Winchester.

The Bread Charities.—The official trustees hold a sum of £66 13s. 4d. consols, arising under the will of William Walton, junior, dated in 1844, and £216 consols, derived under a codicil to the will of George Twynam, proved in 1846, producing together £7 1s. 4d., which is duly distributed in bread.

The Baptist chapel, founded in 1777, consists of chapel and premises in Bere Hill Street, and is endowed with 2a. 2r. let at £25 a year, for the minister, who also receives the interest; £300 Debenture Stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, Canada, representing legacies by wills of John Benham, 1746, Thomas Benham, 1763, and Mrs. Mary Tanner, 1865. Trustees were appointed by an order of the Charity Commissioners of 15 July 1898.

EAST WOODHAY

Widehaye, Estweydehay (xiii cent.); Wodehay (xv cent.); Estwydhay (xvi cent.); Widhay, Woodhay (xvii cent.).

The parish of East Woodhay contains 5,079 acres, of which 1,586 are arable land, 2,119 are permanent grass and 651 are woods and plantations.<sup>1</sup> It lies on the Berkshire border and is bounded on the north by the River Enborne; the nearest station is Woodhay on the Didcot, Newbury and Winchester line of the Great Western Railway, 2½ miles north-east. The chief crops are wheat, barley and oats; the upper soil varies and the subsoil is chalk.

The village itself is in the north-west, the land south of it rising to a considerable height, while on the north it descends to the banks of the River Enborne.

North End, Heath End and East End with Malverleys, a building of white brick in the Italian style, standing in grounds of about 500 acres, the residence, until his death in October 1910, of Mr. Paul F. Forster, are some of the hamlets in this parish. Near North End is Burlyns House, the residence of Mrs. Lindsey, and Northenby, the residence of Mr. R. Manners Howard Williams, J.P. Hazelby House, the residence of Capt. W. Sandbach, is in the extreme north of the parish, and was at one time occupied by Lady Louisa Howard, who presented five bells and a clock with chimes to the church. Stargroves, south of the village, is owned by Capt. Sir F. H. W. Carden, bart. Oliver Cromwell stopped at Stargroves after the second battle of Newbury (27 October 1644), and was entertained by the then owner, John Goddard; the basin or china bowl in which his breakfast (toast and ale) was served is in the custody of the rector besides some letters referring to the incident.<sup>2</sup>

East of Stargroves is Hollington House, rebuilt by Mr. W. P. Taylor, and sold in 1907 to Mr. E. Fisher Kelly. It is in Woolton Hill, a separate ecclesiastical parish formed in 1850. On the borders of East Woodhay parish adjoining Highclere Street is Hollington Cross and south of the park is the hamlet of Hollington with Hollington Farm.

East Woodhay House, Burley, The Mount, Woolton House, Harwood Lodge and Tile Barn are within the boundaries of Woolton Hill parish.

Zell House Farm, situated on the Downs near Hollington Cross, and a copse of the same name not far off, perhaps commemorate the Sele family, who were holding under the bishop in the 15th and 16th centuries.<sup>3</sup>

Place-names found in a document of the 16th century are Inkapen and Bavers,<sup>4</sup> and in the indenture of Scele in the 17th century Park Mead, Stafford Mead, the Great Park, the Little Park, Woodfalls, Burleidge Field and Mancroft are mentioned.<sup>5</sup>

The manor of EAST WOODHAY MANORS was the property of the see of Winchester, to which it had been given by Alwara 'pro anima Sedwini viri sui,'<sup>6</sup> and confirmed by Edward I in 1284.<sup>7</sup>

The Bishop of Winchester at an early period granted the greater part of the estate to various tenants, retaining only a small portion in his own hands. Thus in 1346 the return was that the tenants of the Bishop of Winchester in Woodhay were holding one fee in Woodhay 'quod episcopus solebat tenere praeter antiquam tenuram,' and in 1428 Thomas Byflete, John Herries, John Sterregrave and Edmund Lynche, Nicholas Jurdan and John atte Sele, each held a separate part of the parish.<sup>8</sup>

In 1487 Robert Byflete, a brother of Thomas, died seised of 40 acres in East Woodhay, worth 10s., held of the Bishop of Winchester by service of 1 lb. of pepper, leaving a son John, a minor at the time of his father's death.<sup>9</sup> Thomas Byflete, who died in 1500, also owned land in East Woodhay,<sup>10</sup> and John Sele, an idiot, who was the son and heir of Robert Sele, held tenements in Woodhay in the reign of Henry VIII.<sup>11</sup> Nicholas Jurdan was probably descended from the John Jurdan, 'parishioner of the church of Wydehay,' who in the early part of the 14th century was cited to appear before the Bishop of Winchester to answer for his troublesome behaviour in keeping the rector and his servants out of his fields which paid tithes to the church.<sup>12</sup> East Woodhay was included in the sale of the bishop's lands in 1648, the manor with the courts leet and courts baron belonging being purchased by James Storey, and the capital messuage or manor-house with the lands belonging, which in 1575 had been held in favour by Edward Longman, and which the bishop had granted

<sup>1</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

<sup>2</sup> W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 83; ex inform. the Rev. H. Chilton Tompkins, rector of East Woodhay.

<sup>3</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346; Inq. p.m. file 981, no. 12.

<sup>4</sup> Eccl. Com. Ct. R. bdle. 84, no. 2.

<sup>5</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 6.

<sup>6</sup> Leland, Coll. ii, 430.

<sup>7</sup> Cal. Chart. R. 1257-1300, p. 274.

<sup>8</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 330, 346.

<sup>9</sup> Harl. Soc. Publ. xi, 18; Chan. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), iii, 107.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. (Ser. 2), xv, 22.

<sup>11</sup> Exch. Inq. p.m. (Ser. 2), file dccccxxxi, no. 12.

<sup>12</sup> Egerton MS. 2035, fol. 87b.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

on a lease of three lives to Edward Goddard in 1616, being sold to Tichborne Long and John Goddard.<sup>13</sup>

At the accession of Charles II the manor was restored to the bishopric, and in 1703 the Bishop of Winchester was said to be the owner of the manor, the demesne land being leased to a Mr. Goddard, owner of Stargroves.<sup>14</sup>

The manor ultimately was acquired by the Earl of Carnarvon, who was holding in 1821, and the present earl is lord of the manor.<sup>15</sup>

The property at STARGROVES, designated a manor in the 16th century, was probably represented by the land held by John Stargrove in 1428.<sup>16</sup>

John Edwardes is the first known holder of the manor as such, and he sold it in 1565 to Vincent Goddard,<sup>17</sup> from whom, in 1570-1, it was acquired by Edward Goddard,<sup>18</sup> who appears to have been a nephew. The latter died in 1615 seised of 'a manor or capital messuage in Eastwoodhaie,' leaving a son of the same name, who in 1616 obtained a lease of East Woodhay manor-house from the bishop.<sup>19</sup>

Edward, son and heir of the last-named Edward, died in 1669, and was succeeded by his son William, who died in 1690; William's heir was his son Edward, who dealt with the manor by fine in 1692 and died in 1724.<sup>20</sup> In 1755 Edward Goddard, possibly a son of the latter, was holding, and in 1782 William was the owner; another Edward Goddard held in 1814.<sup>21</sup>

Mr. Richard Hull ultimately acquired the manor which he was holding in 1848. He sold the old manor-house and about 35 acres of land to Capt. George Graham Ramsay, who was living at Stargroves House in 1875, and who sold his portion to Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Walter Carden, bart., in 1879, the latter acquiring the rest of the property in or about the year 1896 from the representative of Mr. Richard Hull.<sup>22</sup> Sir F. W. Carden died in 1909, and was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir F. H. W. Carden, bart., the present lord of the manor.

The church of ST. MARTIN was CHURCH built on an old site in 1823, and consists of a chancel 24 ft. by 24 ft. 8 in. with a north vestry and organ chamber, and a large aisleless nave 60 ft. 4 in. by 40 ft. with a west tower and north porch.

The nave and tower are of brick, but the chancel, vestry and porch are of flint and stone, the latter being a memorial to the Rev. T. D. Hodgson, who died in 1883.

The chancel has a five-light east window and two windows in the south wall of two lights each, all having tracery of 14th-century design.

The nave windows are plain pointed, with iron frames.

On the north wall of the chancel is a large marble monument of classic design to Edward son of William Goddard, 1724, with large figures of Edward and Elizabeth his wife. There are several other 18th and 19th-century monuments.

The tower contains a ring of four bells, cast by John Cor, 1728.

The plate consists of a silver chalice and paten, of 1631 and 1696 respectively, the former given by Edward Goddard in 1697; a silver flagon, inscribed 'Elizabeth Goddard, 1718,' and two glass cruets and a plated spoon.

The registers are contained in six books, the first beginning with baptisms, marriages and burials from 1610 to 1670; the second has baptisms and burials 1653 to 1671; the third burials 1678 to 1756; the fourth has some more baptisms and burials from 1696 to 1762; the fifth has baptisms from 1696 to 1803 and marriages from the same date to 1754; and the sixth book is of the usual first printed marriage forms and begins at 1756, but several pages are missing. The earlier entries are not chronologically arranged and the pages are badly inserted in the binding.

The advowson of the church of ADVOWSON East Woodhay, with the chapelry of Ashmansworth attached, has always belonged to the Bishops of Winchester,<sup>23</sup> the living at the present time being of the annual value of £434.

As late as 1535 a yearly pension of 100s. was paid to the Hospital of St. Cross,<sup>24</sup> which had acquired an interest in this church by the charter of foundation in 1132, which interest was confirmed to it by King Richard in 1189.<sup>25</sup>

Bishops Ken, Hooper and Louth were formerly rectors of this parish, Ken for three years (1669-72), Hooper for one year (1672-3), and Louth from 1753 to 1766.<sup>26</sup>

In 1635-6 at the instigation of Edward Goddard proceedings were taken by the Court of High Commission against Francis Edwards, curate of East Woodhay, for neglect of duties, and on 14 May 1636 he was forced to acknowledge that the keys of the church belonged to the churchwardens, and to promise not to postpone baptisms, not to dismiss the parish clerk without just cause and legal proceedings, not to take upon himself the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the peculiar of East Woodhay, and to say prayer betwixt 9 and 11 in the morning and betwixt 2 and 4 in the afternoon, because the parishioners dwell very remote from the parish church and cannot hear the bells.<sup>27</sup>

The advowson of the vicarage of the church of St. Thomas in Woolton Hill, which was consecrated in 1849, belongs to the Bishop of Winchester.

GODDARD of East Woodhay. Azure a fesse indented between three eagles' heads rized or.

<sup>13</sup> Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 32.

<sup>14</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 112.

<sup>15</sup> Hants Recov. R. Mich. 2 Geo. IV, rot. 221.

<sup>16</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 346.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 7 & 8 Eliz.; Recov. R. Mich. 8 & 9 Eliz. rot. 352.

<sup>18</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Hil. 13 Eliz.; Berry, Hants Gen. 186.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid.; Close, 24 Chas. I, pt. iv, no. 6.

<sup>20</sup> Stowe MS. 845, fol. 111; Feet of F. Hants, Trin. 3 Will. and Mary; W. Money, A Royal Purveyance, 87 n.

<sup>21</sup> Recov. R. Hants, East. 28 Geo. II, rot. 8; Trin. 22 Geo. III, rot. 205; Mich. 54 Geo. III, rot. 20. It was this last Edward Goddard who in 1863 wrote the letter in the custody of the rector referring to the bowl used by Oliver Cromwell (see supra) and stating it had come into his possession as the last male representative of the Goddards (ex inform. Rev. H. Chilton Tompkins).

<sup>22</sup> Ex inform. the late Lieut.-Col. Sir F. W. Carden, J.P.

<sup>23</sup> Wykeham's Reg. (Hants Rec. Soc.), i, 177; Valor Eccl. (Rec. Com'), ii, App. 4.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid. iv, 9.

<sup>25</sup> Harl. MS. 1616, fol. 10; Harl. Chart. 43, C 28.

<sup>26</sup> Dict. Nat. Biog.

<sup>27</sup> Cal. S. P. Dom. 1635-6, p. 516.

EVINGAR HUNDRED

EAST
WOODHAY

There is a Wesleyan chapel in the parish at North End, built in 1860, and a Primitive Methodist chapel at Gore End.

There is also a school built to accommodate 118 children.

The elementary school in Woolton Hill was built in 1850 and enlarged in 1888 and again in 1897.

The Workman's Club and Coffee House in Andover Road contains a large hall, capable of holding 250 persons, and a small library.

In 1732 Elizabeth Goddard, by CHARITIES her will proved in the P.C.C., left £100 to be put out at interest, which was to be laid out in linen for the benefit of the poor.

Land in Ashmansworth was purchased therewith, which was sold in 1900, and the proceeds invested in £174 11s. India 2½ per cent. stock with the official trustees, who also hold £23 5s. 8d. consols, arising from sale of timber. The annual dividends, amounting together to £4 19s., are duly applied.

In 1753 the Rev. Joshua Wakefield, a former rector, devised land in the parish, the rent to be applied towards the education of poor children in the parish. The land was sold, and the trust fund now consists of £167 12s. 7d. consols, with the official trustees, producing yearly £4 3s. 7d., which, with the authority of the Charity Commissioners, was apportioned one-half in East Woodhay and one-half in Woolton Hill.

The poor's allotments, acquired by an award dated 4 August 1819, made under Inclosure Act of 56 Geo. III, cap. 10, consist of 18a. and a gravel pit, producing £14 yearly, and £700 consols, with the official trustees.

By a scheme of the Charity Commissioners of 21 February 1908 all poor inhabitants of the parish legally settled therein and not occupying lands and tenements of more than the yearly value of £8 are qualified to share in the benefits of the charity.

THE HUNDRED OF PASTROW

CONTAINING THE PARISHES OF

COMBE	LINKENHOLT
CRUX EASTON	TANGLEY
FACCOMBE	VERNHAMS DEAN
HURSTBOURNE TARRANT	WOODCOTT

The above list represents the extent of the hundred at the time of the Population Returns of 1831. Tangley was removed to Andover Hundred before 1841, probably in exchange for the parishes of Thruxton and Upper Clatford,<sup>1</sup> which now form part of Pastrow, and in 1895 Combe was transferred to Berkshire under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1894 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 73).

At the time of the Domesday Survey the hundred of Pastrow was called the hundred of Esseborne (i.e. Hurstbourne), and comprised the parishes of Combe,<sup>2</sup> Crux Easton,<sup>3</sup> Linkenholt<sup>4</sup> and Litchfield,<sup>5</sup> and the tithing of Upton,<sup>6</sup> which is situated partly in the parish of Hurstbourne Tarrant and partly in that of Vernhams Dean. Faccombe, which at this time included Tangley, was in the hundred of Titchfield<sup>7</sup>; Hurstbourne Tarrant, which comprised Vernhams Dean, was entered, doubtless owing to imperfect rubrication, under Basingstoke Hundred<sup>8</sup>; while the name of the hundred of which Woodcott then formed part is not given.<sup>9</sup> The land included in the hundred was assessed in the reign of Edward the Confessor at 18 hides, and at the time of the Survey at about 9 hides. At the beginning of the 13th century the name of the hundred was still unchanged, as is seen from the Testa de Nevill, where the manors of Hurstbourne Tarrant, Vernhams Dean and Faccombe are entered 'In hundredo de Husseburn,'<sup>10</sup> but soon afterwards its name was changed to Pachestrow or Pastrow, as is clear from an <sup>1</sup> Pop. Ret. 1831 and 1841.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. i, 501a.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. i, 456b.

<sup>10</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 236-7.

<sup>2</sup> V.G.H. Hants, i, 487b.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. i, 472a.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. i, 481b.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. i, 499a.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid. i, 453b.

PASTROW HUNDRED

Assize Roll of 1236.<sup>11</sup> By the 14th century the hundred seems to have assumed its modern dimensions, the only exception being that it still comprised part of the parish of Litchfield.<sup>12</sup> In 1316, however, by some error, in a return of the various hundreds in Hampshire, the hundred of Kingsclere which existed at the time of the Domesday Survey was omitted altogether, and consequently Kingsclere, Sydmonton, North Oakley, Earlstone and Wolverton were entered under Pastrow Hundred.<sup>13</sup> That this was a mistake seems clear from subsequent Subsidy Rolls.<sup>14</sup> This hundred has always belonged to the Crown.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Assize R. 775, m. 16.

<sup>12</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 323.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid. ii, 308.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid. ii, 323, 345 ; Exch. Lay Subs. R. bdle. 173, no. 216 ; bdle. 175, no. 529, 548.

<sup>15</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 17 d. ; Feud. Aids, ii, 308.

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

COMBE

Cumbe (xi cent.); Cumba, Coumbe (xiii cent.).

Combe is a small parish covering an area of 2,212 acres of down country and situated 6 miles south-east from Hungerford station on the Great Western Railway. The general rise of the ground is from south to north, a height of 975 ft. above the ordnance datum being reached on Walbury Camp in the extreme north, but nowhere does it fall below a height of 500 ft. The village lies in the centre of the parish in a hollow of the downs at a height of about 600 ft. above the ordnance datum. Combe Wood takes up the whole of the south-western portion of the parish. The soil is rather heavy, the subsoil is chalk. The chief crops grown in the parish are wheat, barley, oats and turnips.

The manor of COMBE, which had MANOR been held of King Edward the Confessor by a certain Edric, at the time of the Domesday Survey was held by Ernulf de Hesding, who had come to England with the Conqueror and had been rewarded by the gift of large possessions.<sup>1</sup> After his death his widow Emmelina granted Combe to the abbey of Bec Hellouin in Normandy, and this gift was confirmed by King Henry II.<sup>2</sup> Towards the end of the 12th century the manor was attached to the convent of Benedictine monks from Bec established at Ogbourne (co. Wilts.), which became the richest cell in England to the Norman Abbey.<sup>3</sup> Although the manor was often seized into the king's hands with the property of the other alien priories during the wars with France,<sup>4</sup> it continued the property of the Prior and convent of Ogbourne until the reign of Henry IV,<sup>5</sup> who in 1404 granted all the possessions of the priory to his third son, John of Lancaster, constable of England,<sup>6</sup> afterwards Duke of Bedford. On the death of the duke without issue in 1435 it passed to his nephew and heir, Henry VI,<sup>7</sup> who the next year granted it for life, together with the manor of Monxton, to Ralph le Sage, lord of St. Pierre, in consideration of his services to Henry V and to himself.<sup>8</sup> Ralph le Sage died in 1437, and in the same year the king granted Combe and Monxton to his chaplain, Guillaume Erard, and his clerk and secretary, John de Rinel,<sup>9</sup> 'in consideration of their long service whereby they had been drawn from their birthplace and had lost all their living, to wit: Guillaume his benefices and patrimony and John his inheritance and possessions.'<sup>10</sup> In 1439, shortly after the death of Guillaume Erard, John was confirmed in the possession of the manors,<sup>11</sup> and he was still seized of them in 1441, in which year Henry VI granted the reversion of them after his death in free alms to the king's college of St. Nicholas, Cambridge<sup>12</sup> —now known as King's College. The provost and scholars of the college continued in possession of Combe until February 1894, when they sold it to the present owner, Mr. Alfred Clayton Cole.<sup>13</sup>

The old manor-house, lying north of the church, is a simple rectangular building, now deserted and ruinous, and said to be haunted. It is chiefly of 18th-century date, with plaster panelling in some of the rooms. The main front faces east, and has had two gables, now hidden by plaster and the raising of the walls, and the staircase is of 17th-century work with heavy newels and turned balusters.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. Sable three roses argent and a chief party azure and gules with a fleur de lis or in the azure and a leopard or in the gules.

In 1253 the Abbot and convent of Bec obtained a grant of free warren in their demesne lands in the manor of Combe, provided that the lands were not within the royal forest.<sup>14</sup> The Prior of Ogbourne claimed pillory, tumbrel and other liberties within the manor in 1280.<sup>15</sup>

The church of ST. SWITHUN CHURCH consists of a chancel 20 ft. 2 in. by 14 ft. 4 in., nave 44 ft. 10 in. by 14 ft. 6 in., south porch and a timber west tower.

The nave dates from the second half of the 12th century, although it is possible that the north wall, which is thicker than the others, may be a later rebuilding. The chancel was rebuilt and widened in the 13th century. None of the early windows in the nave have survived; the west doorway is of the 13th century and the south doorway is doubtless contemporary with the porch, which is dated 1652, but has a ring of re-used 12th-century stones in its arch.

The nave was re-roofed early in the 16th century and the chancel early in the 17th, and in modern times the whole of the north side of the church has been refaced and the interior replastered.

The east window of the chancel is of mid-13th-century date altered early in the 14th century. In the head are the remains of a circular 13th-century opening with a beaded edge, partly cut into by the ogee trefoiled heads of the two lights: the whole appears to have been clumsily reset, and the moulded label runs in a broken curve. Below the window is a moulded string, and at the east angles are pairs of short buttresses.

In the north wall are two lancet windows with widely-splayed inner jambs and chamfered external jambs; they are partly restored. In the south wall is a similar lancet to the east and to the west a doorway with a two-centred chamfered arch and a hollow

<sup>1</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487b.

<sup>2</sup> Dugdale, Mon. vi, 1068. <sup>3</sup> Ibid. 1016.

<sup>4</sup> Mins. Accts. bde. 1126, no. 19; Egerton MS. 2033, fol. 10b.

<sup>5</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234; Assize R. 789, m. 17; Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 214; Feud. Aids, ii, 309.

<sup>6</sup> Pat. 6 Hen. IV, pt. i, m. 26.

<sup>7</sup> Inq. p.m. 14 Hen. VI, no. 36.

<sup>8</sup> Pat. 14 Hen. VI, pt. ii, m. 17. Ralph was to take only £44 a year from the manors, accounting for the surplus, if any, at the Exchequer. This grant was in lieu of an earlier grant of £40 a year at the receipt of the Exchequer during pleasure.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. 16 Hen. VI, pt. i, m. 16. The grant was to John for life, and to Guillaume until otherwise provided for. The latter was to have £20 a year of the revenues, while the former was to take the balance.

<sup>10</sup> Pat. 16 Hen. VI, pt. i, m. 8.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid. 17 Hen. VI, pt. ii, m. 12.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid. 19 Hen. VI, pt. iii, m. 18.

<sup>13</sup> Information supplied by Mr. Alfred Clayton Cole.

<sup>14</sup> Chart. R. 37 Hen. III, pt. i, m. 7.

<sup>15</sup> Assize R. 789, m. 17.

moulded label, both being contemporary with the wall. On the doorway is a sundial.

The chancel arch is built of chalk in large blocks and has a plain pointed arch of a single order with square-edged hollow-chamfered abaci which look like late 12th-century work.

In the wall on either side of the arch are plain rectangular recesses probably for images over the nave altars, or they may be blocked squints. The face of the wall to the south of the chancel arch has been cut back. In this jamb is set a chamfered slab of Purbeck marble looking like part of an altar-stone.

The first and second of the north windows of the nave are modern and similar in design to the first south window, which is a 15th-century insertion of three cinquefoiled lights under a square head. The north doorway is now blocked up and has been wholly restored outside; it is similar to that south of the chancel. The third north window is also a modern one of two plain square-headed lights; the second south window west of the porch looks like a 13th-century light to which a second light has been added. The south doorway dates from 1652; it has brick jambs and a head of re-used 12th-century stones; the porch is of red brick and has a round-headed outer doorway with the date (1652) in lead figures on a panel above it. The west doorway now opens into the tower; it has a flat four-centred head and chamfered jambs. The tower is of wood on a flint and stone foundation of the width of the nave but setting back on both north and south sides with tiles to form the bell chamber above, which is covered with oak shingles and has a pyramidal roof.

The roof of the chancel is of flat pitch, all the timbers having simple ovolo mouldings with carved bosses at the middle of the tie-beams. The work is probably of c. 1600. The nave has a low-pitched roof of late Gothic detail with moulded ties, ridge and purlins.

Some 16th-century linen pattern panels are worked into the reading desk, and the altar rails are 18th-century balusters, but otherwise the furniture is modern, except the font, which is of very good proportions, with a plain round bowl on an octagonal stem with moulded necking. The base has broach stops bringing it to a square. Its date is probably c. 1350.

In the chancel floor are three black marble grave-stones to John Rawlinson, 1680; his son John, 1724; and Anne Whistler, 1681.

The bells are three in number; the tenor is inscribed 'Give thanks to God. I. W. 1616' (by John Wallis of Salisbury), the second by T. Mears, 1831, and the treble is of pre-Reformation date and is inscribed 'Sancte Laurenti.'

This church has a Sheffield-plated chalice inscribed 'John Newton, churchwarden 1837,' and a Sheffield plated alms dish.

There are three books of registers. The first contains baptisms, marriages and burials 1560 to 1728, with gaps in the marriages 1630 to 1639 and 1643 to 1682. The second contains baptisms and burials 1729 to 1812 and marriages 1729 to 1741. The third contains marriages only, 1755 to 1812, not the ordinary printed form, but with a printed margin. There are no entries of marriages 1741 to 1755. There are also churchwardens' accounts from 1738 and various loose papers, including affidavits for burials in woollen.

A church existed in Combe at the time of the Domesday Survey.<sup>16</sup> The advowson was probably included in the grant of the manor to the Abbot and convent of Bec Hellouin, and soon afterwards the rectory was appropriated to the abbey.<sup>17</sup> The advowson of the vicarage was granted to John of Lancaster at the same time as the manor, and by him was granted, together with other spiritualities formerly belonging to the Prior and convent of Ogbourne, to the Dean and canons of St. George's Chapel, Windsor,<sup>18</sup> who have presented the vicars up to the present day.<sup>19</sup>

The National school was restored and reopened in 1894 at the expense of Mr. Alfred Clayton Cole.

In 1859 Robert Skinner by will CHARITIES bequeathed to the minister and churchwardens a legacy represented by £33 6s. 8d. consols with the official trustees, the income to be distributed on Christmas Eve amongst the most needy and deserving poor in bread and money.

CRUX EASTON

Estune (xi cent.); Eston, Eston Croc, Crockes Estone (xiii cent.); Crokeston (xiv cent.); Crookes Eston (xvii cent.).

Crux Easton is a remote parish, distant 3½ miles west from Burghclere station on the Great Western Railway. The general rise of the ground is from south to north, the height above the ordnance datum ranging from 459 ft. in the south-western extremity of the parish to 870 ft. near Sidown Warren in the north-east. The parish is intersected by the main road from Andover to Newbury, which enters it at the south-west at a height of about 427 ft. above the ordnance datum and climbs up to a height of 771 ft. at the Three Legged Cross in the northwest, in less than a mile and a half. The little group of buildings comprising the village stands on high ground a short distance to the east of the main road.

A female skeleton with a Romano-British vessel was discovered under the lawn at the rectory in December 1856,<sup>1</sup> and Roman pottery and other remains were discovered in the parish in 1889. To the east of the village is a fine bell-shaped barrow, and some distance to the north-east is Grotto Copse, containing the site of the famous Grotto constructed by the Lisle sisters (see infra).

The parish covers 1,099 acres, about one-half of which is grass and about one-quarter arable land, the remainder being woods and plantations.<sup>2</sup> The soil is

<sup>16</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 487b.

<sup>17</sup> Pope Nich. Tax. (Rec. Com.), 212; Egerton MS. 2032, fol. 135.

<sup>18</sup> Dugdale, Mon. viii, 1357. This grant was confirmed by Hen. V and Edw. IV.

<sup>19</sup> Egerton MS. 2034, fol. 37, 74b; Inst. Bks. (P.R.O.).

<sup>1</sup> Stevens, Hist. of St. Mary Bourne, 72.

<sup>2</sup> Statistics from Bd. of Agric. (1905).

A HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE

heavy, while the subsoil is chalk. The chief crops are wheat, oats and turnips.

CRUX EASTON, which in the reign MANOR of Edward the Confessor had been in the possession of one Linxi, at the time of the Domesday Survey was held of the king in chief by Croch the huntsman.<sup>3</sup> It continued with his descendants for over two centuries and derived its name from this family. Between 1160 and 1173 the church of Andover was holding of the fee of Matthew Croch 3 virgates of land in Easton which it leased to Philip Croch for life.<sup>4</sup> Matthew's son and heir Ellis had only one child, a daughter Avice, who became the wife of Michael de Columbers.<sup>5</sup> An inquisition was held on the petition of Matthew Croch, who desired that one of his own name should keep the manor, as to whether he held the fee of the king in chief and could alienate it to his younger brother Philip, the uncle of Ellis.<sup>6</sup> He must have died almost immediately afterwards, for in 1200 his son Ellis gave the king 30 marks and a palfrey for the judgement.<sup>7</sup> Although there is no mention of its result, it was presumably settled in Matthew's favour, for in 1202 Ellis, apparently carrying out his father's wishes, granted the vill of Easton to Philip Croch to hold of him and his heirs by the service of one knight's fee.<sup>8</sup> The overlordship continued with the heirs of Ellis, Crux Easton being held of them as of their manor of Chute. Matthew de Columbers, heir of Michael de Columbers and Avice,<sup>9</sup> died seised of one and a half knights' fees in Enham and Crux Easton early in the reign of Edward I, leaving a brother and heir Michael, aged sixty and more.<sup>10</sup> Nichola, daughter and co-heir of Michael, married John de L'Isle (Lisle) and brought the forestership and manor of Chute to her husband,<sup>11</sup> and from this time the Lisles were overlords of Crux Easton.<sup>12</sup>

From Philip Croch<sup>13</sup> the manor passed to his son Thomas, who was dead in 1230, for his son was then in the wardship of the Bishop of Chichester.<sup>14</sup> In 1291 a second Thomas, probably this son, in return for an annuity of 25 marks, granted the reversion to John de Drokensford,<sup>15</sup> afterwards Bishop of Bath and Wells (1309-29). Thomas presumably died in the same year, as in 1292 John de Drokensford obtained licence to impark a wood in Crux Easton.<sup>16</sup> On the death of John the manor passed to his brother Michael in accordance with a settlement of 1294.<sup>17</sup> From Michael it went to his son John, from whom it was claimed in 1332 by William Avenel and Joan his wife.<sup>18</sup> Joan asserted that she was kinswoman and heir of Philip Croch and his wife Joan, and that she was therefore entitled to the manor because it had been settled on them in fee-tail. She made no mention of the alienation by Thomas heir of Philip Croch, who was probably her father or uncle, although in some pedigrees she is called the daughter of Philip Croch and Joan his wife, the sister of John de Drokensford, Bishop of Bath and Wells.<sup>19</sup> The case was not decided at this time, ostensibly because Alice, mother of John de Drokensford, was holding one-third of the manor in dower.<sup>20</sup> The Drokensfords therefore remained in undisturbed possession of the manor, John de Drokensford, who was by this time a knight, dying seised in 1341, leaving a son and heir Thomas,<sup>21</sup> on whom the manor was settled in 1345.<sup>22</sup> Four years later Sir Thomas de Drokensford made provision for his brother Michael, granting him an annuity of £10, a gift of a robe or 20s. at Christmas, and permission to reside for life either in his manor of Eastwick (co. Herts.), his manor of Stapleford (co. Herts.) or his manor of Crux Easton.<sup>23</sup> However, within the next ten years John Avenel, son and heir of William and Joan Avenel, succeeded in regaining the manor from the Drokensfords, and died seised in 1360, leaving a son and heir John.<sup>24</sup> The latter granted it in tail-male to Sir Edmund Avenel, who was probably his brother.<sup>25</sup> Sir Edmund died seised in 1383, leaving no issue, and accordingly Crux Easton passed to his next heir, Robert Avenel, a minor, grandson of John Avenel by his son John.<sup>26</sup> Robert Avenel died in 1387,<sup>27</sup> while in the wardship of Sir Robert Belknap,<sup>28</sup> and on the attainder of the latter in the same year the manor was taken into the king's hands. Thomas Bradfield of Barrington (co. Cambs.), who had married Isabel, next heir of Robert Avenel (viz. daughter of Agnes, daughter of Alice, daughter of Philippa, daughter of Alice, who was the sister of John Avenel, great-great-grandfather of Robert), petitioned the king for the restoration of the manor,<sup>29</sup> but without success. Instead Henry IV granted it in 1399 with manors belonging to Sir Robert Belknap to his brother Thomas Beaufort,<sup>30</sup> who in his turn granted it for life to a certain John Rixton.<sup>31</sup> Margaret wife of Sir Peter Courtenay brought forward a claim to the manor in 1404 as granddaughter or great-granddaughter of Philip brother of John de Drokensford,<sup>32</sup> Bishop of Bath and Wells, while at the same time an inquisition, taken in 1429 to ascertain the next heir of Robert Avenel, shows that Edmund Bendish, son of Thomas Bendish and Alice his wife, daughter and co-heir of Thomas and Isabel Bradfield, was also pressing his claim.<sup>33</sup> Neither side, however, succeeded in securing the manor, which reverted to the overlord, John Lisle,<sup>34</sup> whose title was assured in 1441 by the quitclaim of John Wilford and Joan his wife,<sup>35</sup> sister of Edmund Bendish.<sup>36</sup> Sir John Lisle, grandson of John,

<sup>3</sup> V.C.H. Hants, i, 501a.

<sup>4</sup> Round, Cal. Doc. France 415 and cf. Rot. de Oblatis et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 87.

<sup>5</sup> Chart. R. 9 John, m. 2.

<sup>6</sup> Rot. de Oblatis et Fin. (Rec. Com.), 87.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

<sup>8</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 3 John.

<sup>9</sup> Vide Inq. p.m. Hen. III, file 22, no. 12. The one knight's fee (unspecified) in Hampshire of which Avice de Columbers died seised towards the end of the reign of Hen. III was most probably Crux Easton.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. 2 Edw. I, no. 57.

<sup>11</sup> Vide De Banc. R. 422, m. 319.

<sup>12</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 40; 34 Edw. III (1st nos.), no. 38; 7 Hen. VI, no. 31.

<sup>13</sup> Testa de Nevill (Rec. Com.), 234.

<sup>14</sup> Maitland, Bracton's Notebook, ii, 352.

<sup>15</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 19 Edw. I.

<sup>16</sup> Pat. 20 Edw. I, m. 24.

<sup>17</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 22 Edw. I.

<sup>18</sup> De Banc. R. 287, m. 99.

<sup>19</sup> Jewer, Wells Cath. 86; Misc. Gen. et

Her. (Ser. 2), ii, 314.

<sup>20</sup> De Banc. R. 287, m. 99.

<sup>21</sup> Inq. p.m. 15 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 40.

<sup>22</sup> Feet of F. Hants, East. 19 Edw. III.

<sup>23</sup> Close, 23 Edw. III, pt. i, m. 24 d.

<sup>24</sup> Inq. p.m. 34 Edw. III (1st nos.),

no. 38.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid. 6 Ric. II, no. 7.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid. 7 Hen. VI, no. 31.

<sup>27</sup> Pat. 14 Ric. II, pt. ii, m. 11 d.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid.; Inq. p.m. 15 Ric. II, pt. i, no. 115, 116; 16 Ric. II, pt. ii, no. 50.

<sup>29</sup> Pat. 1 Hen. IV, pt. v, m. 29; 2 Hen. IV, pt. iv, m. 2.

<sup>30</sup> De Banc. R. 572, m. 206 d.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid. She gave her pedigree as daughter of John, son of Mary, daughter of Philip de Drokensford, but she was probably granddaughter of Philip. For a discussion on this point see V.C.H. Hants, iii, 204, 29 n.

<sup>32</sup> Inq. p.m. 9 Hen. VI, no. 60.

<sup>33</sup> Feud. Aids, ii, 345.

<sup>34</sup> Feet of F. Hants, Mich. 20 Hen. VI. <sup>35</sup> Morant, Essex, ii, 350; Harl. Soc. Publ. xiii, 317.

died seised of the manor in 1523, leaving no issue.<sup>36</sup> By his will he bequeathed Crux Easton to Lancelot Lisle, first cousin of his father, Sir Nicholas Lisle,<sup>37</sup> who died seised in 1542, leaving a son and heir Thomas,<sup>38</sup> who died early in Elizabeth's reign. Anthony Lisle, son and heir of Thomas, died in 1604, his heir being his son William,<sup>39</sup> who was knighted in 1606 and died about the middle of the reign of Charles I.<sup>40</sup> His son and heir, Sir William Lisle,<sup>41</sup> was a zealous Royalist, who, after suffering great hardships, accompanied Charles II in his exile and consequently forfeited all his possessions. Crux Easton passed to his younger brother John Lisle of Moyle's Court<sup>42</sup> (one of the judges in the trial of Charles I), who dealt with it by fine in 1659.<sup>43</sup> At the Restoration, however, John Lisle was obliged to fly the kingdom and the manor was restored to Sir William, who died in 1665, leaving a son and heir Edward.<sup>44</sup> Edward settled at Crux Easton in 1693 or 1694, and determined to make the study of agriculture one of the chief occupations of his life.<sup>45</sup> The outcome of his experience he embodied in a book entitled Observations in Husbandry—an interesting work abounding with local information—which was published in 1757, more than thirty years after his death, with an advertisement written by his son Thomas Lisle, rector of Burghclere. His nine daughters constructed in the manor grounds a curious grotto, celebrated in the following lines by Pope, who frequently visited the family at Crux Easton :

LISLE. Or a chief azure with three lions or therein.

Here, shunning idleness at once and praise,
This radiant pile nine rural sisters raise—
The glittering emblem of each spotless dame,
Pure as her soul and shining as her fame—
Beauty which nature only can impart,
And such a polish as disgraces art ;
But fate dispos'd them in this humble sort,
And held in deserts what could charm a court.

The 'radiant pile' has long since disappeared, but its site is still perpetuated in the name Grotto Copse (see supra). On the death of Edward Lisle in 1722 the manor passed to his son and heir Edward.<sup>46</sup> He sold it to Dr. John Burton,<sup>47</sup> who was head master of Winchester College from 1724 to 1766. In 1778 Crux Easton was the sole property of his nephew.<sup>48</sup> The manor then passed to the Kingsmills, from whom it was a few years later purchased by the Herberts and descended to the present Earl of Carnarvon.

In the latter part of the 13th century PARK there was a park in Crux Easton which John de Drokensford in 1292 obtained licence to make out of his wood of Horsey and land of his adjoining the wood. For it had appeared by inquisition that the king would only lose amerce-ments for vert and venison in the wood, while the making of the park would conduce to the preservation of his deer, which in passing between the forest of Chute and the wood had been frequently taken within the liberty of the Bishop and the Prior of Winchester.<sup>49</sup> In the following year the keeper of Breamore was ordered to give John de Drokensford two live bucks and six live does of the king's gift to stock his park,<sup>50</sup> while in 1303 he obtained a grant of free warren in his demesne lands of Crux Easton.<sup>51</sup> He was careful to maintain his right to free warren and to free chase, and in 1297 and again in 1306 commissions of oyer and terminer were issued to try persons accused of hunting and carrying away deer from his park.<sup>52</sup> The site of the park is marked at the present day by Easton Park Wood in the south-eastern extremity of the parish.

